

0
0
0
0
3
1
5
3
3
9
2

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

SCHOOL OF LAW LIBRARY

Gift of
Professor C. G. Haines

CASES ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

SELECTED FROM DECISIONS OF STATE AND FEDERAL COURTS

BY
JAMES PARKER HALL
PROFESSOR OF LAW AND DEAN OF THE LAW SCHOOL IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

AMERICAN CASEBOOK SERIES

JAMES BROWN SCOTT
GENERAL EDITOR

ST. PAUL
WEST PUBLISHING COMPANY
1913

COPYRIGHT, 1913

BY

WEST PUBLISHING COMPANY

(HALL CONST.L.)

TO THE MEMORY OF
JAMES BRADLEY THAYER

(iii)•

THE AMERICAN CASEBOOK SERIES

For years past the science of law has been taught by lectures, the use of text-books and more recently by the detailed study, in the class-room, of selected cases.

Each method has its advocates, but it is generally agreed that the lecture system should be discarded because in it the lecturer does the work and the student is either a willing receptacle or offers a passive resistance. It is not too much to say that the lecture system is doomed.

Instruction by the means of text-books as a supplement or substitute for the formal lecture has made its formal entry into the educational world and obtains widely; but the system is faulty and must pass away as the exclusive means of studying and teaching law. It is an improvement on the formal lecture in that the student works, but if it cannot be said that he works to no purpose, it is a fact that he works from the wrong end. The rule is learned without the reason, or both rule and reason are stated in the abstract as the resultant rather than as the process. If we forget the rule we cannot solve the problem; if we have learned to solve the problem it is a simple matter to formulate a rule of our own. The text-book method may strengthen the memory; it may not train the mind, nor does it necessarily strengthen it. A text, if it be short, is at best a summary, and a summary presupposes previous knowledge.

If, however, law be considered as a science rather than a collection of arbitrary rules and regulations, it follows that it should be studied as a science. Thus to state the problem is to solve it; the laboratory method has displaced the lecture, and the text yields to the actual experiment. The law reports are in more senses than one books of experiments, and, by studying the actual case, the student co-operates with the judge and works out the conclusion however complicated the facts or the principles involved. A study of cases arranged historically develops the knowledge of the law, and each case is seen to be not an isolated fact but a necessary link in the chain of development. The study of the case is clearly the most practical method, for the student already does in his undergraduate days what he must do all his life; it is curiously the most theoretical and the most practical. For a discussion of the case in all its parts develops analysis, the comparison of many cases establishes a general principle, and the arrangement and classification of principles dealing with a subject make the law on that subject.

In this way TRAINING AND KNOWLEDGE, the means and the end of legal study, go hand and hand.

The obvious advantages of the study of law by means of selected cases make its universal adoption a mere question of time.

The only serious objections made to the case method are that it takes too much time to give a student the requisite knowledge of the subject in this way and that the system loses sight of the difference between the preparation of the student and the lifelong training of the lawyer. Many collections of cases seem open to these objections, for they are so bulky that it is impossible to cover a particular subject with them in the time ordinarily allotted to it in the class. In this way the student discusses only a part of a subject. His knowledge is thorough as far as it goes, but it is incomplete and fragmentary. The knowledge of the subject as a whole is deliberately sacrificed to training in a part of the subject.

It would seem axiomatic that the size of the casebook should correspond in general to the amount of time at the disposal of instructor and student. As the time element is, in most cases, a nonexpansive quantity, it necessarily follows that, if only a half to two-thirds of the cases in the present collections can be discussed in class, the present casebooks are a third to a half too long. From a purely practical and economic standpoint it is a mistake to ask students to pay for 1,200 pages when they can only use 600, and it must be remembered that in many schools, and with many students in all schools, the matter of the cost of casebooks is important. Therefore, for purely practical reasons, it is believed that there is a demand for casebooks physically adapted and intended for use as a whole in the class-room.

But aside from this, as has been said, the existing plan sacrifices knowledge to training. It is not denied that training is important, nor that for a law student, considering the small amount of actual knowledge the school can hope to give him in comparison with the vast and daily growing body of the law, it is more important than mere knowledge. It is, however, confidently asserted that knowledge is, after all, not unimportant, and that, in the inevitable compromise between training and knowledge, the present casebooks not only devote too little attention relatively to the inculcation of knowledge, but that they sacrifice unnecessarily knowledge to training. It is believed that a greater effort should be made to cover the general principles of a given subject in the time allotted, even at the expense of a considerable sacrifice of detail. But in this proposed readjustment of the means to the end, the fundamental fact cannot be overlooked that law is a developing science and that its present can only be understood through the medium of its past. It is recognized as imperative that a sufficient number of cases be given under each topic treated to afford a basis for comparison and discrimination; to show the development of the law of the particular topic under discussion; and to afford the mental training for which the case system necessarily stands. To take a familiar illustration: If it is proposed to include in a casebook on Criminal Law one case on abortion, one on libel, two on perjury, one on larceny from an office, and if in order to do this it is necessary to limit the number of cases on specific intent to such a degree as to leave too few on this topic to develop it fully and to furnish the student with training, then the subjects of abortion, libel, perjury, and larceny from an office should be wholly omitted. The student must needs acquire an adequate knowledge of these subjects, but the training already had in the underlying principles of criminal law will render the acquisition of this knowledge comparatively easy. The exercise of a wise discretion would treat fundamentals thoroughly; principle should not yield to detail.

Impressed by the excellence of the case system as a means of legal education, but convinced that no satisfactory adjustment of the conflict between training and knowledge under existing time restrictions has yet been found, the General Editor takes pleasure in announcing a series of scholarly casebooks, prepared with special reference to the needs and limitations of the class-room, on the fundamental subjects of legal education, which, through a judicious rearrangement of emphasis, shall provide adequate training combined with a thorough knowledge of the general principles of the subject. The collection will develop the law historically and scientifically; English cases will give the origin and development of the law in England; American cases will trace its expansion and modification in America; notes and annotations will suggest phases omitted in the printed case. Cumulative references will be avoided, for the footnote may not hope to rival the digest.

The law will thus be presented as an organic growth, and the necessary connection between the past and the present will be obvious.

The importance and difficulty of the subject as well as the time that can properly be devoted to it will be carefully considered so that each book may be completed within the time allotted to the particular subject.

It is equally obvious that some subjects are treated at too great length, and that a less important subject demands briefer treatment. A small book for a small subject.

In this way it will be alike possible for teacher and class to complete each book instead of skimming it or neglecting whole sections; and more subjects may be elected by the student if presented in shorter form based upon the relative importance of the subject and the time allotted to its mastery.

Training and knowledge go hand in hand, and Training and Knowledge are the keynotes of the series.

If it be granted that all, or nearly all, the studies required for admission to the bar should be studied in course by every student—and the soundness of this contention can hardly be seriously doubted—it follows necessarily that the preparation and publication of collections of cases exactly adapted to the purpose would be a genuine and by no means unimportant service to the cause of legal education. And this result can best be obtained by the preparation of a systematic series of casebooks constructed upon a uniform plan under the supervision of an editor in chief.

For the basis of calculation the hour has been taken as the unit. The General Editor's personal experience, supplemented by the experience of others in the class-room, leads to the belief that approximately a book of 400 pages may be covered by the average student in half a year of two hours a week; that a book of 600 pages may be discussed in class in three hours for half a year; that a book of 800 pages may be completed by the student in two hours a week throughout the year; and a class may reasonably hope to master a volume of 1,000 pages in a year of three hours a week. The general rule will be subject to some modifications in connection with particular topics on due consideration of their relative importance and difficulty, and the time ordinarily allotted to them in the law school curriculum.

The following subjects are deemed essential in that a knowledge of them (with the exception of International Law and General Jurisprudence) is universally required for admission to the bar:

Administrative Law.	Insurance.
Agency.	International Law.
Bills and Notes.	Jurisprudence.
Carriers.	Mortgages.
Contracts.	Partnership.
Corporations.	Personal Property, including the Law of Bailment.
Constitutional Law.	Real Property. { ^{1st} Year.
Criminal Law.	{ ^{2d} "
Criminal Procedure.	{ ^{3d} "
Common-Law Pleading.	Public Corporations.
Conflict of Laws.	Quasi Contracts.
Code Pleading.	Sales.
Damages.	Suretyship.
Domestic Relations.	Torts.
Equity.	Trusts.
Equity Pleading.	Wills and Administration.
Evidence.

International Law is included in the list of essentials from its intrinsic importance in our system of law. As its principles are simple in comparison with municipal law, as their application is less technical, and as the cases are generally interesting, it is thought that the book may be larger than otherwise would be the case.

As an introduction to the series a book of Selections on General Jurisprudence of about 500 pages is deemed essential to completeness.

The preparation of the casebooks has been intrusted to experienced and well-known teachers of the various subjects included, so that the experience of the class-room and the needs of the students will furnish a sound basis of selection.

While a further list is contemplated of usual but relatively less important subjects as tested by the requirements for admission to the bar, no announcement of them is made at present.

The following gentlemen of standing and repute in the profession have written or are at present actively engaged in the preparation of the various casebooks on the indicated subjects:

George W. Kirchwey, Dean of the Columbia University, School of Law. Subject, Real Property.

Nathan Abbott, Professor of Law, Columbia University. (Formerly Dean of the Stanford University Law School.) Subject, Personal Property.

Frank Irvine, Dean of the Cornell University School of Law. Subject, Evidence.

Harry S. Richards, Dean of the University of Wisconsin School of Law. Subject, Corporations.

James Parker Hall, Dean of the University of Chicago School of Law. Subject, Constitutional Law.

William R. Vance, Dean of the George Washington University Law School. Subject, Insurance.

Charles M. Hepburn, Professor of Law, University of Indiana. Subject, Torts.

William E. Mikell, Professor of Law, University of Pennsylvania. Subjects, Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure.

George P. Costigan, Jr., Professor of Law, Northwestern University Law School. Subject, Wills and Administration.

Floyd R. Mechem, Professor of Law, Chicago University. Subject, Damages. (Co-author with Barry Gilbert.)

Barry Gilbert, Professor of Law, University of Illinois. Subject, Damages. (Co-author with Floyd R. Mechem.)

Thaddeus D. Kenneson, Professor of Law, University of New York. Subject, Trusts.

Charles Thaddeus Terry, Professor of Law, Columbia University. Subject, Contracts.

- Albert M. Kales, Professor of Law, Northwestern University. Subject, Persons.
- Edwin C. Goddard, Professor of Law, University of Michigan. Subject, Agency.
- Howard L. Smith, Professor of Law, University of Wisconsin. Subject, Bills and Notes. (Co-author with Wm. Underhill Moore.)
- Wm. Underhill Moore, Professor of Law, University of Wisconsin. Subject, Bills and Notes. (Co-author with Howard L. Smith.)
- Edward S. Thurston, Professor of Law, George Washington University. Subject, Quasi Contracts.
- Crawford D. Hening, Professor of Law, University of Pennsylvania. Subject, Suretyship.
- Clarke B. Whittier, Professor of Law, University of Chicago. Subject, Pleading.
- Eugene A. Gilmore, Professor of Law, University of Wisconsin. Subject, Partnership.
- Ernst Freund, Professor of Law, University of Chicago. Subject, Administrative Law.
- Frederick Green, Professor of Law, University of Illinois. Subject, Carriers.
- Ernest G. Lorenzen, Professor of Law, George Washington University. Subject, Conflict of Laws.
- Frederic C. Woodward, Dean of the Stanford University Law School. Subject, Sales.
- James Brown Scott, Professor of Law, George Washington University; formerly Professor of Law, Columbia University, New York City. Subjects, International Law; General Jurisprudence; Equity.

JAMES BROWN SCOTT,
General Editor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September, 1913.

Following are the books of the Series now published, or in press:

Administrative Law	Damages
Agency	Partnership
Bills and Notes	Persons
Carriers	Pleading
Conflict of Laws	Sales
Constitutional Law	Suretyship
Corporations	Trusts
Criminal Law	Wills and Administration
Criminal Procedure

PREFACE

It is peculiarly difficult adequately to cover the subject of Constitutional Law by selected cases within the compass of a single manageable volume. The principles of many legal topics may be stated or exemplified with a definiteness denied to those of Constitutional Law. The reasons for this are two-fold: Certain brief general provisions in our constitutions purport to limit the powers of government over a wide and indefinite field, and our dual federal system compels a delimitation of the spheres of state and nation throughout an ever-shifting "twilight zone." While it is by no means true, as is sometimes stated, that our country alone imposes judicially administered restraints upon legislative action, yet it is true that our restraints are more sweeping and more vague than those in other countries (e. g., Canada and Australia) whose courts also ignore unconstitutional legislation. It is impossible effectively to state in tabloid form the meanings of due process and equal protection of law, of the separation of the powers of government, or of the division of governmental powers between the states and the United States, as they are recognized in our constitutions and enforced by our courts. Government is not a simple matter, and the doctrines that would limit it form a fascinating complex of history, law, and politics. Every word of the most carefully phrased abstraction must be made flesh in a hundred concrete examples before the living principle is revealed. Here, as in other fields of practical judgment, there is "an intuition of experience which outruns analysis and sums up many unnamed and tangled impressions." To secure a sound basis for such an intuition in the student's mind nothing can take the place of the consideration of a multitude of instances and much and varied reasoning and discussion.

To present the requisite amount of material within the desired space, the names and arguments of counsel have been uniformly omitted, most statements of facts have been rewritten, and all irrelevant or merely repetitious matter has been excluded. Important judicial reasoning and discussions of authorities have been reproduced at length, and the leading cases have been rather fully annotated with references to significant decisions developing or limiting their scope. Where similar constitutional problems have arisen in the self-governing British colonies, references to their decisions are also made, especially to those of Canada and Australia. Some present tendencies in government, such as the delegation of large powers to commissions, the newer forms of social legislation, and the rapid extension of federal activities, have been accorded a relatively fuller treatment than some of the older topics. The division of the book into short chapters or sections facilitates its re-arrangement to meet the wishes of teachers or the demands of courses of varying lengths, and the material in Chapter XX may be used, if desired, as the basis for a short separate study of the Federal Courts.

Matter in the text, rewritten or inserted by the editor, is placed in brackets. Omissions are indicated by asterisks. All judicial quotations are from the opinion of the court unless otherwise indicated, and all notes are by the editor unless credited to other sources. Cases in the United States Supreme Court are included through October Term, 1912-13 (vols. 230 U. S., 33 Sup. Ct., and 57 L. Ed.).

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO LAW SCHOOL,
October 22 1913.

JAMES PARKER HALL.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PART I

PRELIMINARY TOPICS

CHAPTER I

	Page
MAKING AND CHANGING CONSTITUTIONS.....	1

CHAPTER II

FUNCTION OF JUDICIARY IN ENFORCING CONSTITUTIONS

Section
1. Power to Declare Statutes Unconstitutional.....	25
2. Effect of Unconstitutionality.....	44

CHAPTER III

SEPARATION AND DELEGATION OF POWERS OF GOVERNMENT

1. Separation of Powers.....	54
2. Delegation of Powers.....	114

PART II

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

CHAPTER IV

POLITICAL RIGHTS

1. Citizenship and Naturalization.....	128
2. Suffrage	140
3. Miscellaneous Political Rights.....	150

CHAPTER V

PERSONAL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.....	151
-------------------------------------	-----

CHAPTER VI

PROTECTION TO PERSONS ACCUSED OF CRIME

1. Ex Post Facto Laws—Bills of Attainder.....	164
2. Self-Crimination—Searches and Seizures.....	184
3. Jury Trial—Procedure and Punishment.....	193

CHAPTER VII

	Page
INTERSTATE PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENS.....	197

CHAPTER VIII

OPERATION OF FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT IN SECURING CIVIL RIGHTS

Section

1. In General.....	213
2. Application to Corporations.....	248

CHAPTER IX

DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW: PROCEDURE

1. Due Process.....	262
2. Equal Protection of Law.....	314

CHAPTER X

DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW: PROTECTIVE AND REGULATIVE POWER (POLICE POWER)

1. In General.....	318
2. Classification (Equality).....	329
3. Administrative Regulations and Discretion.....	379
4. Validity of Legislative Object.....	393
5. Regulation incidental to Power of Prohibition.....	531

CHAPTER XI

DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW: TAXATION

1. Jurisdiction	535
2. Public Purpose.....	573
3. Classification	605

CHAPTER XII

EMINENT DOMAIN

1. Nature of Power.....	660
2. Public Use.....	676
3. Taking and Injuring Property.....	711
4. Compensation	711

CHAPTER XIII

RETROACTIVE LAWS IN CIVIL CASES

1. State Laws Impairing Obligations of Contracts.....	788
2. Other Retroactive Laws.....	878

PART III

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

CHAPTER XIV

	Page
GENERAL SCOPE OF FEDERAL POWERS.....	916
(INCLUDING ALSO MONEY, BANKING, POSTAL, AND MILITARY POWERS)

CHAPTER XV

FOREIGN RELATIONS, INDIANS, AND ALIENS.....	964
---	-----

CHAPTER XVI

TERRITORIES, DEPENDENCIES, AND NEW STATES.....	985
--	-----

CHAPTER XVII

FEDERAL TAXATION.....	1024
-----------------------	------

CHAPTER XVIII

REGULATION OF COMMERCE

Section

1. Duties on Imports, Exports, and Tonnage.....	1039
2. Interstate and Foreign Commerce: General Conceptions.....	1053
3. State Legislation Discriminating against National Commerce.....	1083
4. Non-discriminatory State Taxation.....	1090
I. Taxes Affecting Transportation or Communication.....	1090
II. Taxes Affecting Sales.....	1130
5. Non-discriminatory State Regulation.....	1144
6. Power of Congress.....	1208
7. Federal Maritime Authority.....	1264

CHAPTER XIX

INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

1. Between States—Between States and other Domestic Territory.....	1277
2. Between States and United States.....	1279

CHAPTER XX

JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURTS

1. In General.....	1321
2. Administration of State Law.....	1344
3. Immunity of Sovereign from Private Suit—Eleventh Amendment....	1366
4. Suits by or between States and United States.....	1386

APPENDIX

CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES AND AMENDMENTS.....	1405
---	------

TABLE OF CASES

[CASES CITED IN FOOTNOTES ARE INDICATED BY ITALICS. WHERE SMALL CAPITALS ARE USED, THE CASE IS REFERRED TO IN THE TEXT]

	Page		Page
ABLEMAN v. BOOTH.....	952	Atkin v. Kansas.....	422
Achison v. Huddleson.....	1214	Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills.....	512, 1210
Adair v. United States.....	473, 1256	Atlantic & Pac. Co. v. Philadelphia.....	1102
Adams v. Brennan.....	477	Attorney General v. Tool.....	108
Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 752		Attorney General v. Williams.....	705
ADAMS v. NEW YORK (192 U. S. 585)	189	Attorney General of N. S. Wales v. Collector.....	1316
Adams v. New York (192 U. S. 585)	383	Atwater v. Hassett.....	146
Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky.....	1192	Austin v. Tennessee (179 U. S. 343)	230
Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio.....	558	Austin v. Tennessee (179 U. S. 343)	1016
Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor	551	Ayers, In re.....	1371
AGENS v. MAYOR, ETC., OF NEW-ARK	651	Bacon v. Boston.....	726
Aikens v. Wisconsin.....	465	Bacon v. Illinois.....	1074, 1131
All-right v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission.....	708	Bailey v. Alabama.....	158
Allen v. Armstrong.....	906	Baker v. Boston Elevated Ry....	768, 772, 776
Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co.	1110	Baldwin v. Franks.....	966
Allen v. Riley.....	1312	Baldwin v. Hale.....	803, 805
Allgeyer v. Louisiana.....	232, 408	Baldwin v. Washington County..	562
Allison v. Corker.....	51	BALTIMORE v. BALTIMORE TRUST & G. Co.	873
Ambrosini v. United States.....	1297	Baltimore, etc., Ry. v. Nesbit....	879
American B. N. Co. v. New York Elevated R. R.	782	Baltimore & O. Ry. v. Baugh....	1350
AMERICAN INS. CO. v. CANTER (1 Pet. 511).....	991	Baltimore & O. Ry. v. Interstate Commerce Commission.....	1249
American Ins. Co. v. Canter (1 Pet. 511).....	1323	Baltimore & P. R. R. v. Fifth Baptist Church (108 U. S. 317) ..	723, 726
American Print Works v. Lawrence	669	BALTIMORE & P. R. R. v. FIFTH BAPTIST CHURCH (108 U. S. 317) ..	724
American Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Hall.....	543	Bangor & Piscataquis R. Co. v. McComb	771
American Smelting & Refining Co. v. Colorado ex rel. Lindsley	852	Banker Bros. Co. v. Pennsylvania	1142
American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana	614	Bank of Augusta v. Earle.....	1277
Ames v. Kansas.....	1331	BANK OF COMMERCE v. NEW YORK	1288
ANDERSON v. DUNN.....	65	Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee..	834
Anderson v. Myers.....	147	Bank of Toronto v. Lambe.....	1284
Anderson v. United States.....	1219	BANK OF UNITED STATES v. DEVEAUX	1341
Angle v. Chicago, etc., Ry.....	897	Bank of United States v. Donnelly	810
Application of Senate of State..	41	BANK TAX CASE.....	1288
Arrowsmith v. Harmoning.....	239	Barbier v. Connolly.....	332
Arthur v. Oakes.....	163	Barone v. Fox.....	373, 443
Ashley v. Ryan.....	1097	BARRON v. BURNSIDE.....	255
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews	338
HALL CONST.L.	(xvi)

Page	Page
Barron v. City of Baltimore..... 213	Boyd v. UNITED STATES..... 188
Barlo v. Himrod..... 116	Boyle, in re 165
Bauer v. O'Donnell..... 1312	Boyle v. Zacharie..... 804
Bauman v. Ross (167 U. S. 548)..... 654, 788	Bradley v. Bander..... 560
Bauman v. Ross (167 U. S. 548)..... 773	Bradley v. City of Richmond..... 313
Barler v. Com'rs..... 33, 1284	Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. 756
Becker v. Metropolitan Elevated Ry. 782	Brass v. North Dakota ex rel. Stolsen 485
BEDFORD v. UNITED STATES..... 721	Brearley School v. Ward..... 810, 815, 915
Beer Co. v. Massachusetts..... 857	Brennan v. Titusville..... 1137
Beers v. Arkansas (20 How. 527) 810	Brevoort v. Grace..... 435
BEERS v. ARKANSAS (20 How. 527) 1370	Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer..... 585
BELFAST, THE..... 1266	Brewster v. Rogers Co. (169 N. Y. 73) 710
BELKNAP v. SCHILD..... 1380	Brewster v. Rogers Co. (169 N. Y. 73) 786
Bell's Gap Ry. v. Pennsylvania.. 611	Brickett v. Haverhill Aqueduct Co. 786
Bement v. Nat. Harrow Co..... 1219	Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Co. (1 Wall. 116)..... 829
Berea College v. Commonwealth 369	Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Co. (1 Wall. 116)..... 833
Berzheimer v. Converse..... 810	Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky... 936
Bertholf v. O'Reilly.. 36, 235, 508, 535	BRISTOL v. WASHINGTON COUNTY 548
Beseman v. Penn. R. R..... 723	Brodhine v. Revere..... 127
Billings v. Illinois..... 635	Bronson, Matter of..... 569
Binghampton Bridge, The..... 829, 833	BRONSON v. KINZIE..... 806
Bischoff v. New York Elevated R. R. 782	Bronson v. Kodes..... 936
Blackburn v. Portland Co..... 1337	Brown v. Gerald..... 697
Blackstone v. Miller..... 565	Brown v. Houston..... 1130
Blair v. Chicago..... 831, 1340	Brown v. Maryland..... 1069, 1062
Blake v. McClung..... 202, 253	Brown v. Russel..... 366
Blesch v. Chicago & N. W. Ry... 772	BROWN v. WALKER..... 185
Blinn v. Nelson..... 362	Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co..... 1251
Bloomfield v. State..... 365	Buck v. Beach..... 541
Board of Assessors v. New York Life Ins. Co..... 547	Buckner v. Finley..... 1277
Board of Education v. Blodgett.. 883	Budd v. New York..... 301, 485
Board of Health v. Van Hoesen.. 687	Buffalo East Side R. R. v. Buffalo St. R. R..... 856
Board of Liquidation v. McComb 861, 1378	Burgess v. Sellman..... 1357
Bohm v. Metropolitan Elevated R. Co..... 779	Burley v. United States..... 1393
Boise Artesian Water Co. v. Boise City 842	Burlington v. Beasley..... 590
Bonaparte v. Appel Tax Court.. 1277	Burrows v. Superior Court..... 710
BONAPARTE v. STATE..... 563	Butchers' Union Slaughter-House, etc., Co. v. Crescent City, etc., Slaughter-House Co..... 863
Bonnett v. Vallier..... 422	BUTLER v. BOSTON & S. S. Co. (130 U. S. 527)..... 1265
Booth v. Illinois..... 462	Butler v. Boston & S. S. Co. (130 U. S. 527)..... 1275
Borghart v. Cedar Rapids..... 756	BUTTE CITY WATER CO. v. BAKER 124
Borgnis v. Falk Co. (147 N. W. 327) 38, 363	Buttfield v. Stranahan..... 300, 1235
Borgnis v. Falk Co. (147 N. W. 327) 349, 517	BYERS v. MERIDIAN PRINTING Co. 516
Bors v. Preston..... 1330
BOSTOCK v. SAMS..... 402	Calder v. Bull..... 164
Boston v. Talbot..... 675	Caldwell v. North Carolina..... 1137
Boston Chamber of Commerce v. Boston 773	California v. Central Pac. R. Co. (127 U. S. 1)..... 618, 1311
Bowditch v. Boston..... 451	CALIFORNIA v. CENTRAL PAC. R. Co. (127 U. S. 1)..... 1215
Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 1188
Boyd v. Alabama..... 857
Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer 139

	Page		Page
California v. Southern Pac. Co. ...	1340, 1402	Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States	506
California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works	450	Chicago Dock Co. v. Fraley	330
Callahan v. Woodbridge	563	Chicago, etc., Ry. v. Sturm	810
CALLAN v. WILSON	991	Chicago Flour Co. v. Chicago	770
Callen v. Columbus Edison Co. ...	761	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & Warehouse Commission	300
Callender v. Marsh	740, 743	CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. Co. v. SOLAN	1183
CAMPBELL v. HOLT (115 U. S. 620)	882	Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas	349, 1181
Campbell v. Holt (115 U. S. 620)	886	CHICAGO & G. T. R. Co. v. WELLMAN	42
Canada, etc., Ry. v. Gebhard	805	Chiles v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co.	369, 1166
Cannon v. New Orleans	1051	Chin Yow v. United States	300
Capital Traction Co. v. Hof	196	CHIRAC v. CHIRAC (2 Wheat. 259)	138, 964
Carcue v. Rutherford	481	Chirac v. Chirac (2 Wheat. 259) ..	919
Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co.	355	CHISHOLM v. GEORGIA	1367
Carter v. Commonwealth	76	Choate v. Trapp	837, 897, 976
Carthage v. Frederick	657	Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co.	1378
Cedar Rapids Gas Light Co. v. Cedar Rapids	493	CHY LUNG v. FREEMAN	1152
Central Land Co. v. Laidley	1356	Cincinnati v. Louisville & N. Ry.	664, 1023
Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota	473	Cincinnati St. R. Co. v. Snell	319
Central of Ga. Ry. v. Murphey	1185	Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Kentucky ..	658
CHAE CHAN PING v. UNITED STATES	978	Citizens' St. Ry. v. Common Council	624
Chambers v. Baltimore & O. Ry. ...	209	City of Chicago v. Netcher	462
Chambers v. Church	207	City of Chicago v. Sturges	507
Chandler v. Dir.	1380	City of Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co.	492
Chaplin v. Commissioner	1288	City of Madison v. Madison Gas & Electric Co.	101
Chapman, In re	67	City of New York, Matter of (190 N. Y. 350).....	775
Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge	830	City of New York, Matter of (190 N. Y. 350).....	775
Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs	342	City of Passaic v. Paterson Bill Posting, Advertising & Sign Painting Co.	400
Charlton v. Kelly	968	City of Seattle v. Kelleher	655
Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige ...	737	Civil Rights Cases	151, 240
Cheney v. Boston Consol. Gas Co. ...	763	CLAFLIN v. HOUSEMAN	952
CHEROKEE NATION v. STATE OF GEORGIA	974	Clark v. Clark	906
Cherokee Tobacco, The	966	Clark v. Nash	687
Chesapeake & O. Ry. v. Kentucky	1166	Claybrook v. Owensboro	614
Chew Heong v. United States ...	878	Cleland v. Anderson	356
Chicago v. Blair	657	Cleveland, etc., Ry. v. Backus	1115
Chicago v. Netcher	462	Clinton v. Engelbrecht	996
Chicago v. O'Brien	657	Coe v. Errol	1070
Chicago v. Sturges	507	Cohens v. Virginia (6 Wheat. 264)	1321
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. City of Chicago (166 U. S. 226).....	239	Cohens v. Virginia (6 Wheat. 264)	1330
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. City of Chicago (166 U. S. 226).....	666	Cole v. Cunningham	208
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cram ...	505	Collector, The, v. Day	1295
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois ex rel. Greenwood (200 U. S. 561)	734	Collins v. New Hampshire	1197
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois ex rel. Grimwood (200 U. S. 561)	860	Collins v. Texas	456
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire	518
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Nebraska	870

	Page		Page
Colonial Sugar Co. v. Attorney General	70	Crutcher v. Kentucky (141 U. S. 47).....	1109
Columbia Trust Co. v. Lincoln Institute of Kentucky	461	CRUTCHER v. KENTUCKY (141 U. S. 47).....	1146
COMMISSIONERS v. O'SULLIVAN	774	Cumming v. County Board of Education	369
Commonwealth v. Alger	318	Cummings v. Missouri	168, 183
Commonwealth v. Boston Advertising Co.	403	Cunningham v. Macon, etc., Rn.	1379
COMMONWEALTH v. FISHER	431	Cunningham v. North Western Imp. Co.	517
Commonwealth v. Getchell	179	Cunnius v. Reading School Dist.	285
Commonwealth v. Gilbert	381	Curtis v. Leavitt	881
COMMONWEALTH v. GRIEST	14
Commonwealth v. Hana	364	Danforth v. Groton Water Co.	882
Commonwealth v. Sisson	305	Daniel Ball, The	1093, 1261
Commonwealth v. Strauss	470	Dartmouth College v. Woodward	815
Commonwealth v. Teckshury	450	DASH v. VAN KLEECK	878
Commonwealth v. Vrooman	459	Dassler, In re	157
Compagnie Francaise, etc., v. La Bd. of Health	1153	Davidson v. New Orleans	228
CONNECTICUT RIVER R. R. v. FRANKLIN COM'ES	783	Davies, Matter of	61
Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co.	349	Davis v. Gray	1374
Conway v. Taylor's Ex'r	1141	DAVIS v. MASSACHUSETTS	391
Cook v. Marshall County	1050	Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen	517
Cook v. Moffat	805	Day, In re	82
Cooley v. Board of Wardens of Philadelphia	1079	Deakin v. Webb	1284
Cooper, In re	82	De Bary & Co. v. Louisiana	1202
Corfield v. Coryell	197	Debs, In re (158 U. S. 564).....	81, 1066
Cornell v. Coyne	1046	Debs, In re (158 U. S. 564).....	1211
Corry v. Baltimore	560	DEBS, In re (158 U. S. 564).....	1387
Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (183 U. S. 79).....	346	Delamater v. South Dakota	1205
Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (183 U. S. 79).....	485	Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. Ry.	727
COUNSELMAN v. HITCHCOCK	185	DELAWARE, L. & W. R. Co. v. PENNSYLVANIA	539
County of San Mateo v. Southern Pac. R. Co.	248	De Lima v. Bidwell	1012
Covell v. Heyman	1327	De Lorio v. Boit	1267
Covington v. Kentucky	842	D'Emden v. Pedder	1284
Covington Bdg. Co. v. Kentucky	1054	Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co.	262
Covington Turnpike Co. v. Sanford	841	Denny v. Bennett	805
Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky	1172	Dent v. West Virginia	454
Covington & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Sanford	250	Detroit v. Detroit, etc., Ry.	851, 856
Cowley v. Northern Pac. Ry.	1326	Detroit v. Osborne	1348
Coyle v. Smith	1020	De Vaughn v. Hutchinson	1345
Craig v. Missouri	936	Dewey v. Des Moines	571
CRAIG v. RAILROAD	750	Dickey v. Maysville, etc., Road	959
CRANDALL v. NEVADA (6 Wall. 35).....	222	Dingley v. Boston	686
Crandall v. Nevada (6 Wall. 35).....	1094	District of Columbia v. Brooke	380
Crandall v. Nevada (6 Wall. 35).....	1307	DOBBINS v. COMMISSIONERS OF ERIE COUNTY	1295
Cramer v. Thorson	16	Dobbins v. Los Angeles	404
Crenshaw v. Arkansas	1138	Doctor v. Harrington	1342
Cromwell v. MacLean	900	Dolley v. Abilene Nat. Bank	334
Cross v. HARRISON (16 How. 164).....	1002	Donahue v. Keystone Gas Co.	756
Cross v. Harrison (16 How. 161).....	1012	Donnelly v. United States	977
Croix v. Shepherd	80	Dooley v. United States (182 U. S. 222).....	1012
Crowley v. Christensen	387	Dooley v. United States (183 U. S. 151).....	1016, 1061
		Dorr v. United States	1013
		Douglas, In re	906
		Douglass v. Pike County	1357
		Downes v. Bidwell	988
		DOYLE v. CONTINENTAL INS. CO.	254

	Page		Page
Dozier v. Alabama	1138	Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing
Dreyer v. Illinois	96	Dist.	1138
Dunbar v. Boston & P. R. Corp. ...	884	Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Mettler	340
Duncan v. Missouri	178	Field v. Barling	756
Dynes v. Hoover	942	Finlayson v. Peterson	894
		Finley v. California	344
Eakin v. Raub	31	First Municipality v. Orleans The-
Eastern R. Co. v. Boston & M.		atre Co.	585
R. R.	665	First Nat. Bank v. Corington	658
Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. R. ...	711	First Nat. Bank v. Tyson	757
Eckerson v. Des Moines	122	Fischer v. St. Louis (191 U. S. 361)	334
Eden v. People	358	FISCHER v. ST. LOUIS (194 U. S.
Edwards v. Kearzey	808	361)	392
Eels v. American Telephone & Tel-		FISHER v. BLIGHT	953
egraph Co.	760	FITTS v. MCGHEE	1384
Eilenbecker v. Plymouth Co.	275	FLEMING v. PAGE (9 How. 603)...	1002
Einwarter v. Illinois Steel Co.	883	Fleming v. Page (9 How. 603)....	1012
Eldridge v. Trezevant	670	Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch, 87)...	32
ELK v. WILKINS	134	Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch, 87)...	811
Ellingham v. Dye	11	Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. (220 U.
Ellis v. Davis	1325	S. 107).....	634, 1035, 1292
Ellis v. Thorne	72	Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. (220 U.
Ellis v. United States	963	S. 107).....	1316
Emert v. Missouri	1132	Flint v. Webb	1284
Employers' Liability Cases	1254	Florida v. Georgia	1336
Engel v. O'Malley	349	Fobes v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. ...	750
ERB v. MORASCH	1180	Fong Yue Ting v. United States ...	978
Erickson v. Crookston Water-		Foppiano v. Speed	571, 1202 works Co.	740	Forbell v. New York	740
ESCANABA CO. v. CHICAGO (107 U.		Ford v. Delta & Pine Land Co. (164
S. 678).....	1022	U. S. 662).....	834
Escanaba Co. v. Chicago (107 U.		Ford v. Delta & Pine Land Co. (43
S. 678).....	1151	Fed. 181).....	903
Etchison Drilling Co. v. Flournoy	52	Forster v. Forster	903
Etheridge v. Sperry	1354	Forster v. Scott	402
Ettor v. Taroma	896	Forsyth v. Hammond	640
Eubank v. Richmond	402	Ft. Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Love
Eudora, The	1258	947, 1305
Evergreen Cemetery Ass'n v.		Foster v. Neilson	967
Beecher	686	Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn	1326
EWELL v. DAGGS	884	48TH ST., MATTER OF.....	778
Ewing v. Leavenworth	1061, 1107	Fox v. McDonald	59
EXCHANGE, THE	135	Francis v. United States	1054
		Frantz v. Aulry	11
Fairbank v. United States ..	1034, 1046	Freeland v. Williams	897
Fairchild v. St. Paul	673	Freeman v. Howe	1327
Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley ...		Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport ...	834
291, 595		French v. Barber Asphalt Co.	655
FALLSBURG POWER & MFG. CO. v.		FRISBIE v. UNITED STATES	425
ALEXANDER	695	Frost v. Chicago	427
Falls Mfg. Co. v. Oconto Imp.		Frothingham v. Shaw	569
Co.	1263
Fargo v. Hart	555	GAINES v. FUENTES	1328
Farist Steel Co. v. Bridgeport	707	Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v.
Farmers' Bank v. Dearing	1291	Texas	1118
Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney	340	Gardner, In re	344
Farrington v. Mensching	611	Garland, In re	184
Federalist, The	25	Garnett, In re	1264
Federated Govt. Ry. Ass'n v. New		Geer v. Connecticut	524, 1192
South Wales Ry. Ass'n...1258,	1216	Gelpeke v. Dubuque	1354
Felsenfeld v. United States	954	General Oil Co. v. Crain	1074
Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park	858	Genesee Chief, The	1267

Page	Page
Geofrey v. Riggs 965	Hartford Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., Ry. 1354
Georgia v. Stanton 106	Hartman v. Trevisse 710
Georgia v. Tennessee Copper Co. 1395	Hartung v. People (22 N. Y. 95)..... 469
Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 1)..... 919, 1053	Hartung v. People (26 N. Y. 167)..... 179
Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 1)..... 958	Hatch v. Reardon (204 U. S. 152)..... 570, 1067
GIBSON v. UNITED STATES 721	Hatch v. Reardon (184 N. Y. 431)..... 569, 605
Gillespie v. People 236	Hauenstein v. Lynham 964
Gilman v. Philadelphia (3 Wall. 713)..... 919	Hauser v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. 464
Gilman v. Philadelphia (3 Wall. 713)..... 1148	HAWAII v. MANKIHI 1018
Gladson v. Minnesota 1187	Hawes v. Contra Costa Co. 42
Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania 1098, 1208	Hawes v. Oakland 1310
Gonzales v. Williams 110	Hawker v. New York (170 U. S. 189)..... 180
Gordon v. Cornes 646	Hawker v. New York (170 U. S. 189)..... 456
GORDON v. UNITED STATES 40	Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 525
Gould v. Gould 437	Head Money Cases (112 U. S. 580)..... 966
Graham v. Roberts 123	Head Money Cases (112 U. S. 580)..... 1235
Grand Lodge v. New Orleans 828	HEALY LUMBER Co. v. MORRIS 693
Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend 871	Hickman v. United States 1404
Grant v. United States 193	Hoff, In re 973, 1061
Gray v. Taylor 38, 349	Heine v. Levee Com'rs 806
Great Falls Power Co. v. Great Falls, etc., R. Co. 704	Henderson v. New York (92 U. S. 259)..... 326
Green, In re 149	HENDERSON v. NEW YORK (92 U. S. 259)..... 1152
GREEN v. BIDDLE (8 Wheat. 1)..... 806	Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky 551, 1311
Green v. Biddle (8 Wheat. 1)..... 814, 1278	Hennington v. Georgia 419
Green v. Neal's Lessee 1314	Henry v. Dick Co. 1312
Greenwood v. Freight Co. 841	HEPBURN v. ELLZEY 990, 1339
Grenada Lumber Co. v. Mississippi 467	Hepburn v. Griswold 934, 936
Griffin v. Brooklyn 646	Herndon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 261
Grim v. Weissenberg School Dist. 889	Hibernia Soc. v. San Francisco 1297
Gromer v. Standard Dredging Co. 1301	Hijo v. United States 967
Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis 334	HILDRETH v. MCINTIRE 47
Gulf, etc., Co. v. Hewes 843	Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States 1054, 1247
Gulf, etc., Ry. v. Texas 1171	HOBART v. RAILROAD Co. 758
GUNDLING v. CHICAGO 391	Hodges, Ex parte 419
Gunn, In re 106	Hodges v. United States 153
Hadden v. Merritt 936	Hoke v. United States 1234
Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108 275	Holden v. Hardy 409
HAGOOD v. SOUTHERN 1375	Hollingsworth v. Virginia (3 Dall. 378)..... 14
Haireston v. Danville & W. Ry. Co. 690	HOLLINGSWORTH v. VIRGINIA (3 Dall. 378)..... 1368
Hale v. Henkel 181, 1236	Hollman, Ex parte 162
Hall v. De Cuir 1163	Holmes v. Jennison 971
Hallowell v. United States 977	Holmgren v. United States 953
Halter v. Nebraska 464	HOME INS. Co. v. MORSE 254
Hamilton v. Brown 285	Home Ins. Co. v. New York 1290
Hamilton Gas Co. v. Hamilton 846	Home of Friendless v. Rouse 828
Hanley v. K. C. Ry. 1053, 1061, 1171	Home Sav. Bank v. Des Moines 1288
HANNIBAL & ST. J. R. Co. v. HUSEN 1153	Home Tel., etc., Co. v. City of Los Angeles (211 U. S. 265)..... 869
Hans v. Louisiana 1366
Harrison v. Northern Securities Co. 1223
Harris v. People 196

	Page		Page
Home Tel. Co. v. City of Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278).....	239	James v. Bowman	248
Hooe v. Jamieson	1338	Janvrin, In re	96
Hooper v. California	235	Japanese Immigrant Case	300
Hopkins v. United States	1216	Jaramillo v. Romero	161
HOPSON'S APPEAL	84	J. E. Rumbell, The	1271
Hopt v. Utah	175	Jetton v. University of South	834
Horace Waters & Co. v. Gerard	512	Johannessen v. United States	184, 898
Horan v. Byrnes	469	Johnson, In re	61
Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York	619	Johnson v. Southern Pac. Ry.	1249
Houston v. Moore	919, 942, 953	Joline v. Willcox	100
Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Mayes	1186	Jones v. Brim	506
Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Texas	812, 936	JONES v. UNITED STATES (137 U. S. 202).....	1001
Huddart & Co. v. Moorhead	75	Jones v. United States (137 U. S. 202).....	1012
Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter	524, 855, 1192, 1397	Jordan v. Massachusetts	293
Hunter v. Pittsburg	123, 261	Jordan v. State	425
Huntington v. Attrill	953, 1351	Josma v. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co.	357
Hurtado v. California	231, 270	Juilliard v. Greenman (110 U. S. 421).....	924
Husc v. Glover	1051	Juilliard v. Greenman (110 U. S. 421).....	935
Hyde v. Minn., etc. Ry.	718, 767	Julia Bldg. Ass'n v. Bell Tel. Co.	761
HYLTON v. UNITED STATES	1027	Kansas v. Colorado (185 U. S. 125).....	1391
Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur	834	Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S. 46).....	938, 1321
Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois (116 U. S. 387).....	874	Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S. 46).....	1394
Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois (163 U. S. 142).....	1187	Kansas v. United States	1404
Inhabitants of Goshen v. Inhabitants of Stonington	878	Kansas Pac. Ry. v. Atchison, etc., Ry.	1343
Imman S. S. Co. v. Tinker	1050	Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. (142 U. S. 254).....	696
Insurance Co. v. Dunham	1267	KAUKAUNA WATER POWER CO. v. GREEN BAY & M. CANAL CO. (142 U. S. 254).....	733
International Postal Supply Co. v. Bruce	1380	Kaivananahoa v. Polyblank	1371
International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg	1064, 1146	Kay v. Penn. Ry.	897
INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION v. BAIRD	189	Kehrer v. Stewart	1140
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (154 U. S. 447).....	70	Keller v. United States	982
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (154 U. S. 447).....	290	Kelley v. Rhoads	1071
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co.	1240	KELLINGER v. RAILROAD CO.	751
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Humboldt S. S. Co.	1239	Kelly v. Pittsburgh	637
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. Ry.	1239	KENDALL v. STOCKTON & STOKES	110
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co.	289	Kent v. Gray	910
Iowa Cent. Ry. v. Iowa	275	Kentucky v. Dennison	953
Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co.	448, 520, 534	Keokuk, etc., R. R. v. Missouri	841
JACK v. KANSAS	186	Kidd v. Alabama	606
Jackson, Ex parte	959	Kidd v. Pearson	398, 1068, 1193
Jackson, In re	193	KILBOURN v. THOMPSON	65
JACKSON v. THE MAGNOLIA	1267	KIMMISH v. BALL	1154
Jacobs, Matter of	421	King v. Associated Northern Colonies	1227
Jacobson v. Massachusetts (197 U. S. 11).....	444	Kingman v. Brockton	601
Jacobson v. Massachusetts (197 U. S. 11).....	938	Kipp v. Daly-Davis Copper Co.	708
		KIRTLAND v. HOTCHKISS	545
		KLINGER v. MISSOURI	790
		Knapp, etc., Co. v. McCaffrey	1272

	Page		Page
Kneedler v. Lane	912	Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen	512
Knights of Pythias v. Meyer	810	Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co.	376
Knights Templar, etc., Co. v. Jarman	797	Livingston v. Livingston	898
Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S. 41).....	569, 629, 630, 634	Loan Assoc. v. Topeka	582
Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S. 41).....	1036	Lochner v. New York (198 U. S. 45).....	235
KNOWLTON v. MOORE (178 U. S. 41).....	1309	Lochner v. New York (198 U. S. 45).....	414
Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co.	492	Loewie v. Laylor	1226
KNOXVILLE IRON CO. v. HARRISON	425	Logan v. United States	948
Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville	833	Londoner v. City and County of Denver	279
Kochler v. Hill	17	Loney, In re	917, 950
Kohl v. United States	661, 953	Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn	661
KRING v. MISSOURI	174	Looker v. Maynard	815
Krueger v. Wis. Tel. Co.	760	Lord v. Steamship Co.	1061
Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co. (215 U. S. 349).....	1361	Los Angeles v. City Water Co.	829
Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co. (179 Fed. 191).....	1365	LOTTAWANNA, THE	1265, 1269
La Crosse City R. Co. v. Higbee	757	Lottery Case (188 U. S. 321).....	958
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio ex rel. Lawrence (173 U. S. 285).....	324	Lottery Case (188 U. S. 321).....	1230
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio ex rel. Lawrence (173 U. S. 285).....	1187	LOUGHBOROUGH v. BLAKE	990
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice	1350	Louisiana v. Jumel	1376
Lambert v. Norfolk	769	Louisiana v. Mayor	815
Lane v. Nelson	892	Louisiana v. Texas (176 U. S. 1).....	1156
Lane County v. Oregon	920, 936, 1287	Louisiana v. Texas (176 U. S. 1).....	1386
Lang v. Bayonne	50	Louisville v. Cumberland Tel. Co.	841
Laramie County v. Albany County	817	LOUISVILLE, C. & C. R. Co. v. LETSON	1342
Langel v. Bushnell	400	Louisville, etc., Ry. v. Mississippi	1166
Laurel Hill Cemetery v. City and County of San Francisco	448	Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Co.	843
Lawton v. Steele	293	Louisville Water Co. v. Clark	852
Leavitt v. Morris	441	LOUISVILLE & J. FERRY CO. v. KENTUCKY	539
Legal Tender Cases (12 Wall. 457).....	721, 930	Louisville & N. Ry. v. Eubank	1172
Legal Tender Cases (12 Wall. 457).....	930	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky	877
Lehigh Val. Ry. v. Pennsylvania	1107	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton (218 U. S. 36).....	372
Leisy v. Hardin	1193	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton (218 U. S. 36).....	1332
Leloup v. Port of Mobile	1107	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Motley	722, 855
Lemieux v. Young	363, 462	Low v. Austin	1045
Lemon v. People	205	Low v. Rees Printing Co.	419
Lennon, In re	163	Lowe v. Conroy	454
Leuis Pub. Co. v. Morgan	959	Lowell v. Boston	573
L'Etote v. New Orleans	440	Lumberville Bridge Co. v. Assessors	624
License Cases (5 How. 504).....	323, 1076	LUTHER v. BORDEN (7 How. 1).....	18
License Cases (5 How. 504).....	538, 1041	Luther v. Borden (7 How. 1).....	101
License Tax Cases	1024	Luther v. Borden (7 How. 1).....	912
Lieberman v. Van De Carr (199 U. S. 552).....	334	Luxton v. North River Bridge Co.	1214
Lieberman v. Van De Carr (199 U. S. 552).....	389	Lynch v. Clarke	130
Light v. United States	1303	Lyons v. Bank of Discount	947
Lincoln v. United States	1012	McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.	369
Lincoln County v. Luning	1371	McCall v. California (136 U. S. 104).....	1109
		McCALL v. CALIFORNIA (136 U. S. 104).....	1128

	Page		Page
McCardle, Ex parte	178, 1323	Mechanics' Sav. Bank v. Allen	881
McChord v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 113		Medley, In re	171
McClary v. Powell	24	Meigs v. Roberts	902, 909
McCord v. Sullivan	902	Memphis Bank v. Tennessee	840
McCRACKEN v. HAYWARD	806	Merchants' Bank v. Ballou	890
McCray v. United States	959	Merrill v. Sherburne	54
McCready v. Virginia	1068	Merryman, Ex parte	105
McCulloch v. Maryland	921, 1279	METROPOLITAN L. INS. CO. v. NEW
McCune v. Essig	1307	ORLEANS	546
McBarnett v. Wisconsin	1244	Metropolitan St. Ry. v. Tar
McDevitt v. People's Natural Gas		Com'rs	623
Co.	762	Meyer v. Richmond	756
McDonald v. Keeler	65	MEYERS v. BAKER	463
McDonald v. Massachusetts	171, 345	Miantinomi, The	937
McFaddin v. Evans-Snyder-Buel		Michigan Cent. Ry. v. Powers
Co.	890		611, 645
McGahcy v. Virginia	793, 909, 1371	Michigan Cent. Ry. v. Vreeland	1255
McGlone v. Womack	535	Mill v. Brown	435
McHenry v. Alford	1122	Miller v. Horton (152 Mass. 540)...	296
Machine Co. v. Gage	1132	Miller v. Horton (152 Mass. 540)...	452
McKeon v. N. Y. & N. H. R. Co.	327	Miller v. Johnson	11
McLean v. Arkansas (211 U. S. 539).....	349	Miller v. United States	942
McLean v. Arkansas (211 U. S. 539).....	424	Milligan, Ex parte	105, 942
McPherson, Matter of	610	MILLS v. UNITED STATES	720
McPherson v. Blacker	149	MILWAUKEE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL
Madison v. Madison Gas & Electric		v. SUPERVISORS	432
Co.	101	Minneapolis v. Minneapolis St. Ry.	869
Madisonville Co. v. St. Bernard		Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Beard of
Co.	1346	Water Com'rs of St. Paul	738
MAGNOLIA, THE	1267	Minnesota v. Barber (136 U. S. 313).....	1086
Mageau v. Illinois Trust & Sav-		Minnesota v. Barber (136 U. S. 313).....	1163
ings Bank	629	Minnesota Canal Co. v. Koochich-
Magular v. Henry	904	ing Co.	701
Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co.	1115	Minnesota Rate Cases	499, 1174
Mallett v. North Carolina	178	Minor v. Happersett	140
Manigault v. Springs	720, 854	Mississippi v. Johnson	109
Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 137).....	28	Missouri v. ILLINOIS (180 U. S. 208).....	1391
Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 137).....	1324, 1331	Missouri v. Illinois (200 U. S. 521).....	1397
MARSHALL v. BALTIMORE & O. R.		Missouri v. Lewis	329
Co.	1342	MISSOURI K. & T. R. Co. v. HA-
Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark	18	BER	1155
Martin v. District of Columbia	655	Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas
Martin v. Hunter's Lessee	1323	v. May	359
Martin v. Ingham	112	Missouri Pac. Ry. v. Castle	1187
MARTIN v. MOTT (12 Wheat. 19)....	103	Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes	505
Martin v. Mott (12 Wheat. 19)....	942	Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Nebraska	667
Martin v. West	1271	Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Tucker	508
Marrin v. Trout	508	Missouri Rate Cases	501
Marx v. Hanthorn	905	Mitchell v. Clark	896, 1335
Mason v. Missouri ex rel. McCaf-		MOBILE v. YULIE	481
frey	349	Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Tur-
Maximum Rate Cases	1239	nipseed	381
Maxwell v. Dow	225	Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United
MAY v. NEW ORLEANS	1047	States (148 U. S. 312).....	754, 1070
Maynard v. Hill (125 U. S. 190)....	58, 434	Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United
Maynard v. Hill (125 U. S. 190)....	817	States (148 U. S. 312).....	955
Mayor, The, v. Cooper	1335	Monroe v. Endelman	659
Mayor of New York v. Miln	1079	Montello, The	1262
		MOORE v. SANFORD	685

	Page		Page
Morgan v. King	734	New Orleans Water Co. v. Rivers	829
Morgan's S. S. Co. v. Louisiana		New Orleans Waterworks Co. v.
Board of Health	1156	Louisiana Sugar Refining Co. ...	788
Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R.		NEWTON V. COMMISSIONERS	876
Co.	815	New York, Matter of (190 N. Y.
Moses Taylor, The	1325	350)	616, 775
Moyer v. Peabody	105	New York, Matter of (190 N. Y.
Mugler v. Kansas	393	350)	775
Muhlker v. New York & H. R. R. ...	726, 1559	New York v. Comp. Gen. Trans. ...	1916
	370	New York v. Hesterberg	1204
Muller v. Oregon	370	New York v. Wells	1015
Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S. 113)	31	NEW YORK CENT. R. Co. v. Lock-
Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S. 113)	479	wood (17 Wall. 357)	1178
Murdock v. Memphis	1332	New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lock-
Murphy v. California	363	wood (17 Wall. 357)	1350
Murphy v. Commonwealth	171	New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v.
Murray v. Charleston	1297	United States	506
Murray v. Hoboken Land & Im-		New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v.
provement Co.	262	Williams (199 N. Y. 108)	531
Muskkrat v. United States	39	New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v.
Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell (222		Williams (199 N. Y. 108)	852
U. S. 225)	322	New York ex rel. Hatch v. Rear-
Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell (222		don (204 U. S. 152)	570, 1067
U. S. 225)	362	New York ex rel. Lieberman v.
		Van De Carr (199 U. S. 552) ...	334
Nahant v. United States	1305	New York ex rel. Lieberman v.
Nalle v. Austin	60	Van De Carr (199 U. S. 552)	389
NAPHAN V. LOUISIANA	1068	New York ex rel. New York Cent.
National Bank v. Commonwealth	1302	& H. R. R. Co. v. Miller	541
NEAGLE, IN RE	949	New York ex rel. Pennsylvania R.
Neely v. Henkel (180 U. S. 109) ...	967, 987	Co. v. Knight	1127
	1011	New York ex rel. Silz v. Hester-
NEELY V. HENKEL (180 U. S. 109) ...	1011	berg	381
NEILSON V. GARZA	1159	New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v.
Nesbit v. People	24	Pennsylvania (153 U. S. 628)	854
Nevins v. Peoria	740	New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v.
New England Telephone & Tele-		Pennsylvania (158 U. S. 431)	1107
graph Co. v. Boston Terminal		New York Life Ins. Co. v. Crav-
Co.	764	ens	1068
New Hampshire v. Louisiana	1389	New York, N. H. & H. Ry. Co. v.
New Jersey v. Wilson	837	New York	1181
New Jersey v. Yard	843	Niagara Falls & Whirlpool R. Co.,
Newman v. Metropolitan Elevated		Matter of	702
Ry.	782	Nickerson v. Boston	419
New Mexico v. Denver & R. G. R.		Nicol v. Ames	1033
Co.	1089, 1162	NISHIMURA EIKU V. UNITED
New Orleans v. Clark	907	STATES	978
New Orleans v. Houston	622	Noble State Bank v. Haskell (219
NEW ORLEANS V. STEMPEL	517	U. S. 104)	323
NEW ORLEANS V. WINTER	1339	Noble State Bank v. Haskell (219
NEW ORLEANS GASLIGHT Co. v.		U. S. 104)	509
DRAINAGE COMMISSION (197 U. S.		Norfolk & S. Turnpike Co. v.
453)	736	Commonwealth of Virginia	490
New Orleans Gas Light Co. v.		Norfolk & W. Ry. v. Sims	1137
Drainage Commission (197 U. S.		North American Cold Storage Co.
453)	860	v. Chicago	296
New Orleans Gas Light Co. v.		North Dakota v. Hanson	1293
Louisiana Light & Heat Produc-		Northern Cent. Ry. v. Maryland ...	813
ing & Mfg. Co. (115 U. S. 650) ...	323, 327	Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Washing-
		ton (222 U. S. 370)	1219
New Orleans Gas Light Co. v.		Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Washing-
Louisiana Light & Heat Produc-		ton (222 U. S. 370)	1259
ing & Mfg. Co. (115 U. S. 650) ...	865

	Page		Page
Northern Securities Co. v. United States (193 U. S. 197).....	468	Osborn v. President, etc., of Bank of United States (9 Wheat. 738).....	1329
Northern Securities Co. v. United States (193 U. S. 197).....	1220	OSBORN V. PRESIDENT, ETC., OF BANK OF UNITED STATES (9 Wheat. 738).....	1373
Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park	398	OSBORNE V. FLORIDA	1111
Norton v. Shelby County	44	Oshkosh Waterworks Co. v. Oshkosh	809
Norwalk St. R. Co., Appeal of ...	81	Otis v. Parker (187 U. S. 606)....	358
Norwood v. Baker	649	Otis v. Parker (187 U. S. 606)....	460
Nutting v. Massachusetts	235	Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co.	787
Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Strathan	298	Ouachita Packet Co. v. Aiken	1162
Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R.	692	Owensboro v. Cumberland Tel. Co.	841, 851
Ogden v. Saunders	795	OWENSBORO NAT. BANK V. OWENSBORO	1290
Ohio v. Thomas	1294	Owensboro Waterworks Co. v. Owensboro	240
Ohio ex rel. Lloyd v. Dollison	360	Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank	361
Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana	521	Pacific R. R. Removal Cases	1305
Ohio R. R. Commission v. Worthington	1171	Palairct's Appeal	686
Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler	1340	Palmer v. Larchmont Electric Co. (158 N. Y. 231).....	760
Oklahoma v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.	1397	Palmer v. Larchmont Electric Co. (158 N. Y. 231).....	764
Oklahoma v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co.	1398	Parnclee v. Lawrence	881
Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore 1274		Parsons v. District of Columbia ..	654
Oldknow v. Atlanta	373	Passaic v. Paterson Bill Posting, Advertising & Sign Painting Co.	400, 726
Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Tramway Co. (32 Fed. 727)....	769	Passaic Bridges, The	1151
Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Tramway Co. (32 Fed. 727)....	1332	Passenger Cases	1079, 1094
OPINION OF JUSTICES (150 Mass. 592).....	602	Patapasco Guano Co. v. North Carolina Board of Agriculture ..	1157
OPINION OF JUSTICES (155 Mass. 598).....	602	Patterson v. Colorado ex rel. Attorney General	292
Opinion of Justices (160 Mass. 586).....	114	Patterson v. Kentucky	1312
Opinion of Justices (163 Mass. 589).....	427	Patterson v. The Eudora	1258
Opinion of Justices (166 Mass. 589).....	366	Patton v. Brady	1034
OPINION OF JUSTICES (182 Mass. 605).....	602	Paul v. Virginia	200, 1067
OPINION OF JUSTICES (204 Mass. 607).....	603	PAYNE V. HOOK	1327
Opinion of Justices (204 Mass. 607).....	684	Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. (161 U. S. 646).....	825
Opinion of Justices (207 Mass. 601).....	369	PEARSALL V. GREAT NORTHERN R. Co. (161 U. S. 646).....	873
Opinion of Justices (208 Mass. 619).....	419	Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. Ry.	1251
Opinion of Justices (209 Mass. 607).....	517	Peel v. Atlanta	768
Opinion of Justices (211 Mass. 605).....	1204	Peerce v. Kitzmiller	879, 897
Opinion of Justices (211 Mass. 618).....	356	Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania (125 U. S. 181).....	251
Opinion of Justices (211 Mass. 620).....	473	Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania (125 U. S. 181).....	1148
Opinion of Justices (211 Mass. 624).....	601	Pennoyer v. McConaughy	1374, 1377
		Pennoyer v. Neff	803
		PENNSYLVANIA V. STANDARD OIL Co.	1100

Page	Page
Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co. (13 How. 518) 1076, 1151, 1397	Pierce v. Drew 763
PENNSYLVANIA v. WHEELING & BELMONT BRIDGE CO. (18 How. 421)..... 729	Pinney v. Nelson 797
PENNSYLVANIA R. CO. v. HUGHES 1184	Piqua Branch of State Bank of Ohio v. Knoop 825
Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co. 1061, 1066	Pleasant Tp. v. Etta Ins. Co. 1355
People v. Adirondack R. Co. (160 N. Y. 225)..... 660	Plessy v. Ferguson 367
People v. Adirondack R. Co. (160 N. Y. 225)..... 788	Plumley v. Massachusetts 1202
People v. Cannon 383	Plummer v. Coler (178 U. S. 115)..... 1292
People v. Collins 116	Plummer v. Coler (178 U. S. 115) 1308
People v. Compag. Gen. Trans. 1162	Plummer v. Northern Pac. Ry. 881
People v. Ewer 430	Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429)..... 42, 1287
People v. Gallagher 369	Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429)..... 1026
People v. Hawkins 428, 1204	Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (158 U. S. 601)..... 52
People v. Hayes 171	Pope v. Williams 143
People v. Hill 512	Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Adams 1117
People v. Marx 408	Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Taylor 344
People v. O'Brien 846	Powell v. Pennsylvania 405
People v. Raynes 614	Powers v. Bears 786
People v. Salem 585, 676	Powers v. Deloit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 854
People v. Turner 905	Prairie Oil & Gas Co. v. United States 485
People v. Williams 372	Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co. (211 U. S. 210)..... 95, 1329
People v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. 898	Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co. (211 U. S. 210)..... 309
People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tool 108	Prigg v. Pennsylvania 1278
People ex rel. Barone v. Fox 373, 443	Prize Cases 942
People ex rel. Farrington v. Mensching 611	Providence Bank v. Billings 825, 823
People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn 646	Provident Inst. for Sav. in Town of Boston v. Malone 362
People ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon (184 N. Y. 431)..... 569, 605	Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Ford 1337
People ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon (204 U. S. 152)..... 570, 1067	PULLMAN CO. v. ADAMS 1112
People ex rel. Joline v. Willcox 100	Pullman Co. v. Kansas 1126
People ex rel. Lieberman v. Van De Carr (199 U. S. 552)..... 334	Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania 1113
People ex rel. Lieberman v. Van De Carr (199 U. S. 552)..... 389	Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co. 719
People ex rel. McDonald v. Keeler 65	Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch 381
People ex rel. Metropolitan St. Ry. v. Tax Com'rs. 623	Quarles, In re 950
People ex rel. Sutherland v. Governor 112	Questions and Answers, In re 403, 525
People ex rel. United States Alum. etc., Co. v. Knight 623	Quong Wing v. Kirkendall 617
Perry v. Keene 588	Quong Wo, Ex parte 398
Petit v. Minnesota 358	Radcliff's Ex'rs v. Mayor 740
Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Schubert 1235	Rahner, In re (140 U. S. 545)..... 52
Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson 1216	Rahner, In re (140 U. S. 545)..... 1197
Philadelphia Fire Ass'n v. New York 252	Railroad Commission Cases 834
Philadelphia & Southern Mail S. Co. v. Pennsylvania 1104	Railroad Co. v. Husen 1153
Phoenix Nat. Bank v. Batcheller 805	Railroad Co. v. Maryland 1094
PICKARD v. PULLMAN SOUTHERN CAR CO. 1110	Railroad Co. v. National Bank 1350
	Railroad Co. v. Otco 594
	Railroad Co. v. Peniston 1298
	Railroad Co. v. Tennessee 807
	Railroad Co. v. Whitton 1324
	Rapid Transit R. R. Com'rs, Matter of 748

	Page		Page
Rapier, In re.....	327, 957	Royall, Ex parte	952
Rasmussen v. Idaho.....	1156	Rutgers v. Waddington.....	27
Rasmussen v. United States.....	1015	RYERSON v. BROWN.....	694
Ratterman v. Western Union Tel. Co.	1107	St. Anthony Falls Co. v. St. Paul Com'rs	727
Raustein v. New York, L. & W. R. Co.	749	St. Clair County v. Interstate Transfer Co.....	1145
Rawlins v. Georgia.....	317	St. John v. New York.....	379
Raymond v. Chicago Union Traction Co.	239, 387, 618	St. Louis v. Hill.....	402
Raymond v. Fish.....	454	St. Louis v. Western Union Tel. Co.	1101, 1305
Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (154 U. S. 362).....	239	St. Louis Consolidated Coal Co. v. Illinois	348
Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (154 U. S. 362).....	486	St. Louis Gunning Advertising Co. v. St. Louis.....	402
Reaick v. Pennsylvania.....	1137	St. Louis, I. M. & St. P. R. Co. v. PAUL	532
Reares v. Answorth.....	276, 942	St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Tay- lor	506
Reetz v. Michigan.....	289	St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Arkansas	1179
REINING V. NEW YORK, L. & W. R. Co.	749	St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. James.....	1343
Reitler v. Harris.....	897	St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Math- ews	507
Reymann Brewing Co. v. Brister (179 U. S. 445).....	360	Sallotte v. King Bridge Co.....	729
Reymann Brewing Co. v. Brister (179 U. S. 445).....	1088	Sanborn, In re.....	40
Rhode Island v. Massachusetts (12 Pet. 657).....	1394	San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper	498
RHODE ISLAND V. MASSACHUSETTS (12 Pet. 657).....	1400	San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Na- tional City (174 U. S. 739).....	489
Rhodes v. Iowa.....	1201	San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City (174 U. S. 739).....	497
Rice v. Parkman.....	435	San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co.....	248
Rich v. Flanders.....	914	Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co.....	249
Richey v. Smith.....	457	Satterlee v. Matthewson.....	810
Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Rich- mond	358	Sauer v. New York.....	742
Richmond & A. R. Co. v. Patter- son Co.	1185	Savage v. Jones.....	1245
Rideout v. Knox.....	469	SAVINGS & L. Soc. v. MULTNOMAH COUNTY	548
Rigney v. Chicago.....	765	Sawyer v. Davis.....	722
Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman.....	357, 372	Schick v. United States.....	196
Road Co. v. Sandford.....	490	Schmidinger v. Chicago.....	381
Roanoke, The	1271	Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania.....	1197
Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist.	1132	Scott v. Donald.....	1088, 1201
Robert W. Parsons, The...1262, 1267		Scott v. McNeal.....	239
ROBERTS V. BOSTON.....	367	Scott v. Sandford.....	133
Roberts v. Lewis.....	1357	SCRANTON V. WHEELER.....	721
Robertson v. Baldwin.....	154	Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Seegers	341
ROBINSON, EX PARTE	79	Scars v. Boston.....	657
Robinson v. Swope.....	702	Scars v. Crocker.....	749
Robison v. Wayne Circuit Judges	432	Seattle v. Kelleher.....	655
ROCHSTER V. WEST.....	402	Second Employers' Liability Cases	328, 950, 1250
Rochester R. Co. v. Rochester....	836	Security Mnt. Life Ins. Co. v. Prewitt	234
ROCKINGHAM LIGHT & POWER Co. v. HOBBS	700	Selliger v. Kentucky.....	551
Rogers Park Co. v. Fergus.....	834	Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co.	451, 535
Roller v. Holly.....	285	Sharp, In re.....	431
Rooney v. North Dakota.....	171
Rosenthal v. New York.....	360
Ross, In re.....	985
Ross v. Oregon.....	168
Rowan v. Runnels.....	1357

Page	Page
Sharpless v. Philadelphia (21 Pa. 147).....	32	Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. San Francisco.....	498
Sharpless v. Philadelphia (21 Pa. 147).....	595	Sproule v. Fredericks.....	10
Shaw v. Robbins.....	805	STANDARD OIL CASE (221 U. S. 1).....	1228
Shawnee Mill Co. v. Temple.....	328	Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S. 1).....	1225
Shelby v. Guy.....	1347	Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. Missouri.....	508
Shelby Co. v. Union Bank.....	834	Standard Sanitary Co. v. United States.....	1219
Shepherd v. Wheeling.....	50	Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irr. Co.....	498
Shepherd v. People.....	168	Stanley v. Schwalby.....	1335, 1380
Sherlock v. Alling.....	1208, 1263	Starr v. New York.....	1145
Shevlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minnesota (218 U. S. 57).....	327	Starr v. State.....	196
Shevlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minnesota (218 U. S. 57).....	504	State v. Canty.....	198
SHIVELY v. BOWLBY.....	727	STATE v. CARROLL.....	48
Shonk v. Brown.....	891	State v. De Bary & Co.....	1052
Siebold, Ex parte.....	942	State v. Englewood.....	652
Simpson v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co.....	464	State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. of Nebraska.....	37, 473
Sinking Fund Cases (99 U. S. 700).....	55, 788	State v. Favre.....	10
SINKING FUND CASES (99 U. S. 700).....	850	State v. Feilen.....	439
Sinnot v. Davenport.....	1148	State v. Frear.....	634
Slaughter-House Cases.....	216, 329	State v. Hogan.....	345
Slocum v. New York Life Ins. Co.....	275	STATE v. LOOMIS (115 Mo. 307).....	335
SMITH v. ALABAMA.....	1178	State v. Loomis (115 Mo. 307).....	427
Smith v. Jancsville.....	116	STATE v. MONTGOMERY.....	364
Smith v. Reeves.....	1370	State v. O'Neil.....	168
Smith v. Rochester.....	740	State v. Parker.....	116
Smith v. St. Louis & S. W. R. Co.....	1152	State v. Poulin.....	50
Smith v. Strother.....	55	State v. Richerock.....	212
Smith v. Worcester.....	656	STATE v. SCUGAL.....	459
SMYTH v. AMES.....	480	State v. Shorey.....	429
Snyder v. Bettman.....	1308	State v. Simons.....	86
Soon Hing v. Crowley.....	333	State v. Young.....	116, 807
South Buffalo Ry. v. Kirkover.....	772	STATE ASSESSORS v. COMPTOIR NATIONAL D'ESCOMPTE.....	547
South Carolina v. Georgia.....	1394	State ex inf. Crow v. Shepherd.....	80
South Carolina v. United States.....	1312	STATE EX REL. v. GUILBERT.....	516
South Dakota v. North Carolina.....	1290	State ex rel. Burrows v. Superior Court.....	710
Southern Pac. Co. v. Kentucky.....	543	State ex rel. Cranmer v. Thorson.....	16
Southern Pac. Co. v. Portland.....	852, 874	State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen.....	517
Southern Pac. R. Co. v. California.....	1332	State ex rel. Ellis v. Thorne.....	72
Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission.....	1236	State ex rel. McClurg v. Ponceill.....	24
Southern R. Co. v. Greene.....	623	State ex rel. Richey v. Smith.....	457
Southern R. Co. v. Klug.....	1179	State ex rel. Simpson v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co.....	464
Southern R. Co. v. United States.....	1247	State ex rel. Tacoma Industrial Co. v. White River Power Co.....	692
Southern Ry. v. Reid.....	1260	State ex rel. Thompson v. Winnett.....	24
South Ottawa v. Perkins.....	1348	STATE EX REL. WARD v. HUBBARD.....	516
South Park Com'rs v. Ward & Co.....	663	State ex rel. Witter v. Forkner.....	123
Spencer v. Merchant.....	610	State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer.....	512
Spencer v. Point Pleasant & O. R. R.....	751	State Freight Tax, Case of.....	1090
Spinney, Ex parte.....	209	State Journal Printing Co. v. Madison Gas, etc., Co.....	498
Spokane v. Macho.....	357	State of Georgia v. Stanton.....	106
SPRINGER v. UNITED STATES.....	1028	State of Mississippi v. Johnson.....	109
		State Railroad Tax Cases.....	553, 558

	Page		Page
STATE TAX ON FOREIGN-HELD BONDS (15 Wall. 300, 324).....	549	Thomas v. United States	1034
STATE TAX ON RY. GROSS RECEIPTS (15 Wall. 284).....	1105	Thomas Jefferson, The	1267
State Tonnage Tax Cases	1051	Thompson v. Kentucky	292
Stearns v. Minnesota	1024	Thompson v. Missouri	174
Stearns v. Richmond	741	Thompson v. Utah	172, 193
Stecherson v. Great Northern R. Co.	89	Thompson v. Winnett	24
Steier v. Traveling Men's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n	887	Thomson v. Pacific R. R. (9 Wall. 579)	1299
Stephens v. Cherokee Nation	897	Thomson v. Pacific R. R. (9 Wall. 579)	1302
STERLING'S APPEAL	763	Threadgill v. Cross	46
Stewart v. Kahn	1335	Tidewater R. Co. v. Sharitzer	768
Stockard v. Morgan	1140	Tiger v. Western Investment Co.	977
Stone v. Mississippi (101 U. S. 814)	825	Toone v. State	657
Stone v. Mississippi (101 U. S. 814)	860	Towns v. Klamath County	701
Story v. New York Elevated R. Co. (90 N. Y. 122)	719	TOWNSEND V. STATE	521
STORY V. NEW YORK ELEVATED R. Co. (90 N. Y. 122)	746	Trade-Mark Cases	1209
Stoutcnburgh v. Henrick	122, 1061	TRAGESER V. GRAY	365
Strauder v. West Virginia	314	TRAIN V. BOSTON DISINFECTING Co.	308, 452
STRAWBRIDGE V. CURTISS	1339	Transp. Co. v. Chicago	734
Stuart v. Palmer	279	Trevett v. Weeden	27
STURGES V. CROWNINSHIELD (4 Wheat. 117)	795	Trinity College v. Hartford	776
Sturges v. Crowninshield (4 Wheat. 117)	918	Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward	815
Sutherland v. Governor	112	Turner v. Maryland	1090, 1162, 1193
Sweet v. Rachel (159 U. S. 380)	37	Turner v. New York	909
Sweet v. Rachel (159 U. S. 380)	783	Turpin v. Lemon	279
Swift v. Cahoon	532	Tuthill, Matter of	532, 692
Swift v. Tyson	1348	Twining v. New Jersey (211 U. S. 78)	228
Swift's Estate, Matter of	569	Twining v. New Jersey (211 U. S. 78)	280
Swift & Co. v. United States	1225	Tyler v. Pomeroy	942
Tacoma Industrial Co. v. White River Power Co.	692	UNION BRIDGE CO. V. UNITED STATES (204 U. S. 364)	126
Taft v. Commonwealth	772	Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S. 364)	733, 1216
Talbot v. Hudson	678	Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky	535
TALBOT V. NEW YORK & H. R. Co.	749	United States v. American Tobacco Co. (221 U. S. 106)	468, 1225
Talcott v. Des Moines	719, 741	United States v. American Tobacco Co. (221 U. S. 106)	1227
Talton v. Mayes	976, 987	United States v. Arizona	968
Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank	559	United States v. Bromley	959
Tarble's Case	918	United States v. Celestine	977, 1061
Taylor v. Commonwealth	11	United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Power Co. (229 U. S. 53)	726
Taylor v. Morton	968	United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Power Co. (229 U. S. 53)	957
Taylor v. Place	57	United States v. Combs	1208
Telegraph Co. v. Texas	1284	United States v. Cruikshank	916
Templar v. State Board of Examiners of Barbers	365	United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co.	46, 468, 1240
Tennessee v. Davis	1324	United States v. De Witt	953
Tennessee v. Whitworth	622	United States v. Evans	43
Terminal Co. v. Lihnell	723	UNITED STATES V. FOX (94 U. S. 315)	630
Texas v. White	920	United States v. Fox (94 U. S. 315)	1309
Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Miller	869
Texas & Pac. Ry. v. United States	1176
Thomas v. Board of Trustees	1343

	Page		Page
United States v. George	126	Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. (170 U. S. 435).....	1163, 1201
United States v. Gettysburg Elec- tric R. Co. (160 U. S. 668).....	940	VANCE v. W. A. VANDERCOOK Co. (170 U. S. 438).....	1313
United States v. Gettysburg Elec- tric R. Co. (160 U. S. 668).....	1305	VARNER v. MARTIN	695
United States v. Grimaud	122	VEAZIE BANK v. FENNO	961, 1317
United States v. Harris	218	Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Water- works Co.	833, 851
United States v. Heinszen	894	Vicksburg, etc., Ry. v. Dennis	834
United States v. Holliday	973, 1061	VIEMEISTER v. WHITE	447
United States v. Hudson	1178	Village of Norwood v. Baker	649
United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n	468, 1219	Virginia, Ex parte	236
United States v. Jones	953	Virginia, In re	317
United States v. Ju Toy (198 U. S. 253).....	285	Virginia v. Rives	237
United States v. Ju Toy (198 U. S. 253).....	981	Virginia v. Tennessee	1278
United States v. Kagama	973	Virginia v. West Virginia (11 Wall. 39).....	1394
United States v. Knight Co.	1063, 1219	Virginia v. West Virginia (220 U. S. 1).....	1390
United States v. Lee (106 U. S. 196).....	112, 1370	Virginia Coupon Cases	810, 1371
UNITED STATES v. LEE (106 U. S. 196).....	1374	Von Hoffman v. Quincy	805
United States v. Lehigh Val. Ry.	1240	Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Ill- inois	1166
UNITED STATES v. LYNAH	720	Wall, In re	276
United States v. Marigold	1055	Walling v. Michigan	1086
United States v. Michigan	1404	Wallman v. Connor Co.	702
UNITED STATES v. NORTH CARO- LINA	1401	WARD v. HUBBARD	516
United States v. O'Keefe	1370	WARD v. MARYLAND (12 Wall. 418) 204
UNITED STATES v. PERKINS	1308	Ward v. Maryland (12 Wall. 418).....	1086
UNITED STATES v. RAILROAD BRIDGE Co.	1304	Ward v. Race Horse	968
UNITED STATES v. RAILROAD Co.	1305	Ware v. Hytton (3 Dall. 199).....	920
United States v. Rauscher	970	WARE v. HYLTON (3 Dall. 199)....	964
United States v. Reading Co.	1226	Ware v. Mobile Co.	1064
United States v. Realty Co.	605, 964	WARING v. CLARKE (5 How. 441).....	1267
United States v. Reese	149	Waring v. Clarke (5 How. 441).....	1270
UNITED STATES v. RICE	135	WARREN v. CHARLESTOWN	52
United States v. Rogers	975	Washington v. Fairchild	313
United States v. Sandoval	978, 1023, 1061	Washington University v. Rouse	828
UNITED STATES v. SNYDER	1293	Water Power Cases	402, 696, 734
United States v. Terminal Ry.	1230	Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas (177 U. S. 28).....	261, 1127
United States v. Texas	1400	Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas (212 U. S. 86).....	508
United States v. Union Pac. Ry.	1225	Watson v. Maryland	360
United States v. Williams	982	Watson v. Mercer	879
United States v. Winslow	1219	WAYMAN v. SOUTHWARD	124
United States v. Wong Kim Ark ..	128	Weaver v. Fegely	936
United States Alum, etc., Co. v. Knight	623	Webb, Ex parte	1022
United States Express Co. v. Min- nesota	1121	Webber v. Virginia	1312
United States ex rel. Dunlap v. Black	110, 112	Weed v. Bergh	457
Upshur Co. v. Rich	1329	Weeks v. Milwaukee	585
Van Allen v. Assessors	1289	Welch v. Seasey	403
Van Antwerp, Matter of	644	WELLINGTON, IN RE	51
Van Brocklin v. Tennessee	1303	WELLS v. BAIN	7
		Wells v. Nickles	950
		Welsh v. State	212
		Welton v. Missouri (91 U. S. 275).....	1053
		Welton v. Missouri (91 U. S. 275).....	1083
		West v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. 1088, 1098, 1192

	Page		Page
West Chicago St. Ry. v. Illinois		Williams v. Eggleston	645
733, 860		Williams v. Fears	1128
West River Co. v. Dix	829	Williams v. Mississippi	145, 387
Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg	251	Williams v. Talladega	1127
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Call		Willis v. WINONA	744
Pub. Co.	1177	Willson v. Blackbird Creek Marsh
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Com-		Co.	1075
mmercial Mill. Co. (218 U. S. 406)	1179	WILSON v. EUREKA CITY	391
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Com-		Wilson v. Shaw	1215
mmercial Mill. Co. (218 U. S. 406)	1182	Wilson v. United States	193
WESTERN UNION TEL. Co. v.		Winchester & S. R. Co. v. Com-
JAMES	1184	monwealth	95, 313
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kansas		Winnebago, The	46
256, 1122		Wisconsin v. Duluth	1397
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massa-		Wisconsin v. PELICAN INS. Co. ...	1398
chusetts	1129	Wisconsin Cent. Ry. v. Price
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mis-		County	1307
souri ex rel. Gottlieb	557	WISCONSIN & M. R. Co. v. Pow-
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Myatt ..	86	ERS	1119
WESTERN UNION TEL. Co. v. PEN-		Withey v. Bloem	357
PLETON	1182	Witter v. Forkner	123
Weston v. City Council of		WOART v. WINNICK	913
Charleston	1284	Wong Wing v. United States	981
WHEATON v. PETERS	1178	Wood, In re	314
Wheeler v. Denver	1340	Woods' Appeal	1
Wheeling Bridge & T. R. Co. v.		Woodruff v. Parham	1046
Paul	60	Worcester v. Georgia	971
White v. Hart	108, 920	Worcester v. Street Ry.	817
Whiting, Matter of	569	Workman v. Mayor, etc., of City
Whiting v. Schooygan, etc., R. Co.	593	of New York	1268
Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St.		Wurts v. Hoagland	539
Louis	1052	W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota ...	355
Wight v. Davidson	657	Wynehamer v. People	398
Willamette Bridge Co. v. Hatch
1151, 1178		Yaple v. Creamer	512
Willard v. Harvey	914	Yarbrough, Ex parte	145
Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co.		Yick Wo v. Hopkins	383
of New York	498	Young, Ex parte (209 U. S. 123)..	304
Williams v. Arkansas	356	Young, Ex parte (209 U. S. 123)..	1382
WILLIAMS v. BRUFFY	791

CASES ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

PART I PRELIMINARY TOPICS

CHAPTER I MAKING AND CHANGING CONSTITUTIONS

WOODS' APPEAL.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, 1874. 75 Pa. 59.)

[Appeal from the Allegheny County Court of Common Pleas. An act of the legislature, June 2, 1871, submitted to the people the question of "calling a convention to amend the Constitution of Pennsylvania." The popular vote being in the affirmative, an act of April 11, 1872, provided for the election of delegates to such a convention, which was to meet in November, 1872, and was empowered to propose to the citizens "a new Constitution or amendments to the present one, or specific amendments to be voted for separately," subject to certain limitations indicated in the opinion below. The act required the election for passing on the work of the convention to be held according to the general election law of the state. The convention prepared a new Constitution that violated certain of the limitations imposed upon its powers by the legislature, mentioned in the opinion below, and also passed an ordinance providing for the submission of the Constitution to the voters according to the general election law of the state, except in Philadelphia, where different provisions were made. Plaintiffs, citizens and local taxpayers, sought an injunction in the above-mentioned court to prevent various state officers from holding an election under the convention ordinance, alleging the illegality of the convention and its acts. The bill was dismissed on demurrer, in the following opinion:]

HALL CONST.L.—1

STOWE, J. * * * I have no difficulty in concluding that if the Acts of Assembly in question are unconstitutional and void, the convention was an illegal body, and its acts revolutionary, and that in such case it would be the duty of courts to exercise all their authority to prevent its mandates being carried into effect to the injury of any individual; that the legislature would be bound to enact such laws as might be necessary to punish any attempt to force upon the people its revolutionary work, and the executive officers of the state to use all their power, civil and military, to suppress it.

If, however, in the face of all this, such force, moral or physical, was brought to bear as to overawe or compel the submission of the legal authorities of the state, then, indeed, the arm of the law would be paralyzed, and the proposed Constitution would become effective, not by the law, but by that higher right of revolution which is above all law, but is nowhere recognized by it. Courts can know nothing by anticipation. They are bound to determine the law as it is previous to the successful accomplishment of revolution, as though such a fact were impossible; but when accomplished and duly recognized by the political powers of the government, the courts have no alternative but to accept the fact without question and act accordingly.

While, then, courts must recognize the powers that be, though the product of revolution, they are bound to use all their legitimate authority to suppress acts actually or ostensibly revolutionary, as though they were simply rebellious and could never become legitimate.

Coming, then, to the question of the constitutionality of the act to authorize a popular vote upon the question of calling a convention to amend the Constitution, approved June 2d, 1871, and also the act passed subsequent to the election, held in pursuance of the same, entitled "An Act to provide for calling a convention to amend the Constitution," approved April 11th, 1872, raised by the 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th sections of complainants' bill, it is claimed that they are both unconstitutional and invalid, because:

1. There is no power given by the present Constitution to the legislature authorizing such a proceeding.

2. There is a different method provided by the Constitution, by which it may be amended, and, therefore, upon well-recognized principles of law, the legal conclusion arises that no other exists.

It cannot be claimed that the authority for the legislation and proceedings taken in reference to calling this convention are expressly set out in the Constitution, but it is argued that the power arises under the second section of the Declaration of Rights, which declares that "all power is inherent in the people and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness. For the advancement of these ends they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government in such a manner as they may think proper," all of which is, inter alia, excepted out of the general powers of government, and is "forever to remain inviolate."

It is difficult to see how the withholding of power from the government can, strictly speaking, create a right in the legislature from which it is thus withheld, to exercise that power; but if it should appear that such power exists above and before the Constitution as a great natural and indefeasible right, and has been so recognized and acted upon frequently as a fundamental principle underlying all free government, this provision will sufficiently appear to be a solemn declaration of the existence of such a right, and may in ordinary parlance fairly be said, without any great breach of legal accuracy, to confer a power under the Constitution.

Before, however, entering into a consideration of this question, it will be necessary to examine whether there is anything in the Constitution, as urged in the second proposition, which directly or by necessary legal implication takes away such a fundamental right as we have suggested, in case it existed, where there is no constitutional restriction.

It is urged, and with much apparent force, that because the Constitution in the tenth article "of amendments" provides a certain and carefully defined way for amending the fundamental law, the well-recognized legal maxim ordinarily applied to the construction of deeds and written instruments, as well as acts of legislation, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," leads to the fixed legal presumption that no amendment can, under the Constitution, be made to it, except in the way thus especially provided.

This rule enunciates one of the first principles to the construction of any ordinary instruments between parties. * * *

Mr. Jameson, in his work on Constitutional Conventions, p. 573, says, with great force, upon this question: "Viewed upon principle, were there no authority upon the point, it would be doubtful whether, dealing in great questions of politics and government, the same maxim ought to prevail which regulates the construction of contracts between man and man. As a matter of speculation it may be admitted that the rule expresses the weight of probability equally in cases of great and small magnitude. But there is always a doubt; and between the cases indicated there is the wide difference, that in ordinary contracts it is possible to enforce the construction which the courts shall pronounce the true one, whilst in the case of constitutional provisions regulating great organic movements, to hold such a maxim applicable would be, by presenting barriers to the attainment of what the people generally desire, to make that revolutionary which perhaps was not so. Where the intention of the framers of a Constitution is doubtful, the people assuming power under the broader construction should have the benefit of the doubt; and that all the more because in opposition to them our courts are comparatively powerless. It is infinitely better where no principle is violated, that a Constitution should be so construed as to make their action legal rather than illegal."

So far as judicial opinion is concerned, it has been said by the Supreme Court of New York that the maxim is to be applied to ordinary contracts rather than constitutional provisions: Barto v. Hinrod, 4 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 506; while the judges of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts have expressed a different opinion (6 Cush. 573), holding that under the Constitution of Massachusetts, containing a provision substantially like our own, no power existed to amend, except as provided in the article of Amendments.¹ As a matter of history, however, a convention was called by the legislature in 1853, twenty years after this opinion was given, to propose a Constitution; and while the question was raised as to the legality of such convention, it was ably vindicated by the best lawyers in the state, among them Choate, Parker, and Morton, the latter one of the judges of the court at the time the opinion was given; and a Constitution prepared and submitted to the people.

Turning now to the history of the government of the various states, for the purpose of discovering what the usage in such cases has been, we find the practice has been so frequent and uniform as clearly to indicate what the common understanding of the people, lawyers and laymen, has been in regard to this question.

So far as I am able to learn, there had been, in 1865 (throwing out of consideration the rebel states during 1861, and afterwards while undergoing reconstruction), twenty-five constitutional conventions called by the legislatures of the various states, without any special authorization in their Constitutions. In Georgia, January 4th, 1789, May 4th, 1789, and 1838; in South Carolina, 1790; in New Hampshire, 1791; in New York, 1801, 1821, and 1846; in Connecticut, 1818; in Massachusetts, 1829, 1853; in Rhode Island, 1824, 1834, 1841, and 1842; in Virginia, 1829, 1854, and 1864; in North Carolina, 1835; in Pennsylvania, 1837; in New Jersey, 1844; in Missouri, 1845, 1861, and 1865; in Indiana, 1850.

Mr. Webster stated in 1848, in his argument before the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Luther v. Borden, "that of the old thirteen states, their Constitution with but one exception contained no provision for their own amendment, yet there is hardly one that has not altered its Constitution, and it has been done by conventions called by the legislature, as an ordinary exercise of power." If this is true, and my own examination, so far as, with the limited time and opportunity since the argument of this case, I have been able to make it, has verified it, as well as shown the continuation of the same practice to the present day,—it would seem as though the question as to whether the calling of a constitutional convention was a legal exercise of power by the legislature, should now be considered by all judicial tribunals as settled so firmly as a part of the common law of our governments, that any attempt to disturb it at this day would savor more of revolution than legitimacy. He would be bold, indeed, who would now assert that all these conventions were usurpations, and that all the Constitutions proposed by them and adopted by the people were revolutionary.

¹ Accord: In re the Const. Convention, 14 R. I. 649 (1883).

The conclusion that I have drawn from all this is, that there is underlying our whole system of American government a principle of acknowledged right in the people to change their Constitutions, except where especially prohibited in a Constitution itself,² in all cases and at all times, whether there is a way provided in their Constitution or not, by the interposition of the legislature, and the calling of a convention, as was done in the case in hand.

The offspring of revolution originally, but restrained and modified by the necessity arising out of the new principle established in this country, by the accomplishment of our national independence, that the people are the government, and not the king, and the source of all political power,—it has become legitimated, and without mention in our Constitutions, is as much the law of the land as if specifically set out in them; and that as a solemn recognition of this, and not as a revolutionary right, the section of the Declaration of Rights in our own, and similar clauses in other state Constitutions, were inserted.

The somewhat similar expression contained in the Declaration of Independence was clearly revolutionary and so intended to be; but that was a paper published to the world to justify our refusal to submit longer to governmental authority, and spoke of the rights of the people, as against the oppression of constituted authorities; but in all instruments established by the people themselves for their own government, the only rational view is to consider it as above stated,—the introduction of a constitutional and legal revolution, by the consent of the constituted authorities of the state. This last is absolutely indispensable, as is now admitted by all. To give the force and effect of the law to the proceeding, it must emanate from the legislative authority, and be the result of its permission or direction. The only way the people can legally act under a Constitution such as ours, is through their representatives, and therefore, no matter how many may favor a convention to change the Constitution, if one should be called, and convene without proper authority from the existing government, its action would be clearly illegal, and the result of illegitimate power.* It follows, then, that the action of the legislature in authorizing a vote of the people on the question of the amendment of their Constitution, and subsequently by another act authorizing the election of delegates, was a legal exercise of legislative power, and constitutional, unless something in the acts themselves is in conflict with some constitutional provision. * * *

² Compare the institution of government under the present federal Constitution with the consent of 11 states, despite Arts. of Confed. art. XIII, providing for the perpetuity of the latter and their non-alteration save by unanimous consent of the state legislatures. The first Constitutions of Delaware and Maryland restricted the power of making constitutional changes to the legislatures only, but in both states the legislatures called conventions, resulting in the adoption of new Constitutions (Delaware, 1792; Maryland, 1851). All three of these proceedings are regarded as revolutionary in Jameson, Const. Conventions, §§ 563-569 (4th Ed.), as is also, for similar reasons, the convention resulting in the Pennsylvania Constitution of 1790. Id. §§ 221, 222, 225.

The 8th, 9th, and 10th paragraphs of the bill complain of illegal acts done by the convention: First, in refusing a separate submission to a popular vote of the fifth article, relating to the judiciary, the contingency having arisen, under which, by an act of the legislature, they were bound to do so;⁴ and second, in altering several of the provisions of the Bill of Rights contrary to the limitations imposed in the fourth section of the Act of April 11th, 1872; and third, in disregarding the Act of Assembly, under which the convention was called, in regard to submitting the amended Constitution to a vote of the people, and ordaining a different method.⁵

These objections are all consistent with the conclusions already arrived at, and if valid would raise further questions under the bill, notwithstanding what has already been said, and should therefore be considered.

In examining these questions, the first and second may be taken together.

Looking upon general principles at the real question involved, which is how far, if at all, a constitutional convention regularly called may legally disregard limitations imposed upon its actions by the legislature, I have no difficulty in arriving at what seems to me to be the correct rule. A convention to amend the Constitution, without there is an express limitation as to the extent of their power, passed upon by the people in determining the question of amendment, has inherently, by the very nature of the case under the great principle peculiarly American, and quasi revolutionary in its character heretofore mentioned, absolute power, so far as may be necessary to carry out the purpose for which they were called into existence, by the popular will. Unless prohibited or restricted in the manner specified by the people, the convention has a right, untrammelled by mere legislative limitations, to propose to the people for their consideration and adoption any plan they may see fit. In saying this, we are not to be understood as saying that the convention is in any respect the supreme power of the state. We take it to be simply the attorney for the people, with plenary power to do what is required of it, but nothing beyond.

* Accord: Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 34-40, 12 L. Ed. 581 (1849); Jameson, Const. Conventions, §§ 226-246 (full commentary upon the revolutionary Rhode Island convention of 1841-42). The Constitutions for new states proposed by several unauthorized territorial conventions have acquired validity by congressional confirmation. Jameson, supra, §§ 188-216. See especially the case of Michigan, §§ 198-209, where there was a series of irregularities.

⁴ See the negation of this objection in Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 39, 55, 56, 15 Am. Rep. 563 (1873).

⁵ See note 6, this case. This different method, being for Philadelphia only, was held not to affect the present case.

Subject to the limitation just mentioned, a constitutional convention, in the language of Mr. Wilson, in the federal convention of 1787, has the power to conclude nothing, but to propose anything.

Such, too, is the inevitable result of the views already expressed as to the purpose and effect of the second section of the Declaration of Rights. If it be taken as a constitutional recognition of the principle of legal revolution (so to speak), and of a popular power as we believe, the obvious result follows, that when once called into operation by proper authority, it cannot be subverted nor restrained by the legislature.

If this is correct, the convention was right in disregarding the limitations sought to be imposed upon its power, both as to what it should propose to change in the present Constitution, and how the proposal should be submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection. * * *

Demurrer sustained.

[The plaintiffs appealed, and the state Supreme Court gave the following opinion:]

AGNEW, C. J. The change made by the people in their political institutions, by the adoption of the proposed Constitution since this decree, forbids an inquiry into the merits of this case. The question is no longer judicial, but in affirming the decree we must not seem to sanction any doctrine in the opinion, dangerous to the liberties of the people. The claim for absolute sovereignty in the convention, apparently sustained in the opinion, is of such magnitude and overwhelming importance to the people themselves, it cannot be passed unnoticed. In defence of their just rights, we are bound to show that it is unsound and dangerous. Their liberties would be suspended by a thread more slender than the hair which held the tyrant's sword over the head of Damocles, if they could not, while yet their existing government remained unchanged, obtain from the courts protection against the usurpation of power by their servants in the convention. When they become complainants, the convention must defend and show their authority.

It was contended in the case of Francis Wells et al. v. James Bain et al.,⁶ involving the legality of an ordinance of the convention, argued at Philadelphia in December last, that the convention had the power to ordain ordinances having the present force of law; and the instant power to proclaim a Constitution, binding without ratification, irrespective of the matter adopted by the people to exercise their right to alter or amend their frame of government. This imputed sovereignty in a convention called and organized under a law, as the very means adopted by the people to exercise their reserved right of amendment, owing to the briefness of the time, was not discussed in that case with the fulness the importance of the question to the people demanded.

⁶ 75 Pa. 39, 15 Am. Rep. 563 (1873), holding invalid an ordinance of the convention providing special election commissioners in Philadelphia to take charge of the balloting at the submission of the Constitution; the act of the legislature calling the convention having provided for a submission under the general election laws of the state. The court argued that the prior popular vote for calling a convention in effect delegated to the legislature power to decide upon the terms of the call. See the criticism of this view in Dodd, Revision and Amendment of State Constitutions, 74-77. As to how far constitutional conventions may exercise incidental legislative powers, with or with-

There is no subject more momentous or deeply interesting to the people of this state than an assumption of absolute power by their servants. The claim of a body of mere deputies to exercise all their sovereignty, absolutely, instantly, and without ratification, is so full of peril to a free people, living under their own instituted government, and a well-matured Bill of Rights, the bulwark and security of their liberties, that they will pause before they allow the claim and inquire how they delegated this fearful power, and how they are thus absolutely bound and can be controlled by persons appointed to a special service. Struck by the danger, and prompted by self-interest, they will at once distinguish between their own rights and the powers they commit to others. These rights it is, the judiciary is called in to maintain. The very rights of the people and freedom itself demand, therefore, that no such absolute power shall be imputed to the mere delegates of the people to perform the special service of amendment, unless it is clearly expressed, or as clearly implied, in the manner chosen by the people to communicate their authority.

A convention has no inherent rights; it exercises powers only. Delegated power defines itself. To be delegated it must come in some adopted manner to convey it by some defined means. This adopted manner, therefore, becomes the measure of the power conferred. The right of the people is absolute, in the language of the Bill of Rights, "to alter, reform, or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper." This right being theirs, they may impart so much or so little of it as they shall deem expedient. It is only when they exercise this right, and not before, they determine, by the mode they choose to adopt, the extent of the powers they intend to delegate. Hence the argument which imputes sovereignty to a convention, because of the reservation in the Bill of Rights, is utterly illogical and unsound. The Bill of Rights is a reservation of rights out of the general powers of government to themselves, but is no delegation of power to a convention. It defines no manner or mode in which the people shall proceed to exercise their right, but leaves that to their after choice. Until then it is unknown out submission to popular vote, see Id. 108-117; Ex parte Birmingham & A. Ry. Co., 145 Ala. 514, 42 South. 118 (1905) (cases); Frantz v. Autry, 18 Okl. 561, 612-626, 91 Pac. 193 (1907) (territorial convention).

how they will proceed, or what powers they will confer on their delegates. Hence we must look beyond the Bill of Rights to the mode adopted by the people, to find the extent of the power they intend to delegate. These modes were stated and discussed in the opinion in Wells et al. v. Bain et al., supra.⁷ If, by a mere determination of the people to call a convention, whether it be by a vote or otherwise, the entire sovereignty of the people passes ipso facto into a body of deputies or attorneys, so that these deputies can, without ratification, alter a government and abolish its Bill of Rights at pleasure, and impose at will a new government upon the people without restraints upon the governing power, no true liberty remains. Then the servants sit above their masters by the merest imputation, and a people's welfare must always rest upon the transient circumstances of the hour, which produce the convention and the accidental character of the majority which controls it. Such a doctrine, however suited to revolutionary times, when new governments must be formed, as best the people can, is wholly unfitted when applied to a state of peace and to an existing government, instituted by the people themselves and guarded by a well-matured Bill of Rights.

* * *

The people have the same right to limit the powers of their delegates that they have to bound the power of their representatives. Each are representatives, but only in a different sphere. It is simply evasive to affirm that the legislature cannot limit the right of the people to alter or reform their government. Certainly it cannot. The question is, not upon the power of the legislature to restrain the people, but upon the right of the people, by the instrumentality of the law, to limit their delegates. Law is the highest form of a people's will in a state of peaceful government. When a people act through a law the act is theirs, and the fact that they used the legislature as their instrument to confer their powers makes them the superiors and not the legislature. The idea which lies at the root of the fallacy, that a convention cannot be controlled by law is, that the convention and the people are identical. But when the question to be determined is between the people and the convention, the fallacy is obvious. Such a metonymy may do for a flourish of rhetoric, but not for grave argument. The parties to the question are the people on the one hand and the convention on the other. The people allege an usurpation of power in this, that the convention seeks to bind them without their ratification. The question then is, what power was conferred? The judiciary sits to decide between them. The people having challenged their power to set a government over them at will, the agents

⁷ They are stated to be (75 Pa. at page 47, 15 Am. Rep. 563):

"1. The mode provided in the existing Constitution.

"2. A law, as the instrumental process of raising the body for revision and conveying to it the powers of the people.

"3. A revolution."

must show their authority to do this. The latter put in evidence the Act of 1871 as their authority. Then the issue is, does the Act of 1871, simply ordering a convention to be called, confer this absolute, extraordinary, and dangerous power upon a body of men not yet called into being, and which can have neither being nor power except by the further act of the people through the instrumentality of a law? To make the law odious, it is assumed that the legislature is or may be corrupt. But this is aside from the true question of power. In a governmental and proper sense, law is the highest act of a people's sovereignty, while their government and Constitution remain unchanged. It is the supreme will of the people expressed in the forms and by the authority of their Constitution. It is their own appointed mode through which they govern themselves, and by which they bind themselves. So long as their frame of government is unchanged in its grant of all legislative power, these laws are supreme over all subjects unforbidden by the instrument itself. The calling of a convention, and regulating its action by law, is not forbidden in the Constitution. It is a conceded manner, through which the people may exercise the right reserved in the Bill of Rights. It falls, therefore, within the protection of the Bill of Rights as a very manner in which the people may proceed to amend their Constitution, and delegate the only powers they intend to confer, and as the means whereby they may, by limitation, defend themselves against those who are called in to exercise their powers. The legislature may not confer powers by law inconsistent with the rights, safety, and liberties of the people, because no consent to do this can be implied, but they may pass limitations in favor of the essential rights of the people. The right of the people to restrain their delegates by law cannot be denied, unless the power to call a convention by law, and the right of self-protection be also denied. It is, therefore, the right of the people and not of the legislature to be put by law above the convention, and to require the delegates to submit their work for ratification or disapproval. * * *

Decree affirmed.⁸

⁸ The prevailing American practice of submitting Constitutions and amendments to the people for ratification is indicated by the discussion in Jameson, Const. Conv. §§ 479-495 (4th Ed.). Nearly 50 conventions, however, have followed a contrary procedure, and have given effect to their work without such a submission. Most of these were before 1800, or in the South during the period of secession and reconstruction. Recent instances, however, have occurred in Mississippi (1890), South Carolina (1895), Delaware (1897), Louisiana (1898), Virginia (1902), and, in effect, in Kentucky (1891). The Louisiana convention was expressly authorized to do this by a previous popular vote, State v. Favre, 51 La. Ann. 434, 25 South. 93 (1899); and the Mississippi convention had legislative authority to "enact" a new Constitution, Sproule v. Fredericks, 69 Miss. 898, 11 South. 472 (1892). The South Carolina convention was uninstructed by either legislature or people, and in Delaware the legislature recommended to the convention the popular submission of its work. The Kentucky and Virginia conventions were expressly instructed by their legislatures to submit their proposed Constitutions to popular vote. The Kentucky con-

ELLINGHAM v. DYE.

(Supreme Court of Indiana, 1912. 99 N. E. 1.)

[Appeal from Marion County Circuit Court. In 1911 the Indiana Legislature passed, with the formalities of ordinary legislation, and the Governor approved, an act (Laws 1911, c. 118) termed a "proposed new Constitution," which was a copy of the existing Constitution with 23 amendments, with a provision that it should be submitted to the voters at the general election of November, 1912, and, if adopted, should take effect January 1, 1913. Dye, a citizen, voter, and taxpayer of Marion county, on behalf of himself and all other citizens, voters, and taxpayers of the state, sued to enjoin Ellingham, as Secretary of State, and the state board of election commissioners (of whom the governor was one), from performing certain ministerial duties devolving upon them under said act in preparing ballots and conducting the election for the submission of the proposed Constituvention did so, and, after its adoption, the convention reassembled, amended the Constitution in various substantial particulars, and promulgated it without further submission. The political departments of the state government recognized the validity of these changes, and the courts accepted them. Miller v. Johnson, 92 Ky. 589, 18 S. W. 522, 15 L. R. A. 524 (1892). The Virginia convention promulgated a Constitution in defiance of instructions, but the governor and members of the legislature swore allegiance to it, and the courts upheld it as the existing frame of government. Taylor v. Commonwealth, 101 Va. 829, 44 S. E. 754 (1903). See an account of most of the above proceedings in Lobingier, The People's Law, 301-325 (1909).

"The better view would seem to be that the convention is a regular organ of the state (although as a rule called only at long intervals)—neither sovereign nor subordinate to the legislature, but independent within its proper sphere. Under this view the legislature cannot bind the convention as to what shall be placed in the Constitution, or as to the exercise of its proper duties. If, then, we say that the convention is independent of the regular legislature in the exercise of its proper duties, it will be necessary to discuss for a moment what are its proper functions. These are simply to propose a new Constitution or to propose constitutional amendments to the people for approval; or, in states where the submission of Constitutions is not required, to frame and adopt a Constitution if they think proper. In this sphere, and in the exercise of powers incidental to its proper functions, it would seem that constitutional conventions should not be subject to control by legislative acts. * * * As a rule, then, constitutional conventions are subject only to the following restrictions: (1) Those contained in or implied from provisions in the existing state and federal Constitutions; and (2) in the absence of constitutional provisions, those derived or implied from the limited functions of conventions. To these restrictions Jameson and others would add those imposed by legislative acts under which conventions are called, but such restrictions are certainly not yet recognized as of absolute binding force, except in Pennsylvania, and should not be so recognized if the convention is to be an instrument of great usefulness." Dodd, Revision and Amendment of State Constitutions, 80, 92 (1910).

The principal judicial utterances in favor of these views are quoted in Frantz v. Austry, 18 Okl. 561, 588-603, 91 Pac. 193 (1907). As to how far conventions may be limited by an express or implied popular assent to the terms of the legislative call, see Dodd, supra, 74-77 (cases). Some state Constitutions make the constitutional convention, within its sphere, independent of both legislative authorization and control. Carton v. Sec'y of State, 151 Mich. 337, 115 N. W. 429 (1908); N. Y. Const. art. 14, § 2 (1894).

tion, on the ground, among others, of the Legislature's lack of power to submit such a proposal. The extra expense involved in such submission was under $2,000, of which plaintiff's share would be less than three cents. The Circuit Court granted the injunction and defendants appealed.]

Cox, C. J. * * * The underlying question involved, out of which all the others presented grow, is simply whether the act printed as chapter 118 is a valid exercise of legislative power by the General Assembly. On this question the appellants contend that the act involves the submission of a new Constitution to the people for adoption or rejection, and that the General Assembly is clothed with power to initiate, draft, and submit a new Constitution to the people in such form and manner as to enable them to adopt it as the organic law of the state. This power, it is asserted, is included in the general grant of the legislative power of the government instituted by the existing Constitution which is made to the General Assembly by section 1 of article 4 of that instrument, which provides that "the legislative authority of the state shall be vested in the General Assembly." The appellee, on the contrary, in support of the conclusion of the trial court that the act in question is unconstitutional and void, contends that the power to initiate, frame, and submit to the people fundamental law is not legislative power in the sense in which the General Assembly is vested with legislative power by that provision. But the making of fundamental law being essentially different from ordinary legislation, the power of the General Assembly in relation to it is measured by the special and limited grant of power to it, made by article 16 of the present Constitution, to initiate, frame, and submit amendments in the mode and manner therein provided; and that this by necessary implication withholds the right of the broader and more comprehensive exercise of the power to so participate in fundamental legislation involved in initiating, preparing, and submitting a new Constitution. Appellee also contends that the draft embodied in chapter 118 is not that of a new Constitution, but that it is in substance, truth, and fact merely proposed amendments of the existing Constitution, and that therefore it cannot be lawfully submitted to the people for their action because of noncompliance with the requirements of article 16. * * *

The General Assembly of our state is clothed with legislative authority in the words of section 1 of article 4 quoted above. That the General Assembly is supreme and sovereign in the exercise of the lawmaking power thus conferred upon it, subject only to such limitations as are imposed, expressly or by clear implication, by the state Constitution and the restraints of the federal Constitution and the laws and treaties passed and made pursuant to it, has been uniformly declared by an unbroken line of decisions of this court from the beginning of the judicial history of the state to the present. But this general grant of authority to exercise the legislative element of sovereign power has never been considered to include authority over fundamental legislation. It has always been declared to vest in the legislative department authority to make, alter, and repeal laws, as rules of civil conduct pursuant to the Constitution made and ordained by the people themselves and to carry out the details of the government so instituted. * * *

To erect the state, to institute the form of its government, is a function inherent in the sovereign people; to carry out its purpose of protecting and enforcing the rights and liberties of which the ordained Constitution is a guaranty by enacting rules of civil conduct relating to the details and particulars of the government instituted, is the function of the Legislature under the general grant of authority. It needed no reservation in the organic law to preserve to the people their inherent power to change their government against such a general grant of legislative authority; and yet we find in the first section of the first article of the Constitution this statement of the purpose of the government which they had builded, and the declaration of their power over it: "We declare that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that all power is inherent in the people; and that all free governments are, and of right ought to be, founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and well-being. For the advancement of these ends, the people have, at all times, an indefeasible right to alter and reform their government."

With knowledge of the tendency of vested power to broaden and exalt itself, the people have declared their abiding power over the framework of the government, while in section 1 of article 4 they gave into the hands of an agency the authority to exercise all their power to make laws to carry out the declared purpose of the government, save such as they had withheld by express or implied limitations, or had surrendered to the federal government. * * *

[Continuing a quotation from Jameson, Const. Conventions (4th Ed.) 359, concerning the general powers of a state legislature:]

"To this general statement of the extent of the power of our Legislatures, the proviso must be appended that the measures passed by those bodies must not be of the character denominated fundamental. * * * Saving the single case, to be noted in a subsequent chapter, in which by express constitutional provision they act in conventional capacity, in the way of recommending specific amendments to their Constitutions, they have no power whatever to amend, alter, or abolish those instruments. * * * The formation and establishment of the fundamental law is, in all the American Constitutions, regularly the work of conventions acting in conjunction with the electors. On the other hand, no fact is better settled than that, beyond the province thus specially set apart for them, neither conventions nor the bodies of electors have any legislative power. They can neither of them pass any law comprised within the sphere of ordinary legislation." * * *

[After quoting from cases in Arkansas, Illinois, California, Idaho, and Missouri statements that the proposing of constitutional amendments is not an exercise of ordinary legislative power:]

In the case of Commonwealth v. Griest, 196 Pa. 396, 46 Atl. 505, 50 L. R. A. 568, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania directed a writ of mandamus to issue to compel the Secretary of State to perform his statutory duties in submitting an amendment which he had refused to discharge because the Governor had vetoed the amendment, and the court held that neither veto nor signing by the Governor could affect such proposed amendment,¹ as amending the Constitution was not lawmaking. It was said that the article of their Constitution, similar to ours, which vested generally the legislative authority in the General Assembly, did not cover fundamental legislation. * * * And it was said of the provision which empowered the Legislature to frame and submit amendments of the Constitution: "It is Constitution-making; it is a concentration of all the power of the people in establishing organic law for the commonwealth. * * * It is not lawmaking, which is a distinct and separate function, but it is a specific exercise of the power of a people to make its Constitution." * * *

[Here follow quotations to the same effect from Jameson, and a reference to article 16 of the Indiana Constitution, which empowers the legislature, by a majority vote of each house chosen at two successive general elections, to submit constitutional amendments to the voters of the state, and requires the submission of two or more amendments, if made at the same time, to be in such a manner that they can be voted upon separately.]

The presence of this article in the Constitution fights against the contention that the general grant of legislative authority bears in its broad arms by implication any power to formulate and submit proposed organic law whether in the form of an entire and complete instrument of government to supersede the existing one or single amendment. For if the General Assembly have the greater power, unfettered power, under the general grant, what necessity could there have existed for giving the lesser, special power, which the checks and limitations accompanying it? That both the general grant of legislative authority and the special authorization to act in relation to amendments were deemed necessary by the framers of the Constitution arises from the obvious fact that each involved a different subject-matter; the one, of ordinary lawmaking, and, the other, the change of organic law. The one involved, necessarily, a broad discretion while the other merely gave a narrow, limited power, under guard, to aid the people in the exercise of their sovereign power over the structure of their government. * * *

¹ Accord (assent of Governor unnecessary to legislatively proposed constitutional amendment): State ex rel. Morris v. Secretary of State, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 South. 776 (1891); Warfield v. Vandiver, 101 Md. 78, 116-121, 60 Atl. 538, 4 Ann. Cas. 692 (1905) (cases). Likewise, the President's assent is unnecessary to congressionally proposed amendments to the federal Constitution. Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. 378, 1 L. Ed. 644 (1798). Nor do other constitutional requirements for the processes of ordinary legislation govern the proposal of amendments, unless expressly made applicable thereto. Julius v. Callahan, 63 Minn. 154, 65 N. W. 267 (1895). As to how far one legislature may bind its successors in such matters, see Murphy Chair Co. v. Attorney General, 148 Mich. 563, 112 N. W. 127 (1907); State ex rel. Galusha v. Davis, 20 Nev. 220, 19 Pac. 894 (1888).

[After an exhaustive review of the history of Constitution making and amending in Indiana:]

If the power to draft and submit to the people organic law is embraced in the broad bestowal of "the legislative authority of the state" made in section 1 of article 4, where is the limitation on it, save that of the Constitution of the United States? What check is laid upon the use of the power? There is none, for all the checks and limitations which the people in their Constitution have placed upon the Legislature are upon the exercise of the power over ordinary legislation, and have no relation to fundamental legislation. The Legislature being supreme, and sovereign in the exercise of the legislative authority, save only as it is limited by the Constitution of the United States, the laws and treaties made under it, and the limitations stated in our state Constitution, if its general authority includes the subject-matter of organic legislation, why submit the "new Constitution" to the people at all? For the federal Constitution or laws do not prohibit doing so, and no limitation is found in article 4 of our own Constitution which places a ban upon the action. * * *

Sound legal and political principles, the history of our political life as a state, and the authority of judicial and commentatorial opinion, all unite in forcing the conclusion that the act of 1911 is invalid for want of power in that body to draft an entire Constitution and forthwith submit it to the people under its general legislative authority, if the instrument be conceded to be a new Constitution and not merely amendments; and that, if it be considered as merely a series of amendments, it is a palpable evasion and disregard of the requirements and checks of article 16, and is for that reason void. This conclusion renders unnecessary any consideration of the other objections raised against the validity of the act. * * *

The further contention of counsel, that the court is without jurisdiction for the reason that courts may not interfere with legislative action, has for its basis the claim that, using the words of counsel, the writ of injunction in this case, if it does anything, restrains the enactment of a law which is upon its passage and which may not, of course, be done. Much of the argument of counsel is based upon the assumption that in doing the thing sought to be done through chapter 118 the General Assembly was acting within its power, and it falls to the ground with the determination to the contrary. Since the act incorporating the proposed organic law was passed in the form of and in accordance with the prescribed rules of ordinary enactments, and since it provided rules of conduct for the action of certain officials, it must be subject to interpretation and construction of the courts. The work of the Legislature in relation to it is at an end; it has passed beyond any further action of that body—so far as the Legislature is concerned it is a complete enactment. If the Legislature was without power to formulate and present the proposed organic law to the people, as we have seen it was, chapter 118 is void, and the mandate of that body that the ballot shall be incumbered with the question of its adoption is of no more force than that of any citizen without authority under the Constitution. The question involved is no more than whether ministerial acts threatened to be done in carrying out the provisions of an unconstitutional act may be enjoined. This, as we have seen, may be done. And there is also authority for the intervention of the courts before proposed constitutional changes have been passed upon by the votes of the electors and the result declared.² * * *

[Here follows the citation of various cases, only two of which are in point—Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 36 Pac. 424, 25 L. R. A. 313; Holmberg v. Jones, 7 Idaho, 752, 65 Pac. 563 (semble).]

Judgment affirmed.

[MORRIS, J., gave a dissenting opinion (SPENCER, J., concurring) upon the grounds that no injunction could issue against the governor, nor against a political act like the submission of a constitutional amendment, quoting largely from State v. Thorson (see note below).]

² In the following cases the submission to the voters of proposed constitutional changes was enjoined by the courts on the ground of their invalidity: Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 36 Pac. 424, 25 L. R. A. 312 (1894) (defective substance); Holmberg v. Jones, 7 Idaho, 752, 65 Pac. 563 (1901) (defective method of proposal)—semble. In Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 39, 15 Am. Rep. 563 (1873) a particular mode of submission, invalid in form, was enjoined. See, also, the arguments in Mayor, etc., of City of Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 795, 801-806, 36 S. E. 247 (1900); De Kalb County v. City of Atlanta, 132 Ga. 727, 740, 65 S. E. 72 (1909); Tolbert v. Long, 134 Ga. 292, 294, 295, 67 S. E. 826, 137 Am. St. Rep. 222 (1910)—all cases of ordinary "local option" legislation.

In the following cases courts refused to enjoin the submission to the voters of proposed constitutional changes, on the ground of their alleged invalidity: State ex rel. Cranmer v. Thorson, 9 S. D. 149, 68 N. W. 202, 33 L. R. A. 582 (1896) (defective substance); Frantz v. Autry, 18 Okl. 561, 603-611, 91 Pac. 193 (1907) (same)—see Threadgill v. Cross, 26 Okl. 403, 109 Pac. 558, 138 Am. St. Rep. 964 (1910) (mandamus granted to compel submission); People ex rel. O'Reilly v. Mills, 30 Colo. 262, 70 Pac. 322 (1902) (defective method of proposal)—see People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 Pac. 167, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34 (1903).

In Wells v. Bain, above, and Frantz v. Autry, above, the changes were proposed by constitutional conventions. In all of the other cases they were proposed by legislatures.

In State ex rel. Cranmer v. Thorson, 9 S. D. 149, 154, 155, 68 N. W. 202, 33 L. R. A. 582 (1896) the court refused, at the suit of a taxpayer, to enjoin the Secretary of State from certifying to the proper election officials a constitutional amendment proposed in the proper legislative method, but alleged to KOEHLER v. HILL.

(Supreme Court of Iowa, 1883. 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609.)

[Appeal from Scott County District Court. The Constitution of Iowa provided that proposed amendments thereto should be agreed to by two successive sessions of the General Assembly and then submitted to the people for ratification, and should become a part of the Constitution when approved by a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon. A proposed amendment, which purported to have be ineffectual in substance. Haney, J., said (after holding relator's pecuniary interest as a taxpayer to be too trifling):

"There is another view, which involves the structure of the state government and the relation of its several departments. Should it be conceded that the relator has such an interest in the matter as entitles him to be heard, or that the action involves a question of such public concern as would warrant an attempt by the Attorney General to obtain an injunction, could this court issue it? No precedent for such action has been presented by counsel or discovered by the court. In discussing this phase of the case it will be assumed an amendment of the Constitution was intended requiring the concurrent action of the Legislature and electors. The former has acted. Its action will be communicated to the latter by means of defendant's certificate. Until the latter shall have expressed their approval, the proceeding is incomplete, and the Constitution will remain unchanged. The proposed amendment is on its way to the electors. Can this court, at this time, impede its progress? Can it be called upon to anticipate conditions which may never exist? Can it interpose its process between the Legislature and electors, who are alone with power to modify the fundamental law, before both have acted, and while the matter is pending and incomplete? The powers of the state government are divided into three distinct departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial. The powers and duties of each are prescribed by the Constitution. Const. art. 2. Power to amend the Constitution belongs exclusively to the Legislature and electors. It is legislation of the most important character. This court has power to determine what such legislation is, what the Constitution contains, but not what it should contain. It has power to determine what statutory laws exist, and whether or not they conflict with the Constitution; but it cannot say what laws shall or shall not be enacted. It has the power and it is its duty, whenever the question arises in the usual course of litigation, wherein the substantial rights of any actual litigants are involved, to decide whether any statute has been legally enacted, or whether any change in the Constitution has been legally effected; but it will hardly be contended that it can interpose in any case to restrain the enactment of an unconstitutional law. Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. 500 [18 L. Ed. 437]. If the Legislature cannot be enjoined when engaged in the enactment of unconstitutional statutes, it and the electors cannot be enjoined when engaged in an unwarranted attempt to amend the Constitution. To issue an injunction in this action would be to enjoin the Legislature and electors in the exercise of their legislative duty. Suppose a bill, having passed the Legislature, is in possession of the Governor, or, to make the analogy more nearly complete, suppose it is being conveyed to the executive by an officer of the Legislature; would any one imagine the progress of the messenger could be arrested by an injunction? The inquiry answers itself. Is there any distinction in principle or reason between such a case and the case under discussion? Clearly none. An injunction cannot be granted to prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation. Comp. Laws 1887, § 4650. The Code expresses the settled doctrine in this respect. Spell. Extr. Relief, § 688. If courts cannot interfere with the legislative proceedings of a city council, they certainly cannot with like proceedings in the Legislature

HALL CONST. L.—2

been agreed to by the Eighteenth General Assembly, appeared enrolled and signed as follows: "No person shall manufacture for sale, or sell, or keep for sale, as a beverage, any intoxicating liquor whatever, including ale, wine, and beer." This proposed amendment was also agreed to by the Nineteenth General Assembly and was ratified by a majority of 30,000 of the electors. It appeared from the journals of the senate of the Eighteenth General Assembly that the resolution actually agreed to by that body contained the words "or to be used" after the word "beverage," though the enrolled resolution signed by the president of the senate omitted these words. In an action by plaintiffs to recover for beer sold and delivered to defendant, it was held that the senate journals might be examined to contradict the enrolled resolution,¹ and that the proposed amendment never legally became a part of the Constitution. The defendant appealed, and the state Supreme Court affirmed the decision (Beck, J., dissenting). On a petition for rehearing the following opinion was given:]

DAY, C. J. * * * It is asserted in the petition for rehearing that "the judicial department of the state has no jurisdiction over political questions, and cannot review the action of the Nineteenth General Assembly, and of the people, in the matter of the adoption or amendment of the Constitution of the state." This position practically amounts to this: that the provisions of the Constitution for its own amendment are simply directory, and may be disregarded with impunity; for it is idle to say that these requirements of the Constitution must be observed, if the departments charged with their observance are the sole judges as to whether or not they have been complied with. This proposition was advanced for the first time upon the petition for rehearing, and, if correct, it is of course an end of the controversy. Upon this branch of the case counsel cite Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. Ed. 581. As this case has principally been relied upon by the advocates of the theory now under consideration, and has been given great prominence in the discussions which have taken place, we desire to present its facts with a degree of fullness which, under ordinary circumstances, would perhaps be considered unnecessary, to the end that the degree of its applicability to the present case may be fully understood.

itself. If they cannot prevent the Legislature from enacting unconstitutional laws, they cannot prevent it and the electors from making ineffectual efforts to amend the Constitution."

The legislative proposal of a constitutional amendment, though not ordinary legislation, is yet the exercise of a legislative function. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Curry, 130 Cal. 82, 62 Pac. 516 (1900).

¹ Upon this question the authorities in all the states are collected in Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 661 ff., 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294 (1892); 23 L. R. A. 340, note; and 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1, note. Where not governed by special statutory or constitutional provisions, the better authority gives preference to the enrolled act over the evidence of legislative journals.

In 1841, the state of Rhode Island was acting under the form of government established by the charter of Charles II in 1663. In this form of government no mode of proceeding was pointed out by which amendments could be made. It authorized the legislature to prescribe the qualification of voters, and in the exercise of this power the right of suffrage was confined to freeholders. In 1841, meetings were held and associations were formed by those who were in favor of a more extended right of suffrage, which finally resulted in the election of a convention to form a new Constitution, to be submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection. The persons chosen came together and framed a Constitution by which the right of suffrage was extended to every male citizen of twenty-one years of age who had resided in the State for one year. Upon a return of the votes, the convention declared that the Constitution was adopted and ratified by a majority of the people of the state, and was the paramount law and Constitution of Rhode Island. The charter government did not admit the validity of the proceedings, nor acquiesce in them. On the contrary, in January, 1842, when this new Constitution was communicated to the governor and by him laid before the legislature, it passed resolutions declaring all acts done for the purpose of imposing that Constitution upon the state, to be an assumption of the powers of government, in violation of the rights of the existing government and of the people at large, and that it would maintain its authority and defend the legal and constitutional rights of the people. Thomas W. Dorr, who had been elected governor under the new Constitution, prepared to assert the authority of that government by force, and many citizens assembled in arms to support him. The charter government thereupon passed an act declaring the state under martial law, and at the same time proceeded to call out the militia to repel the threatened attack, and to subdue those who were engaged in it. The plaintiff, Luther, was engaged in supporting the new government, and, in order to arrest him, his house was broken and entered by the defendants, who were enrolled in the military force of the old government, and in arms to support its authority. The government under the new Constitution had but a short and ignoble existence. In May, 1842, Dorr made an unsuccessful attempt, at the head of a military force, to get possession of the state arsenal at Providence, which was repulsed. In June following, an assemblage of some hundreds of armed men, under his command at Chepachet, dispersed, upon the approach of the troops of the old government, and no further effort was made to establish the new government. In January, 1842, the charter government took measures to call a convention to revise the existing form of government, and a new Constitution was formed, which was ratified by the people, and went into operation in May, 1843, at which time the old government formally surrendered all its powers. Under this government Dorr was tried for treason, and in June, 1844, was sentenced to imprisonment for life. In October, 1842, Luther brought an action in the Circuit Court of the United States, against Borden and others, to recover damages for the breaking and entering of his house in June, 1842. The defendants justified, alleging that there was an insurrection to overthrow the government, that martial law was declared, that plaintiff was aiding and abetting the insurrection, that defendants were enrolled in the militia force of the state and were ordered to arrest the plaintiff. The plaintiff relied upon the fact that the Dorr government, to which he adhered, was the legal government of the state, and, as the new Constitution had never been recognized by any department of the old government, he offered to prove at the trial, by the production of the original ballots, and the original registers of the persons voting, and by the testimony of the persons voting, and by the Constitution itself, and by the census of the United States for the year 1840, that the Dorr Constitution was ratified by a large majority of the male people of the state, of the age of twenty-one and upwards, and also by a majority of those who were entitled to vote for general officers under the then existing laws of the state. The Circuit Court rejected the evidence, and instructed the jury that the charter government, and laws under which the defendants acted, were, at the time the trespass was alleged to have been committed, in full force and effect, and constituted a justification of the acts of the defendants. The correctness of this ruling involved the only question, which was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States for review. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was properly rejected. Of the correctness of that decision no one can entertain the shadow of a doubt. But the differences between that case and this are so many and so evident as to deprive it of all force as an authority in the present controversy. In that case an entire change in the form of government was undertaken; in this, simply an amendment, in no manner affecting the judicial authority of those acting under the existing government, is sought to be incorporated into the existing Constitution. In that case the charter provided no means for its amendment; in this, the mode of an amendment is specifically provided. In that case the authority of the court was invoked for the admission of oral evidence to overthrow the existing government and establish a new one in its place; in this, that authority is invoked simply to preserve the existing Constitution intact.

It is evident, from an examination of the entire case of Luther v. Borden, that the question which the court was considering pertained to the power of the federal courts to determine between rival constitutions in the states. The power is not denied to the state courts, unless one of the constitutions involved in the controversy be the one under which the court is organized. This is fully apparent from the whole opinion. * * *

The language of the court which, it is claimed, asserts the doctrine that the question of a change of Constitutions is a political one, with which courts have nothing to do, was clearly employed with reference to the peculiar facts of the case. This is apparent from the following language of the opinion, which is found upon pages 39, 40: "Indeed, we do not see how the question could be tried and judicially decided in the state court. Judicial power presupposes an established government, capable of enacting laws and enforcing their execution, and of appointing judges to expound and administer them. The acceptance of the judicial office is a recognition of the authority of the government from which it is derived, and if the authority of that government is annulled and overthrown, the power of its courts and other officers is annulled with it, and if a state court should enter upon the inquiry proposed in this case, and should come to the conclusion that the government under which it acted had been put aside and displaced by an opposing government, it would cease to be a court, and be incapable of pronouncing a judicial decision upon the question it undertook to try. If it decides at all as a court, it necessarily affirms the existence and the authority of the government under which it is exercising judicial power." That this reasoning is eminently sound no one can doubt. A court which, under the circumstances named, should enter upon an inquiry as to the existence of the Constitution under which it was acting, would be like a man trying to prove his personal existence, and would be obliged to assume the very point in dispute, before taking the first step in the argument. It is apparent that the reasoning employed in that case can have no application whatever to an amendment to a constitution, which does not affect the form of government, or the judicial powers of existing courts. The case of Luther v. Borden gives no countenance whatever to the doctrine that the sovereignty of the people extends rightfully to the overturning of Constitutions and the adoption of new ones, without regard to the forms of existing provisions. It is true that right, under our form of government, exists, but it is a revolutionary and not a constitutional right. When that right is invoked, a question arises which is above the Constitution, and above the courts, and which contending factions can alone determine by appeal to the dernier resort. In such a case as that, might makes right. That there are questions of such a character as to admit of no adjustment but through an appeal to arms, we freely admit. This arises out of the imperfections of human government. A government which could provide for the peaceful adjustment of all questions would be more than human. But surely no sagacious statesman or wise jurist will seek, by a narrow construction of judicial power, to extend the questions which are beyond the domain of the courts, and capable of solution only by an appeal to arms. Happily for the permanency and security of our institutions, the present case, as we believe, involves no such question.

It has been said that changes in the Constitution may be introduced in disregard of its provisions; that, if the majority of the people desire a change, the majority must be respected, no matter how the change may be effected, and that the change, if revolution, is peaceful revolution. But the revolution is peaceful only upon the assumption that the party opposed surrenders its opposition and voluntarily acquiesces. If it objects to the change, then a question arises which can be determined only in one of two methods, by the arbitrament of the courts, or by the arbitrament of the sword. * * *

Counsel have drawn an appalling picture of the wreck in which our political institutions would be involved, if the courts should conclude to decide that the Constitution of 1857, under which they are organized, had not been properly adopted. The courts of this state possess no such power, and they could not assume such a jurisdiction. The reason why a court could not enter upon the determination as to the validity of a Constitution under which it is itself organized, is forcibly set forth in the case of Luther v. Borden, supra, upon which appellant relies. The distinction between such a case and one involving merely an amendment, not in any manner pertaining to the judicial authority, must at once be apparent to the legal mind. The authorities recognize the distinction. We are at a loss to know why appellant's counsel ignore and disregard it.

Appellant's counsel cite and rely upon section 2, article 1, of the Constitution of the state. This section is a portion of the Bill of Rights, and is as follows: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right, at all times, to alter or reform the same, whenever the public good may require." Abstractly considered, there can be no doubt of the correctness of the propositions embraced in this section. These principles are older than Constitutions, and older than governments. The people did not derive the rights referred to from the Constitution, and, in their nature, they are such that the people cannot surrender them. The people would have retained them if they had not been specifically recognized in the Constitution. But let us consider how these rights are to be exercised in an organized government. The people of this state have adopted a Constitution which specifically designates the modes for its own amendment. But this section declares the people have the right at all times to alter or reform the government, whenever the public good may require it. If the people unanimously agree respecting an alteration in the government, there could be no trouble, for there would be no one to object. Suppose, however, a part of the people conclude that the public good requires an alteration or reformation in the government, and they set about the adoption of a new Constitution, in a manner not authorized in the old one. Suppose, also, as would most likely prove to be the case, that a part of the people are content with the existing government, and will not consent to the change, and that the governor, who, under the Constitution, is the "commander-in-chief of the militia, the army and navy of the state," determines to maintain the existing government by force. It is evident that the people who think the public good requires a change, can establish these changes only by superior force. If they are powerful enough to succeed, well. They will have altered or reformed the government. But if they are not powerful enough, to succeed, their attempt to overthrow the government is treason, and they are liable to punishment as traitors. They have the right to alter their government, in a manner not recognized in the Constitution, only when they can maintain that right by superior force. It follows, then, after all, that the much boasted right claimed under this action, is simply the right to alter the government in the manner prescribed in the existing Constitution, or the right of revolution, which is a right to be exercised, not under the Constitution, but in disregard and independently of it. * * *

[Quoting from Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, p. 30:] "In the original states, and all others subsequently admitted to the Union, the power to amend or revise their Constitutions resides in the great body of the people as an organized body politic, who, being vested with ultimate sovereignty, and the source of all state authority, have power to control and alter the law which they have made at their will. But the people in the legal sense must be understood to be those who, by the existing Constitution, are clothed with political rights, and who, while that instrument remains, will be the sole organs through which the will of the body politic can be expressed. But the will of the people to this end can only be expressed in the legitimate modes by which such a body politic can act, and which must either be prescribed by the Constitution whose revision or amendment is sought, or by an act of the legislative department of the state, which alone would be authorized to speak for the people upon this subject, and to point out a mode for the expression of their will, in the absence of any provision for amendment or revision contained in the Constitution itself." * * *

[The court here discusses Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 108; State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 636; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505; Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265, 6 N. W. 641; Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 700; State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; and Trustees v. McIver, 72 N. C. 76.]

It is true that in the last five cases the question of jurisdiction was not raised by counsel. But the courts could not have entered upon an examination of the cases without first determining in favor of their jurisdiction. If they entertained doubts respecting their jurisdiction, it was the duty of the courts to raise the question themselves. We have then seven states, Alabama, Missouri, Kansas, Michigan, North Carolina, Wisconsin, and Indiana, in which the jurisdiction of the courts over the adoption of an amendment to a Constitution has been recognized and asserted. In no decision, either state or federal, has this jurisdiction been denied. We may securely rest our jurisdiction upon the authority of these cases. * * *

Petition overruled.²

[BECK, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

² Accord: State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, 77 Miss. 543, 27 South. 927, 48 L. R. A. 652 (1900); Ellingham v. Dye (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1, 21 (1912)—both collecting the later cases. Neither the declaration of the legislature that an amendment is part of the Constitution, State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, above; nor that of the governor, Bott v. Wurts, 63 N. J. Law, 289, 43 Atl. 744, 881, 45 L. R. A. 251 (1899); McConaughy v. Secretary of State, 106 Minn. 392, 119 N. W. 408 (1909), binds the courts.

In a number of states unimportant deviations from the prescribed method of submitting constitutional amendments are held not to invalidate them. State ex rel. Thompson v. Winnett, 78 Neb. 379, 110 N. W. 1113, 15 Ann. Cas. 781 (1907), annotated in 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149. In a few states the local Constitution expressly confers upon certain officials or tribunals the duty of deciding whether a proposed amendment has been adopted by the requisite vote or not, and this decision will bind the courts; but otherwise this question is a judicial one also. State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, above (cases).

As to what constitutes the "majority" commonly required for the popular adoption of constitutional amendments, see the annotation in 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478, to State ex rel. Blair v. Brooks, 17 Wyo. 344, 99 Pac. 874 (1909).

Where a constitutional amendment, even though irregularly adopted, affects an important part of the framework of government and has been acted upon so long that to annul it would create great public embarrassment, it will be judicially upheld. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 452-456, 36 Pac. 221 (1894) (power of legislature for past 10 years). See, also, Weston v. Ryan, 70 Neb. 211, 97 N. W. 347, 6 Ann. Cas. 922 (1903), and Pease v. Peck, 18 How. 595, 15 L. Ed. 518 (1856) [but compare Hulburt v. Merriam, 3 Mich. 144 (1854)].

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.—See U. S. Const. art. 5. Can the Constitution be amended in any other way than as here prescribed? May a state revoke its ratification of a proposed amendment, before three-fourths of the states have ratified? May Congress recall an amendment once submitted to the states? How long are submitted amendments open to ratification? For a discussion of these questions, see Jameson, Const. Conv. §§ 575-86 (4th Ed.).

CHAPTER II

FUNCTION OF JUDICIARY IN ENFORCING CONSTITUTIONS

SECTION 1.—POWER TO DECLARE STATUTES UNCONSTITUTIONAL

THE FEDERALIST.¹

The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited Constitution. By a limited Constitution, I understand one which contains certain specified exceptions to the legislative authority; such, for instance, as that it shall pass no bills of attainder, no ex post facto laws, and the like. Limitations of this kind can be preserved in practice no other way than through the medium of courts of justice, whose duty it must be to declare all acts contrary to the manifest tenor of the Constitution void. Without this, all the reservations of particular rights or privileges would amount to nothing.

Some perplexity respecting the rights of the courts to pronounce legislative acts void, because contrary to the Constitution, has arisen from an imagination that the doctrine would imply a superiority of the judiciary to the legislative power. It is urged that the authority which can declare the acts of another void, must necessarily be superior to the one whose acts may be declared void. As this doctrine is of great importance in all the American Constitutions, a brief discussion of the ground on which it rests cannot be unacceptable.

There is no position which depends on clearer principles, than that every act of a delegated authority, contrary to the tenor of the commission under which it is exercised, is void. No legislative act, therefore, contrary to the Constitution, can be valid. To deny this, would be to affirm, that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers may do not only what their powers do not authorize, but what they forbid.

If it be said that the legislative body are themselves the constitutional judges of their own powers, and that the construction they put upon them is conclusive upon the other departments, it may be answered, that this cannot be the natural presumption, where it is not to be collected from any particular provisions in the Constitution. It is not otherwise to be supposed, that the Constitution could intend to enable the representatives of the people to substitute their will to that of their constituents. It is far more rational to suppose, that the courts were designed to be an intermediate body between the people and the legislature, in order, among other things, to keep the latter within the limits assigned to their authority. The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A Constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges, as a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning, as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought, of course, to be preferred; or, in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute, the intention of the people to the intention of their agents.

¹ The passages here reprinted are taken from The Federalist (Ford's Ed.), a collection of papers published in 1787-88, chiefly by Hamilton and Madison, urging the adoption by the states of the then proposed federal Constitution.

Nor does this conclusion by any means suppose a superiority of the judicial to the legislative power. It only supposes that the power of the people is superior to both; and that where the will of the legislature, declared in its statutes, stands in opposition to that of the people, declared in the Constitution, the judges ought to be governed by the latter rather than the former. They ought to regulate their decisions by the fundamental laws, rather than by those which are not fundamental.

This exercise of judicial discretion, in determining between two contradictory laws, is exemplified in a familiar instance. It not uncommonly happens, that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other, and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression. In such a case, it is the province of the courts to liquidate and fix their meaning and operation. So far as they can, by any fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done; where this is impracticable, it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one, in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is, that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first. But this is a mere rule of construction, not derived from any positive law, but from the nature and reason of the thing. It is a rule not enjoined upon the courts by legislative provision, but adopted by themselves, as consonant to truth and propriety, for the direction of their conduct as interpreters of the law. They thought it reasonable, that between the interfering acts of an equal authority, that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference.

But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority, of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority; and that accordingly, whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former.

It can be of no weight to say that the courts, on the pretence of a repugnancy, may substitute their own pleasure to the constitutional intentions of the legislature. This might as well happen in the case of two contradictory statutes; or it might as well happen in every adjudication upon any single statute. The courts must declare the sense of the law; and if they should be disposed to exercise will instead of judgment, the consequence would equally be the substitution of their pleasure to that of the legislative body. The observation, if it prove anything, would prove that there ought to be no judges distinct from that body.—Federalist, No. 78 (Hamilton) (Ford's Ed.) 520-523.²

There ought always to be a constitutional method of giving efficacy to constitutional provisions. What, for instance, would avail restrictions on the authority of the state legislatures, without some constitutional mode of enforcing the observance of them? The states, by the plan of the convention, are prohibited from doing a variety of things, some of which are incompatible with the interests of the Union, and others with the principles of good government. The imposition of duties on imported articles, and the emission of paper money, are specimens of each kind. No man of sense will believe, that such prohibitions would be scrupulously regarded, without some effectual power in the government to restrain or correct the infractions of them. This power must either be a direct negative on the state laws, or an authority in the federal courts to overrule such as might be in manifest contravention of the articles of Union. There is no third course that I can imagine. The latter appears to have been thought by the convention preferable to the former, and, I presume, will be most agreeable to the states.—Federalist, No. 80 (Hamilton) (Ford's Ed.) 531.

² Before the framing and adoption of the United States Constitution in 1787-88 there had been a number of decisions or dicta in state courts upon the point, chiefly to the effect that an unconstitutional act of the legislature might be disregarded by the courts. See Holmes v. Walton, 4 Amer. Hist. Review 456 (N. J. 1780); Comm. v. Caton, 4 Call, 5 (Va. 1782); Rutgers v. Waddington, Pamphlet, 1784 and 1806 (N. Y. 1784); Trevett v. Weeden, 2 Chand. Crim. Trials, 269 (R. I., 1786); perhaps a Massachusetts case, 7 Harv. L. Rev. 415 (1786-87); Bayard v. Singleton, 1 Mart. 42 (1 N. C. 5) (1787). These cases and others arising before Marbury v. Madison, below, are collected and discussed by Wm. M. Meigs, in 19 Amer. Law Rev. 175-190, and 40 Amer. L. Rev. 649-654, and in Cox, Judic. Pow. and Unconst. Legislat., 219-269. All but the first and fifth of them are printed in 1 Thayer, Cas. on Const. Law, 55-80.

MARBURY v. MADISON.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1803. 1 Cranch. 137, 2 L. Ed. 60.)

[Original mandamus proceeding. William Marbury and others moved for a rule to James Madison, Secretary of State, to show cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding the delivery to applicants of their commissions as justices of the peace of the District of Columbia, which had been previously signed by President Adams just before the expiration of his term of office. The Judiciary Act of 1789 authorized the Supreme Court "to issue writs of mandamus * * * to any courts appointed or persons holding office under the authority of the United States." After deciding that the applicants had a legal right to the commissions, that mandamus was a proper remedy, but that the power to issue it was not within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, under article III, § 2, par. 2, of the Constitution, the court proceeded as follows:]

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL. * * * The authority, therefore, given to the Supreme Court, by the act establishing the judicial courts of the United States, to issue writs of mandamus to public officers, appears not to be warranted by the Constitution; and it becomes necessary to inquire whether a jurisdiction so conferred can be exercised.

The question whether an act repugnant to the Constitution can become the law of the land, is a question deeply interesting to the United States; but, happily, not of an intricacy proportioned to its interest. It seems only necessary to recognize certain principles, supposed to have been long and well established, to decide it.

That the people have an original right to establish, for their future government, such principles as, in their opinion, shall most conduce to their own happiness, is the basis on which the whole American fabric has been erected. The exercise of this original right is a very great exertion; nor can it nor ought it to be frequently repeated. The principles, therefore, so established, are deemed fundamental. And as the authority from which they proceed is supreme, and can seldom act, they are designed to be permanent. This original and supreme will organizes the government, and assigns to different departments their respective powers. It may either stop here, or establish certain limits not to be transcended by those departments.

The government of the United States is of the latter description. The powers of the legislature are defined and limited; and that those limits may not be mistaken, or forgotten, the Constitution is written. To what purpose are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may, at any time, be passed by those intended to be restrained? The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers is abolished, if those limits do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed, and if acts prohibited and acts allowed are of equal obligation. It is a proposition too plain to be contested, that the Constitution controls any legislative act repugnant to it; or, that the legislature may alter the Constitution by an ordinary act. Between these alternatives there is no middle ground. The Constitution is either a superior paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and, like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it. If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the Constitution is not law; if the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts, on the part of the people, to limit a power in its own nature illimitable.

Certainly all those who have framed written constitutions contemplate them as forming the fundamental and paramount law of the nation, and, consequently, the theory of every such government must be, that an act of the legislature, repugnant to the Constitution, is void. This theory is essentially attached to a written constitution, and is consequently to be considered, by this court, as one of the fundamental principles of our society. It is not, therefore, to be lost sight of in the further consideration of this subject. If an act of the legislature, repugnant to the Constitution, is void, does it, notwithstanding its invalidity, bind the courts, and oblige them to give it effect? Or, in other words, though it be not law, does it constitute a rule as operative as if it was a law? This would be to overthrow in fact what was established in theory; and would seem, at first view, an absurdity too gross to be insisted on. It shall, however, receive a more attentive consideration.

It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases, must of necessity expound and interpret that rule. If two laws conflict with each other, the courts must decide on the operation of each. So if a law be in opposition to the Constitution; if both the law and the Constitution apply to a particular case, so that the court must either decide that case conformably to the law, disregarding the Constitution, or conformably to the Constitution, disregarding the law, the court must determine which of these conflicting rules governs the case. This is of the very essence of judicial duty. If, then, the courts are to regard the Constitution, and the Constitution is superior to any ordinary act of the legislature, the Constitution, and not such ordinary act, must govern the case to which they both apply.

Those, then, who controvert the principle that the Constitution is to be considered, in court, as a paramount law, are reduced to the necessity of maintaining that courts must close their eyes on the Constitution, and see only the law. This doctrine would subvert the very foundation of all written constitutions. It would declare that an act which, according to the principles and theory of our government, is entirely void, is yet, in practice, completely obligatory. It would declare that if the legislature shall do what is expressly forbidden, such act, notwithstanding the express prohibition, is in reality effectual. It would be giving to the legislature a practical and real omnipotence, with the same breath which professes to restrict their powers within narrow limits. It is prescribing limits, and declaring that those limits may be passed at pleasure. That it thus reduces to nothing what we have deemed the greatest improvement on political institutions, a written Constitution, would of itself be sufficient, in America, where written Constitutions have been viewed with so much reverence, for rejecting the construction. But the peculiar expressions of the Constitution of the United States furnish additional arguments in favor of its rejection.

The judicial power of the United States is extended to all cases arising under the Constitution. Could it be the intention of those who gave this power, to say that in using it the Constitution should not be looked into? That a case arising under the Constitution should be decided without examining the instrument under which it arises? This is too extravagant to be maintained. In some cases, then, the Constitution must be looked into by the judges. And if they can open it at all, what part of it are they forbidden to read or to obey?

There are many other parts of the Constitution which serve to illustrate this subject. It is declared that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any state." Suppose a duty on the export of cotton, of tobacco, or of flour; and a suit instituted to recover it. Ought judgment to be rendered in such a case? ought the judges to close their eyes on the Constitution, and only see the law? The Constitution declares "that no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." If, however, such a bill should be passed, and a person should be prosecuted under it, must the court condemn to death those victims whom the Constitution endeavors to preserve? "No person," says the Constitution, "shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court." Here the language of the Constitution is addressed especially to the courts. It prescribes, directly for them, a rule of evidence not to be departed from. If the legislature should change that rule, and declare one witness, or a confession out of court, sufficient for conviction, must the constitutional principle yield to the legislative act?

From these, and many other selections which might be made, it is apparent that the framers of the Constitution contemplated that instrument as a rule for the government of courts, as well as of the legislature. Why otherwise does it direct the judges to take an oath to support it? This oath certainly applies in an especial manner to their conduct in their official character. How immoral to impose it on them, if they were to be used as the instruments, and the knowing instruments, for violating what they swear to support! The oath of office, too, imposed by the legislature, is completely demonstrative of the legislative opinion on this subject. It is in these words: "I do solemnly swear that I will administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich; and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge all the duties incumbent on me as ———, according to the best of my abilities and understanding, agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States." Why does a judge swear to discharge his duties agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, if that Constitution forms no rule for his government—if it is closed upon him, and cannot be inspected by him? If such be the real state of things, this is worse than solemn mockery. To prescribe, or to take this oath, becomes equally a crime.

It is also not entirely unworthy of observation, that in declaring what shall be the supreme law of the land, the Constitution itself is first mentioned; and not the laws of the United States generally, but those only which shall be made in pursuance of the Constitution, have that rank. Thus, the particular phraseology of the Constitution of the United States confirms and strengthens the principle, supposed to be essential to all written constitutions, that a law repugnant to the Constitution is void; and that courts, as well as other departments, are bound by that instrument.

Rule discharged.¹

¹ The federal Circuit Court for Pennsylvania declared an act of Congress unconstitutional in Hayburn's Case (1792), not reported. See 13 Am. Hist. Rev. 281 (1908), by M. Farrand.

"So far as the grounds for this remarkable power are found in the mere fact of a constitution being in writing, or in judges being sworn to support it, they are quite inadequate. Neither the written form nor the oath of the judges necessarily involves the right of reversing, displacing, or disregarding any action of the legislature or the executive which those departments are constitutionally authorized to take, or the determination of those departments that they are so authorized. It is enough, in confirmation of this, to refer to the fact that other countries, as France, Germany, and Switzerland, have written Constitutions, and that such a power is not recognized there. 'The restrictions,' says Dicey, in his admirable Law of the Constitution [page 127, 3d Ed.], 'placed on the action of the legislature under the French Constitution are not in reality laws, since they are not rules which in the last resort will be enforced by the courts. Their true character is that of maxims of political morality, which derive whatever strength they possess from being formally inscribed in the Constitution, and from the resulting support of public opinion.'" J. B. Thayer, Legal Essays, 2 (also in 7 Harv. L. Rev. 130).

"It is almost necessary to the working of a federal system that the general government, and each of its departments, should be free to disregard acts of any department of the local states which may be inconsistent with the federal Constitution. And so in Switzerland and Germany the federal courts thus treat local enactments. But there is not under any written Constitution in Europe a country where a court deals in this way with the act of its co-ordinate legislature. In Germany, at one time, this was done, under the influence of a study of our law, but it was soon abandoned. Coxe, Jud. Power, 95-102; Thayer's Cases on Constitutional Law, I. 146-149."—Thayer, John Marshall, 61-62.

But see 6 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 456 (1912), mentioning a recent case in Roumania declaring unconstitutional an act of the Roumanian Parliament.

In Eakin v. Raub, 12 Serg. & R. 330, 345-358 (Pa., 1825) is a strongly reasoned dissent by Gibson, J., from the doctrine of the principal case, a view

SHARPLESS v. MAYOR OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, 1853. 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759.)

[Original bill in equity. Acting under authority of a Pennsylvania statute, defendants, officials of the city of Philadelphia, were about to subscribe for $1,000,000 of the stock of two railway companies, paying therefor in city bonds, in order to secure the construction of certain lines of railroad that would connect Philadelphia with other parts of the state. Plaintiffs, residents and owners of real and personal property in the city that would be subject to taxation for the payment of said bonds, sought to enjoin said proposed subscription as one not validly authorized under the state Constitution.]

BLACK, C. J. * * * It is important, first of all, to settle the rule of interpretation. This can be best done by a slight reference to the origin of our political system. In the beginning the people held in their own hands all the power of an absolute government. The transcendent powers of Parliament devolved on them by the Revolution. Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co., 1 Bald. 220, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 584, 5 L. Ed. 681; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 656, 7 L. Ed. 542. Antecedent to the adoption of which this distinguished judge abandoned twenty years later. See Menges v. Wertman, 1 Pa. 218, 222 (1845); Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 277, 281 (1845).

If an unconstitutional act of Congress may be disregarded by the courts, a fortiori an act of a state legislature in violation of the federal Constitution will fail. This results, not only from the reasoning of the principal case, but from the express language of article VI, par. 2. Eakin v. Raub, above, 12 Serg. & R. 330, at 356-357. A state law was first held void as in conflict with the Constitution in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. Ed. 162 (1810). Of course the federal courts, in any case properly before them, may pass upon the validity of state legislation under state Constitutions to the same extent that a state court might. Van Horne's Lessee v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 304, 1 L. Ed. 391 (1795); Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. Ed. 455 (1875); Concord v. Portsmouth Sav. Bk., 92 U. S. 625, 23 L. Ed. 628 (1876); Knight v. Shelton (C. C.) 134 Fed. 423, 440, 441 (1905) (validity of amendment of state Constitution).

For valuable discussions of the historical basis of the doctrine of the principal case, see Thayer, Legal Essays, 1 (also in 7 Harv. L. Rev. 129) (1893); A. I. Clark, in 17 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1903); McLaughlin, The Courts, Constitutions and Parties, 3-107, 267-275 (1912). In Beard, The Supreme Court and the Constitution (1912) (also in 27 Pol. Sci. Quar. 1), is an elaborate study of the personal views of the framers of the Constitution upon this subject. The researches of these writers seem clearly to establish the historical correctness of Marbury v. Madison. For references to some contrary views, see 27 Pol. Sci. Quar. 1, note. For a criticism of Marshall's argument, see Thayer, John Marshall, 95-101, quoted in Thayer, Legal Essays, 15-16, note.

The power and duty of courts in the ordinary discharge of the judicial function to disregard enactments of legislatures, of whatever rank, which violate limitations imposed by some paramount authority, is recognized in every English-speaking jurisdiction where the question has arisen. In addition to cases in the courts of the United States and of every American state, see: Canada—Woodruff v. Atty. Gen. for Ontario, (1908) A. C. 508 (provincial legislation); Atty. Gen. for Ont. v. Atty. Gen. for Canada, (1896) A. C. 348 (Dominion legislation); Re Provincial Fisheries, 26 Can. S. C. 444 (1896) (same), affirmed (1898) A. C. 700. See, also, for general the federal Constitution, the power of the states was supreme and unlimited. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Smith, 3 Serg. & R. 68. If the people of Pennsylvania had given all the authority which they themselves possessed to a single person, they would have created a despotism as absolute in its control over life, liberty, and property as that of the Russian autocrat. But they delegated a portion of it to the United States, specifying what they gave, and withholding the rest. The powers not given to the government of the Union were bestowed on the government of the state, with certain limitations and exceptions, expressly set down in the state Constitution. The federal Constitution confers powers particularly enumerated; that of the state contains a general grant of all powers not excepted. The construction of the former instrument is strict against those who claim under it; the interpretation of the latter is strict against those who stand upon the exceptions, and liberal in favor of the government itself. The federal government can do nothing but what is authorized expressly or by clear implication; the state may do whatever is not prohibited.

The powers bestowed on the state government were distributed by the Constitution to the three great departments: the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. The power to make laws was granted discussions, Queen v. Chandler, 12 N. Br. 556 (1869); L'Union St. Jacques v. Belisle, 20 L. C. Jur. 29 (1872, Quebec Q. B.); Brophy v. Atty. Gen. for Manitoba, (1890) A. C. 202, 217. Australia—Cooper v. Commissioner, 4 Comm. L. R. 1304 (1907) (state act violating state Constitution) [although the state Constitution itself was subject to alteration by the legislature]; Baxter v. Commrs., 4 C. L. R. 1087 (1907) (state act violating Commonwealth Constitution); Federated, etc., Ass'n v. New S. W. Ass'n, 4 C. L. R. 488 (1906) (federal act violating Commonwealth Constitution). New Zealand—In re Award, etc., 26 N. Z. S. C. 394, 404 ff. (1906).

In Baxter v. Com'rs, above, Griith, C. J., said (4 C. L. R. 1125): "The observation that the American Union has erected a tribunal which possesses jurisdiction to annul a statute on the ground that it is unconstitutional seems to be founded on the supposition that the Supreme Court of the United States was endowed with special powers in this respect different from those possessed by other courts. * * * The power of the Supreme Court of the United States to decide whether an act of Congress or of a state is in conformity with the Constitution depends upon and follows from the Constitution itself, which is, by section 2 of article VI, declared to be the supreme law of the land, as the Australian Constitution is declared to be by section 5 of the Constitution Act. Such questions must certainly arise under a federal Constitution, and must be determined by the courts before which they are raised.

* * * English jurisprudence has always recognized that the acts of a legislature of limited jurisdiction (whether the limits be as to territory or subject-matter) may be examined by any tribunal before whom the point is properly raised. The term 'unconstitutional,' used in this connection, means no more than 'ultra vires.' The analogy between the two systems of jurisprudence is therefore perfect."

For the meaning of "unconstitutional" as applied to a statute of the British Parliament, see Webb v. Outrim (1907) A. C. 81, 89 (P. C.); and for a striking illustration of the British doctrine of the supremacy of the ordinary law of private rights over acts of the Crown, see Walker v. Baird (1892) A. C. 491. See, also, Smith, J., in Eaton v. Boston, etc., Ry., post, p. 717: "Parliament * * * is at once a legislature and a constitutional convention."

in section 1 of article 1, by the following words: "The legislative power of this commonwealth shall be vested in a General Assembly, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." It is plain that the force of these general words, if there had been nothing elsewhere to qualify them, would have given to the Assembly an unlimited power to make all such laws as they might think proper. They would have had the whole omnipotence of the British Parliament. But the absolute power of the people themselves had been previously limited by the federal Constitution, and they could not bestow on the legislature authority which had already been given to Congress. The judicial and executive powers were also lodged elsewhere, and the legislative department was forbidden to trench upon the others by an implication as clear as words could make it. The jurisdiction of the Assembly was still further confined by that part of the Constitution called the "Declaration of Rights," which, in twenty-five sections, carefully enumerates the reserved rights of the people, and closes by declaring that "everything in this article is excepted out of the general powers of the government, and shall remain for ever inviolate." The General Assembly cannot, therefore, pass any law to conflict with the rightful authority of Congress, nor perform a judicial or executive function, nor violate the popular privileges reserved by the Declaration of Rights, nor change the organic structure of the government, nor exercise any other power prohibited in the Constitution. If it does any of these things, the judiciary claims, and in clear cases has always exercised, the right to declare such acts void.

But beyond this there lies a vast field of power, granted to the legislature by the general words of the Constitution, and not reserved, prohibited, or given away to others. Of this field the General Assembly is entitled to the full and uncontrolled possession. Their use of it can be limited only by their own discretion. The reservation of some powers does not imply a restriction on the exercises of others which are not reserved. On the contrary, it is a universal rule of construction, founded in the clearest reason, that general words in any instrument or statute are strengthened by exceptions, and weakened by enumeration. To me, it is as plain that the General Assembly may exercise all powers which are properly legislative, and which are not taken away by our own, or by the federal Constitution, as it is that the people have all the rights which are expressly reserved.¹

¹ See, also, People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, 543, 544 (1857); R. R. Co. v. Otse County, 16 Wall. 667, 672-673, 21 L. Ed. 375 (1873); Cooley, Const. Llm. 241 (7th Ed.).

"The governments of the states possess all the powers of the Parliament of England, except such as have been delegated to the United States or reserved by the people. The reservations by the people are shown in the prohibitions of the constitutions."—Waite, C. J., in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 124, 24 L. Ed. 77 (1876).

Compare Bridgeport Public Library & Reading Room v. Burroughs Home, 85 Conn. 309, 82 Atl. 582, 585 (1912).

We are urged, however, to go further than this, and to hold that a law, though not prohibited, is void if it violates the spirit of our institutions, or impairs any of those rights which it is the object of a free government to protect, and to declare it unconstitutional if it be wrong and unjust. But we cannot do this. It would be assuming a right to change the Constitution, to supply what we might conceive to be its defects, to fill up every casus omissus, and to interpolate into it whatever in our opinion ought to have been put there by its framers. The Constitution has given us a list of the things which the legislature may not do. If we extend that list, we alter the instrument, we become ourselves the aggressors, and violate both the letter and spirit of the organic law as grossly as the legislature possibly could. If we can add to the reserved rights of the people, we can take them away; if we can mend, we can mar; if we can remove the landmarks which we find established, we can obliterate them; if we can change the Constitution in any particular, there is nothing but our own will to prevent us from demolishing it entirely.

The great powers given to the legislature are liable to be abused. But this is inseparable from the nature of human institutions. The wisdom of man has never conceived of a government with power sufficient to answer its legitimate ends, and at the same time incapable of mischief. No political system can be made so perfect that its rulers will always hold it to the true course. In the very best a great deal must be trusted to the discretion of those who administer it. In ours, the people have given larger powers to the legislature, and relied, for the faithful execution of them, on the wisdom and honesty of that department, and on the direct accountability of the members of their constituents. There is no shadow of reason for supposing that the mere abuse of power was meant to be corrected by the judiciary.

There is nothing more easy than to imagine a thousand tyrannical things which the legislature may do, if its members forget all their duties; disregard utterly the obligations they owe to their constituents, and recklessly determine to trample upon right and justice. But to take away the power from the legislature because they may abuse it, and give to the judges the right of controlling it, would not be advancing a single step, since the judges can be imagined to be as corrupt and as wicked as legislators. * * * What is worse still, the judges are almost entirely irresponsible, and heretofore they have been altogether so, while the members of the legislature, who would do the imaginary things referred to, "would be scourged into retirement by their indignant masters."

I am thoroughly convinced that the words of the Constitution furnish the only test to determine the validity of a statute, and that all arguments, based on general principles outside of the Constitution, must be addressed to the people, and not to us. * * *

[After referring to various dicta to the contrary:] On the other side, the weight of authority is overwhelming. I am not aware that any state court has ever yet held a law to be invalid, except where it was clearly forbidden. Certainly, no case of a different character has been cited at the bar. In the many cases which affirm the validity of state laws, this principle is uniformly recognized, either tacitly or expressly. The Supreme Court of the United States has adhered to it on every occasion when it has been questioned there. In Satterlee v. Matthewson (2 Pet. 380, 7 L. Ed. 458), an act of the Pennsylvania legislature was censured as unwise and unjust; but, because it came within no express prohibition of the Constitution, it was held to be binding on the parties interested; and in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. Ed. 162, it was declared that, while the legislature was within the Constitution, even corruption did not make its acts void.² In Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648, Mr. Justice Iredell said: "If a state legislature shall pass a law, within the general scope of their constitutional powers, the court cannot pronounce it to be void, merely because it is, in their judgment, contrary to the principles of natural justice. The ideas of natural justice are regulated by no fixed standard, the ablest and the purest men have differed upon the subject; and all the court, in such an event, could say, would be that the legislature (possessed of an equal right of opinion) had passed an act, which, in the opinion of the judges, was contrary to abstract principles of right." * * *

Judge Baldwin in Bennett v. Boggs, 1 Bald. 74, Fed. Cas. No. 1,319, [said]: " * * * We cannot declare a legislative act void because it conflicts with our opinion of policy, expediency, or justice." * * *

There is another rule which must govern us in cases like this; namely, that we can declare an Act of Assembly void, only when it violates the Constitution clearly, palpably, plainly; and in such manner as to leave no doubt or hesitation on our minds. This principle is asserted by judges of every grade, both in the federal and in the state courts; and by some of them it is expressed with much

² Accord (legislation not invalid for improper motives of legislators): New Orleans v. Warner, 175 U. S. 120, 145, 148, 20 Sup. Ct. 44, 44 L. Ed. 96 (1899) (municipal ordinance); McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 53-59, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 49 L. Ed. 78, 1 Ann. Cas. 561 (1904) (act of Congress), post, p. 960 ff.; Boston v. Talbot, 206 Mass. 82, 91, 91 N. E. 1014 (1910) (acts of rapid transit commission).

³ "The theory that laws may be declared void when deemed to be opposed to natural justice and equity, although they do not violate any constitutional provision, has some support in the dicta of learned judges, but has not been approved, so far as we know, by any authoritative adjudication, and is repudiated by numerous authorities. * * * No law can be pronounced invalid, for the reason simply that it violates our notions of justice, is oppressive and unfair in its operation, or because, in the opinion of some or all of the citizens of the state, it is not justified by public necessity, or designed to promote the public welfare. We repeat, if it violates no constitutional provision, it is valid and must be obeyed."—Andrews, J., in Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 514, 516, 39 Am. Rep. 323 (1878). Compare Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 653, 663, 22 L. Ed. 455 (1875), and Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 661, 13 Sup. Ct. 721, 37 L. Ed. 599 (1893).

solemnity of language. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. Ed. 162; Cooper v. Telfair, 4 Dall. 14, 1 L. Ed. 721; Moore v. Houston, 3 Serg. & R. 178; Eakin v. Raub, 12 Serg. & R. 339; Com. ex rel. O'Hara v. Smith, 4 Bin. 123. A citation of all the authorities which establish it would include nearly every case in which a question of constitutional law has arisen. I believe it has the singular advantage of not being opposed even by a dictum.⁴

We are to inquire then, whether there is anything in the Constitution which expressly or by clear implication forbids the legislature to authorize subscriptions by a city to the capital stock of a company incorporated for the purpose of making a railroad. * * *

[Here follows a discussion upholding taxation to pay such subscriptions as being in fact for a public purpose and not within any specific prohibition of the state Constitution. Cases to this effect from other states are cited.] These cases are entitled to our highest respect. In most of them, and especially the later ones, the subject is very ably discussed, and they are a manifest triumph of reason and law over a strong conviction in the minds of the judges that the system they sustain was impolitic, dangerous, and immoral. * * *

Injunction refused.⁵

[WOODWARD and KNOX, JJ., gave concurring opinions.]

⁴ The earlier authorities to this effect in the older states are collected in Thayer, Legal Essays, 16-33 (7 Harv. L. Rev. 140-152), with some observations upon the rule itself. See, also, the comment of an Australian writer in 6 Comm. L. Rev. 204, 205 (1909); and Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 531, 542-543 (1883) (unconstitutionality need not be as free from doubt as evidence of guilt necessary to convict a criminal).

"In determining whether the legislature, in a particular enactment, has passed the limits of its constitutional authority, every reasonable presumption must be indulged in favor of the validity of such enactment. It must be regarded as valid, unless it can be clearly shown to be in conflict with the constitution. It is a well-settled rule of constitutional exposition that, if a statute may or may not be, according to circumstances, within the limits of legislative authority, the existence of the circumstances necessary to support it must be presumed."—Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 392, 393, 16 Sup. Ct. 43, 40 L. Ed. 188 (1895), by Harlan, J.

Compare Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, post, p. 334. As to the burden of proof in rebutting such presumptions, see Lindsley v. Nat. Carbonic Gas Co., post, p. 377.

⁵ In State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. of Nebraska, 153 Iowa, 702, 706, 707, 133 N. W. 895, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821 (1912), in discussing a statute applicable only to persons buying dairy products for purposes of manufacture, sale, or storage, which forbade the payment of prices higher in one locality than in another in order to destroy competition, Evans, J., said: "The argument directed against the statute is not without its cogency. If it were presented to a legislative committee, it might properly cause hesitation as to the particular form of the proposed legislation; but the courts have neither advisory nor veto powers over legislation as such. And even though the court may entertain great doubt as to the constitutionality of a particular legislative act, it may not interpose such mere doubt against the legislative prerogative. It is only when the violation of the Constitution is 'clear and palpable' that the court is justified in rendering nugatory a legislative act. To speak accurately, the constitutionality of an act is not dependent upon an affirmative holding to that effect by the court. It is the province of the court only to determine whether a legislative act in question is or is not

BORGNIS v. FALK CO. (1911) 147 Wis. 327, 348-350, 133 N. W. 209, 215, 216, WINSLOW, C. J. (upholding a Wisconsin workmen's compensation act upon an "elective" insurance plan¹):

"In approaching the consideration of the present law, we must bear in mind the well-established principle that it must be sustained, unless it be clear beyond reasonable question that it violates some constitutional limitation or prohibition. That governments founded on written Constitutions which are made difficult of amendment or change lose much in flexibility and adaptability to changed conditions there can be no doubt. Indeed that may be said to be one purpose of the written Constitution. Doubtless they gain enough in stability and freedom from mere whimsical and sudden changes to more than make up for the loss in flexibility; but the loss still remains, whether for good or ill. A Constitution is a very human document, and must embody with greater or less fidelity the spirit of the time of its adoption. It will be framed to meet the problems and difficulties which face the men who make it, and it will generally crystallize with more or less fidelity the political, social, and economic propositions which are considered irrefutable, if not actually inspired, by the philosophers and legislators of the time; but the difficulty is that, while the Constitution is fixed or very hard to change, the conditions and problems surrounding the people, as well as their ideals, are constantly changing. The political or philosophical aphorism of one generation is doubted by the next, and entirely discarded by the third. The race moves forward constantly, and no Canute can stay its progress.

"Constitutional commands and prohibitions, either distinctly laid down in express words or necessarily implied from general words, must be obeyed, and implicitly obeyed, so long as they remain unamended or unrepealed. Any other course on the part of either legislator or judge

'clearly, plainly, and palpably' unconstitutional. The legislative and executive departments of government are under the same responsibility to observe and protect the Constitution as is the judicial department. This responsibility is always present in the enactment by the Legislature, and approval by the executive, of all legislation. The constitutionality of all proposed legislation must be determined in the first instance by such co-ordinate branches of the government. Within the zone of doubt and fair debate such determination is necessarily conclusive. For the court to enter that zone would of itself be an offense against the Constitution. But when a legislative act is clearly and unmistakably unconstitutional, then the court must so declare. By common consent such a declaration is not deemed as usurpation by the court, but as a protest against usurpation already done. In such a case the court furnishes the only means of authoritative protest possible to the body politic."

And so Holmes, J., in Gray v. Taylor, 227 U. S. 51, 56, 33 Sup. Ct. 199, 57 L. Ed. — (1913): "It is not lightly to be supposed that a legislature is less faithful to its obligations than a court."

For a discussion of the differing considerations applicable when a court is enforcing a mere prohibition upon legislative action and when it is dealing with the division of legislative powers between the states and the United States, see Thayer, Legal Essays, 33-38 (7 Harv. L. Rev. 153-155).

¹ See State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, post, p. 512, and notes.

constitutes violation of his oath of office; but when there is no such express command or prohibition, but only general language, or a general policy drawn from the four corners of the instrument, what shall be said about this? By what standards is this general language or general policy to be interpreted and applied to present day people and conditions? When an eighteenth century Constitution forms the charter of liberty of a twentieth century government, must its general provisions be construed and interpreted by an eighteenth century mind in the light of eighteenth century conditions and ideals? Clearly not. This were to command the race to halt in its progress, to stretch the state upon a veritable bed of Procrustes.

"Where there is no express command or prohibition, but only general language or policy to be considered, the conditions prevailing at the time of its adoption must have their due weight; but the changed social, economic, and governmental conditions and ideals of the time, as well as the problems which the changes have produced, must also logically enter into the consideration, and become influential factors in the settlement of problems of construction and interpretation. These general propositions are here laid down, not because they are considered either new or in serious controversy, but because they are believed to be peculiarly applicable to a case like the present, where a law which is framed to meet new economic conditions and difficulties resulting therefrom is attacked principally because it is believed to offend against constitutional guaranties or prohibitions couched in general terms, or supposed general policies drawn from the whole body of the instrument."

MUSKRAT v. UNITED STATES

(Supreme Court of United States, 1911. 219 U. S. 346, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 55 L. Ed. 246.)

[Appeals from the Court of Claims. An act of Congress authorized Muskrat and others to bring suits in the Court of Claims, with an appeal to the federal Supreme Court, to determine the validity of certain acts of Congress altering the terms of certain prior allotments of Cherokee Indian lands. From a determination of two such suits by the Court of Claims these appeals were taken.]

Mr. Justice DAY. * * * Section 1 of article 3 of the Constitution provides: "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish."

Section 2 of the same article provides: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more states; between a state and citizens of another state; between citizens of different states; between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants of different states, and between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects."

It will serve to elucidate the nature and extent of the judicial power thus conferred by the Constitution to note certain instances in which this court has had occasion to examine and define the same. * * * [Here follow references to Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409, 1 L. Ed. 436, and to U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40, 14 L. Ed. 42, in both of which it was denied that the federal courts could be required to make decisions which were subject to review by non-judicial tribunals or officers; and to the refusal of the Supreme Court to answer legal questions asked it by President Washington.¹]

The subject underwent a complete examination in the case of Gordon v. United States, reported in an appendix to 117 U. S. 697, in which the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Taney, prepared by him and placed in the hands of the clerk, is published in full. * * * In that case an act of Congress was held invalid which undertook to confer jurisdiction upon the court of claims, and thence by appeal to this court, the judgment, however, not to be paid until an appropriation had been estimated therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury; and, as was said by the chief justice, the result was that neither court could enforce its judgment by any process, and whether it was to be paid or not depended on the future action of the Secretary of the Treasury and of Congress.² "The Supreme Court," says the Chief Justice, "does not owe its existence or its powers to the legislative department of the government. It is created by the Constitution, and represents one of the three great divisions of power in the government of the United States, to each of which the Constitution has assigned its appropriate duties and powers, and made each independent of the other in performing its appropriate functions. The power conferred on this court is exclusively judicial, and it cannot be required or authorized to exercise any other." * * *

[After referring to Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 215 U. S. 216, 30 Sup. Ct. 86, 54 L. Ed. 164]: It therefore becomes necessary to inquire what is meant by the judicial power thus conferred by the Constitution upon this court, and, with the aid of appropriate legislation, upon the inferior courts of the United States. "Judicial power," says Mr. Justice Miller, in his work on the Constitution, "is the power of a court to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision." Miller, Const. 314.

¹ See note on Advisory Opinions at the end of this case.

² The right to enforce a judgment by process is not indispensable to its judicial character. It is enough, in an appropriate case, that a judgment be made "the final and indisputable basis of action either by the department or by Congress." In re Sanborn, 148 U. S. 222, 226, 13 Sup. Ct. 577, 37 L. Ed. 429 (1893).

As we have already seen, by the express terms of the Constitution, the exercise of the judicial power is limited to "cases" and "controversies." Beyond this it does not extend, and unless it is asserted in a case or controversy within the meaning of the Constitution, the power to exercise it is nowhere conferred.

What, then, does the Constitution mean in conferring this judicial power with the right to determine "cases" and "controversies." A "case" was defined by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall as early as the leading case of Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. Ed. 60, to be a suit instituted according to the regular course of judicial procedure. And what more, if anything, is meant in the use of the term "controversy?" That question was dealt with by Mr. Justice Field, at the circuit, in the case of In re Pacific R. Commission (C. C.) 32 Fed. 241, 255. Of these terms that learned justice said: "The judicial article of the Constitution mentions cases and controversies. The term 'controversies,' if distinguishable at all from 'cases,' is so in that it is less comprehensive than the latter, and includes only suits of a civil nature. Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 431, 432, 1 L. Ed. 445, 446, 1 Tucker's Bl. Com. App. 420, 421. By cases and controversies are intended the claims of litigants brought before the courts for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs. Whenever the claim of a party under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a case. The term implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties, whose contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication."

The power being thus limited to require an application of the judicial power to cases and controversies, Is the act which undertook to authorize the present suits to determine the constitutional validity of certain legislation within the constitutional authority of the court? This inquiry in the case before us includes the broader question, When may this court, in the exercise of the judicial power, pass upon the constitutional validity of an act of Congress? That question has been settled from the early history of the court, the leading case on the subject being Marbury v. Madison, supra.

In that case Chief Justice Marshall, who spoke for the court, was careful to point out that the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional could only be exercised when a proper case between opposing parties was submitted for judicial determination; that there was no general veto power in the court upon the legislation of Congress; and that the authority to declare an act unconstitutional sprang from the requirement that the court, in administering the law and pronouncing judgment between the parties to a case, and choosing between the requirements of the fundamental law established by the people and embodied in the Constitution and an act of the agents of the people, acting under authority of the Constitution, should enforce the Constitution as the supreme law of the land. The Chief Justice demonstrated, in a manner which has been regarded as settling the question, that with the choice thus given between a constitutional requirement and a conflicting statutory enactment, the plain duty of the court was to follow and enforce the Constitution as the supreme law established by the people. And the court recognized, in Marbury v. Madison and subsequent cases, that the exercise of this great power could only be invoked in cases which came regularly before the courts for determination. * * *

[Here follow quotations to this effect from Osborn v. Bank of U. S., 9 Wheat. 819, 6 L. Ed. 204, and Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. Ed. 257, and the following from Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339 at 345, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176:³] "Whenever, in pursuance of an honest and actual antagonistic assertion of rights by one individual against another, there is presented a question involving the validity of any act of any legislature, state or federal, and the decision necessarily rests on the competency of the legislature to so enact, the court must, in the exercise of its solemn duties, determine whether the act be constitutional or not; but such an exercise of power is the ultimate and supreme function of courts. It is legitimate only in the last resort, and as a necessity in the determination of real, earnest, and vital controversy between individuals. It never was the thought that, by means of a friendly suit, a party beaten in the legislature could transfer to the courts an inquiry as to the constitutionality of the legislative act." * * *

It is therefore evident that there is neither more nor less in this procedure than an attempt to provide for a judicial determination. final in this court, of the constitutional validity of an act of Congress. Is such a determination within the judicial power conferred by the Constitution, as the same has been interpreted and defined in the authoritative decisions to which we have referred? We think it is not. That judicial power, as we have seen, is the right to determine actual controversies arising between adverse litigants, duly instituted in courts of proper jurisdiction. The right to declare a law unconstitutional arises because an act of Congress relied upon by one or the other of such parties in determining their rights is in conflict with the fundamental law. The exercise of this, the most important and delicate duty of this court, is not given to it as a body with revisory power over the action of Congress, but because the rights of the litigants in justiciable controversies require the court to choose between the fundamental law and a law purporting to be enacted within constitutional authority, but in fact beyond the power delegated to the legislative branch of the government. This attempt to obtain a judicial declaration of the validity of the act of Congress is not presented in a "case" or "controversy," to which, under the Constitution of the United States, the judicial power alone extends. It is true the United States is made a defendant to this action, but it has no interest adverse to the claimants. The object is not to assert a property right as against the government, or to demand compensation for alleged wrongs because of action upon its part. The whole purpose of the law is to determine the constitutional validity of this class of legislation, in a suit not arising between parties concerning a property right necessarily involved in the decision in question, but in a proceeding against the government in its sovereign capacity, and concerning which the only judgment required is to settle the doubtful character of the legislation in question. Such judgment will not conclude private parties, when actual litigation brings to the court the question of the constitutionality of such legislation. In a legal sense the judgment could not be executed, and amounts in fact to no more than an expression of opinion upon the validity of the acts in question. Confining the jurisdiction of this court within the limitations conferred by the Constitution, which the court has hitherto been careful to observe, and whose boundaries it has refused to transcend, we think the Congress, in the act of March 1, 1907, exceeded the limitations of legislative authority, so far as it required of this court action not judicial in its nature within the meaning of the Constitution. * * *

³ In this case the court refused to hold invalid a Michigan railway rate regulation statute, in a friendly or collusive suit brought to test it upon an agreed statement of facts, in the preparation of which the people of the state had not been represented. The circumstance, however, that both parties to a case may desire the same decision, does not disable a court from deciding a constitutional question, provided only that it is a legitimately controverted issue in a real case, and that all adversary interests are properly represented. See Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759 (1895), based upon reasoning of Hawes v. Contra Costa Co., 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. Ed. 827 (1882). By leave of court the government, though not a party, may be heard in litigation involving questions of public importance. See the Pollock Case, above, 157 U. S. at p. 499, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759, and Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 13, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363 (1904).

As Congress, in passing this act, as a part of the plan involved, evidently intended to provide a review of the judgment of the court of claims in this court, as the constitutionality of important legislation is concerned, we think the act cannot be held to intend to confer jurisdiction on that court separately considered.⁴ * * *

Judgment reversed and cases ordered dismissed for want of jurisdiction.⁵

⁴ The Court of Claims, not being a constitutional court, may of course be empowered to exercise non-judicial and advisory powers. Gordon v. U. S., 117 U. S. 697, 698, 699 (1884), appendix.

⁵ Accord: U. S. v. Evans, 213 U. S. 297, 29 Sup. Ct. 507, 53 L. Ed. 803 (1909) (no power to decide question of criminal law as a precedent, after de

SECTION 2.—EFFECT OF UNCONSTITUTIONALITY

NORTON v. SHELBY COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1886. 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178.)

[Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee. A state statute purported to create a board of county commissioners for the government of Shelby county, in place of the existing county court. Within a month thereafter an action was brought against this board to test the validity of its creation, and the lower state court upheld it. Pending an appeal to the state Supreme Court, said board issued certain bonds authorized by the statute creating it. On the appeal the state Supreme Court held this statute unconstitutional and the board created thereby to be without lawful authority. Suit being brought by Norton thereafter upon some of said bonds in the federal Circuit Court, judgment was given for defendant county.] defendant's acquittal); Jones v. Montague, 194 U. S. 147, 24 Sup. Ct. 611, 48 L. Ed. 913 (1904) (no appeal after possibility of relief sought has ceased); Buck's Stove & Range Co. v. American Federation of Labor, 219 U. S. 581, 31 Sup. Ct. 472, 55 L. Ed. 345 (1911) (same, after controversy settled out of court).

See Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, post, p. 70, and the quotation from Huddart v. Moorehead, post, p. 76, note.

ADVISORY OPINIONS.*—Save where made an express constitutional requirement, courts generally refuse to give opinions to other departments of government for their guidance in advance of actual litigation, on the ground that such opinions have not a judicial character, thus following the precedent set by the Supreme Court in Washington's administration, referred to in Muskat v. U. S., supra. Application of Senate of State, 10 Minn. 78 (Gil. 56) (1865); Reply of Judges, 33 Conn. 586 (1867); State v. Baughman, 38 Ohio St. 455 (1882). In several instances such opinions have been given without discussion of the practice. People v. Green, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 614 (1845); Opinion of Judges, 37 Vt. 605 (1864); Opinion of Judges of Court of Appeals, 79 Ky. 621 (1881); In re Board of Public Lands and Buildings, 37 Neb. 425, 55 N. W. 1092 (1893) (see also In re Railroad Commissioners, 15 Neb. 679, 50 N. W. 276 [1884]; In re School Fund, 15 Neb. 684, 50 N. W. 272 [1884]; In re Brown, 15 Neb. 688, 50 N. W. 273 [1884]; In re Babcock, 21 Neb. 500, 32 N. W. 641 [1887]; In re State Warrants, 25 Neb. 659, 41 N. W. 636 [1889]; In re Senate File 31, 25 Neb. 864, 41 N. W. 981 [1889]; In re Quere of Procedure of Two Houses of Legislature in Contests of Election of Executive Officers, 31 Neb. 262, 47 N. W. 923 [1891]; In re House Roll 284, 31 Neb. 505, 48 N. W. 275 [1891]). The Nebraska practice was apparently discontinued in 1898 by rule of court (52 Neb. xviii, rule 32). The Constitutions of Colorado, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island expressly require the rendition of such opinions at the request of the governor or legislature, and Florida and South Dakota at the request of the governor alone. See a classification of these opinions in 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. 1070-1078 (2d Ed.). Except in Colorado, however, such opinions have no judicial effect. Green

* See, in general, Thayer, Legal Essays, 42-59.

Mr. Justice FIELD. * * * But it is contended that if the act creating the board was void, and the commissioners were not officers de jure, they were nevertheless officers de facto, and that the acts of the board as a de facto court are binding upon the county. This contention is met by the fact that there can be no officer, either de jure or de facto, if there be no office to fill. As the act attempting to create the office of commissioner never became a law, the office never came into existence. Some persons pretended that they held the office, but the law never recognized their pretensions, nor did the supreme court of the state. Whenever such pretensions were considered in that court, they were declared to be without any legal foundation, and the commissioners were held to be usurpers. The doctrine which gives validity to acts of officers de facto, whatever defects there may be in the legality of their appointment or election, is founded upon considerations of policy and necessity, for the protection of the public and individuals whose interests may be affected thereby. Offices are created for the benefit of the public, and private parties are not permitted to inquire into the title of persons clothed with the evidence of such offices, and in apparent possession of their powers and functions. For the good order and peace of society their

v. Comm., 12 Allen (Mass.) 155 (1866); Answers of the Justices, 95 Me. 564, 566, 573, 51 Atl. 224 (1901); In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 466, 21 Pac. 478 (1889).

For various qualifications upon the right to require such opinions in these states, see Answers of the Justices, 95 Me. 564, 51 Atl. 224 (1901) (cases) (but compare Questions and Answers, 103 Me. 506, 514 ff., 69 Atl. 627, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 13 Ann. Cas. 745 (1907)); Answer of the Justices, 150 Mass. 598, 24 N. E. 1086 (1890); Opinion of the Justices, 208 Mass. 614, 95 N. E. 927 (1911) (cases).

For a discussion of the meaning of a provision in the Constitutions of Illinois, Idaho, and Washington, requiring the judges of the Supreme Court annually to report to the governor "such defects and omissions in the Constitution and laws" as they find to exist, see the correspondence printed in 243 Ill. 9-41 (1900).

From very early times the English courts have given "consultative" opinions to the Crown and the House of Lords, and Parliament has extended the practice for the benefit of local government bodies. That such opinions are without binding force in regard to legal rights is, however, carefully recognized. See Certificate of Judges, 2 Eden, 371 (1760) (opinion to Crown); Head v. Head, T. & R. 138, 140 (1823) (same to House of Lords); Ex parte Kent Co. Council, (1891) 1 Q. B. 725 (to county council under statute). The early English and Massachusetts precedents are briefly reviewed in Opinion of the Justices, 126 Mass. 557, 561-566 (1879).

The history of Canadian practice in regard to advisory opinions appears in In re Sunday Legislation, 35 Can. S. C. 581 (1905); In re Criminal Code, 43 Can. S. C. 431 (1910); In re References by Gov. General, Id. 536 (1910). Such opinions are appealable to the Privy Council. Atty. Gen. for Ontario v. Hamilton St. Ry. (1903) A. C. 524.

ADMINISTRATIVE RULES REGULATING EXERCISE OF JUDICIAL CONTROL OVER UNCONSTITUTIONAL STATUTES.—In addition to the limitations upon judicial power in this regard exemplified by the cases in this chapter and in Chapter III, following, courts ordinarily will not declare legislation unconstitutional, save in the clearest cases, except by the judgment of appellate courts, by a majority of a full bench, and when a decision of the constitutional question is absolutely necessary to dispose of the case. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 230, 231 (7th Ed.). Where an act can be upheld, however, courts more freely pass authority is to be respected and obeyed until, in some regular mode prescribed by law, their title is investigated and determined. It is manifest that endless confusion would result if in every proceeding before such officers their title could be called in question. But the idea of an officer implies the existence of an office which he holds. It would be a misapplication of terms to call one an officer who holds no office, and a public office can exist only by force of law. This seems to us so obvious that we should hardly feel called upon to consider any adverse opinion on the subject but for the earnest contention of plaintiff's counsel that such existence is not essential, and that it is sufficient if the office be provided for by any legislative enactment, however invalid. Their position is that a legislative act, though unconstitutional, may in terms create an office, and nothing further than its apparent existence is necessary to give validity to the acts of its assumed incumbent. That position, although not stated in this broad form, amounts to nothing else. It is difficult to meet it by any argument beyond this statement: An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no rights; it imposes no duties; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed.¹

upon its constitutionality, even when not strictly necessary, Twining v. N. J., 211 U. S. 78, 114-117, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97 (1908); Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 227, 237, 238, 133 N. W. 209, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489 (1911); and it is sometimes said that this will also be done where the immediate decision of the question is a matter of great public importance, Borgnis v. Falk, above; Sabre v. Rutland Ry., 85 Atl. 693, 704 (Vt. 1913). Compare the disposition made of various questions in Income Tax Cases, 148 Wis. 456, 134 N. W. 673, 135 N. W. 164 (1912).

If the meaning of a statute is ambiguous, it will, if possible, be so construed as to avoid the necessity of passing upon doubtful constitutional questions. U. S. v. Del. & H. Ry., 213 U. S. 306, 407, 408, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836 (1909). Generally, too, a statute will not be held invalid merely upon the objection of public officers charged with ministerial duties in its execution, but without personal interests that may be prejudiced by their action thereunder. Braxton County Court v. West Virginia, 208 U. S. 192, 28 Sup. Ct. 275, 52 L. Ed. 450 (1908); Threadgill v. Cross, 26 Okl. 403, 407-412, 109 Pac. 558, 138 Am. St. Rep. 964 (1910) (cases); 47 L. R. A. 512, note. [Contra, where an officer is personally responsible for his acts, State ex rel. University of Utah v. Candland, 36 Utah, 406, 410-420, 104 Pac. 285, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260, 140 Am. St. Rep. 834 (1909).] As to the practice of taxpayer's actions to test the validity of laws by asking an injunction against the expenditure of public money in enforcing them, see Ellingham v. Dye, 99 N. E. 1 (Ind. 1912); Income Tax Cases, 148 Wis. 456, 134 N. W. 673, 135 N. W. 164 (1912). Compare State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 117 Pac. 1101, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466 (1911) (duty of state auditor to refuse to sanction expenditures under invalid law).

Upon writ of error from state courts the federal Supreme Court will not hold state statutes invalid save at the suit of those whose own constitutional rights are invaded. It is not enough that the law may be invalid as to others, and, being inseparable, may therefore fail as a whole. Tyler v. Judges of Court of Registration, 179 U. S. 405, 21 Sup. Ct. 206, 45 L. Ed. 252 (1900); New York ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 160, 161, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736 (1907); The Winnebago, 205 U. S. 354, 360, 27 Sup. Ct. 509, 51 L. Ed. 836 (1907). See Shepherd v. Wheeling, post, p. 50.

¹ An unconstitutional statute is generally held to confer no protection upon a ministerial officer who is sued for infringing private rights in reliance

In Hildreth v. McIntire, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 206, 19 Am. Dec. 61, we have a decision from the court of appeals of Kentucky which well illustrates this doctrine. The legislature of that state attempted to abolish the court of appeals established by her Constitution, and create in its stead a new court. Members of the new court were appointed, and undertook to exercise judicial functions. They dismissed an appeal because the record was not filed with the person acting as their clerk. A certificate of the dismissal signed by him was received by the lower court, and entered of record, and execution to carry into effect the original decree was ordered to issue. To reverse this order an appeal was taken to the constitutional court of appeals. The question was whether the court below erred in obeying the mandate of the members of the new court, and its solution depended upon another, whether they were judges of the court of appeals, and the person acting as their clerk was its clerk. The court said: "Although they assumed the functions of judges and clerk, and attempted to act as such, their acts in that character are totally null and void, unless they had been regularly appointed under and according to the Constitution. A de facto court of appeals cannot exist under a written Constitution which ordains one supreme court, and defines the qualification and duties of its judges, and prescribes the mode of appointing them. There cannot be more than one court of appeals in Kentucky as long as the Constitution shall exist, and that must necessarily be a court de jure. When the government is entirely revolutionized, and all its departments usurped by force or the voice of a majority, then prudence recommends and necessity enforces obedience to the authority of those who may act as the public functionaries, and in such a case the acts of a de facto executive, a de facto judiciary, and a de facto legislature must be recognized as valid. But this is required by political necessity. There is no government in action except the government de facto, because all the attributes of sovereignty have, by usurpation, been transferred from those who had been legally invested with them to others who, sus-thereon. Campbell v. Sherman, 35 Wis. 103 (1874); Sumner v. Beeler, 50 Ind. 341, 19 Am. Rep. 718 (1875); Warren v. Kelley, 80 Me. 512, 15 Atl. 49 (1888). [See Clark v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 528 (1871).] But its existence may be an element in affording to persons who act thereunder the protection of other rules of law. Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378, 7 N. W. 623 (1880) (immunity of inferior judicial officer acting within his jurisdiction—semble); Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576, 49 N. W. 633, 21 Am. St. Rep. 137 (1891) (same); Annheuser Brewing Ass'n v. Hammond, 93 Iowa, 520, 61 N. W. 1062 (1895) (officer acting under writ fair on its face); Id. (defense to civil action for making complaint under invalid law); Tillman v. Beard, 121 Mich. 473, 80 N. W. 248, 46 L. R. A. 215 (1899) (same—case); State v. Godwin, 123 N. C. 697, 31 S. E. 221 (1898) (officer not indictable for obeying invalid law) [but see Flaucher v. Camden, 56 N. J. Law, 244, 28 Atl. 82 (1893) (private individual thus punishable)]. The situation created by action under an unconstitutional statute may of course afford a basis for various collateral rights. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 154, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178 (1886) (restitution); United States v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215 (1896) (discharge of moral obligation), post, p. 601, note.

tained by a power above the forms of law, claim to act, and do act, in their stead. But when the Constitution or form of government remains unaltered and supreme, there can be no de facto department or de facto office. The acts of the incumbents of such departments or office cannot be enforced conformably to the Constitution, and can be regarded as valid only when the government is overturned. When there is a constitutional executive and legislature, there cannot be any other than a constitutional judiciary. Without a total revolution, there can be no such political solecism in Kentucky as a de facto court of appeals. There can be no such court while the Constitution has life and power. There has been none such. There might be under our Constitution, as there have been, de facto officers; but there never was, and never can be, under the present Constitution, a de facto office." And the court held that the gentlemen who acted as judges of the legislative tribunal were not incumbents of de jure or de facto offices, nor were they de facto officers of de jure offices, and the order below was reversed. * * *

The case of State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409, decided by the supreme court of Connecticut, upon which special reliance is placed by counsel, and which is mentioned with strong commendation as a land-mark of the law, in no way militates against the doctrine we have declared, but is in harmony with it. That case was this: The Constitution of Connecticut provided that all judges should be elected by its general assembly. An act of the legislature authorized the clerk of a city court, in case of the sickness or absence of its judge, to appoint a justice of the peace to hold the court during his temporary sickness or absence. A justice of the peace having thus been called in, and having acted, a question arose whether the judgments rendered by him were valid. The court held that whether the law was constitutional or not, he was an officer de facto, and, as such, his acts were valid. The opinion of Chief Justice Butler is an elaborate and admirable statement of the law, with a review of the English and American cases, on the validity of the acts of de facto officers, however illegal the mode of their appointment. It criticises the language of some cases, that the officer must act under color of authority conferred by a person having power, or prima facie power, to appoint or elect in the particular case; and it thus defines an officer de facto: "An officer de facto is one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid, so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office are exercised—First, without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be; second, under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer had failed to conform to some precedent, requirement, or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like; third, under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such ineligibility, want of power, or defect being unknown to the public; fourth, under color of an election or an appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law, before the same is adjudged to be such."

Of the great number of cases cited by the chief justice, none recognizes such a thing as a de facto office, or speaks of a person as a de facto officer, except when he is the incumbent of a de jure office. The fourth head refers, not to the unconstitutionality of the act creating the office, but to the unconstitutionality of the act by which the officer is appointed to an office legally existing. That such was the meaning of the chief justice is apparent from the cases cited by him in support of the last position, to some of which reference will be made.² * * * [Here follows an analysis of certain of these cases in support of this argument, and a discussion of other points in the case.]

Judgment affirmed.³

² This interpretation of State v. Carroll is criticised in Lang v. Bayonne, 74 N. J. Law, 455, 461, 462, 68 Atl. 90, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 93, 122 Am. St. Rep. 391, 12 Ann. Cas. 961 (1907).

³ The cases accord and contra to the principal case are collected in 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94-107. The weight of authority is with it, save as concerns de facto municipal corporations and acts of their officers. As to these, see 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105-107; 28 Cyc. 172 (cases); 29 Cyc. 1391 (cases). The argument against the doctrine of the principal case appears in the following quotations:

"So necessary to the successful carrying on of a republican form of government is the principle which I understand the Chief Justice to have laid down, namely, that a statute which creates an office, and provides an officer to perform its duties, must have the force of law until condemned as unconstitutional by the courts, and that in the meantime the officer so provided is an officer de facto, that it is impliedly recognized and acted on almost universally (so far as my examination has disclosed) in the case of municipal corporations which have been created by unconstitutional laws. Such corporations are declared to be de facto corporations. Dillon on Mun. Corp. § 43a; Burt v. Winona, etc., R. R. Co., 31 Minn. 472, 18 N. W. 285, 289, and cases cited. And not only so, but courts refuse to permit the legality of their existence to be called into question, except by the state itself, through its Attorney General, and hold that so long as the state does not see fit to interfere, and terminate the existence thereof by direct proceeding brought by the Attorney General, a municipal corporation which has been created by an unconstitutional statute may exercise upon the citizen, through its officers, the powers conferred upon it by the statute, as fully and completely as if it was created by a law valid in every particular.

And yet, if it be true that there cannot be such a thing as a de facto officer, unless there be a de jure office, on what theory can the acts of such officers be recognized as valid? How can it be true that a law of this character, the validity of which no one but the Attorney General can challenge, and which is permitted to be enforced to the fullest extent against the public, 'confers no rights, imposes no duties, affords no protection, creates no office,' and 'is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as if it had never been

SHEPHARD v. WHEELING (1887) 30 W. Va. 479, 482-484, 4 S. E. 635, SNYDER, J. (holding invalid a West Virginia statute authorizing state circuit courts, upon the petition of aggrieved taxpayers, to revoke and annul any ordinance of a city, town, or village made contrary to law):

"The enactment of an ordinance by a city council, or the enactment of a statute by a legislature, being in each case the exercise of legislative power, the repeal of such ordinance or statute must likewise be the exercise of legislative power. It does not require any precise definition of judicial power, or any nice discrimination as to its extent and limitations to determine that the act of repealing a statute is not the exercise of judicial power. * * *

"When, in the course of determining the rights of the parties to a particular suit or controversy, the court finds it necessary to ascertain whether or not a statute is unconstitutional, the court must necessarily pass upon that question; but in doing so it does not annul or repeal the statute if it finds it in conflict with the Constitution. It simply refuses to recognize it, and determines the rights of the parties just as if such statute had no existence. The court may give its reasons for ignoring or disregarding the statute, but the decision affects the parties only, and there is no judgment against the statute. The opinion or reasons of the court may operate as a precedent for the determination of other similar cases, but it does not strike the statute from the statute-book; it does not repeal, 'supersede, revoke, or annul' the statute. The parties to that suit are concluded by the judgment, but no one else is passed'? * * * In my judgment the same public policy which requires obedience from the citizen to the provisions of a public statute which creates a municipality, and provides for its government, even though unconstitutional, so long as it has not received judicial condemnation, equally justifies his obedience to every other law which the Legislature has seen fit to enact, until such has been judicially declared to be invalid. I conclude that an officer appointed under authority of a statute to fill an office created by the statute is a de facto officer, and that acts done by him antecedent to a judicial declaration that the statute is unconstitutional are valid, so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons."—Lang v. Bayonne, 74 N. J. Law, 453, 462, 463, 68 Atl. 90, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 93, 122 Am. St. Rep. 391, 12 Ann. Cas. 961 (1907), by Gummere, C. J.

"The de facto doctrine is exotic, and was ingrafted upon the law as a matter of policy and necessity to protect the interests of the public and individuals where those interests were involved in the official acts of persons exercising the duty of an office without being lawful officers. * * * We are unable to discover any difference in reason for declaring an officer to be de facto, whether he holds a de facto or de jure office, if he has occupied it with the usual insignia of a de facto officer. The authorities are in harmony that the de facto doctrine was invented to deal with effects, not with causes. The effects only can be reached. The causes cannot. The official acts are accomplished. If the effects are alike, it is immaterial that the causes differ. The effects, whether from a de jure or de facto office, are alike. Hence the acts of the officer occupying either position should be declared de facto."—State v. Poulin, 105 Me. 224, 229, 231, 74 Atl. 119, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, 134 Am. St. Rep. 543 (1909), by Spear, J.

bound. A new litigant may bring a new suit, based upon the very same statute, and the former decision cannot be pleaded as an estoppel, but can be relied on only as a precedent. This constitutes the reason and basis of the fundamental rule that a court will never pass upon the constitutionality of a statute unless it is absolutely necessary to do so in order to decide the cause before it. Cooley, Const. Lim. 163. * * *

"In a very able opinion by Shaw, C. J., which is approved and in part quoted in the text of Cooley, that eminent judge says: 'It may be well doubted whether a formal act of legislation can ever, with strict, legal propriety, be said to be void; it seems more consistent with the nature of the subject, and the principles applicable to analogous cases, to treat it as voidable. But whether or not a case can be imagined in which an act of the legislature can be deemed absolutely void, we think it quite clear that when such act is alleged to be void, on the ground that it exceeds the just limits of legislative power, and thus injuriously affects the rights of others, it is deemed to be void only in respect to those particulars, and as against those persons whose rights are thus affected. Prima facie, and upon the face of the act itself, nothing will generally appear to show that the act is not valid; and it is only when some person attempts to resist its operation, and calls in the aid of the judicial power to pronounce it void as to him, his property, or his rights, that the objection of unconstitutionality can be presented and sustained. Respect for the legislature, therefore, concurs with well-established principles of law in the conclusion that such act is not void, but voidable only; and it follows, as a necessary legal inference from this position, that this ground of avoidance can be taken advantage of by those only who have a right to question the validity of the act, and not by strangers. To this extent only is it necessary to go in order to secure and protect the rights of all persons against the unwarranted exercise of legislative power; and to this extent only, therefore, are courts of justice called on to interpose.' In re Wellington 16 Pick. (Mass.) 96, 26 Am. Dec. 631. * * *"¹

¹ For various purposes, other than that of enforcement in its invalid form, regard will be paid to an unconstitutional statute by the courts. Defective portions, even when inseparable, may be subsequently amended so as to make the whole operative without re-enactment as an entirety. Allison v. Corker, 67 N. J. Law, 596, 52 Atl. 362 (1902) [annotated in 60 L. R. A. 564-566], Collins, J., saying (67 N. J. Law, pp. 600, 601, 52 Atl. 363 [60 L. R. A. 561]): "An unconstitutional statute is nevertheless a statute; that is, a legislative act. Such a statute is commonly spoken of as void. I should prefer to call it unenforceable, because in conflict with a paramount law. If properly to be called void, it is only so with reference to claims based upon it. Neither of the three great departments to which the Constitution has committed government by the people can encroach upon the domain of another. The function of the judicial department with respect to legislation deemed unconstitutional is not exercised in rem, but always in personam. The supreme court cannot set aside a statute as it can a municipal ordinance. It simply ignores statutes deemed unconstitutional. For many purposes an unconstitutional statute may influence judicial judgment, where, for example, under color of it private or public action has been taken. An unconstitutional stat-

POLLOCK v. FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST CO. (1895) 158 U. S. 601, 635-637, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108. Mr. Chief Justice FULLER (after holding invalid certain parts of the federal income tax law of 1894, taxing all incomes over $4,000—see p. 1026, post, for this part of the case):

"Being of opinion that so much of the sections of this law as lays a tax on income from real and personal property is invalid, we are brought to the question of the effect of that conclusion upon these sections as a whole.

"It is elementary that the same statute may be in part constitutional and in part unconstitutional, and, if the parts are wholly independent of each other, that which is constitutional may stand, while that which is unconstitutional will be rejected. And in the case before us there is no question as to the validity of this act, except sections 27 to 37, inclusive, which relate to the subject which has been under discussion; and, as to them, we think the rule laid down by Chief Justice Shaw in Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 84, is applicable,—that if the different parts 'are so mutually connected with and dependent on each other, as conditions, considerations, or compensations for each other, as to warrant a belief that the legislature intended them as a whole, and that if all could not be carried into effect the legislature would not pass the residue independently, and some parts are unconstitutional, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional, or connected must fall with them.' Or, as the point is put by Mr. Justice Matthews in Poin-dexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 304, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962: 'It is undoubtedly true that there may be cases where one part of a statute may be enforced, as constitutional, and another be declared inoperative and void, because unconstitutional; but these are cases where the parts are so distinctly separable that each can stand alone, and where the court is able to see, and to declare, that the intention of the legislature was ute is not merely blank paper. The solemn act of the legislature is a fact to be reckoned with. Nowhere has power been vested to expunge it or remove it from its proper place among statutes."

So, also, persons who have obtained benefits or have consented to action under invalid statutes may be estopped from attacking them. Bellevue Borough v. Manufacturers' Light & Heat Co., 238 Pa. 388, 86 Atl. 187 (1913); Ensbury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325 (1850).

It is generally held, however, that an invalid statute is not made operative, without re-enactment, by a subsequent constitutional amendment not expressly made retroactive, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 78, 79 note; though of course an expressly retroactive amendment (not violating the federal Constitution) may have this effect, Hammond v. Clark, 136 Ga. 313, 71 S. E. 479, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77 (1911); as well as a corrective act of the legislature itself, Ross v. Board of Supervisors of Wright County, 128 Iowa, 427, 104 N. W. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431 (1905).

In Echison Drilling Co. v. Flournoy, 131 La. 442, 59 South. 867 (1912), it was held that the legislature had no power to make an act, then incompetent to it, become operative upon the contingent adoption of a future constitutional amendment not in terms retroactive. Compare Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201, 209, 210, 6 Sup. Ct. 565, 29 L. Ed. 855 (1886); In re Rabrer, 140 U. S.

that the part pronounced valid should be enforceable, even though the other part should fail. To hold otherwise would be to substitute for the law intended by the legislature one they may never have been willing, by itself, to enact.' And again, as stated by the same eminent judge in Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90, 95, 6 Sup. Ct. 938, where it was urged that certain illegal exceptions in a section of a statute might be disregarded, but that the rest could stand: 'The insuperable difficulty with the application of that principle of construction to the present instance is that by rejecting the exceptions intended by the legislature of Georgia the statute is made to enact what, confessedly, the legislature never meant. It confers upon the statute a positive operation beyond the legislative intent, and beyond what any one can say it would have enacted, in view of the illegality of the exceptions.'

"According to the census, the true valuation of real and personal property in the United States in 1890 was $65,037,091,197, of which real estate with improvements thereon made up $39,544,544,333. Of course, from the latter must be deducted, in applying these sections, all unproductive property and all property whose net yield does not exceed $4,000; but, even with such deductions, it is evident that the income from realty formed a vital part of the scheme for taxation embodied therein. If that be stricken out, and also the income from all invested personal property, bonds, stocks, investments of all kinds, it is obvious that by far the largest part of the anticipated revenue would be eliminated, and this would leave the burden of the tax to be borne by professions, trades, employments, or vocations; and in that way what was intended as a tax on capital would remain, in substance, a tax on occupations and labor. We cannot believe that such was the intention of congress. We do not mean to say that an act laying by apportionment a direct tax on all real estate and personal property, or the income thereof, might not also lay excise taxes on business, privileges, employments, and vocations. But this is not such an act, and the scheme must be considered as a whole. Being invalid as to the greater part, and falling, as the tax would, if any part were held valid, in a direction which could not have been contemplated, except in connection with the taxation considered as an entirety, we are constrained to conclude that sections 27 to 37, inclusive, of the act, which became a law, without the signature of the president, on August 28, 1894, are wholly inoperative and void."¹

545, 564, 565, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 35 L. Ed. 572 (1891); Pratt v. Allen, 13 Conn. 119 (1839).

Legislation originally valid may be suspended by the operation of a superior law and will be revived by the removal of this bar. In re Nelson (D. C.) 69 Fed. 712 (1895) (cases). Compare the common-law doctrine of the effect of the repeal of a repealing law. Com. v. Churchill, 2 Mete. (Mass.) 118 (1846).

¹For various applications of this rule to civil statutes, see International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 112-114, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103 (1910); Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U. S. 463, 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 52 L. Ed. 297 (1908); El Paso & N. E. R. Co.

CHAPTER III

SEPARATION AND DELEGATION OF POWERS OF GOVERNMENT

SECTION 1.—SEPARATION OF POWERS

MERRILL v. SHERBURNE.

(Superior Court of New Hampshire, 1818. 1 N. H. 199, 8 Am. Dec. 52.)

[Appeal from the probate court of Rockingham county, New Hampshire. This court allowed the probate of an instrument as the will of Nathaniel Ward, in which all his property was devised to Merrill. Sherburne, one of Ward's heirs, appealed from this decision to the Superior Court, where this decree was reversed, and, after refusing a motion for a new trial, the court rendered final judgment for Sherburne. The legislature, on Merrill's petition, passed an act granting to him a new trial in the Superior Court. Sherburne moved to quash the proceedings thus begun by Merrill, as based on an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power by the legislature.]

WOODBURY, J. * * * 1. No particular definition of judicial powers is given in the Constitution; and considering the general nature of the instrument, none was to be expected. Critical statements of the meanings, in which all important words were employed, would have swollen into volumes; and when those words possessed a customary signification, a definition of them would have been useless. But "powers judicial," "judiciary powers," and "judicatories" are all phrases used in the Constitution; and though not particularly defined, are still so used to designate with clearness, that department of government, which it was intended should interpret and administer the laws. On general principles therefore, those inquiries, deliberations, orders and decrees, which are peculiar to such a department, must in their nature be judicial acts. Nor can they be both judicial and legislative; because a marked difference exists between the employments of judicial and legislative tribunals. The former decide upon the legality of claims and conduct; the latter make rules, upon

v. Gutierrez, 215 U. S. 87, 30 Sup. Ct. 21, 54 L. Ed. 106 (1909). In the two latter a federal statute was held separable territorially, but not as to subject-matter. As to criminal statutes, see James v. Bowman, 190 U. S. 127, 23 Sup. Ct. 678, 47 L. Ed. 979 (1903); Ill. Cent. Ry. v. McKendree, 203 U. S. 514, 27 Sup. Ct. 153, 51 L. Ed. 298 (1906); N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 212 U. S. 481, 496, 497, 29 Sup. Ct. 304, 53 L. Ed. 613 (1909).

which, in connection with the Constitution, those decisions should be founded. It is the province of judges to determine what is the law upon existing cases. 6 Bac. Stat. 11; Ogden v. Blackledge, 2 Cranch, 272, 2 L. Ed. 276; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 498, 5 Am. Dec. 291. In fine, the law is applied by the one, and made by the other.¹ To do the first, therefore, to compare the claims of parties with the laws of the land before established, is in its nature a judicial act. But to do the last, to pass new rules for the regulation of new controversies, is in its nature a legislative act; and if these rules interfere with the past, or the present, and do not look wholly to the future, they violate the definition of a law, "as a rule of civil conduct" (1 Bl. Com. 44), because no rule of conduct can with consistency operate upon what occurred before the rule itself was promulgated. * * *

The grant of a new trial belongs to the courts of law from immemorial usage. The power to grant a new trial is incidental to their other powers. It is a judgment in relation to a private controversy; affects what has already happened; and results from a comparison of evidence and claims with the existing laws. It will not be denied, that the consideration and decision, by the Superior Court, of the motion for this same new trial was an exercise of judicial power. If so a consideration and decision upon the same subject by the legislature must be an exercise of power of the same description; for what is in its nature judicial to-day, must be judicial to-morrow and forever. The circumstance, also, that the legislature themselves did not proceed to make a final judgment on the merits of the controversy between these parties cannot alter the character of the act granting a new trial. To award such a trial was one judicial act, and because they did not proceed to perform another, by holding that trial before themselves, the first act did not become any more or less a judicial one. We apprehend, therefore, that the character of the act under consideration must be deemed judicial. This position will probably be less doubted, than the position that our Constitution has not confided to the legislature the power to pass such an act. But that power, if confided, must be exercised by the legislature as a branch of the judiciary, or under some special provision, or as a mere legislative body.

¹ "What constitutes the distinction between a legislative and judicial act? The former establishes a rule regulating and governing in matters or transactions occurring after its passage. The other determines rights or obligations of any kind, whether in regard of persons or property, concerning matters or transactions which already exist and have transpired ere the judicial power is invoked to pass on them."—Thornton, J., in Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 196, 197, 8 Pac. 852, 853, 854 (1885).

"The distinction between a judicial and a legislative act is well defined. The one determines what the law is, and what the rights of parties are, with reference to transactions already had; the other provides what the law shall be in future cases arising under it. Wherever an act undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation, or of property, as the foundation on which it proceeds, such act is, to that extent, a judicial one, and not the proper exercise of legislative functions."—Field, J. (in dissenting opinion), in Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 727, 761, 25 L. Ed. 504 (1879).

2. Our next inquiry, then, is, whether they, as a branch of the judiciary, are enabled to exercise it. * * * At the formation of our present Constitution, whatever might have been the prior connection between the legislative and judicial departments, a great solicitude existed to keep them, thence forward, on the subject of private controversies, perfectly separate and independent. 1 Bl. C. Apx. A: Letter of Judges Sup. Court of United States, April, 1782.

It was well known and considered, that "in the distinct and separate existence of the judicial power consists one main preservative of the public liberty" (Bl. Com. 269); that, indeed, "there is no liberty, if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers" (Montesquieu, B. 11, Ch. 6). In other words that "the union of these two powers is tyranny" (7 Johns. 508); or, as Mr. Madison observes, may justly be "pronounced the very definition of tyranny" (Fed. No. 47); or, in the language of Mr. Jefferson, "is precisely the definition of despotic government" (Notes on Vir. 195).

Not a single Constitution therefore, exists in the whole Union, which does not adopt this principle of separation as a part of its basis. Fed. No. 81; 1 Bl. Apx. 126, Tuck. Ed.; 3 Niles' Reg. 2; 4 Niles' Reg. 400. We are aware, that in Connecticut, till lately, and still in New York, a part of their legislature exercise some judicial authority. 4 Niles' Reg. 443. This is probably a relic of the rude and monarchical governments of the Eastern world; in some of which no division of powers existed in theory, and very little in practice. Even in England the executive and judicial departments were once united (1 Bl. 267; 2 Hutch. His. 107); and when our ancestors emigrated hither, they from imitation, smallness of numbers and attachment to popular forms, vested often in one department not only distinct, but sometimes universal powers (2 Wil. Wks. 50; 1 Minot, His. 27; 1 Hutch. His. 30; 2 Hutch. His. 250, 414).

The practice of their assemblies to perform judicial acts (Calder and Wife v. Bull et al., 3 Dal. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648) has contributed to produce an impression, that our legislatures can also perform them. But it should be remembered, that those assemblies were restrained by no Constitutions, and that the evils of this practice (Fed. No. 44), united with the increase of political science have produced the very changes and prohibitions before mentioned. The exceptions in Connecticut and New York do not affect the argument; because those exceptions are not implied, but detailed in specific terms in their charters; and this power, also, as in the House of Lords in England, is in those states to be exercised in the form of judgments and not of laws; and by one branch, and not by all, of the legislature. 4 Niles' Reg. 444. "The entire legislature can perform no judiciary act." Fed. No. 47. * * *

One great object of Constitutions here (Fed. No. 81) was to limit the powers of all the departments of government (Bill of Rights, arts. 1, 7, 8, 38); and our Constitution contains many express provisions in relation to them, which are wholly irreconcilable with the exercise of judicial powers by the legislature, as a branch of the judiciary. That clause, which confers upon the "general court" the authority "to make laws," provides at the same time, that they must not be "repugnant or contrary to the Constitution." One prominent reason for creating the judicial, distinct from the legislative department, was, that the former might determine when laws were thus "repugnant," and so operate as a check upon the latter, and as a safeguard to the people against its mistakes or encroachments. But the judiciary would in every respect cease to be a check on the legislature, if the legislature could at pleasure revise or alter any of the judgments of the judiciary. * * * [The law was held also to violate a constitutional prohibition against retrospective legislation.]

The long usage of our legislatures to grant new trials has also been deemed an argument in favor of the act under consideration. But that usage commenced under colonial institutions, where legislative powers were neither understood nor limited as under our present constitution. Since the adoption of that, the usage has been resisted by sound civilians, and often declared void by courts of law. Though no opinions have been published, and though the decisions have been contradictory, yet the following ones appear by the records to have adjudged such acts void: Gilman v. McClary, Rock., Sept., 1791; Chickering v. Clark, Hills; Butterfield v. Morgan, Ches., May, 1797; Jenness et al., Ex'rs, v. Seavey, Rock., Feb., 1799. Nor could it be pretended on any sound principles, that the usage to pass them, if uninterrupted for the last twenty-seven years, would amount to a justification, provided both the letter and spirit of the written charter of our liberties forbid them. * * *

Proceedings quashed.²

² "It may safely be said, that to hear and decide adversary suits at law and in equity, with the power of rendering judgments and entering up decrees according to the decision, to be executed by the process and power of the tribunal deciding, or of another tribunal acting under its orders and according to its direction, is the exercise of judicial power, in the constitutional sense; and that it is so, whether the decision be final, or subject to reversal on error or appeal."—Ames, C. J., in Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324, 336 (1856).

Almost everywhere the legislature may not in pending litigation grant new trials, reopen judgments, or allow appeals where the right has expired. Sanders v. Cabaniss, 43 Ala. 173 (1869) (cases); Taylor v. Place, above. Early cases to the contrary have been overruled in Connecticut and Pennsylvania. Norwalk St. Ry. Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 576, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708, 39 L. R. A. 794 (1897); De Chastellux v. Fairchild, 15 Pa. 18, 53 Am. Dec. 570 (1850). Maryland perhaps still permits special appeals to be authorized. State v. Northern Cent. Ry. Co., 18 Md. 193 (1862). Compare Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415, 27 Sup. Ct. 363, 51 L. Ed. 547 (1907) [following Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 19 Sup. Ct. 722, 43 L. Ed. 1041 (1899)] (act providing for review in other courts of prior final judgments of federal territorial courts as to Indian tribal citizenship).

The legislature may repeal a court's appellate jurisdiction, however, so as

MAYNARD v. HILL (1888) 125 U. S. 190, 204, 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654, Mr. Justice FIELD (upholding a divorce granted by the territorial legislature of Oregon in 1852 under a grant of legislative power by Congress extending "to all rightful subjects of legislation." The divorce was granted upon petition of the husband, without cause and without notice to the wife, then in Ohio):

"What were 'rightful subjects of legislation,' when these acts organizing the territories were passed, is not to be settled by reference to the distinctions usually made between legislative acts and such as are judicial or administrative in their character, but by an examination of the subjects upon which legislatures had been in the practice of acting with the consent and approval of the people they represented. A long acquiescence in repeated acts of legislation on particular matters is evidence that those matters have been generally considered by the people as properly within legislative control. Such acts are not to be set aside or treated as invalid, because, upon a careful consideration of their character, doubts may arise as to the competency of the legislature to pass them. Rights acquired, or obligations incurred under such legislation, are not to be impaired because of subsequent differences of opinion as to the department of government to which the acts are properly assignable. With special force does this observation apply, when the validity of acts dissolving the bonds of matrimony is assailed; the legitimacy of many children, the peace of many families, and the settlement of many estates depending upon its being sustained. It will be found from the history of legislation that, while a general separation has been observed between the different departments, so that no clear encroachment by one upon the province of the other has been sustained, the legislative department, when not restrained by constitutional provisions and a regard for certain fundamental rights of the citizen which are recognized in this country as the basis of all government, has acted upon everything within the range of civil government. Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 663, 22 L. Ed. 455. Every subject of interest to the community has come under its direction. It has not merely prescribed rules for future conduct, but has legalized past acts, corrected defects in proceedings, and determined the status, conditions, and relations of parties in the future."¹

to strike down cases that have been appealed and argued, but not yet decided. Ex parte McCordle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. Ed. 264 (1868); Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 25 L. Ed. 231 (1879).

See Chapter XIII, section 2, Retroactive Laws, post, pp. 897-898.

¹ Further extracts from this case are printed at p. 434, post. See Ex parte Tillman, 84 S. C. 552, 66 S. E. 1049, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 781 (1910), as to power of legislature to regulate custody of children without a judicial hearing.

FOX v. McDONALD.

(Supreme Court of Alabama, 1892. 101 Ala. 51, 13 South. 416, 21 L. R. A. 529, 46 Am. St. Rep. 98.)

[Appeal from the city court of Birmingham. A statute authorized the probate judge of Jefferson county, Alabama, to appoint a board of five police commissioners for the city of Birmingham. The board thus appointed designated McDonald as chief of police for that city. Fox, mayor of the city, refused to administer the oath of office, and McDonald obtained a writ of mandamus from the city court ordering Fox to do this. Fox appealed, inter alia claiming the statute was unconstitutional as conferring non-judicial powers upon the probate judge.]

HEAD, J. * * * It is a well-settled principle that Constitutions, like statutes, are properly to be expounded in the light of conditions existing at the time of their adoption; and we look at the antecedent government, consider its system as a whole and in its several parts, and the experiences and practices of its administration, and we consider and weigh the evils of the old system, which the people intended to cure by the new. Thus aided, we interpret those provisions which require construction, and determine what the intention of the framers of the instrument was, and give effect to that intention; and it not infrequently occurs, in the exposition of written laws, both constitutional and statutory, that the letter of a provision will be justly made to yield to a manifest intention in opposition to it derived by construction alone. When we take our Constitution, therefore, and read it in the light of this history, we see plainly that it was not intended to declare that every act pertaining to government, and the regulation of the social and property rights of the citizen, should be exercised exclusively by the legislative, executive, or judicial department of the state government, or some member of it, according as the act possessed a legislative, executive, or judicial character, for we find there are many such acts especially peculiar to the very nature of our system, and necessarily inherent in it, which, time out of mind, have not been exclusively exercised by these departments, and which, for the ease and efficiency of our system, could not be so exercised. * * *

Again, if all functions of government of a legislative, executive, or judicial character properly belong to, and are therefore to be exercised exclusively by, the several departments created by the Constitution, what shall become of the multiform powers and duties which, by legislative enactment, without express constitutional authority, have so long been conferred upon, and exercised by, the various officers appointed to perform functions of government in the several counties, and who are not made members of either of those departments? Has it ever been thought that the executive and ministerial, and indeed, in some instances, the judicial or quasi judicial, functions of the tax assessor, tax collector, county treasurer, coroner, county surveyor, and clerks of courts, to which may be added the officers and boards of control of our state institutions for the care of the insane and deaf, dumb, and blind, and our state and county medical boards for the preservation of the public health, properly belong to the several state bodies of magistracy created by the Constitution, within the spirit and intent of that instrument, and must therefore be confided to the exclusive exercise of those bodies? None will so declare. Indeed, we have in our system, in opposition to the letter of the constitutional provisions under review, striking illustrations of the blending of legislative, executive, and judicial power in the same persons or bodies, which it has not been, and will not be, supposed our several Constitutions intended to inhibit. In Clay's Digest, and in each compilation of our laws since, we find the creation of a court of county commissioners. This body is an inferior court created by law, and belongs, under express provision of each of our Constitutions, to the judicial department of government, yet we find, in its very creation, it was, and has ever since been, endowed with legislative and executive powers. In fact, its chief duties are of those characters. It is given the power to levy and assess taxes for the support of the county government, which is a legislative function.¹ Cooley, Const. Lim. marg. pp. 479, 488.

¹ In many states an early practice of making the inferior courts the organs for levying local taxes and assessing property therefor has been continued and judicially upheld.

Levying taxes: Pennington v. Woolfolk, 79 Ky. 13 (1880); State v. Gazlay, 5 Ohio, 14 (1831), approved in State v. Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St. 419, 451, 140 N. E. 508, 27 L. R. A. 737 (1895) [see 2 Chase's Ohio Statutes, 1469-1471, 1478]; Ballard v. Thomas, 19 Grat. (60 Va.) 14 (1868). Contra: Hardenburgh v. Kidd, 10 Cal. 402 (1858); Munday v. Assessors of City of Rahway, 43 N. J. Law, 338 (1881).

Assessing or appraising property, or revising assessment de novo: Pierre Water Works Co. v. Hughes County, 5 Dak. 145, 37 N. W. 733 (1888); Pennington v. Woolfolk, above; State ex rel. Spencer v. Ensign, 55 Minn. 278, 56 N. W. 1006 (1893); Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 580 (1879); Nalle v. City of Austin, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 595, 56 S. W. 954 (1900); Wheeling Bridge & T. Ry. Co. v. Paull, 39 W. Va. 142, 19 S. E. 551 (1901). Contra: Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 6 Kan. 500, 7 Am. Rep. 575 (1870); Baltimore City v. Bonaparte, 93 Md. 156, 48 Atl. 735 (1901). Regarding the latter practice it has been said:

"The ascertainment of the values of property is strictly judicial, and, in a government perfectly separated into the three distinct departments, of legislative, executive, and judicial, would, of necessity, belong to the judicial, and not to either of the other departments, because it has not in it a single element relating to the enactment or execution of law. It has, however, heretofore been considered the necessary adjunct of the strictly legislative power—made so by the constitution—of levying taxes."—Wheeling Bridge & T. Ry. Co. v. Paull, above, 39 W. Va. at page 147, 19 S. E. at page 552, by Dent, J.

"In so far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned, we see no distinction between proceedings to determine the value of property for the purpose of exercising the power of eminent domain and to determine the value of such property for the purpose of taxation."—Nalle v. City of Austin, above, 23 Tex. Civ. App. at page 599, 56 S. W. at page 956, by Key, J.

It is given power to direct and control the property of the county, to examine and audit the accounts of the receiving and disbursing officers of the county, to make rules and regulations for the support of the poor; and it is given plenary and executive powers over the erection and maintenance of public roads, bridges, and ferries, and the appointment of the necessary officers in that behalf.

These are functions which do not inherently pertain to the judiciary, yet none will say, in view of their long-continued and useful exercise by the court of county commissioners, without let or hindrance, that the Constitution, in distributing the powers of government, intended to inhibit such exercise. So, also, the sheriff, who is expressly made a member of the executive department, has ever been empowered, by legislation, to perform the judicial function of approving bonds necessary to be taken by him in the administration of the laws. Clerks, registers in chancery, commercial notaries, and commissioners of deeds, under constitutions in terms confining judicial power to the courts, have long exercised, under legislative sanction only, the power of taking acknowledgments of conveyances, which this court has declared to be of a judicial nature. The coroner is so far an executive officer that he may execute process upon, and arrest, the sheriff himself, who is, by the terms of the Constitution, a member of the state executive department; and yet it has never been supposed that he may not, with constitutional favor, perform the judicial function of holding inquests. Other illustrations might be given, but these suffice to make clear the principle that the Constitution must receive an enlarged and liberal interpretation, and the intention of its framers ascertained upon a broad view of the history and experience, the needs and usages, of the time, and the great general purpose they had in view, of framing a comprehensive and beneficent government. Thus viewed, we irresistibly conclude that it was not the intention of the Constitution to declare that all these powers and duties, so indispensable to efficient government, and so long exercised, under legislative sanction only, by these officers and agencies of legislative creation, properly belong to the legislative, executive, or judicial body of magistracy created by the Constitution, because alone they may partake of a legislative, executive, or judicial nature.²

We come then to the concrete question, does the power to fill vacancies in office by appointment "properly belong" to the executive department of the state government, to be exercised exclusively by

² For an enumeration of a great variety of administrative functions imposed upon judges in some states, see In re Johnson, 12 Kan. 102, 104 (1873) (probate judges) [see, also, In re Sims, 54 Kan. 1, 12, 37 Pac. 135, 25 L. R. A. 110, 45 Am. St. Rep. 261 (1894)]; Matter of Davies, 168 N. Y. 89, 102, 61 N. E. 118, 56 L. R. A. 855 (1901) (supreme court judges); State v. City of Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St. 419, 451, 452, 40 N. E. 508, 27 L. R. A. 737 (1895) (court of common pleas). "A distinction seems to obtain in practice between powers conferred upon a court and those conferred upon the judges thereof."—Matter of Davies, 168 N. Y. at page 102, 61 N. E. at page 121, 56 L. R. A. 855, by that department, within the meaning of the Constitution? It may be regarded as a fundamental policy of our system of state governments, in this country, that the selection of persons to perform the offices and functions of government shall be left to the people themselves, to be exercised at the ballot box. * * * The inherent nature and essence of the act of selecting officers of government, therefore, in view of this established policy, describe it as one properly belonging to the people, through the ballot, and not to any particular department of government, to be exercised by representatives of the people. The filling of vacancies in office pending the action of the people, by appointment of their representatives, clothed by law with that authority, is, as a rule, an expedient, merely, evoked by the convenience and necessities of government growing out of the nature of our system. In the nature of things, the people cannot be always called upon to act immediately when the selection of a person is necessary to the exercise of a function of government. Hence, it has been customary and essential to provide other means of appointment in cases to which this necessity gives rise. Furthermore, in our experience, wisdom has dictated that particular offices be filled exclusively by appointment of some governmental agency other than the vote of the people themselves; and this, and the agencies for such appointments, and the methods of filling vacancies in offices elective by the people, have been expressly manifested and prescribed in our Constitutions or laws. It was necessary that they be so prescribed, for otherwise the right of such appointment resided nowhere. It belonged to no department of the government. With us, the governor has no prerogatives. He must find warrant in the written law for his every official act. He has no more power to appoint officers, when not expressly conferred, than has the president of the senate, who is of the legislative, or the chief justice of this court, who is of the judicial, department; and when we go back to our Constitutions and laws, in this state, from the beginning of the state government to the present, we find it has been the policy to distribute this appointing power among the several departments of the state. We need not specify. The instances will readily occur to the minds of those familiar with the Constitutions and laws. It may be true, that the governor has been invested with the greatest share of this power, but no principle or policy has been declared that the power inherently belongs to him. And we may remark that the fact that all our Constitutions, in assigning appointive power to the governor, have specifically designated the particular officers to whom it applied, fur-

Vann, J. "All such powers, when the court is directed to execute them, are necessarily to be performed by the judge, for they can be in no other way; and hence it can make no substantial difference whether the statute confers them in terms on the court or on the judge of the court."—State v. City of Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St. at page 451, 40 N. E. at page 512, 27 L. R. A. 737, by Williams, J.

nishes cogent argument that the people did not regard the power as necessarily or inherently belonging to him.

In what we have said, we have pretermitted inquiry whether or not the act of appointing an officer is inherently of an executive character; and we have endeavored to show that, whether so or not, it is not such an act as, upon a proper construction of the Constitution, properly belongs to the executive department. The weight of authority joins issue upon the proposition that it is inherently of that character. The supreme court of California declares it possesses judicial characteristics. Says that court: "The person to be appointed is required to have certain qualifications. He must be a citizen of the United States, and of the state, and a resident and qualified voter of the city and county, and he must be of good repute for honesty and sobriety, and he is required to produce evidence to this effect.

* * * The examination of these questions, passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence, and determining whether the candidates possess the requisite qualifications, are certainly functions partaking essentially of a judicial character." People v. Provines, 34 Cal. 520. In People v. Morgan, 90 Ill., on page 562, it is said: "The executive power in a state is understood to be that power, wherever lodged, which compels the laws to be enforced and obeyed. And the instrumentalities employed for that purpose are officers elected or appointed, who are charged with the enforcement of the laws. But the power to appoint is by no means an executive function, unless made so by the organic law or legislative enactment." In Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572, it is said: "We are not prepared to admit that the power of appointment to office is a function intrinsically executive, in the sense in which we understand the position to have been taken, namely, that it is inherent in, and necessarily belongs to, the executive department. Under some forms of government, it may be so regarded, but the reason does not apply to our system of checks and balances in the distribution of powers, where the people are the source and fountain of government, exerting their will after the manner, and by instrumentalities, specially provided in the Constitution."

In People v. Freeman, 80 Cal. 233, 22 Pac. 173, 13 Am. St. Rep. 122, that court again held that the power of appointment to office is not essentially an executive function, and may be regulated by law. Judge Christiancy, in People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, had under consideration whether the legislature could appoint persons to fill offices created by it, and his purpose was to determine whether such appointment could be treated as a legislative act which it was competent for the legislature to perform; and in discussing the question he says: "Besides the power to make general rules for the government of officers and persons, and regulating the rights and classes of persons, or of the whole community, there is a large class of powers recognized as legislative, occupying an intermediate space between those of a judicial character, on the one side, and the executive, on the other, and which are not, and cannot be, marked off from these by any clear line." And further on he says: "As to this mode of appointment being the exercise of a power essentially executive in its nature, it is sufficient to say that executive power cannot always be defined by any fixed standard, in the abstract. What would come within the executive power, in our form of government, would fall within the legislative, in another, and vice versa. The question here is whether, under our Constitution, it is executive or legislative; and as the Constitution has not confided the appointment of those or of the like officers to the executive authorities, and has left it to the legislative discretion, whether to create such offices, and how they shall be filled, it cannot be truly said that such an appointment is any more in the nature of the exercise of an executive than a legislative power." In harmony with these decisions, see State v. Constantine, 42 Ohio St. 441, 51 Am. Rep. 833; People v. Woodruff, 32 N. Y. 364.

There are decisions to the contrary: Taylor v. Conn., 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 401; State v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 561; Achley's Case, 4 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 35; State v. Noble, 118 Ind. 350, 21 N. E. 244, 4 L. R. A. 101, 10 Am. St. Rep. 143, and other cases from that state. These Indiana cases give the question full discussion, and they appear to be the only well-considered cases in support of their doctrine. Mr. Freeman, in an exhaustive note in 13 Am. St. Rep., on page 125, (People v. Freeman, 80 Cal. 233, 22 Pac. 173, 13 Am. St. Rep. 122) reviews all the authorities upon this subject, and states his conclusion from them in the following language: "The truth is that the power of appointing or electing to office does not necessarily and ordinarily belong to either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department. It is commonly exercised by the people, but the legislature may, as the lawmaking power, when not restrained by the Constitution, provide for its exercise by either department of the government, or by any person or association of persons whom it may choose to designate for that purpose. It is an executive function when the law has committed it to the executive, a legislative function when the law has committed it to the legislative, and a judicial function, or at least a function of a judge, when the law has committed it to any member or members of the judiciary." What he has said meets with our approval. * * *

Judgment affirmed.³

³ The cases upon the subject of the constitutional power of courts to appoint nonjudicial officers are collected in 16 L. R. A. 737, note to State v. George, 22 Or. 142, 29 Pac. 356, 16 L. R. A. 737, 29 Am. St. Rep. 586 (1892), and in 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579, note to State v. Neble, 52 Neb. 267, 117 N. W. 723 (1908). Most of them uphold the power. The federal Constitution expressly permits it. Article II, § 2, par. 2. In Massachusetts it is not allowed, unless the appointees must report to the court. Case of Supervisors of Elec-

PEOPLE ex rel. McDONALD v. KEELER.

(Court of Appeals of New York, 1885. 99 N. Y. 463, 2 N. E. 615, 52 Am. Rep. 49.)

[Appeal from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court. Certain charges of misconduct in office having been made against one Thompson, the commissioner of public works in New York City, the state senate by resolution directed a committee of its members to make an investigation of the matter, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report the result, with recommendations, to the senate. McDonald, having been summoned before such committee, attended as a witness, declined upon advice of counsel to answer certain questions, and finally withdrew without the consent of the committee because the latter refused to permit the further presence of McDonald's counsel. Under a warrant from the senate, its sergeant at arms arrested McDonald for contempt, and, after a hearing in which McDonald adhered to his position, the senate directed his commitment to jail until he should consent to testify or the legislature should adjourn. McDonald petitioned the local County Court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was dismissed. On appeal to the General Term this order was reversed and McDonald discharged. This appeal was from that order.]

RAPALLO, J. * * * [After stating the cases of Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. Ed. 242, and Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. Ed. 377, both involving the power of Congress to punish non-members for contempt, and after citing Stockdale v. Hansard, 9 Ad. & El. 1, Kielly v. Carson, 4 Moore, P. C. 63. and Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray (Mass.) 226, 74 Am. Dec. 676:]

In Kilbourn v. Thompson * * * it was * * * held, following a course of reasoning which need not be repeated here, that the right of the house of representatives to punish a citizen for a contempt of its authority derived no support from the precedents and practice of the two houses of the English parliament, nor from the adjudged cases in which the English courts have upheld those practices; that the powers of congress were derived solely from the federal Constitution, and that such as were not conferred by that instrument, either expressly or by fair implication, were reserved to the states respectively, or to the people; and that while the house had power to punish contempts by fine and imprisonment in certain cases, it had no general jurisdiction on the subject, but was confined to those cases where the power was expressly conferred by the Constitution, or was necessary to enable the house to exercise its lawful functions. Express tion, 114 Mass. 247, 19 Am. Rep. 341 (1873). In 13 Am. St. Rep. 125 ff., many cases are collected discussing the power of appointment as between the legislature and the executive. See, also, F. R. Mechem in 1 Mich. L. Rev. 531.

power is given by the Constitution to each house to punish its members for disorderly behavior, and to compel the attendance of absent members, under such penalties as the house may prescribe, and the opinion concedes that among the incidental and implied powers of congress may be that of compelling the attendance of witnesses and punishing contumacious witnesses in the same manner as could be done by a court of justice in dealing with cases which congress is empowered to decide; such as the election and qualification of its members, the trial of a contested election, and proceedings in the house to impeach officers of the government. Whether their power over recusant witnesses extends beyond those cases, the court, in reviewing the case of Anderson v. Dunn, expressly declines to decide; but the court does emphatically declare that whether the power of punishment in either house by fine or imprisonment goes beyond the specified cases or not, no person can be punished for contumacy as a witness before either house unless his testimony is required in a matter into which the house has jurisdiction to inquire, and that neither of those bodies possesses the general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen. To the like effect is the opinion of the supreme court of Massachusetts in the case of Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray, 226, 74 Am. Dec. 676: "The house of representatives has the power, under the Constitution, to imprison for contempt; but the power is limited to cases expressly provided for by the Constitution, or to cases where the power is necessarily implied from those constitutional functions and duties to the proper performance of which it is essential."

It must be borne in mind that the cases cited did not arise under any act of congress authorizing either house to punish contumacious witnesses, for there is no such act. The question was whether a general power to punish contempts was inherent in congress as necessary to the exercise of its functions independent of any statute. That such a power could be exercised to compel the attendance of witnesses in certain cases was conceded. Whether it existed in cases of investigations properly instituted for purposes of legislation was left an open question. So far as the statutes of the United States were concerned, a different course of proceeding was prescribed. The act of January 24, 1857, c. 19, 11 Stat. 155 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 55) provided that any person summoned as a witness before either house, or a committee thereof, and refusing to appear or to answer any question pertinent to the matter in consideration, should, in addition to the pains and penalties then existing, be liable to indictment and punishment as for a misdemeanor; and it was made the duty of the president of the senate to certify the fact to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, who was required to lay the matter before the grand jury. This act was incorporated with modifications in the Revised Statutes of the United States, §§ 102-104 (U. S. Comp. St.

1901, p. 55). The other pains and penalties alluded to must have had reference to the supposed power to punish for contempt. But if, as contended, no such power can be exercised by congress under the limited authority delegated to it by the Constitution, the power could not be created and conferred by any act of congress.¹

The case now before us is entirely different. It arises under a statute enacted by the legislature of the state of New York. The inquiry is, not whether the power to enact such a law is to be found in the state Constitution, but whether such legislation is prohibited or restrained by that instrument, or by the Constitution of the United States. Except as thus limited the state legislature possessed the whole legislative power of the state. Bank of Chenango v. Brown, 26 N. Y. 469; People v. Dayton, 55 N. Y. 380.

The only express provision of the Constitution which is claimed to be violated is that which declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. If the statute in question was within the power of the legislature to enact, the proceedings against the relator were due process of law. He was imprisoned by virtue of a pre-existing law, informed of the charge made against him, and was heard in person and by counsel in his defense. The proceedings need not be according to the course of the common law. Happy v. Mosher, 48 N. Y. 313; People v. Supervisors, 70 N. Y. 228. And we necessarily come back to the question whether the legislature had the power to enact the law. But the main ground upon which the statute is assailed is that it confers upon each of the two houses a power, which is in its nature judicial, to hear, adjudge, and condemn; that no such power can be conferred by statute upon the legislature itself, or either branch thereof; that the Constitution gives the senate and assembly only legislative power, and that judicial power is vested in the courts named in the Constitution, and in such inferior courts as may be created, and that the grant of judicial power to the courts is an implied prohibition of its assumption by the legislature, except as authorized by the Constitution.

The Constitution of the United States declares in terms that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time order and establish. Although no similar declaration is contained in the Constitution of this state, still it is a recognized principle that in the division of power among the great departments of government the judicial power has been committed to the judiciary, as the executive power has been committed to the executive department, and the legislative to the legislature, and that body has no power to assume the functions of the judiciary to determine controversies among citizens, or even to expound its own laws so as to control the decisions of the courts in respect to past transactions. People v. Supervisors, 16 N. Y. 432. To declare what the law shall be, is a legislative power; to declare what it is or has been, is judicial. Thompson, J., in Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 498, 5 Am. Dec. 291. But, notwithstanding this general division of powers, certain powers in their nature judicial are, by the express terms of the Constitution, vested in the legislature. The power of impeachment is vested in the assembly. Each house is made the judge of the qualification and election of its own members. The power of removal of certain judicial officers for cause is given by the Constitution to the senate and assembly, and may involve inquiries judicial in their nature, and by statute certain other officers may be removed by the senate on the recommendation of the governor. 1 Rev. St. 123, § 41. I think it would be going too far to say that every statute is necessarily void which involves action on the part of either house partaking in any degree of a judicial character, if not expressly authorized by the Constitution. Where the statute relates to the proceedings of the legislative body itself, and is necessary or appropriate to enable it to perform its constitutional functions, I cannot regard it as such an invasion of the province of the judiciary as should bring it within any implied prohibition of the state Constitution. That instrument contains no express provision declaring any of the privileges of the members of either house, except that for any speech or debate in either house the members shall not be questioned in any other place. Even the privilege of exemption from arrest during the sessions is not declared. No power to keep order, or to punish members or others for disorderly conduct, or to expel a member, is contained in the state Constitution, as it is in the Constitution of the United States. All these matters are in this state left under the regulations of the statutes, and there is not even express authority to enact such statutes. 1 Rev. St. c. 7, tit. 2. The necessity of the powers mentioned is apparent, and is conceded in all the authorities, (see Cooley, Const. Lim. 133;) yet it is equally apparent that statutes upon the subject must authorize some action partaking of a judicial character. If that feature is a fatal objection, it annuls all the statutory provisions in which it appears.

¹ Held constitutional in In re Chapman, 106 U. S. 661, 17 Sup. Ct. 677, 41 L. Ed. 1154 (1897).

The power of obtaining information for the purpose of framing laws to meet supposed or apprehended evils is one which has, from time immemorial, been deemed necessary, and has been exercised by legislative bodies. In this state it does not rest upon precedent merely, but is expressly conferred by statute, (1 Rev. St. 158, §§ 1, 2,) which provides that every chairman of a committee, either of the senate or assembly, or of any joint committee, is authorized to administer oaths to witnesses; and when the committee is, by the terms of the resolution appointing it, authorized to send for persons and papers, the chairman has power, under the direction of the committee, to issue compulsory process for the attendance of any witness within the state whom the committee may wish to examine, and to issue commissions for the examination of witnesses out of the state. To subject a witness to punishment as for a contempt, the testimony sought must, as has already been shown, relate to a legislative proceeding. 1 Rev. St. 154, § 13, subd. 4.

It is difficult to conceive any constitutional objection which can be raised to the provision authorizing legislative committees to take testimony and to summon witnesses. In many cases it may be indispensable to intelligent and effectual legislation to ascertain the facts which are claimed to give rise to the necessity for such legislation, and the remedy required; and irrespective of the question whether, in the absence of a statute to that effect, either house would have the power to imprison a recusant witness, I cannot yield to the claim that a statute authorizing it to enforce its process in that manner is in excess of the legislative power. To await the slow process of indictment and prosecution for a misdemeanor might prove quite ineffectual, and necessary legislation might be obstructed and perhaps defeated if the legislative body had no other and more summary means of enforcing its right to obtain the required information. That the power may be abused is no ground for denying its existence. It is a limited power, and should be kept within its proper bounds; and when these are exceeded a jurisdictional question is presented which is cognizable in the courts. My conclusion is that subdivision 4, § 13, 1 Rev. St., is constitutional and valid. These views are supported by the decision of this court in Wilckens v. Willet, 40* N. Y. 521-525, where it was held that the house of representatives of the United States had the power to compel the attendance of witnesses. In that case this court said, per Johnson, J.: "That the power exists there admits of no doubt whatever. It is a necessary incident to the sovereign power of making laws, and its exercise is often indispensable to the great end of enlightened, judicious, and wholesome legislation. The power is rather judicial in its nature, but in a legislative body it exists as an auxiliary to the legislative power only." And further, at page 526: "The power to punish for disobedience and contempt in refusing to attend is a necessary incident to the power to require and compel attendance." S. C. 4 Abb. Dec. 596; Wickelhausen v. Willett, 10 Abb. Prac. 164; Id., 12 Abb. Prac. 319. * * *

Throughout this Union the practice of legislative bodies, and in this state the statutes existing at the time the present Constitution was adopted, and whose validity has never before been questioned by our courts, afford strong arguments in favor of the recognition of the right of either house to compel the attendance of witnesses for legislative purposes as one which has been generally conceded to be an appropriate adjunct to the power of legislation, and one which, to say the least, the state legislature has constitutional authority to regulate and enforce by statute. * * *

[It was held that McDonald, as a mere witness, was not entitled to be attended by counsel.]

We are finally brought to the consideration of the important and more doubtful question whether the investigation which the committee was conducting was a legislative proceeding which the house was authorized to institute. This is a jurisdictional question; for the statute applies only to such proceedings; and if the house had any authority independently of the statute, that must depend upon the question whether the testimony was sought for the purpose of aiding it in the performance of any of its constitutional functions. An investigation instituted for the mere sake of investigation, or for political purposes not connected with intended legislation, or with any of the other matters upon which the house could act, but merely intended to subject a party or body investigated to public animadversion, or to vindicate him or it from unjust aspersions, where the legislature had no power to put him or it on trial for the supposed offenses, and no legislation was contemplated, but the proceeding must necessarily end with the investigation, would not, in our judgment, be a legislative proceeding, or give to either house jurisdiction to compel the attendance of witnesses, or punish them for refusing to attend. Where public institutions under the control of the state are ordered to be investigated, it is generally with the view of some legislative action respecting them; and the same may be said in respect to public officers.² * * *

[It was held that this investigation appeared to be made with a view to possible legislative action to prevent the recurrence of any misconduct that might be found to exist.]

Order of General Term reversed and original order restored.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION v. BRIMSON.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1894. 154 U. S. 447, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047.)

[Appeal from the federal Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois. Section 12 of the federal Interstate Commerce Act, conferring upon a Commission certain powers to regulate interstate commerce, authorized the Commission to inquire into the management of the business of interstate carriers, and to require by subpoena the testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers relating to any matter under investigation. In case of disobedience to a subpoena the Commission might invoke the aid of any federal court, which might then issue an order requiring such subpoena to be obeyed, and might punish failure to obey this order as a contempt. Defendant Brimson and others disobeyed subpoenas of the Commission, which then petitioned the proper federal court for an order requiring defendants to appear, testify, and produce documents. The Circuit Court held section 12 unconstitutional and denied the petition.]

² See the opinions in Colonial Sugar Co. v. Atty. Gen., 15 Com. L. Rep. 182 (Australia, 1912), by a divided court, as to the power of the federal government to compel persons to give information to the government in respect to matters not within the scope of governmental action except by amendment of the Constitution.

HARLAN, J. * * * Is the twelfth section of the act unconstitutional and void, so far as it authorizes or requires the Circuit Courts of the United States to use their process in aid of inquiries before the Commission? The court recognizes the importance of this question, and has bestowed upon it the most careful consideration.

As the Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States to all cases in law and equity arising under that instrument or under the laws of the United States, as well as to all controversies to which the United States shall be a party (article 3, § 2), and as the Circuit Courts of the United States are capable, under the statutes defining and regulating their jurisdiction, of exerting such power in cases or controversies of that character, within the limits prescribed by congress (Act Aug. 13, 1888, 25 Stat. 434, c. 866), the fundamental inquiry on this appeal is whether the present proceeding is a "case" or "controversy," within the meaning of the Constitution. The Circuit Court, as we have seen, regarded the petition of the Interstate Commerce Commission as nothing more than an application by an administrative body to a judicial tribunal for the exercise of its functions in aid of the execution of duties not of a judicial nature, and accordingly adjudged that this proceeding did not constitute a case or controversy to which the judicial power of the United States could be extended.

At the same time the learned court said: "Undoubtedly, congress may confer upon a nonjudicial body authority to obtain information necessary for legitimate governmental purposes, and make refusal to appear and testify before it touching matters pertinent to any authorized inquiry an offense punishable by the courts, subject, however, to the privilege of witnesses to make no disclosures which might tend to criminate them or subject them to penalties or forfeitures. A prosecution or an action for violation of such a statute would clearly be an original suit or controversy between parties, within the meaning of the Constitution, and not a mere application, like the present one, for the exercise of the judicial power in aid of a nonjudicial body." In re Interstate Commerce Commission (C.C.) 53 Fed. 476, 480.

In other words, if the Interstate Commerce Act made the refusal of a witness duly summoned to appear and testify before the Commission, in respect to a matter rightfully committed by congress to that body for examination, an offense against the United States, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, a criminal prosecution or an information for the violation of such a statute would be a case or controversy to which the judicial power of the United States extended; while a direct civil proceeding, expressly authorized by an act of congress, in the name of the Commission, and under the direction of the attorney general of the United States, against the witness so refusing to testify, to compel him to give evidence before the Commission touching the same matter, would not be a case or controversy of which cognizance could be taken by any court established by congress to receive the judicial power of the United States.

This interpretation of the Constitution would restrict the employment of means to carry into effect powers granted to congress within much narrower limits than, in our judgment, is warranted by that instrument. * * *

What is a case or controversy to which, under the Constitution, the judicial power of the United States extends?¹ Referring to the clause of that instrument which extends the judicial power of the United States to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or that shall be made under their authority, this court, speaking by Chief Justice Marshall, has said: "This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States when any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting on it. That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law. It then becomes a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States." Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 738, 819, 6 L. Ed. 204. And in Den ex dem. Murray v. Improvement Co., 18 How. 272, 284, 15 L. Ed. 372, Mr. Justice Curtis, after observing that congress cannot withdraw from judicial cognizance any matter which, from its nature, is the subject of a suit at the common law, or in equity or admiralty, nor, on the other hand, bring under judicial power a matter which, from its nature, is not a subject for judicial determination, said: "At the same time there are matters involving public rights which may be presented in such form that the judicial power is capable of acting on them, and which are susceptible of judicial determination, but which congress may or may not bring within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, as it may deem proper."² So, in Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 173, 9 Sup. Ct. 566, 32 L. Ed. 895, Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, said that the terms "cases" and "con-

¹ See, also, the discussion in Muskrat v. United States, ante, p. 39.

² In State ex rel. Ellis v. Thorne, 112 Wis. 81, 87, 87 N. W. 797, 799, 55 L. R. A. 956 (1901), it was held that a board of review, exercising judicial powers in the equalization of tax assessments, was not unconstitutional because not a court. Marshall, J., said: "The constitution by no means provides that all authority to act judicially is or shall be vested in some one of the courts therein indicated. The language of the Constitution is: 'The judicial power of this state, both as to matters of law and equity, shall be vested in' the courts mentioned. The term 'matters of law and equity' refers to the administration of the law in actions and proceedings in courts of law and equity,—the exercise of such power in such matters as was exercised troversies," in the Constitution, embraced "the claims or contentions of litigants brought before the courts for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs."

Testing the present proceeding by these principles, we are of opinion that it is one that can properly be brought under judicial cognizance.

We have before us an act of congress authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to summon witnesses, and to require the production of books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to the matter under investigation. The constitutionality of this provision—assuming it to be applicable to a matter that may be legally intrusted to an administrative body for investigation—is, we repeat, not disputed, and is beyond dispute. * * * Whether the Commission is entitled to the evidence it seeks, and whether the refusal of the witness to testify or to produce books, papers, etc., in his possession, is or is not in violation of his duty or in derogation of the rights of the United States, seeking to execute a power expressly granted to congress, are the distinct issues between that body and the witness. They are issues between the United States and those who dispute the validity of an act of congress and seek to obstruct its enforcement; and those issues, made in the form prescribed by the act of congress, are so presented that the judicial power is capable of acting on them. * * *

[Here follows a discussion of Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. 409, 1 L. Ed. 436; United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40, 14 L. Ed. 42; Gordon v. United States, 117 U. S. 697; and In re Sanborn, 148 U. S. 222, 13 Sup. Ct. 577, 37 L. Ed. 429—cases involving questions similar to those considered in Muskrat v. United States, ante, p. 39.]

by such courts at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. As said in Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343, 349, the proper construction of the term 'judicial power in matters of law and equity' is such power as the court, under the English and American systems of jurisprudence, had always exercised in actions at law and in equity. To act judicially, and to act judiciously in a matter at law or in equity,—or, in other words, in actions at law or suits in equity,—are not necessarily the same. Every officer or board that is required, in the administration of the law, to determine whether a duty exists, or determine from facts, by the exercise of judgment, a course of action, within legislative restraints or guides, must necessarily act judicially in a sense. The power often partakes so much of the judicial function that it is spoken of as quasi judicial. Manifestly, an officer or board, or other tribunal other than a court, may act judicially in the sense above mentioned and not do anything falling within the meaning of the term 'judicial power as to matters of law and equity': and so a judicial officer may perform acts officially outside of such matters,—mere ministerial acts."

For the powers of a judicial nature commonly exercised in this country by administrative and executive officers, acting under the usual constitutional provisions creating separate legislative, executive, and judicial departments, see United States v. Ju Toy, post, p. 285, and notes (cases); State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 5 N. E. 228 (1886); State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 400-403, 97 N. E. 602, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694 (1912) (administration of workmen's compensation act).

The views we have expressed in the present case are not inconsistent with anything said or decided in those cases. They do not in any manner infringe upon the salutary doctrine that congress, excluding the special cases provided for in the Constitution,—as, for instance, in section 2 of article 2 of that instrument,—may not impose upon the courts of the United States any duties not strictly judicial. The duties assigned to the Circuit Courts of the United States by the twelfth section of the Interstate Commerce Act are judicial in their nature. The inquiry whether a witness before the Commission is bound to answer a particular question propounded to him, or to produce books, papers, etc., in his possession, and called for by that body, is one that cannot be committed to a subordinate administrative or executive tribunal for final determination. Such a body could not, under our system of government, and consistently with due process of law, be invested with authority to compel obedience to its orders by a judgment of fine or imprisonment. Except in the particular instances enumerated in the Constitution, and considered in Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. Ed. 242, and in Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 190, 26 L. Ed. 377, of the exercise by either house of congress of its right to punish disorderly behavior upon the part of its members, and to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers in election and impeachment cases and in cases that may involve the existence of those bodies, the power to impose fine or imprisonment in order to compel the performance of a legal duty imposed by the United States can only be exerted, under the law of the land, by a competent judicial tribunal having jurisdiction in the premises. See Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 118, 21 Am. Rep. 502, and authorities there cited.

Without the aid of judicial process of some kind, the regulations that congress may establish in respect to interstate commerce cannot be adequately or efficiently enforced. One mode, as already suggested (the validity of which is not questioned), of compelling a witness to testify before the Interstate Commerce Commission to answer questions propounded to him relating to the matter under investigation, and which the law makes it his duty to answer, and to produce books, papers, etc., is to make his refusal to appear and answer, or to produce the documentary evidence called for, an offense against the United States, punishable by fine or imprisonment. A criminal prosecution of the witness under such a statute, it is conceded, would be a case or controversy, within the meaning of the Constitution, of which a court of the United States could take jurisdiction. Another mode would be to proceed by information to recover any penalty imposed by the statute. A proceeding of that character, it is also conceded, would be a case or controversy of which a court of the United States could take cognizance. If, however, congress, in its wisdom, authorizes the Commission to bring before a court of the United States for determination the issues between it and a witness, that mode of enforcing the act of congress, and of compelling the witness to perform his duty, is said not to be judicial, and is beyond the power of congress to prescribe.

We cannot assent to any view of the constitution that concedes the power of congress to accomplish a named result indirectly, by particular forms of judicial procedure, but denies its power to accomplish the same result directly, and by a different proceeding judicial in form. * * *

The present proceeding is not merely ancillary and advisory. It is not, as in Gordon's Case, one in which the United States seeks from the Circuit Court of the United States an opinion that "would remain a dead letter, and without any operation upon the rights of the parties." The proceeding is one for determining rights arising out of specified matters in dispute that concern both the general public and the individual defendants. It is one in which a judgment may be rendered that will be conclusive upon the parties until reversed by this court; and that judgment may be enforced by the process of the Circuit Court. Is it not clear that there are here parties on each side of a dispute involving grave questions of legal rights, that their respective positions are defined by pleadings, and that the customary forms of judicial procedure have been pursued? The performance of the duty which, according to the contention of the government, rests upon the defendants, cannot be directly enforced except by judicial process. One of the functions of a court is to compel a party to perform a duty which the law requires at his hands. If it be adjudged that the defendants are, in law, obliged to do what they have refused to do, that determination will not be merely ancillary and advisory, but, in the words of Sanborn's Case, will be a "final and indisputable basis of action," as between the commission and the defendants, and will furnish a precedent in all similar cases. It will be as much a judgment that may be carried into effect by judicial process as one for money, or for the recovery of property, or a judgment in mandamus commanding the performance of an act or duty which the law requires to be performed, or a judgment prohibiting the doing of something which the law will not sanction. It is none the less the judgment of a judicial tribunal dealing with questions judicial in their nature, and presented in the customary forms of judicial proceedings, because its effect may be to aid an administrative or executive body in the performance of duties legally imposed upon it by congress in execution of a power granted by the constitution. * * *

Judgment reversed.^a

[FULLER, C. J., and BREWER and JACKSON, JJ., dissented. FIELD, J., was absent.]

^a Accord: Matter of Davies, 168 N. Y. 89, 61 N. E. 118, 56 L. R. A. 855 (1901) (proceeding by attorney general to obtain evidence to enable him to proceed against combinations violating anti-monopoly laws of New York).

See the discussion of the meaning of "judicial power" under the Australian Constitution, in Huddart & Co. v. Moorehead, 8 Com. L. Rep. 330, 355 ff., 381 ff.

CARTER v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, 1899. 96 Va. 791, 32 S. E. 780, 45 L. R. A. 310.)

[Error to the Circuit Court of Lynchburg. Carter was informed by his attorney that his presence in court was necessary at once in a case in which he was a party. He falsely telegraphed that he was sick and could not come, seeking to obtain a continuance of his case. When ordered to appear before the court to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, Carter made an excuse for his conduct and asked for a jury trial. The court held his excuse insufficient and sentenced him to pay a fine of $25 and be imprisoned for two days, without a jury trial. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

KEITH, P. J. * * * [A Virginia statute of 1830-31 was amended in 1897-98 to read as follows:¹]

The Constitution now in force (article 6, § 1) provides: "There shall be a supreme court of appeals, circuit courts and county courts. The jurisdiction of these tribunals, and of the judges thereof, except so far as the same is conferred by this Constitution, shall be regulated by law." In a subsequent portion of the instrument, corporation courts are also provided for the cities of the state. These courts do not derive their existence from the legislature. They are called into (1909). Isaacs, J., said (pp. 383, 384): "It is I believe correctly stated by Palles, C. B., in The Queen v. Local Government Board (1902) 2 I. R. 349, 373, that 'to erect a tribunal into a "court" or "jurisdiction," so as to make its determinations judicial, the essential element is that it should have power, by its determination within jurisdiction, to impose liability or affect rights.' 'By this,' said the learned Chief Baron, 'I mean that the liability is imposed, or the right affected by the determination only, and not by the fact determined, and so that the liability will exist, or the right will be affected, although the determination be wrong in law or in fact. It is otherwise of a ministerial power. If the existence of such a power depends upon a contingency, although it may be necessary for the officer to determine whether the contingency has happened, in order to know whether he shall exercise the power, his determination does not bind. The happening of the contingency may be questioned in an action brought to try the legality of the act done under the alleged exercise of the power. But where the determination binds, although it is based on an erroneous view of facts or law, then the power authorizing it is judicial.' There we get a modern use of the term 'judicial power.'"

¹ See. 3708. The courts and judges may issue attachments for contempt, and punish them summarily, only in the following cases, which are hereby declared to be direct contempts, all other contempts being indirect contempts.

First. Misbehavior in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice.

Second. Violence or threats of violence to a judge or officer of the court or to a juror, witness or party going to, attending or returning from the court, for or in respect of any act or proceeding had or to be had in such court.

Third. Misbehavior of an officer of the court in his official character.

Fourth. Disobedience or resistance of an officer of the court, juror or witness to any lawful process, judgment, decree or order of the said court.

[If requested by the defendant, provision was made for the trial by jury of indirect contempts.]

being by the Constitution itself, the same authority which creates the legislature and the whole framework of state government.

What was the nature and character of the tribunals thus instituted? Our conception of courts, and of their powers and functions, comes to us through that great system of English jurisprudence known as the "common law," which we have adopted and incorporated into the body of our laws.

That the English courts have exercised the power in question from the remotest period does not admit of doubt. Said Chief Justice Wilmut: "The power which the courts in Westminster Hall have of vindicating their own authority is coeval with their first foundation and institution; it is a necessary incident to every court of justice, whether of record or not, to fine and imprison for a contempt acted in the face of the court; and the issuing of attachments by the supreme court of justice in Westminster Hall for contempts out of court stands on the same immemorial usage which supports the whole fabric of the common law. It is as much the lex terræ, and within the exception of Magna Charta, as the issuing of any other legal process whatsoever. I have examined very carefully to see if I could find out any vestiges of its introduction, but can find none. It is as ancient as any other part of the common law. There is no priority or posteriority to be found about it. It cannot, therefore, be said to invade the common law. It acts in alliance and friendly conjunction with every other provision which the wisdom of our ancestors has established for the general good of society. Truth compels me to say that the mode of proceeding by attachment stands upon the very same foundation as trial by jury. It is a constitutional remedy in particular cases, and the judges in those cases are as much bound to give an activity to this part of the law as to any other." 3 Camp. Lives of Ch. Just. p. 153.

In United States v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32, 3 L. Ed. 259, it was held that "certain implied powers must necessarily result to our courts of justice from the nature of their institution. But jurisdiction of crimes against the state is not among those powers. To fine for contempt, imprison for contumacy, enforce the observance of order, etc., are powers which cannot be dispensed with in a court, because they are necessary to the exercise of all others; and so far our courts no doubt possess powers not immediately derived from statute."

In Wells v. Com., 21 Grat. (62 Va.) 503, it was said: "The power to fine and imprison for contempt is incident to every court of record. The courts, ex necessitate, have the power of protecting the administration of justice, with a promptness calculated to meet the exigency of the particular case."

It is unnecessary, however, to multiply authority upon this point, for we understand it to have been conceded by counsel for plaintiff in error that the power to punish contempts is inherent in all courts; but the contention is that it may be regulated by legislative action, and we are prepared to concede that it is proper for the legislature to regulate the exercise of the power so long as it confines itself within limits consistent with the preservation of the authority of courts to enforce such respect and obedience as is necessary to their vigor and efficiency. * * *

It was contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that, inasmuch as the act of 1897-98 merely transferred the punishment of contempts from the court to a jury, and even made acts punishable as contempts not embraced within the act of 1830-31, that it was not obnoxious to the objection that it interfered with or diminished the power of the court to protect itself.

To this view we cannot assent. It is not a question of the degree or extent of the punishment inflicted. It may be that juries would punish a given offense with more severity than the court; but yet the jury is a tribunal separate and distinct from the court. The power to punish for contempts is inherent in the courts, and is conferred upon them by the Constitution by the very act of their creation. It is a trust confided and a duty imposed upon us by the sovereign people, which we cannot surrender or suffer to be impaired without being recreant to our duty.

Upon the point made by counsel for plaintiff in error, that the offense under consideration, if not embraced within the category of direct contempts by the act of 1897-93, neither was it by that of 1830-31, we cannot do better than to quote the language of the supreme court of Arkansas, in State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. at page 390:

"The legislature may regulate the exercise of, but cannot abridge, the express or necessarily implied powers granted to this court by the Constitution. If it could, it might encroach upon both the judicial and executive departments, and draw to itself all the powers of government, and thereby destroy that admirable system of checks and balances to be found in the organic framework of both the federal and state institutions, and a favorite theory in the government of the American people.

"As far as the act in question goes, in sanctioning the power of the courts to punish, as contempts, the 'acts' therein enumerated, it is merely declaratory of what the law was before its passage. The prohibitory feature of the act can be regarded as nothing more than the expression of a judicial opinion by the legislature that the courts may exercise and enforce all their constitutional powers, and answer all the useful purposes of their creation, without the necessity of punishing as a contempt any matter not enumerated in the act. As such, it is entitled to great respect; but to say that it is absolutely binding upon the courts would be to concede that the courts have no constitutional and inherent power to punish any class of contempts, but that the whole subject is under the control of the legislative department, because, if the general assembly may deprive the courts of power to punish one class of contempts, it may go the whole length, and divest them of power to punish any contempt."

Reliance was placed by counsel for plaintiff in error upon a class of cases of which Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. Ed. 205, may be considered typical. In that case Robinson had in the most summary manner, without the opportunity of defense, been stricken from the roll of attorneys by the district court for the Western district of Arkansas. He applied to the supreme court for a mandamus, which is the appropriate remedy to restore an attorney who has been disbarred, and that court held, Mr. Justice Field delivering the opinion, that: "The power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts. Its existence is essential to the preservation of order in judicial proceedings, and to the enforcement of the judgments, orders, and writs of the courts, and consequently to the due administration of justice. The moment the courts of the United States were called into existence, and invested with jurisdiction over any subject, they became possessed of this power. But the power has been limited and defined by the act of congress of March 2, 1831," and the court declared that there could be no question as to its application to the circuit and district courts. "These courts were created by act of congress. Their powers and duties depend upon the act falling them into existence, or subsequent acts extending or limiting their jurisdiction. The act of 1831 is, therefore, to them the law specifying the cases in which summary punishment for contempts may be inflicted."

Turning to the Constitution of the United States, we find that it (article 3, § 1) declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." This language is the equivalent of that found in our Constitutions prior to that of 1851, hereinbefore quoted. The inferior federal courts and their jurisdiction are the creatures of congress, and not of the Constitution. * * *

[Here it is remarked that the federal statute of 1831 is so comprehensive as completely to protect the courts, and that their power to punish in the enumerated cases is unlimited.]

The enumeration of subjects punishable as direct contempts in the act under consideration seems to embrace almost every conceivable form of that offense which can occur in the presence of, or in proximity to, the court; that is to say, under circumstances likely to arouse the passion or prejudice of the judge, and disturb that equanimity essential to calm and wise judicial action. The court may punish summarily not only all such offenses, but for disobedience or resistance to any lawful process, judgment, decree, or order; its officers, jurors, and witnesses may also thus be punished; and only the parties to the suit are entitled to a trial by jury. Thus we see that offenses of a nature personal to the court are to be punished by the court, while those which interest suitors are punishable only by a jury. So that suitors, having obtained a judgment or decree, after long and expensive litigation, find the court powerless to secure to them its fruition and enjoyment, and, unless their antagonist chance to be a law-abiding citizen, discover that their success has only begotten another controversy. Ours is a law-abiding community, and good citizens will, without compulsion, respect the lawful orders of their courts; but in every society there are those who obey the laws only because there is behind them a force they dare not resist. Is it wise or beneficent legislation which accepts the obedience of the good citizen, but is powerless to enforce the law against the recalcitrant? Under this law, the authority of the courts would be reduced to a mere "power of contention." * * *

Reading the Constitution of the state in the light of the decisions of eminent courts which we have consulted, we feel warranted in the following conclusions:

That in the courts created by the Constitution there is an inherent power of self-defense and self-preservation; that this power may be regulated, but cannot be destroyed, or so far diminished as to be rendered ineffectual by legislative enactment; that it is a power necessarily resident in, and to be exercised by, the court itself, and that the vice of an act which seeks to deprive the court of this inherent power is not cured by providing for its exercise by a jury; that, while the legislature has the power to regulate the jurisdiction of circuit, county, and corporation courts, it cannot destroy, while it may confine within reasonable bounds, the authority necessary to the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred. * * *

We cannot more properly conclude this opinion than by a quotation from a great English judge: "It is a rule founded on the reason of the common law that all contempts to the process of the court, to its judges, jurors, officers, and ministers, when acting in the due discharge of their respective duties, whether such contempts be by direct obstruction, or consequentially,—that is to say, whether they be by act or writing,—are punishable by the court itself, and may be abated instantaneus as nuisances to public justice. There are those who object to attachments as being contrary, in popular constitutions, to first principles. To this it may briefly be replied that they are the first principles, being founded on that which founds government and constitutes law. They are the principles of self-defense,—the vindication, not only of the authority, but of the very power of acting in court. It is in vain that the law has the right to act, if there be a power above the law which has a right to resist. The law would then be but the right of anarchy and the power of contention." Holt, on Libel, c. 9. * * *

Judgment affirmed.²

² See cases collected in 36 L. R. A. 251 ff., note to Hale v. State, 55 Ohio St. 210, 45 N. E. 199, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691 (1896), most of which sustain the principal case. In several cases the legislature is conceded larger powers over contempts in courts created by it than in courts created by a Constitution. As to the legislative power over "constructive" contempt, see State ex inf.

APPEAL OF NORWALK ST. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, 1897. 69 Conn. 576, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708, 39 L. R. A. 794.)

[Appeal from the decision of Judge Hall of the Superior Court. The railway company, acting under the statute mentioned in the opinion below, asked the city of Norwalk to approve a certain plan for double-tracking part of its line. The city council did not notify the company of its decision within 60 days, and thereupon the company made application to the Superior Court. From a judgment there for the company the city appealed. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

HAMERSLEY, J. The act of 1893 confers upon city councils certain powers in establishing regulations for the location, construction, and operation of street railways, and requires a council, if requested by a railway company, to take some action within 60 days, and to notify the company in writing of its action. Whenever a council fails to give such written notice, the act of 1895 confers the same powers upon the "superior court or any judge thereof," to be exercised on application of a railway company, and calls this application an "ap-

Crow v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624 (1903), criticised in Thomas, Constructive Contempt (1904); 50 Am. St. Rep. 572 ff., note; and 99 Am. St. Rep. 675 (cases).

"The power of a court to make an order carries with it the equal power to punish for a disobedience of that order, and the inquiry as to the question of disobedience has been, from time immemorial, the special function of the court. And this is no technical rule. In order that a court may compel obedience to its orders, it must have the right to inquire whether there has been any disobedience thereof. To submit the question of disobedience to another tribunal, be it a jury or another court, would operate to deprive the proceeding of half its efficiency."—Brewer, J., in In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 594, 595, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 910, 39 L. Ed. 1092 (1895).

In Wisconsin and Michigan it has been held that the legislature cannot transfer from a court to a jury the right to determine the facts in equity cases. Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343 (1868); Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274, 42 N. W. 827, 5 L. R. A. 226, 13 Am. St. Rep. 438 (1889) (though Constitution directed such abolition as practicable of procedural distinctions between law and equity).

CONTROL OF INCIDENTS OF JUDICIAL FUNCTION.—There are many decisions holding that the courts cannot be deprived of the power to control their proceedings, methods of work, officers and attendants, surroundings, and other incidents necessary to the unfettered discharge of their judicial duties. State ex rel. Hovey v. Noble, 118 Ind. 350, 21 N. E. 244, 4 L. R. A. 101, 10 Am. St. Rep. 143 (1889) (choice of judicial assistants); Witter v. Cook County Com'rs, 256 Ill. 616, 100 N. E. 148 (1912) (juvenile court probation officers); Ex parte Griffiths, 118 Ind. 83, 20 N. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. 398, 10 Am. St. Rep. 107 (1889) (not compellable to write headnotes); In re Headnotes, 43 Mich. 641, 8 N. W. 552 (1881) (same); Vaughn v. Harp, 49 Ark. 160, 4 S. W. 751 (1887) (nor to give written opinions); Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565 (1859) (same); In re Janitor of Supreme Court, 35 Wis. 410 (1874) (choice of janitor); State ex rel. Howard v. Smith, 15 Mo. App. 412 (1884) (same); Board of Com'rs of White County v. Gwin, 136 Ind. 562, 36 N. E. 237, 22 L. R. A. 402 (1894) (prepairs to court room); Board of Com'rs of Vigo County v. Stout, 136 Ind. 53, 35 N. E. 683, 22 L. R. A. 398 (1893) (control of court peal." The power so conferred on the court is described in the act of 1893 as the power to approve and adopt a location and lay-out of a street railway, with such modifications therein as shall seem proper, in respect to the streets to be occupied, the location of the same as to grade and to the center line of the streets, and changes to be made in the street, the kind and quality of the track to be used, the motive power to be used, and the method of applying the same. Can such powers be conferred on the superior court? The limitation of their exercise to cases where there has been a prior failure of a municipal board to act cannot affect the principle involved. If the legislature can confer the power in a limited class of cases by calling an original application for its exercise an "appeal," it can confer the power in all cases without limitation. * * *

The power which Judge Hall was asked to exercise in the present case does not seem to us to be a judicial power, within the meaning of our Constitution. It is claimed that the difficulty of defining the powers of government renders impracticable the enforcement by this court of their division, and so makes nugatory the most important command of the Constitution. * * * But the difficulty now alleged is more apparent than substantial. * * * One controlling consideration in deciding whether a particular act oversteps the limits of judicial power is the necessary inconsistency of such acts with the independence of the judicial department, and the preservation house elevator); Dahnke v. People, 168 Ill. 102, 48 N. E. 137, 39 L. R. A. 197 (1897) (assignment of rooms); Belvin v. City of Richmond, 85 Va. 574, 8 S. E. 378, 1 L. R. A. 807 (1888) (control of noisy street near court); Ex parte City of Birmingham, 134 Ala. 609, 33 South. 13, 59 L. R. A. 572 (1902) (same).

May a court, whose jurisdiction is subject to legislative control, be deprived of the power to pass upon the constitutionality of a statute which it is otherwise empowered to consider and enforce? See J. W. Bryan in 41 Am. L. Rev. 834-43; A. W. Richter in 21 Jour. of Pol. Econ. 281.

JUDICIAL CONTROL OF ADMISSION TO BAR.—The power of the legislature to compel the admission to the bar of persons who have not complied with requirements exacted by the courts is more frequently denied than affirmed. In denial: In re Day, 181 Ill. 73, 54 N. E. 646, 50 L. R. A. 519 (1899) (cases); Splane's Petition, 123 Pa. 527, 16 Atl. 481 (1889). In affirmation: In re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67 (1860); In re Applicants for License, 143 N. C. 1, 55 N. E. 635, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 10 Ann. Cas. 187 (1906) (legislature required admission of persons of bad character) (cases). The legislative power is admitted to exclude from the bar persons not complying with reasonable requirements. In re Day, above, 181 Ill. 94, 95, 54 N. E. 646, 50 L. R. A. 519. See, as to the effect of constitutional provisions in Indiana, In re Leach, 134 Ind. 665, 34 N. E. 641, 21 L. R. A. 701 (1893).

LEGISLATIVE REGULATION OF EXECUTIVE PARDONING POWER.—Most of our Constitutions lodge the general pardoning power with the executive. For the extent to which this is subject to legislative regulation through boards or otherwise, see People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 310, 14 L. R. A. 285 (1891); In re Conditional Discharge of Convicts, 73 Vt. 414, 51 Atl. 10, 56 L. R. A. 658 (1901); Fite v. State, 114 Tenn. 646, 88 S. W. 941, 4 Ann. Cas. 1108 (1905), annotated in 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520; Ex parte Ridley, 3 Okl. Cr. 350, 106 Pac. 549, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110 (1910). As to the judicial power to suspend sentence after conviction, see People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions of Monroe County, 141 N. Y. 288, 36 N. E. 386, 23 L. R. A. 856 (1894), and 14 L. R. A. 285, note.

of its sphere of action distinct from that of the legislative and executive departments. A main purpose of the division of powers between legislature and judicature is to prevent the same magistracy from exercising in respect to the same subject the functions of judge and legislator. This union of functions is a menace to civil liberty, and is forbidden by the Constitution. There is no intrinsic difficulty in recognizing a plain infraction of such prohibition. It is true that the different magistracies must act upon the same subjects, for every matter that may be dealt with by the state government may be acted on by each department thereof; but the action must be that belonging to the department whose powers are invoked.

The main difficulties suggested in argument result from a failure to distinguish between the exercise of a legitimate power and the employment of necessary means for exercising that power. The grant of the powers embraced in one of the great departments of government carries with it the right to use means appropriate to the exercise of that power. Any attempt to cripple the power through metaphysical classification of the means essential to its exercise must produce difficulties, if not absurdities. For example, the power to make laws may require the accurate ascertainment of facts. For this purpose, witnesses must be summoned, examined, and conclusions drawn from their conflicting testimony. This is a means peculiarly appropriate to the judicial power and the ordinary mark of an exercise of that power; yet, when so employed by the legislature (without violation of other constitutional provisions), it is a means within the limits of legislative power. But should the legislature, after the passage of an act, attempt, by another act, to adjudicate the rights of parties which have arisen under its provisions, such act, although only means appropriate to legislation might be employed, would be an exercise of judicial, and not of legislative, power. It would be void, because it involves the union, in the same magistracy, in respect to the same matter, of the functions of judge and legislator. Again, there are certain necessary executive acts which cannot be performed without the power of enforcing immediate obedience to an order authorized by law. The employment of legal restraint for the purpose of securing the essential immediate obedience is a means peculiarly appropriate to the exercise of judicial power; but for such purpose, and subject to the restrictions of other provisions of the Constitution, it is a means within the limits of the executive power. In re Application of Clark, 65 Conn. 17, 31 Atl. 522, 28 L. R. A. 242; Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372. So, means of a legislative nature must be used by courts in establishing necessary rules of practice, and by executive officers in making regulations for the conduct of subordinates. Again, appointment to office is in the nature of an executive act. Apart from the purpose of the appointment, it is an exercise of executive power. Our own Constitution, like most constitutions, provides for certain elective and legislative appointments; but, except in the cases specified, appointment to office is an exercise of executive power, unless used as a means appropriate to the exercise of powers granted to another department, and, when so used, it is not the exercise of executive power, within the meaning of the Constitution. * * *

Under our state Constitution, appointments other than those whose mode is prescribed are governed by the division of governmental powers. This question has never come before us directly. It was incidentally considered in some recent cases in connection with the law allowing an appeal from the action of county commissioners in granting licenses. In Smith's Appeal, 65 Conn. 135, 31 Atl. 529, we held that the statute required the county commissioners to select, as the recipient of a license, one having "a personal fitness to perform the quasi public duties required by law of a licensee"; i. e. one who is shown to be suited or adapted to the orderly conduct of a business which the law regards as dangerous to public welfare, unless conducted by a carefully selected person duly licensed, whose fitness to the legal requirements must be determined in view of the statutory regulations. In Hopson's Appeal, 65 Conn. 140, 31 Atl. 531, we held that the selection or appointment of such a licensee was a means apparently appropriate both to the exercise of executive and judicial power, [and] that the uniform practice of courts and legislature in so treating such appointment might be safely accepted when the distinction to be drawn must be subtle and doubtful.¹ * * *

¹ Regarding the power to grant licenses to sell liquor, it was said in this case by Hamersley, J. (65 Conn. pp. 145-147, 31 Atl. 532): "The subject-matter of jurisdiction is the selection, under statutory limitations, of a person suited to perform his part in carrying out a system of police regulation. The essential function of the selecting tribunal is the giving effect to a police regulation incidentally involving private rights or interests. It is evident that such a function cannot be executed without the use of means that are in their nature, independently of the purpose of their use, executive as well as judicial. We think such a function lies on the border line of the division between executive and judicial power, and that it is competent for the legislature to commit its exercise either to judicial or executive officers, as may be found necessary for the most efficient enforcement of its police regulations. * * * The granting of a license is not so exclusively an executive function that the legislature has no power to confide it to a court, but it is nevertheless very clear that the function is different from that of settling disputed rights in the ordinary course of a judicial trial. The technical rules which bind a court in such a trial have been developed by the exigencies of judicial combats, where each party is entitled, ex debito iustitie, to have a judgment, in case he maintains the facts alleged by testimony that must be received or rejected, and weighed, in strict compliance with the rules established for the conduct of such combats. But the exercise of the judicial function involved in the proceeding in question calls for no such trial. The judge does not preside over a judicial combat, as in the trial of a civil action. He receives aid in the formation of his personal judgment. The parties before him may properly attempt to influence that judgment, but it must be reached by the judge, not in subordination to the particular interests of these parties, but in the interests of the public, in whose behalf an appeal to such exercise of the judicial power is allowed. In reaching his conclusion, as well as in directing the production of evidence to aid him in reaching that conclusion, he acts in the exercise of a judicial discretion, which is not the

The meaning of the act of 1893, relating to street railways, is uncertain in several particulars; but there can be no doubt that it confers on municipal authorities, in addition to certain executive powers, the power of establishing regulations and conditions (within the limitations prescribed) which shall control all the street railways in the state, in the location, construction, and operation of railways. There can be no doubt that making such regulations is essentially and distinctively a legislative function. It is also certain that the judicial power does not include the exercise of such a legislative function, and that the duty of making such regulations cannot be imposed upon the superior court, because it involves the exercise of legislative power by the court, and because a power in the legislature to impose such duties is inconsistent with the existence of an independent and separate judicial department of government. The power to make the superior court a subordinate legislative body for one purpose involves the power to so utilize it for every purpose. * * * We have assumed, as was assumed in argument, that the act of 1895 purports to confer the powers in question upon a judge, in his exercise of the judicial power vested in the superior court, and does not purport to appoint, for the exercise of the powers, an executive officer, designated by an official title, instead of by name. If the latter were true, the judge would be at liberty to accept or decline the appointment, and this court would have no jurisdiction to review his action. * * *

Judgment reversed.²

[BALDWIN, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

subject of review, and which is essential, for certain purposes, to the exercise of judicial power. The discretion should be exercised in accordance with the appropriate analogies of the rules governing judicial trials; but, in the nature of things, the court cannot be bound in the particular application of such analogies as it is bound in the application of the strict rules of law in a judicial trial. The instances of the exercise of such discretion by courts, both in reaching a result and in the methods by which the needed information is obtained, are familiar."

This view is generally held, even where a wide discretion is given to act in the public interest. Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751, 37 Am. Rep. 284 (1881); Pierce v. Commonwealth, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 6 (1873); State ex rel. Kyger v. Holt County Court Justices, 59 Mo. 521 (1867); Attorney General ex rel. Gillaspie v. Justices of Guilford County, 27 N. C. 315 (1814); Petition of Raudenbusch, 120 Pa. 328, 14 Atl. 148 (1888); Thomas' License, 169 Pa. 111, 32 Atl. 100 (1895) (Judge may exercise discretion on his own knowledge and against evidence presented); French v. Noel, 22 Grat. (63 Va.) 454 (1872). Where the court's duty is merely to decide whether an applicant has complied with certain definitely ascertainable conditions, the function is more clearly judicial. McCrea v. Roberts, 89 Md. 238, 43 Atl. 39, 44 L. R. A. 485 (1899).

Contra: Martin v. Symonds, 4 Misc. Rep. 6, 23 N. Y. Supp. 689 (1893); Royal Aquarium Soc. v. Parkinson (1892) 1 Q. B. 431, 443. Compare Appeal of Moynihan, 75 Conn. 358, 53 Atl. 903 (1902).

² Accord: New York & N. J. Tel. Co. v. Borough of Bound Brook, 66 N. J. Law, 168, 48 Atl. 1022 (1901) [see City of Bayonne v. Lord, 61 N. J. Law, 136, 38 Atl. 752 (1897)]. Contra: City of Zanesville v. Zanesville Telegraph & Telephone Co., 64 Ohio St. 67, 59 N. E. 781, 52 L. R. A. 150, 83 Am. St. Rep. 725 (1901) (court authorized to direct how telegraph lines should be constructed in

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY v. MYATT.

(Circuit Court of the United States, District of Kansas, 1899. 98 Fed. 335.)

[Application of complainant for a temporary injunction restraining the Kansas court of visitation from enforcing against complainant certain maximum rates prescribed by it. The facts appear in the opinion.]

Hook, District Judge. The act of the legislature creating the court of visitation and defining its jurisdiction and powers, and the act fixing the maximum rates for telegraphic service, and conferring jurisdiction respecting telegraph companies upon the court of visitation, are parts of the same general body of legislation affecting public service corporations that was enacted at the special session of the Kansas legislature of 1898. * * *

The exercise by the state of the power to regulate the conduct of a business affected with a public interest, and to fix and determine, as a rule for future observance, the rates and charges for services rencity streets, whenever city and company could not agree or city delayed in agreeing).

In Paul v. Gloucester County, 50 N. J. Law, 385, 15 Atl. 272, 1 L. R. A. 86 (1888), it was held that a judge might be authorized by the legislature to determine whether the circumstances had arisen upon the occurrence of which an election was prescribed, and, if so, to appoint a day for the election. Contra: Dickey v. Hurlburt, 5 Cal. 343 (1855); Board of Sup'rs of Election for Wicomico County v. Todd, 97 Md. 247, 54 Atl. 963, 62 L. R. A. 809, 99 Am. St. Rep. 438 (1903).

DETERMINATION OF NEED OF MUNICIPAL INCORPORATION. In State v. Simons, 32 Minn. 540, 542-544, 21 N. W. 750, 751 (1884), Mitchell, J., said (holding invalid a statute authorizing a district court to order a village incorporated upon petition):

"It will be observed that under the provisions of this act the legislature has not, except as to certain preliminaries, determined or defined the facts or things upon the existence of which the territory shall be incorporated as a village. It will also be observed that the duty of the court is not simply to inquire and ascertain whether certain specified facts exist, or whether certain specified conditions have been complied with, but to proceed and determine whether the interests of the inhabitants will be promoted by the incorporation of the village, and, if so, what land ought in justice to be included within its limits. In short, it is left to the court to decide whether public interests will be subserved by creating a municipal corporation, and the determination of this question is left wholly to his views of expediency and public policy. That the determination of such question involves the exercise of purely and exclusively legislative power seems to us too clear to admit of argument. The granting of all charters of incorporation involves the exercise of legislative functions. The proposition (says Dillon) which lies at the foundation of the laws of corporations of the country is that they all, public or private, exist and can exist only by virtue of express legislative enactment creating or authorizing the creation of the corporate body.

"All municipal corporations are mere auxiliaries to the state government in the business of municipal rule. The act of deciding when and under what circumstances the public interests require the creation of these auxiliaries or aids to the state government is one of the highest and most important legislative powers and duties. * * * Had the legislature, by the act in question, fixed and specified all the conditions and facts upon which the incorporation of certain territory should depend, we do not question their right to dered, is wholly a legislative or administrative function. The legislature may, in the first instance, prescribe such regulations, and fix definitely the tariff of rates and charges; or it may lawfully delegate the exercise of such powers, and frequently does, in matters of detail, to some administrative board or body of its own creation. The establishment of warehouse commissions, boards of railroad commissioners, and the powers usually committed to them, are familiar instances of the delegation of such powers. But by whatever name such boards or bodies may be called, or by what authority they may be established or created, or however they may proceed in the performance of their duties, they are, in respect of the exercise of the powers mentioned, engaged in the exercise of legislative or administrative functions as important in their character as any that are committed to the legislative branch of the government on the subject of property and property rights. In prescribing regulations or rules of action under the police power of the state for the safety and convenience of the public, or in determining a schedule of rates and charges for services to be rendered, they are in no sense performing refer to some tribunal or body the question of ascertaining and determining the existence of these facts and conditions. Neither do we decide that they might not delegate certain legislative powers regarding the organization and incorporation of villages to some appropriate municipal body which might constitutionally exercise local legislative powers. * * * But the present act assumes to delegate these legislative powers to the district court,—a tribunal not authorized to exercise them, its jurisdiction under the Constitution being purely judicial.

"Cases may be found where it has been held that powers similar to those conferred by this act were properly delegated to certain so-called courts, but we think it will be found in almost every instance that these courts were not exclusively judicial, but also quasi municipal bodies invested with certain powers of local legislation. Such are the county courts in some states, which take the place of our boards of county commissioners in the municipal government of the county."

Accord: People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 143 (1856); City of Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 152 (1874) [but see People ex rel. Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565, 27 N. E. 217 (1890)]; People ex rel. Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107 (1874); In re Ridgetfield Park, 54 N. J. Law, 288, 23 Atl. 674 (1892); Territory ex rel. Kelly v. Stewart, 1 Wash. 98, 23 Pac. 405, 8 L. R. A. 106 (1890); In re Incorporation of Village of North Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 616, 67 N. W. 1033, 33 L. R. A. 638 (1896) (ceases).

Contra (upholding the statutory power of courts to determine the need for incorporation or the boundaries of proposed municipalities): Forsythe v. City of Hammond (C. C.) 68 Fed. 771 (1895); Forsythe v. City of Hammond, 142 Ind. 505, 40 N. E. 267, 41 N. E. 950, 30 L. R. A. 576 (1895); City of Burlington v. Leebriek, 43 Iowa, 252 (1876); Callen v. City of Junction City, 43 Kan. 627, 23 Pac. 652, 7 L. R. A. 736 (1890); Morton v. Woodford, 99 Ky. 367, 35 S. W. 1112 (1896); Wahoo v. Dickinson, 23 Neb. 426, 36 N. W. 813 (1888); State v. City of Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St. 419, 450-453, 40 N. E. 508, 27 L. R. A. 737 (1895) (semble); In re Prospect Park Borough, 166 Pa. 502, 31 Atl. 254 (1895). So, also, where no discretion is allowed the court, after petitioners have taken certain preliminary steps. People v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 16 Pac. 298 (1887); Ford v. Town of North Des Moines, 80 Iowa, 626, 45 N. W. 1031 (1890); State v. Ueland, 30 Minn. 29, 14 N. W. 58 (1882); Kayser v. Trustees of Bremen, 16 Mo. 88 (1852); Mayor, etc., of City of Morristown v. Shelton, 1 Head (Tenn.) 24 (1858); Elder v. Incorporators of Central City, 40 W. Va. 222, 21 S. E. 735 (1895).

judicial functions, nor are they in any respect judicial tribunals. The distinction between legislative and judicial functions is a vital one, and it is not subject to alteration or change, either by legislative act or by judicial decree, for such distinction inheres in the constitution itself, and is as much a part of it as though it were definitely defined therein. When the legislature has once acted, either by itself or through some supplemental and subordinate board or body, and has prescribed a tariff of rates and charges, then whether its action is violative of some constitutional safeguard or limitation is a judicial question, the determination of which involves the exercise of judicial functions. The question is then beyond the province of legislative jurisdiction.

As applied to this case, the power of the state to fix or limit the charges of telegraph companies for the transmission and delivery of telegraphic messages is a legislative one, but whether the rates so fixed or limited are unreasonable to the extent that the enforcement of their observance would amount to a deprivation of the complainant of its property without due process of law and a denial of the equal protection of the laws, and therefore violative of the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution, is a question for the courts. * * * It follows, therefore, as a corollary of this doctrine, that courts have no power to prescribe a schedule of rates and charges for persons engaged in a public or quasi public service, because that is a legislative prerogative, and that the legislature has no power to forestall the judgment of the courts by declaring that a tariff or schedule prescribed by it is a finality, and thus prevent an inquiry into the reasonableness thereof by the courts in a controversy properly challenging such reasonableness. The legislative prerogative is the power to make the law, to prescribe the regulation or rule of action. The jurisdiction of the courts is to construe and apply the law or regulation after it is made. The two functions are essentially and vitally different.

In Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970, the legislative act authorized a railroad and warehouse commission to compel common carriers to adopt such rates and charges as the commission "shall declare to be equal and reasonable." The supreme court of the state held that the finding of the commission was final and conclusive, and that the law neither contemplated nor allowed an issue to be made, nor an inquiry to be had, as to their equality and reasonableness in fact. The supreme court of the United States held that, if this were the correct interpretation, and the decision of the state court was conclusive upon that point, the law conflicted with the Constitution of the United States, because it "deprived the company of its right to a judicial investigation under the forms and with the machinery provided by the wisdom of successive ages for the investigation judicially of the truth of a matter in controversy, and substituted therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a railroad commission, which in view of the powers conceded to it by the state court, could not be regarded as clothed with judicial functions, or possessing the machinery of a court of justice." This decision illustrates to some extent the limit of the power of the legislature in respect of such matters. It cannot place its own enactments beyond the constitutional jurisdiction of the courts.

On the other hand, as to the province of the courts, it was said in Reagan v. Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 397, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 1054, 38 L. Ed. 1014, 1023: "The courts are not authorized to revise or change the body of rates imposed by a legislature or a commission.¹ They do not determine whether one rate is preferable to another, or what, under all circumstances, would be fair and reasonable as between the carriers and the shippers. They do not engage in any mere administrative work. But still there can be no doubt of their power and duty to inquire whether a body of rates prescribed by a legislature or a commission is unjust and unreasonable, and such as to work a practical destruction to rights of property, and, if found so to be, to restrain its operation."

In Railway Co. v. Gill, 156 U. S. 649, 15 Sup. Ct. 484, 39 L. Ed. 567, it was also said that "it is not the province of courts to enter upon the merely administrative duty of framing a tariff of rates for carriage." * * *

In the Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29, 6 Sup. Ct. 628, 29 L. Ed. 791, 803, the court, in speaking of the action of the trial court in fixing and regulating the terms upon which the railroad company and the express company should do business, said: "In this way, as it seems to us, the court has made an arrangement for the business intercourse of these companies, such as, in its opinion, they ought to have made for themselves. * * * The regulation of matters of this kind is legislative in its character, not judicial. To what extent it must come, if it comes at all, from congress, and to what extent it may come from the states, are questions we do not now undertake to decide; but that it must come, when it does come, from some source of legislative power, we do not doubt."

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co., 110 U. S. 682, 4 Sup. Ct. 192, 28 L. Ed. 297, the court said: "A court of chancery is not, any more than is a court of law, clothed with legislative power. It may enforce, in its own appropriate way, the specific performance of an existing legal obligation arising out of contract, law, or usage, but it cannot create the obligation."

¹ "If * * * the legislature intended to provide that the court should put itself in the place of the commission, try the matter de novo, and determine what are reasonable rates, without regard to the findings of the commission, such intent cannot be carried out, as a statute which so provided would be unconstitutional. The fixing of rates is a legislative or administrative act, not a judicial one."—Canty, J., in Steenerson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 375, 72 N. W. 713, 716 (1897).

In Railway Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 344, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 402, 36 L. Ed. 176, 179, the court said that "the legislature has power to fix rates, and the extent of judicial interference is protection against unreasonable rates."

In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 167 U. S. 499, 17 Sup. Ct. 900, 42 L. Ed. 243, Mr. Justice Brewer, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is one thing to inquire whether the rates which have been charged and collected are reasonable,—that is a judicial act; but an entirely different thing to prescribe rates which shall be charged in the future,—that is a legislative act."

The foregoing will serve to illustrate sufficiently the line of demarkation between legislative and judicial functions as respects the subject-matter under consideration. * * *

What, then, is the nature of the powers conferred upon the court of visitation? It is apparent from even a cursory examination of those parts of the act of the legislature which define the primary powers and jurisdiction of that body that they are largely of a legislative or administrative character, and such as do not pertain to the functions of a court. It is difficult to define the precise difference between those that are legislative and those that are administrative. It is unnecessary, however, to do so in this case, for it is immaterial whether the powers of that court, so called, aside from those that are judicial, are of the one character or of the other, or are a blending of both. A court does not (to use the language of the act) "classify freight," nor "require the construction and maintenance of depots, switches, side tracks, stock yards, cars, and other facilities for the public convenience," nor "regulate crossings and intersections of railroads," nor "regulate the operation of trains" over such crossings and intersections, nor "prescribe rules concerning the movements of trains to secure the safety of employes and the public," nor "require the use of improved appliances and methods to avoid accidents and injuries to persons," nor "apportion transportation charges among connecting carriers," nor "regulate charges for part car-load and mixed car-load lots of freight, including live stock," nor prescribe what rates of transportation of freight and passengers shall be charged. The regulation of such matters is legislative in its character, not judicial. The Express Cases, supra.

Of course, courts of chancery, in the exercise of their equity jurisdiction, may, and frequently do, through the medium of receivers, appointed by them, exercise some of such powers in the administration of property which is the subject-matter of litigation in such courts, and especially where, in order to preserve the value of such property while it is in the possession of the court, it is necessary to continue the operation thereof, and maintain it as a going concern. But it is not in such sense that these powers were conferred upon the court of visitation. Courts also have the undoubted power to determine some of these matters, if they properly lie in the road to the ultimate adjudication of other existing controversies concerning which the jurisdiction of the court has been invoked; as, by way of illustration, where, in litigation over the destruction of life or property in a railroad accident, it becomes material to ascertain whether the company used proper appliances and methods to avoid such an occurrence. Nor is it to this end that the powers mentioned were conferred upon the court of visitation. The exercise of the powers granted contemplates the prescribing of rules and regulations for future guidance, and the possession of such powers by the court of visitation makes it one of the potential agencies of the legislative department of the state. To use the expression of a learned justice of the supreme court, the court of visitation, in respect of such functions, is "an active, seeking, supervising body; the eye and the activity of the state." As to such powers and duties the court of visitation is not, and cannot be, a court. Practically all of the powers then possessed by the board of railroad commissioners of Kansas, which was purely an administrative body, were conferred upon the court of visitation, and as an evidence of the legislative purpose and intent the then existing laws relating to the appointment, powers, and duties of the board of railroad commissioners were, by act of the legislature, repealed a few days after the passage of the act creating the court of visitation. * * *

It was argued at the bar on behalf of the defendants that the powers conferred upon the court of visitation are judicial in their character, for the reason that the law contemplates an investigation and consideration on the part of the court before final action is had; and it is particularly recalled that such contention was made with reference to paragraphs 8 and 9 of section 8 of the act, which authorize the court of visitation to "prescribe rules concerning the movements of trains to secure the safety of employes and the public, and to require the use of improved appliances and methods to avoid accidents and injuries to persons." Investigation as a precedent to action is not exclusively an attribute of a judicial proceeding. Counsel confounds the usual legislative inquiry which precedes the passage of laws with the judicial consideration of a controversy in a court of justice. It certainly would not be claimed that the hearing and consideration by committees of legislative bodies of the views and opinions of men having special knowledge of matters to be affected by proposed legislation constitute in any sense the exercise of judicial functions, or that such committees are judicial tribunals. Nor does it follow that, because the exercise of the powers conferred upon the court of visitation requires the use of judgment and discretion, such powers are judicial in their nature, as that would make every executive act and legislative act requiring judgment and discretion a judicial act. To use the language of the supreme court of Kansas in The Auditor v. Railroad Co., 6 Kan. 509, 7 Am. Rep. 575: "It certainly could not be so in the sense in which our Constitution uses the term, or it would, of necessity, obliterate the lines by which the framers of that instrument sought to keep separate and distinct the three branches of our government." As was said in Re Huron, 58 Kan. 156, 48 Pac. 576, 36 L. R. A. 824, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614: "Not every one who hears testimony and exercises discretion and judgment in a matter submitted to him is necessarily a judicial officer."

Counsel say: "The decision of a question which may arise between different railroad companies as to how much of a certain charge each shall have is as much a judicial function as to decide how much of an estate each of the heirs shall receive." That may be true where there is such a controversy pending in a court between the railroad companies themselves, but that is not the sense in which the power is conferred upon the court of visitation. The intent of the act of the legislature was, not to authorize the adjudication of distinct controversies of that character between contending railroad companies, but, instead thereof, the laying down of a rule in behalf of the state and the public, and the securing of the future obedience thereto by the imposition of fine and imprisonment. Is not that process legislation, and is not the result a regulation or a law?

The fact that the legislature denominated the tribunal a court is not conclusive as to its true character, nor as to the nature of the jurisdiction and powers conferred upon it. That question is not determined by the terminology employed in the act, although the legislative purpose and intent may be evidenced thereby, but it is determined rather by the ascertainment of the essential nature of the jurisdiction and powers themselves. The Constitution of the state of Kansas authorizes the creation of courts inferior to the supreme court by act of the legislature, and, by necessary implication, the defining of the jurisdiction of the courts so created. Article 3, § 1. Nevertheless such jurisdiction must, in all essential particulars, be judicial in its character, and the constitutional authority for other courts than those specifically named in the Constitution must be so construed and limited. Under the Constitution, the legislature may not create a court for the exercise of its own legislative functions, or for the performance of purely administrative or executive duties; and though a tribunal, as constituted by legislative act, may be denominated a court, may possess a seal, and be clothed with the usual and customary vesture of a judicial tribunal, yet its real character is determined by its jurisdiction and the functions it is empowered to exercise. The legislature may create a court of visitation, but it can only be a court in respect of matters of a judicial nature, and such as are properly incidental thereto. It is clear, however, that it was the intention of the legislature in the enactment of the law to confer certain judicial powers upon the court of visitation in respect of the same matters over which that court was authorized to exercise legislative and administrative functions. It was clearly the legislative intent to confer upon the court of visitation not only the power to prescribe rules and regulations for the government of railroad and telegraph companies in their relations to the public and to each other, but also the power to pass judicially upon the validity of such rules and regulations, to render judgment accordingly, and full power to execute their orders and judgments. By the language of the act under consideration, the court of visitation can prescribe a tariff of rates and charges, judicially determine the reasonableness thereof, and then enforce their judicial determinations in as radical and complete a method as could be devised. Concisely stated, the court of visitation may make laws, sit judicially upon their own acts, and then enforce their enactments which have received their judicial sanction. Can this be done? * * *

Counsel also contend that there is no provision of the Constitution of the state of Kansas inhibiting the commingling of legislative, judicial, and executive powers, and the conferring by the legislature of the functions of one department upon the other. * * * But there is no such omission in the Constitution of Kansas. It provides as follows: Article 1, § 1: "The executive department shall consist of a governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, attorney general and superintendent of public instruction," etc. Article 2, § 1: "The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a house of representatives and senate." Article 3, § 1: "The judicial power of this state shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court as may be provided by law," etc.

That, in a broad sense, the powers of one of these departments shall not be conferred upon either of the others, is not only within the true spirit of these provisions, but also substantially within the letter thereof; and the addition thereto of an express prohibitory declaration, such as is contained in the Constitutions of some of the states, that the powers of one department shall not be exercised by another, would add very little to their effect, so far as concerns the question under consideration. The universal doctrine of American liberty under written Constitutions requires the distribution of all the powers of government among three departments,—legislative, judicial, and executive,—and that each, within its appropriate sphere, be supreme, co-ordinate with, and independent of, both the others.
* * *

There is a full accord among elementary writers and publicists who treat of the growth and development of the principles of an enlightened government and the relations between the state and the individual. Dr. Paley says: "The first maxim of a free state is that the laws be made by one set of men and administered by another; in other words, that the legislative and judicial characters be kept separate." Moral Philosophy, bk. 6, c. 8.

Blackstone says: "In this distinct and separate existence of the judicial power in a peculiar body of men, nominated, indeed, but not removable at pleasure, by the crown, consists one main preservative of the public liberty, which cannot subsist long in any state unless the administration of common justice be in some degree separated both from the legislative and also from the executive power. Were it joined with the legislative, the life, liberty, and property of the subject would be in the hands of arbitrary judges, whose decisions would be then regulated only by their own opinions, and not by any fundamental principles of law, which, though legislators may depart from, yet judges are bound to observe. Were it joined with the executive, this union might soon be an overbalance for the legislative." 1 Bl. Comm. 269.

Baron Montesquieu writes: "When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty, because apprehensions may arise, lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner. Again, there is no liberty of the judiciary power if it be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control; for the judge would be the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression. There would be an end of everything were the same man, or the same body, whether of nobles or of the people, to exercise these three powers,—that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals." Spirit of Laws, bk. 11, c. 6.

It is true that this is ancient doctrine, but it serves no ill purpose to renew familiarity therewith, especially in times when it is claimed that the complexity of commercial affairs affords sufficient cause to either undermine or openly destroy those safeguards that are deemed so essential to the permanency of a free government.

In the distribution of the powers of government between the three departments the federal Constitution is as general in its provisions as that of the state of Kansas. There is the same absence of any positive and specific prohibition against the conferring of the powers of the one upon the other. In Kilbourn v. Thompson [103 U. S. 191, 26 L. Ed. 377] it was said: "It is believed to be one of the chief merits of the American system of written constitutional law that all the powers intrusted to government, whether state or national, are divided into the three grand departments, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial; that the functions appropriate to each of these branches of government shall be vested in a separate body of public servants, and that the perfection of the system requires that the lines which separate and divide these departments shall be broadly and clearly defined. It is also essential to the successful working of this system that the persons intrusted with power in any one of these branches shall not be permitted to encroach upon the powers confided to the others, but that each shall, by the law of its creation, be limited to the exercise of the powers appropriated to its own department, and no other. * * * The Constitution declares that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. If what we have said of the division of the powers of the government among the three departments be sound, this is equivalent to a declaration that no judicial power is vested in the congress, or either branch of it, save in the cases specifically enumerated to which we have referred." * * *

The decisions of the supreme court of Kansas upon the interpretation of the fundamental law of the state in regard to this question and the application thereof to legislative enactments are to the same effect, and in such matters they are binding upon this court. * * * [Here follow quotations from In re Huron, 58 Kan. 152, 48 Pac. 576, 36 L. R. A. 824, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, In re Sims, 54 Kan. 1, 37 Pac. 135, 25 L. R. A. 110, 45 Am. St. Rep. 261, and Auditor v. Ry. Co., 6 Kan. 500, 7 Am. Rep. 575.] Following the decisions of the highest court in the state, I am therefore constrained to hold that the act of the legislature is violative of the provisions of the Constitution of the state of Kansas. * * *

Temporary injunction granted.²

² Accord: Steenerson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713 (1897); Brymer v. Butler Water Co., 179 Pa. 231, 36 Atl. 249, 36 L. R. A. 260 (1897); Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113 (1898); Michigan Tel. Co. v. City of St. Joseph, 121 Mich. 502, 80 N. W. 383, 47 L. R. A. 87, 80 Am. St. Rep. 520 (1899); State v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 803, 60 Pac. 1068, 49 L. R. A. 662 (1900) (compare Doster, J., dissenting, at page 835 ff.). See Troutman v. Smith, 105 Ky. 231, 48 S. W. 1084 (1899).

The cases holding that rate-fixing is not a judicial function are collected in 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529 ff., in a note to City of Madison v. Madison Gas & Electric Co., 129 Wis. 249, 108 N. W. 65, 116 Am. St. Rep. 944, 9 Ann. Cas. 819 (1906) (no equitable jurisdiction for this purpose). See, also, Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., post, p. 309; and Austral. Boot Trade Fed. v. Whybrow & Co., 11 Com. L. Rep. 311 (1910, Australian).

All of the above cases arose under state Constitutions requiring a separation of the three great departments of government. The Virginia Constitution of 1902 provided (sections 155, 156) for a Corporation Commission in which various powers were united. Of this it was said by Harrison, J., in Winchester & S. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 106 Va. 264, 267-270, 55 S. E. 692, 193 (1906) [approved in Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., above]:

"This court has recognized the validity of the State Corporation Commission as a legally constituted tribunal of the state, clothed with legislative, judicial, and executive powers. Atlantic Coast Line v. Commonwealth, 102 Va. 599, 46 S. E. 911; Norfolk, etc., Co. v. Commonwealth, 103 Va. 291, 49 S. E. 39. In the last-named case, at page 295 of 103 Va., page 41 of 49 S. E., it is said: 'The State Corporation Commission, created by constitutional authority, is the instrumentality through which the state exercises its governmental power for the regulation and control of public service corporations. For that purpose it has been clothed with legislative, judicial, and executive powers.' * * * [Here follow references to the exercise of both legislative and judicial powers by the British House of Lords; to Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 394, 395, 1 L. Ed. 648, denying that the federal Constitution forbade a

In re JANVRIN.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1899. 174 Mass. 514, 55 N. E. 381, 47 L. R. A. 319.)

[Case reserved upon a demurrer to a petition filed by the selectmen of Revere against the Revere Water Company, under the statute mentioned in the opinion below, alleging that unreasonable rates were charged and praying "that the court would fix the rate to be charged by the company for water supplied to the inhabitants of Revere at a reasonable sum."]

HOLMES, C. J. The only question raised by the demurrer is the constitutionality of the provision of St. 1897, c. 336, § 1, under which the petitioner proceeds. This section amends section 23 of the metropolitan water supply act (St. 1895, c. 488). It embodies a scheme which forbids cities or towns within 10 miles of the state house to use water for domestic purposes from any source not now used by them, except under the statute. This prohibition, standing alone, might seem to put into the hands of a water company now supply-state legislature to exercise judicial functions, as by granting new trial; and to Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. 380, 413, 7 L. Ed. 458.]

"The doctrine that it is competent for a state to unite in one board or tribunal some of the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government, as well as the further proposition, that when a state does this, it violates no prohibition of the federal Constitution, and that any such question is one for the determination of the state, its action in the matter being accepted as final, is well supported by the more recent case of Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 84, 23 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 (47 L. Ed. 79) in which Mr. Justice Harlan, delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, says: 'Whether the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of a state shall be kept altogether distinct and separate, or whether persons or collections of persons, belonging to one department, may, in respect to some matters, exert powers which, strictly speaking, pertain to another department of government, is for the determination of the state, and its determination one way or the other cannot be an element in the inquiry whether the due process of law prescribed by the fourteenth amendment has been respected by the state or its representatives when dealing with matters involving life or liberty. "When we speak," said Story, "of a separation of the three great departments of government, and maintain that that separation is indispensable to public liberty, we are to understand this maxim in a limited sense. It is not meant to affirm that they must be kept wholly and entirely separate and distinct, and have no common link or dependence, the one upon the other, in the slightest degree. The true meaning is that the whole power of one of these departments should not be exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of either of the other departments; and that such exercise of the whole would subvert the principles of a free Constitution." Story's Const. (5th Ed.) 393. Again: "Indeed, there is not a single Constitution of any state in the Union which does not practically embrace some acknowledgment of the maxim, and at the same time some admixture of powers constituting an exception to it." Story's Const. (5th Ed.) 393.'

See the discussion of somewhat similar legislation, under a Constitution requiring a separation of powers, in Sabre v. Rutland Ry. Co. (Vt.) 85 Atl. 693 (1913) (majority and dissenting opinions).

A definite separation of state governmental powers is not essential to a "republican form of government" under the federal Constitution. Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 519, 17 Sup. Ct. 665, 41 L. Ed. 1095 (1897).

ing any such town or city the power to make exorbitant charges, by giving it a monopoly. Therefore, with a view, no doubt, of dealing with the danger, the section just referred to provides as follows: "The selectmen of a town or any persons deeming themselves aggrieved by the price charged for water by any such company may, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-eight and every fifth year thereafter, apply by petition to the supreme judicial court, asking to have the rate fixed at a reasonable sum, measured by the standard above specified; and two or more judges of said court, after hearing the parties, shall establish such maximum rates as said court shall deem proper; and said maximum rates shall be binding upon said water company until the same shall be revised or altered by said court pursuant to this act."

When we first read this sentence, the impression of some of us was that it was an attempt to make out of this court a commission for the taking of one step in fixing a legislative rule of future conduct, irrespective of any present relation between the parties concerned, and that it was no more competent for the legislature to impose or for us to accept such a duty than if the proposition were to transfer to us the whole lawmaking power. See Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852. But upon further reflection it seems to a majority of the court that the act can be sustained. If we can do so without perverting the meaning of the act, we are bound to construe it in such a way that it will be consistent with the Constitution, and we think that this can be done without any wresting of the sense, even if we should doubt (which we do not intimate that we do) whether the legislature had the limit of its power distinctly in mind.

The statute goes upon the footing that every taker of water from the companies in question has a right to be furnished with water at a reasonable rate. No one questions the power of the legislature to require these water companies to furnish water to the takers at reasonable rates (Attorney General v. Old Colony R. Co., 160 Mass. 62, 86, 87, 35 N. E. 252, 22 L. R. A. 112; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 354, 4 Sup. Ct. 48, 28 L. Ed. 173; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 537, 549, 552, 12 Sup. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247); and this statute does require the companies to do so, and thereby gives to water takers a corresponding right, or declares that they have it. It is with the relations between actual water takers and the companies that the statute calls on this court to deal. It does not undertake merely to make of the court a commission to determine what rule shall govern people who are not yet in relation to each other, and who may elect to enter or not to enter into relations as they may or may not like the rule which we lay down. It calls on us to fix the extent of actually existing rights. With regard to such rights, judicial determinations are not confined to the past. If it legitimately might be left to this court to decide whether a bill for water furnished was reasonable, and, if not, to cut it down to a reasonable sum, it equally may be left to the court to enjoin a company from charging more than a reasonable sum in the immediate future.

But it has been regarded as competent for a court to pass on the reasonableness of a rate, even when established by the legislature, to the extent of declaring it unreasonably low. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970; Chicago & G. T. Railway v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 344, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819. A fortiori when the rate is established by the company, and it has undertaken to charge the plaintiff a sum which he alleges to be unreasonable, and the legislature, in terms, has referred him to this court, this court has "jurisdiction to inquire into that matter, and to award to the [plaintiff] any amount exacted from him in excess of a reasonable rate." Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 397, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 1054, 38 L. Ed. 1014, 1023.

It is true that in Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. it was said, also, that "it is not the function of the courts to establish a schedule of rates" (154 U. S. 400, 14 Sup. Ct. 1055, 38 L. Ed. 1024); and to that proposition we fully agree. But it will be observed that the proposition is laid down in connection with the statement that "the challenge in this case is of the tariff as a whole, and not of any particular rate upon any single class of goods." Probably to prepare a new schedule or to rearrange the old one would have gone beyond the scope of the rights immediately affected or threatened in the case before the court, into the realm of abstract lawmaking for the future, and so beyond the power of the court; and, if it had not been beyond the court's power, still very possibly it might have been refused, in the court's discretion, the court leaving it to the proper body to undertake that task. But it is implied that, if the challenge had been of a single rate threatened to be charged for a service demanded, the court might have determined the question between the parties for the immediate future, as it is stated three pages earlier that the court would determine it with regard to a charge for past services. When you are prepared to say that a given charge is too high or too low, it hardly would be consistent to say that you had not power or ability to say what is a proper charge.

It is true that the phrase, "shall establish such maximum rates as said court shall deem proper," and the following provision, that such "maximum rates shall be binding upon said water company until the same shall be revised or altered by said court," etc., suggest that the legislature had in mind the establishment of a rate to be charged to all parties for the use of water for domestic purposes, and not merely a rate to be charged the petitioner. It may be that the former was the main object which the legislature had in mind. But, although we cannot doubt that the meaning of the words last quoted is that the rate shall be binding as a general rate, even that is not said distinctly; and we feel bound to assume, in support of the act, that the legislature is dealing primarily with the rights of the party aggrieved before the court, and only secondarily adopts in advance the rate thus fixed between the parties as a general rate for all. If this is so, the question whether such a legislative consequence can be attached to the decision is not before us. Even if it should fail, the failure would not necessarily affect the constitutionality of sending "persons deeming themselves aggrieved" to this court to get their rights settled. But, as it is not likely that a rate thus established for a given moment after full investigation would be departed from upon the application of a second person similarly circumstanced, it may be questioned whether there is anything to prevent the legislature from sanctioning without further hearing a rate which once has been declared judicially to be reasonable. It is to be remarked in this connection that the decisions which we have cited for the proposition that the legislature may require rates to be reasonable establish the further proposition that the legislature may fix what the rates shall be, subject only to judicial inquiry whether they are so unreasonably low as to deprive the company of its property without due compensation.

It will be understood from the reasoning on which we sustain the act that the court would not regard itself as warranted or called on to undertake the fixing of rates, except so far as they concern interests actually and legitimately before the court.

The liberty to apply to this court is confined to the year 1898 and every fifth year thereafter, so that seemingly it is contemplated that the rate, when fixed, will remain unchanged for five years. This is another indication that the legislature had its attention directed to the establishment of a general rate. But, supposing a party aggrieved should obtain an injunction, obviously the decree would be drawn so as to bind the defendant for a reasonable time, or if it were drawn in the common form, subject to review on a change of circumstances, the court would not be likely to grant leave to file a bill of review until a reasonable time had elapsed; and, if the legislature should say that in these cases five years was a reasonable time, we could not say that it was wrong. It is true that the party aggrieved it not given an injunction, in terms, by the act; and this is another peculiarity in the procedure, looking as it does to a decree affecting the future. Of course, it is assumed, and no doubt rightly, that a company would not venture to disregard the decree. But if a company should prove recalcitrant, in case such disregard should not be construed as ipso facto a contempt, undoubtedly the decree could be enforced by injunction.

There is still one more peculiarity in the statutory proceedings which adds a little to the difficulty of the question before us. We have construed the statute to deal primarily with existing rights and grievances. But the proceedings are given to "the selectmen of a town or any persons deeming themselves aggrieved." So far as the alternative mention of the selectmen should be used as an argument that the primary purport of the act was not to deal with present rights, we should answer that it does not appear that the towns within the 10-mile radius do not all of them take water in their corporate capacity; and, if it was assumed by the legislature that they did, as they probably do, the argument would lose its force. It may be that the legislature thought of the selectmen rather as representing the whole body of water takers in the town. Whether they could be made compulsory agents to represent private interests in that way, it is not necessary to inquire. We may add that we understand the demurrer to be intended to raise the single question of constitutionality, and therefore we do not consider whether the petition, in strictness, ought not to show that the town, or whoever may be represented by the petitioning selectmen, is a water taker, and, in short, disclose enough to make out a present grievance. If there is any defect of form,—which we do not intimate,—probably it could be amended. * * *

Demurrer overruled.¹

¹ Accord: Canada Southern Ry. Co. v. International Bridge Co. (D. C.) 8 Fed. 190 (1881); Brymer v. Butler Water Co., 179 Pa. 231, 250, 36 Atl. 249, 36 L. R. A. 260 (1897) (semble).

Contrast: Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 635, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113 ff. (1898).

In People ex rel. Joline v. Willcox, 194 N. Y. 383, 386, 387, 87 N. E. 517 (1909), Cullen, C. J., said (referring to Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., post, p. 309, holding that the general fixing of future transportation rates could not be made an exercise of judicial power by a state):

"With great reluctance we express our inability to accept the doctrine of the Supreme Court (of course, only within the sphere [of state authority] indicated), as it is opposed to the uniform current of judicial authority in this state, a full review of which, as well as of the action of both Constitution makers and legislatures, will be found in the Matter of Vil. of Sar. Springs v. Saratoga Gas, El. Light & P. Co., 191 N. Y. 123, 83 N. E. 693, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713, in which it was held, not only that the function of rate making could be devolved by the legislature upon other officers, but that the very question of what rates are reasonable could be given a judicial or quasi judicial aspect. Nor are we now convinced that the function of prescribing a rate is necessarily nonjudicial solely because it enforces a rule of conduct for the future. It is true that 'a judicial inquiry investigates,' declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present and past facts under the laws supposed already to exist.' But a judicial decision often determines in advance what future action will be a discharge of existing liabilities or obligations. A notable instance of this is the specific enforcement of contracts which are to extend over a long period of time, in which the court may dictate the details of performance. Prospect Park & C. I. R. R. Co. v. Coney Island & B. R. R. Co., 114 N. Y. 152, 39 N. E. 17, 26 L. R. A. 610. In actions for divorce or separation, it is the constant practice of the courts to prescribe regulations for the custody and care of children, and also to provide for subsequent modification of those provisions from time to time as circumstances may alter. Indeed, this reservation of the right of either party to apply for a modification on change of circumstances is by no means an uncommon feature of the decrees of courts of equity in all branches of their juris-

LUTHER v. BORDEN.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1849. 7 How. 1, 12 L. Ed. 581.)

[Error to the federal Circuit Court for Rhode Island from a judgment for defendant in an action of trespass for breaking into plaintiff's house. The facts appear in Kochler v. Hill, pp. 19-20, ante.]

Mr. Chief Justice TANEY. * * * The Constitution of the United States, as far as it has provided for an emergency of this kind, and authorized the general government to interfere in the domestic concerns of a state, has treated the subject as political in its nature, and placed the power in the hands of that department.

The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States provides that the United States shall guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on the application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a state. For as the United States guarantee to each state a republican government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in the state before it can determine whether it is republican or not. And when the senators and representatives of a state are admitted into the councils of the Union, the authority of the government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding on every other department of the government, and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal.¹ It is true that the contest in this case did not last long enough to bring the matter to this issue; and as no senators or representatives were elected under the authority of the government of which Mr. Dorr was the head, Congress was not called diction. If a judicial tribunal is competent to decide that the exaction of five cents is extortionate, and that a tender of three cents is inadequate, it is difficult to see why it may not be empowered to also decide that four cents is a reasonable and proper rate, and that such rate shall continue until circumstances so change that the judgment of the tribunal may again be invoked. The obligation of a carrier to carry at a reasonable rate, in the absence of any statutory rate, rests on statute or on the common law. The decree of a court does not create an obligation, but measures an existing one."

See City of Madison v. Madison Gas & Electric Co., 129 Wis. 249, 268, 108 N. W. 65, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529, 116 Am. St. Rep. 944, 9 Ann. Cas. 819 (1906).

¹ Accord: Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. Ed. 227 (1869) ("reconstructed" state of Texas); Griffin's Case, Chase, 364, Fed. Cas. No. 5,815 (1869) (Wheeling government of Virginia); Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 20 Sup. Ct. 890, 1009, 44 L. Ed. 1187 (1900) (election of governor); Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377 (1912) (initiative and referendum).

upon to decide the controversy. Yet the right to decide is placed there, and not in the courts.

So, too, as relates to the clause in the above-mentioned article of the Constitution, providing for cases of domestic violence. It rested with Congress, too, to determine upon the means proper to be adopted to fulfil this guarantee. They might, if they had deemed it most advisable to do so, have placed it in the power of a court to decide when the contingency had happened which required the federal government to interfere. But Congress thought otherwise, and no doubt wisely; and by the Act of February 28, 1795, provided that, "in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the legislature of such state or of the executive, when the legislature cannot be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other state or states, as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection."

By this act, the power of deciding whether the exigency had arisen upon which the government of the United States is bound to interfere, is given to the President. He is to act upon the application of the legislature, or of the executive, and consequently he must determine what body of men constitute the legislature, and who is the governor, before he can act. The fact that both parties claim the right to the government, cannot alter the case, for both cannot be entitled to it. If there is an armed conflict, like the one of which we are speaking, it is a case of domestic violence, and one of the parties must be in insurrection against the lawful government. And the President must, of necessity, decide which is the government, and which party is unlawfully arrayed against it, before he can perform the duty imposed upon him by the act of Congress.

After the President has acted and called out the militia, is a Circuit Court of the United States authorized to inquire whether his decision was right? Could the court, while the parties were actually contending in arms for the possession of the government, call witnesses before it, and inquire which party represented a majority of the people? If it could, then it would become the duty of the court (provided it came to the conclusion that the President had decided incorrectly) to discharge those who were arrested or detained by the troops in the service of the United States, or the government which the President was endeavoring to maintain. If the judicial power extends so far, the guarantee contained in the Constitution of the United States is a guarantee of anarchy, and not of order. Yet if this right does not reside in the courts when the conflict is raging—if the judicial power is, at that time, bound to follow the decision of the political, it must be equally bound when the contest is over. It cannot, when peace is restored, punish as offences and crimes the act which it before recognized, and was bound to recognize, as lawful.

It is true that in this case the militia were not called out by the President. But upon the application of the governor under the charter government, the President recognized him as the executive power of the state, and took measures to call out the militia to support his authority, if it should be found necessary for the general government to interfere; and it is admitted in the argument that it was the knowledge of this decision that put an end to the armed opposition to the charter government, and prevented any further efforts to establish by force the proposed Constitution. The interference of the President, therefore, by announcing his determination, was as effectual as if the militia had been assembled under his orders. And it should be equally authoritative. For certainly no court of the United States, with a knowledge of this decision, would have been justified in recognizing the opposing party as the lawful government, or in treating as wrong-doers or insurgents the officers of the government which the President had recognized, and was prepared to support by an armed force. In the case of foreign nations, the government acknowledged by the President is always recognized in the courts of justice.² And this principle has been applied by the act of Congress to the sovereign states of the Union.

It is said that this power in the President is dangerous to liberty, and may be abused. All power may be abused if placed in unworthy hands. But it would be difficult, we think, to point out any other hands in which this power would be more safe, and at the same time equally effectual. When citizens of the same state are in arms against each other, and the constituted authorities unable to execute the laws, the interposition of the United States must be prompt, or it is of little value. The ordinary course of proceedings in courts of justice would be utterly unfit for the crisis. And the elevated office of the President, chosen as he is by the people of the United States, and the high responsibility he could not fail to feel when acting in a case of so much moment, appear to furnish as strong safeguards against a wilful abuse of power as human prudence and foresight could well provide. At all events, it is conferred upon him by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and must, therefore, be respected and enforced in its judicial tribunals.

A question very similar to this arose in the case of Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat, 29-31, 6 L. Ed. 537. The first clause of the first section of the Act of February 28, 1795, of which we have been speaking, authorizes the President to call out the militia to repel invasion. It is the second clause in the same section which authorizes the call to suppress an insurrection against a state government. The power given to the President in each case is the same, with this difference only, that it cannot be exercised by him in the latter case, except upon the application of the legislature or executive of the state. The case above mentioned arose out of a call made by the President, by virtue of the power conferred by the first clause; and the court said that "whenever a statute gives a discretionary power to any person, to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts."³ The grounds upon which that opinion is maintained are set forth in the report, and, we think, are conclusive. The same principle applies to the case now before the court. Undoubtedly, if the President, in exercising this power, shall fall into error, or invade the rights of the people of the state, it would be in the power of Congress to apply the proper remedy. But the courts must administer the law as they find it.

² See Downes v. Bidwell, note 6, post, p. 1012.

The remaining question is, whether the defendants, acting under military orders issued under the authority of the government, were justified in breaking and entering the plaintiff's house. In relation to the act of the legislature declaring martial law, it is not necessary in the case before us to inquire to what extent, nor under what circumstances, that power may be exercised by a state. Unquestionably, a military government, established as the permanent government of the state, would not be a republican government, and it would be the duty of Congress to overthrow it. But the law of Rhode Island evidently contemplated no such government. It was intended merely for the crisis, and to meet the peril in which the existing government was placed by the armed resistance to its authority. It was so understood and construed by the state authorities. And, unquestionably, a state may use its military power to put down an armed insurrection, too strong to be controlled by the civil authority. The power is essential to the existence of every government, essential to the preservation of order and free institutions, and is as necessary to the states of this Union, as to any other government. The state itself must determine what degree of force the crisis demands. And if the government of Rhode Island deemed the armed opposition so formidable, and so ramified throughout the state as to require the use of its military force and the declaration of martial law, we see no ground upon which this court can question its authority.⁴ It was a state of

³ Accord: Druecker v. Salomon, 21 Wis. 621, 94 Am. Dec. 571 (1867) (execution of draft act against rioters).

⁴ Accord (exercise of military authority by executive to suppress public disorder): In re Boyle, 6 Idaho, 609, 57 Pac. 706, 45 L. R. A. 832, 96 Am. St. Rep. 286 (1899); Comm. ex rel. Wadsworth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 Atl. 952, 65 L. R. A. 193, 98 Am. St. Rep. 759 (1903); In re Moyer, 35 Colo. 159, 85 Pac. 190, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979, 117 Am. St. Rep. 189 (1905). Persons in custody under such authority will not be released by the courts on habeas corpus. Id.

Similarly, the determination by the political departments that a state of war exists, and of the date of its beginning and end, is binding upon the courts. The Prize Cases, 2 Black, 635, 670, 17 L. Ed. 459 (1863); The Pro- war, and the established government resorted to the rights and usages of war to maintain itself, and to overcome the unlawful opposition. And in that state of things the officers engaged in its military service might lawfully arrest any one, who, from the information before them, they had reasonable grounds to believe was engaged in the insurrection; and might order a house to be forcibly entered and searched, when there were reasonable grounds for supposing he might be there concealed. Without the power to do this, martial law and the military array of the government would be mere parade, and rather encourage attack than repel it. No more force, however, can be used than is necessary to accomplish the object. And if the power is exercised for the purposes of oppression, or any injury wilfully done to person or property, the party by whom, or by whose order, it is committed, would undoubtedly be answerable. * * *

Much of the argument on the part of the plaintiff turned upon political rights and political questions, upon which the court has been urged to express an opinion. We decline doing so. The high power has been conferred on this court of passing judgment upon the acts of the state sovereignties, and of the legislative and executive branches of the federal government, and of determining whether they are beyond the limits of power marked out for them respectively by the Constitution of the United States. This tribunal, therefore, should be the last to overstep the boundaries which limit its own jurisdiction. And while it should always be ready to meet any question confided to it by the Constitution, it is equally its duty not to pass beyond its appropriate sphere of action, and to take care not to involve itself in discussions which properly belong to other forums. No one, we believe, has ever doubted the proposition that, according to the institutions of this country, the sovereignty in every state resides in the people of the state, and that they may alter and change their form of government at their own pleasure. But whether they have changed it or not, by abolishing an old government, and establishing a new one in its place, is a question to be settled by tector, 12 Wall. 700, 20 L. Ed. 463 (1872); The Pedro, 175 U. S. 374, 20 Sup. Ct. 138, 44 L. Ed. 195 (1899).

As to the power of the legislature or of the executive to suspend the writ of habeas corpus or to declare martial law in domestic territory where the courts are still in ordinary operation, see Ex parte Merryman, Taney, 246, Fed. Cas. No. 9,487 (1861); Ex parte Field, 5 Blatchf. 63, Fed. Cas. No. 4,761 (1862); In re Egan, 5 Blatchf. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 4,303 (1866); Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. Ed. 281 (1866); Ex parte Moore (and following cases), 64 N. C. 802-834 (1870); Marais v. Gen. Officer (1902) A. C. 109; Comm. ex rel. Wadsworth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 Atl. 952, 65 L. R. A. 193, 98 Am. St. Rep. 759 (1903); State v. Brown (W. Va.) 77 S. E. 243 (1912). As to the validity under the federal Constitution of such proceedings by state officers, see Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 235, 53 L. Ed. 410 (1909). The Egan, Milligan, and Brown Cases, above, were cases of trials by military commissions. For an account of the practice of the United States during the Civil War, see 4 Rhodes, Hist. of U. S. 229 ff. The cases are collected in 45 L. R. A. 832, in a note to In re Boyle, 6 Idaho, 609, 57 Pac. 706, 96 Am. St. Rep. 286 (1899).

the political power. And when that power has decided, the courts are bound to take notice of its decision, and to follow it.

Judgment affirmed.⁵

STATE OF GEORGIA v. STANTON (1867) 6 Wall. 50, 71, 75-77. Mr. Justice NELSON (dismissing for want of jurisdiction a bill seeking to restrain the Secretary of War and Generals Grant and Pope, commanding the military district including the state of Georgia, from enforcing in Georgia the federal "Reconstruction Acts"):

"It is urged that the matters involved, and presented for adjudication, are political and not judicial, and, therefore, not the subject of judicial cognizance. This distinction results from the organization of the government into the three great departments, executive, legislative, and judicial, and from the assignment and limitation of the powers of each by the Constitution. The judicial power is vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may ordain and establish: the political power of the government in the other two departments.

"The distinction between judicial and political power is so generally acknowledged in the jurisprudence both of England and of this country, that we need do no more than refer to some of the authorities on the subject. They are all in one direction. Nahob of Carnatic v. The East India Co., 1 Vesey, Jr., 375-393, S. C., 2 Vesey, Jr., 56-60; Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Vesey, 446-447; New York v. Connecticut, 4 Dall. 4-6, 1 L. Ed. 717; The Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1.

⁵ POWER OF STATE COURTS TO DETERMINE LAWFUL LEGISLATURE OR GOVERNOR.—The courts will not entertain direct proceedings to admit, exclude, or reinstate any member of the state legislature contrary to the decision of that body after it has legally organized, In re Gunn, 50 Kan. 155, 251-253, 32 Pac. 470, 948, 19 L. R. A. 519 (1893) (cases); Hiss v. Bartlett, 3 Gray (Mass.) 468, 63 Am. Dec. 768 (1855); French v. Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 80 Pac. 1031, 69 L. R. A. 556, 2 Ann. Cas. 756 (1905); nor will they declare a vacancy in the membership thereof, Covington v. Buffett, 90 Md. 569, 45 Atl. 201, 47 L. R. A. 622 (1900).

As to the power of courts to question the legislation of a sole de facto legislature on the ground it is not de jure, see Gormley v. Taylor, 44 Ga. 76 (1871); Macon & A. R. Co. v. Little, 45 Ga. 370, 398-408 (1872); State ex rel. Attorney General v. Francis, 26 Kan. 724 (1882); State v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 348, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829 (1886). As to a like jurisdiction to decide which of two rival organizations is legally a branch of the state legislature, see In re Gunn, 50 Kan. 155, 32 Pac. 470, 948, 19 L. R. A. 519 (1893) (cases—see dissent); State v. Rogers, 56 N. J. Law, 480, 614-618, 28 Atl. 726, 29 Atl. 173 (1894). See, also, Answers of Justices, 70 Me. 600 (1880); Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 325 (1880)—cases of rival legislatures.

A like jurisdiction was exercised in quo warranto proceedings to determine the lawful governor in Attorney General ex rel. Bashford v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567 (1856); State v. Bulkeley, 61 Conn. 287, 23 Atl. 186, 14 L. R. A. 657 (1892); State ex rel. Thayer v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 682, 48 N. W. 739, 51 N. W. 602 (1891), reversed in Boyd v. Neb., 143 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103 (1892) on non-jurisdictional grounds.

20, 29, 30, 51, 75, 8 L. Ed. 25; State of Rhode Island v. State of Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 733, 734, 737, 738, 9 L. Ed. 1233. * * *

"[Quoting from Thompson, J., in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, above:] 'I certainly do not claim, as belonging to the judiciary, the exercise of political power. That belongs to another branch of the government. The protection and enforcement of many rights secured by treaties, most certainly do not belong to the judiciary. It is only where the rights of persons or property are involved, and when such rights can be presented under some judicial form of proceedings, that courts of justice can interpose relief. This court can have no right to pronounce an abstract opinion upon the constitutionality of a state law. Such law must be brought into actual, or threatened operation upon rights properly falling under judicial cognizance, or a remedy is not to be had here.' * * *

"The bill filed presents a case which, if it be the subject of judicial cognizance, would, in form, come under a familiar head of equity jurisdiction, that is, jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain a party from a wrong or injury to the rights of another, where the danger, actual or threatened, is irreparable, or the remedy at law inadequate. But, according to the course of proceeding under this head in equity, in order to entitle the party to the remedy, a case must be presented appropriate for the exercise of judicial power; the rights in danger, as we have seen, must be rights of persons or property, not merely political rights, which do not belong to the jurisdiction of a court, either in law or equity.

"The remaining question on this branch of our inquiry is, whether, in view of the principles above stated, and which we have endeavored to explain, a case is made out in the bill of which this court can take judicial cognizance. In looking into it, it will be seen that we are called upon to restrain the defendants, who represent the executive authority of the government, from carrying into execution certain acts of Congress, inasmuch as such execution would annul, and totally abolish the existing state government of Georgia, and establish another and different one in its place; in other words, would overthrow and destroy the corporate existence of the state, by depriving it of all the means and instrumentalities whereby its existence might, and, otherwise would, be maintained. * * *

"That these matters, both as stated in the body of the bill, and in the prayers for relief, call for the judgment of the court upon political questions, and, upon rights, not of persons or property, but of a political character, will hardly be denied. For the rights for the protection of which our authority is invoked, are the rights of sovereignty, of political jurisdiction, of government, of corporate existence as a state, with all its constitutional powers and privileges. No case of private rights or private property infringed, or in danger of actual or threatened infringement, is presented by the bill, in a judicial form, for the judgment of the court.

"It is true, the bill in setting forth the political rights of the state, and of its people to be protected, among other matters, avers, that Georgia owns certain real estate and buildings therein, state capitol, and executive mansion, and other real and personal property; and that putting the acts of Congress into execution, and destroying the state, would deprive it of the possession and enjoyment of its property. But, it is apparent, that this reference to property and statement concerning it, are only by way of showing one of the grievances resulting from the threatened destruction of the state, and in aggravation of it, not as a specific ground of relief. This matter of property is neither stated as an independent ground, nor is it noticed at all in the prayers for relief. Indeed the case, as made in the bill, would have stopped far short of the relief sought by the state, and its main purpose and design given up, by restraining its remedial effect, simply to the protection of the title and possession of its property. Such relief would have called for a very different bill from the one before us.¹ * * *

[CHASE, C. J., concurred in the conclusion.]

¹ See, also, Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 20, 29-30, 51, 75, 8 L. Ed. 25 (1831). In White v. Hart, 13 Wall. 646, 20 L. Ed. 685 (1872), the courts were held to have no jurisdiction to consider the validity of the means adopted by Congress to secure the assent of Georgia to her Constitution of 1868, or (semble) to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

The federal Supreme Court has passed upon the constitutionality of the rules of the House of Representatives in enacting legislation, United States v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321 (1892); and of state statutes providing for the appointment of presidential electors, McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869 (1892).

The courts generally have exercised jurisdiction to determine the validity of legislative apportionment acts. State v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 51 N. W. 724, 15 L. R. A. 561 (1892); Denney v. State ex rel. Basler, 144 Ind. 503, 42 N. E. 929, 31 L. R. A. 726 (1895); Harrison v. Ballot Com'rs, 45 W. Va. 179, 31 S. E. 394, 42 L. R. A. 591 (1898). Cases from other states are cited in these. But owing to the political character of the act involved the legislature is allowed a large measure of discretion in such matters. See People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 40 N. E. 307 (1895); People ex rel. Carter v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 31 N. E. 921, 16 L. R. A. 836 (1892) [but compare Matter of Sherrill v. O'Brien, 188 N. Y. 185, 81 N. E. 124, 117 Am. St. Rep. 811 (1907)].

INDIVIDUAL POLITICAL RIGHTS.—The political rights of individuals, where they can be urged in the form of a legally authorized controversy inter partes, will be protected by the courts, as in the cases of suits against election officers to secure registration or damages for interference with voting, 15 Cyc. 306, 314 (cases); or as in cases of contests between rival candidates for office, each claiming to be lawfully elected, 15 Cyc. 393 ff. (cases); Toncray v. Budge, 14 Idaho, 621, 633-634, 95 Pac. 26 (1908); but courts of equity have no inherent jurisdiction of this character, Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909 (1903); 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, note (cases). But compare People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tool, 35 Colo. 225, 86 Pac. 224, 229, 231, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 117 Am. St. Rep. 198 (1905) (election frauds enjoined at suit of attorney general).

JUDICIAL CONTROL OF POLITICAL PARTIES.—As to this, both with and without express legislative authorization, see Stephenson v. Board of Election

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1867. 4 Wall. 475, 18 L. Ed. 437.)

[Original proceeding to enjoin the enforcement in Mississippi of certain federal statutes providing for the government by military commanders under authority of Congress of certain of the Southern states lately in rebellion.¹ President Johnson had vetoed them as unconstitutional, and they had been passed over his veto.]

Mr. Chief Justice CHASE. A motion was made, some days since, in behalf of the state of Mississippi, for leave to file a bill in the name of the state, praying this court perpetually to enjoin and restrain Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, and E. O. C. Ord, general commanding in the district of Mississippi and Arkansas, from executing, or in any manner carrying out, certain acts of Congress therein named. The acts referred to are those of March 2 and March 23, 1867, commonly known as the Reconstruction Acts. The Attorney General objected to the leave asked for, upon the ground that no bill which makes a President a defendant, and seeks an injunction against him to restrain the performance of his duties as President, should be allowed to be filed in this court. This point has been fully argued, and we will now dispose of it.

We shall limit our inquiry to the question presented by the objection, without expressing any opinion on the broader issues discussed in argument, whether, in any case, the President of the United States may be required, by the process of this court, to perform a purely ministerial act under a positive law, or may be held amenable, in any case, otherwise than by impeachment for crime. The single point which requires consideration is this: Can the President be restrained by injunction from carrying into effect an act of Congress alleged to be unconstitutional?

It is assumed by the counsel for the state of Mississippi, that the President, in the execution of the Reconstruction Acts, is required to perform a mere ministerial duty. In this assumption there is, we think, a confounding of the terms ministerial and executive, which are by no means equivalent in import. A ministerial duty, the performance of which may, in proper cases, be required of the head of a department, by judicial process, is one in respect to which nothing is left to discretion. It is a simple, definite duty, arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist, and imposed by law.²

Com'rs, 118 Mich. 396, 76 N. W. 914, 42 L. R. A. 214, 74 Am. St. Rep. 402 (1898); Phillips v. Gallagher, 73 Minn. 528, 76 N. W. 285, 42 L. R. A. 222 (1898); People ex rel. Coffey v. Democratic General Committee, 164 N. Y. 335, 58 N. E. 121, 51 L. R. A. 674 (1900); State ex rel. McGrath v. Phelps, 144 Wis. 1, 128 N. W. 1011, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353 (1910); A. H. Tuttle in 1 Mich. L. Rev. 466; F. R. Mechem in 3 Mich. L. Rev. 364.

¹ As to the character of the relief here sought, see State of Georgia v. Stanton, ante, p. 106.

The case of Marbury v. Madison, Secretary of State, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. Ed. 60, furnishes an illustration. A citizen had been nominated, confirmed, and appointed a justice of the peace for the District of Columbia, and his commission had been made out, signed, and sealed. Nothing remained to be done except delivery, and the duty of delivery was imposed by law on the Secretary of State. It was held that the performance of this duty might be enforced by mandamus issuing from a court having jurisdiction. So, in the case of Kendall, Postmaster General, v. Stockton & Stokes, 12 Pet. 527, 9 L. Ed. 1181, an act of Congress had directed the Postmaster General to credit Stockton & Stokes with such sums as the Solicitor of the Treasury should find due to them; and that officer refused to credit them with certain sums, so found due. It was held that the crediting of this money was a mere ministerial duty, the performance of which might be judicially enforced. In each of these cases nothing was left to discretion. There was no room for the exercise of judgment. The law required the performance of a single specific act; and that performance, it was held, might be required by mandamus.

Very different is the duty of the President in the exercise of the power to see that the laws are faithfully executed, and among these laws the acts named in the bill. By the first of these acts he is required to assign generals to command in the several military districts, and to detail sufficient military force to enable such officers to discharge their duties under the law. By the supplementary act, other duties are imposed on the several commanding generals, and these duties must necessarily be performed under the supervision of the President as commander in chief. The duty thus imposed on the President is in no just sense ministerial. It is purely executive and political.

An attempt on the part of the judicial department of the government to enforce the performance of such duties by the President might be justly characterized, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall, as "an absurd and excessive extravagance." It is true that in the instance before us the interposition of the court is not sought to enforce action by the executive under constitutional legislation, but to restrain such action under legislation alleged to be unconstitutional. But we are unable to perceive that this circumstance takes the case out of the general principles which forbid judicial interference with the exercise of executive discretion.

It was admitted in the argument that the application now made to us is without a precedent; and this is of much weight against it.

² For the distinction between ministerial and discretionary acts, see, also, Druecker v. Salomon, 21 Wis. 621, 630, 94 Am. Dec. 571 (1867); United States ex rel. Dunlap v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 Sup. Ct. 12, 32 L. Ed. 35 (1888) (cases).

Had it been supposed at the bar that this court would, in any case, interpose, by injunction, to prevent the execution of an unconstitutional act of Congress, it can hardly be doubted that applications with that object would have been heretofore addressed to it. Occasions have not been wanting. The constitutionality of the act for the annexation of Texas was vehemently denied. It made important and permanent changes in the relative importance of states and sections, and was by many supposed to be pregnant with disastrous results to large interests in particular states. But no one seems to have thought of an application for an injunction against the execution of the act by the President. And yet it is difficult to perceive upon what principle the application now before us can be allowed and similar applications in that and other cases have been denied. The fact that no such application was ever before made in any case indicates the general judgment of the profession that no such application should be entertained.

It will hardly be contended that Congress can interpose, in any case, to restrain the enactment of an unconstitutional law; and yet how can the right to judicial interposition to prevent such an enactment, when the purpose is evident and the execution of that purpose certain, be distinguished, in principle, from the right to such interposition against the execution of such a law by the President? The Congress is the legislative department of the government; the President is the executive department. Neither can be restrained in its action by the judicial department; though the acts of both, when performed, are, in proper cases, subject to its cognizance.

The impropriety of such interference will be clearly seen upon consideration of its possible consequences. Suppose the bill filed and the injunction prayed for allowed. If the President refuse obedience, it is needless to observe that the court is without power to enforce its process. If, on the other hand, the President complies with the order of the court and refuses to execute the acts of Congress, is it not clear that a collision may occur between the executive and legislative departments of the government? May not the House of Representatives impeach the President for such refusal? And in that case could this court interfere, in behalf of the President, thus endangered by compliance with its mandate, and restrain by injunction the Senate of the United States from sitting as a court of impeachment? Would the strange spectacle be offered to the public world of an attempt by this court to arrest proceedings in that court? These questions answer themselves.

It is true that a state may file an original bill in this court. And it may be true, in some cases, that such a bill may be filed against the United States. But we are fully satisfied that this court has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties; and that no such bill ought to be received by us.

It has been suggested that the bill contains a prayer that, if the relief sought cannot be had against Andrew Johnson, as President, it may be granted against Andrew Johnson as a citizen of Tennessee. But it is plain that relief as against the execution of an act of Congress by Andrew Johnson, is relief against its execution by the President. A bill praying an injunction against the execution of an act of Congress by the incumbent of the presidential office cannot be received, whether it describes him as President or as a citizen of a state.

Motion denied.³

³ No officer, of whatever rank, can be compelled by mandamus to do a discretionary act, United States ex rel. Dunlap v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 Sup. Ct. 12, 32 L. Ed. 354 (1888); nor can an officer of the state or federal executive department be controlled by either mandamus or injunction as to acts of a political or executive character not invading private rights of person or property, Georgia v. Stanton, ante, p. 106; Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641, 651, 17 Pac. 162, 167 (1888), where Valentine, J., said: "No court ever attempts, by either injunction or mandamus, or by any other action or proceeding, to control legislative, judicial, executive, or political, discretion; and never indeed attempts to control any pure legislative, judicial, or executive act of any kind, nor pure discretion of any kind, except when a superior court, on appeal, reviews a decision of an inferior court."

See, also, In re Legislative Adjournment, 18 R. I. 824, 27 Atl. 324, 22 L. R. A. 716 (1893), as to sole power of executive to decide constitutional questions addressed to his judgment (cases).

If there be an official duty to exercise discretion this will be enforced, at least against all but the chief executive, though the mode of its exercise will not be prescribed. Attorney General v. Taggart, 66 N. H. 362, 370, 371, 29 Atl. 1027, 25 L. R. A. 613 (1890) (cases) (person entitled to governorship mandated to assume office); Interstate Commerce Commission v. U. S. ex rel. Humbolt S. S. Co., 224 U. S. 474, 484, 32 Sup. Ct. 556, 56 L. Ed. 849 (1912).

It is very generally held that officers below the chief executive (of state or United States) may be mandamus to perform ministerial duties, United States ex rel. Dunlap v. Black, above, and Martin v. Ingham, above (38 Kan. 649, 17 Pac. 162), and may be enjoined from invading private rights by illegal acts, Ellingham v. Dye (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1, 25, 26 (1912).

As to mandamus against the governor to perform ministerial duties, there is a conflict; the weight of authority being against it. See 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750, and 3 Mich. L. Rev. 631, collecting cases. The leading cases for and against are, perhaps, Martin v. Ingham, above, and People ex rel. Sutherland v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 89 (1874). Mandamus to compel interstate rendition was denied in Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 16 L. Ed. 717 (1861) [but see comment in Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 347, 348, 25 L. Ed. 676 (1880) under fourteenth amendment].

The federal courts have frequently enjoined governors, as members of state boards, Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. Ed. 447 (1873); Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 531, 23 L. Ed. 623 (1876); Relston v. Missouri Fund Com'rs, 120 U. S. 390, 7 Sup. Ct. 599, 30 L. Ed. 721 (1887); Pennoyer v. McCaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363 (1891); as have also state courts in Mott v. Pa. R. Co., 36 Pa. 9, 33, 72 Am. Dec. 664 (1858) (semble), and Ellingham v. Dye, above, 99 N. E. at pages 23-26.

Contra: Frost v. Thomas, 26 Colo. 222, 56 Pac. 899, 77 Am. St. Rep. 259 (1899); State ex rel. Attorney General v. Huston, 27 Okl. 606, 610, 614, 113 Pac. 190, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380 (1910); Bates v. Taylor, 87 Tenn. 319, 11 S. W. 266, 3 E. R. A. 316 (1889) (suggesting a difference in this regard between the powers of state and federal courts) [but compare Kentucky v. Dennison, above].

In United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 208, 209, 220, 1 Sup. Ct. 240, 27 L. Ed. 171 (1882), Miller, J., said:

"The citizen here knows no person, however near to those in power, or however powerful himself, to whom he need yield the rights which the law secures to him when it is well administered. When he, in one of the courts

McCHORD v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. (1902) 183 U. S. 483, 495-497, 22 Sup. Ct. 165, 46 L. Ed. 289, Mr. Chief Justice FULLER (reversing a federal Circuit Court decree enjoining the Kentucky Railroad Commission from fixing rates under a state statute alleged to be unconstitutional):

"The fixing of rates is essentially legislative in its character, and the general rule is that legislative action cannot be interfered with by injunction. * * *

"In New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 482, 17 Sup. Ct. 161, 165, 41 L. Ed. 518, 524, the general rule was stated and applied, and Mr. Justice Harlan who delivered the opinion of the court, said: 'We repeat that when the city council shall pass an ordinance that infringes the rights of the plaintiff, and is unconstitutional and void as impairing the obligation of its contract with the state, it will be time enough for equity to interfere, and by injunction prevent the execution of such ordinance.' * * *

"The rule was also applied by Mr. Justice Field in Alpers v. San Francisco (C. C.) 32 Fed. 503, where complainant sought an injunction to restrain the passage of an ordinance which he alleged would impair the obligation of a contract he had with the city. Mr. Justice Field said: 'This no one will question as applied to the power of the legislature of the state. The suggestion of any such jurisdiction of the court over that body would not be entertained for a moment. The same exemption from judicial interference applies to all legislative bodies, so far as their legislative discretion extends. * * * The courts cannot in the one case forbid the passage of a law nor in the other the passage of a resolution, order, or ordinance. If by either body, the legislature or the board of supervisors, an unconstitutional act be passed, its enforcement may be arrested. The parties seeking to execute the invalid of competent jurisdiction, has established his right to property, there is no reason why deference to any person, natural or artificial, not even the United States, should prevent him from using the means which the law gives him for the protection and enforcement of that right. * * * No man in this country is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity. All the officers of the government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it. It is the only supreme power in our system of government, and every man who by accepting office participates in its functions is only the more strongly bound to submit to that supremacy, and to observe the limitations which it imposes upon the exercise of the authority which it gives."

As to the judicial power to subpoena a chief executive to give testimony, see Appeal of Hartranft, 85 Pa. 433, 27 Am. Rep. 667 (1877) (cases); Martin v. Ingham, above, 38 Kan. at pp. 655, 660, 17 Pac. 162.

In a few states the immunity of the governor from judicial control is extended to the officers of the executive department (see cases cited in Martin v. Ingham, above, 38 Kan. at page 650, 17 Pac. 162); but the difficulty of maintaining this position is illustrated by the decisions reviewed in State ex rel. Kinsella v. Eberhart, 116 Minn. 313, 133 N. W. 857, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 785 (1911) (certiorari finally allowed against governor).

act can be reached by the courts, while the legislative body of the state or of the municipality, in the exercise of its legislative discretion, is beyond their jurisdiction. The fact that in either case the legislative action threatened may be in disregard of constitutional restraints, and impair the obligation of a contract, as alleged in this case, does not affect the question. It is legislative discretion which is exercised and that discretion, whether rightfully or wrongfully exercised, is not subject to interference by the judiciary.'"¹

SECTION 2.—DELEGATION OF POWERS

OPINION OF THE JUSTICES.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1894. 160 Mass. 586, 36 N. E. 488, 23 L. Ed. 113.)

[Advisory opinions given in response to the following questions asked by the state House of Representatives: "(1) Is it constitutional, in an act granting to women the right to vote in town and city elections, to provide that such act shall take effect throughout the commonwealth upon its acceptance by a majority vote of the voters of the whole commonwealth? (2) Is it constitutional to provide in such an act that it shall take effect in a city or town upon its acceptance by a majority vote of the voters of such city or town? (3) Is it constitutional, in an act granting to women the right to vote in town and city elections, to provide that such an act shall take effect throughout the commonwealth upon its acceptance by a majority vote of the voters of the whole commonwealth, including women specially authorized to register and to vote on this question alone?"]

FIELD, C. J., and ALLEN, MORTON, and LATHROP, JJ. * * * The Constitution of Massachusetts was framed after much public discussion, and after 9 of the original 13 states had established Constitutions.

¹ Accord: See cases collected in 13 L. R. A. 844, note. Compare Ellingham v. Dye, ante, p. 11, and State v. Thorson, ante, p. 17, note. For qualifications of the general rule, see Spring Valley Water Works v. Barillett (C. C.) 16 Fed. 615 (1883), and Roberts v. City of Louisville, 92 Ky. 95, 17 S. W. 216, 13 L. R. A. 844 (1891).

Of course the legislature itself may not be compelled by courts to discharge its constitutional duties, no matter of what character, Turnbull v. Giddings, 95 Mich. 314, 54 N. W. 887, 19 L. R. A. 853 (1893) (make journal entries); People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 475, 40 N. E. 307 (1895) (pass apportionment act); nor can its officers be mandamusd to perform discretionary acts, Ex parte Echols, 39 Ala. 698, 88 Am. Dec. 749 (1866); though they may be to perform ministerial duties, State ex rel. Benton v. Elder, 31 Neb. 169, 47 N. W. 710, 10 L. R. A. 796 (1891) (publish election returns).

The opinions of some of the men engaged in framing these Constitutions are well known. John Adams took a principal part in framing the Constitution of Massachusetts, and his opinions upon government, both before and after its adoption, are found in his published works. The characteristic feature of all these Constitutions is that they establish a government by representatives of the people, and not a government directly by the people. This was the kind of government to which the people were accustomed. All hereditary offices having been abolished, so far as they ever existed in any of the colonies, and appointments to office by the British crown having ceased at the time of the Revolution, the chief executive officers and the members of both branches of the legislature, where there were two branches, were to be elected by the people. But the model adopted was in other respects the English form of government. While a purely democratic form of government existed in the towns of New England, few if any persons seem to have been in favor of such a form of government for the state.

By the Constitution of Massachusetts, as originally adopted, not only were the powers of the representatives of the people limited, but the powers of the people themselves were limited. The people limited their right to vote by requiring for the electors of state officers certain qualifications, among which was a low property qualification. They required, in the persons to be voted for, higher qualifications. * * * They provided for annual elections, and they declared that "the people of this commonwealth are not controllable by any other laws than those to which their constitutional representative body have given their consent." Declaration of Rights, art. 10. * * *

But there is nothing in any part of the Constitution which tends to show that the people desired that any law should ever be submitted to them for approval or rejection. The only expression of this kind relates to the manner of collecting the sentiments of the people in the year 1795, "on the necessity or expediency of revising the Constitution, in order to amendments," found in Const. Mass. c. 6, art. 10. They indeed declared that "all power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government, vested with authority, whether legislative, executive, or judicial, are their substitutes and agents, and are at all times accountable to them" (Declaration of Rights, art. 5); but they provided for no appeal to themselves from any legislative, executive, or judicial act. They apparently relied upon frequent elections, when the officers were elective; upon the right of meeting and consulting upon the common good; upon the right to petition and of instructing their representatives; upon impeachment; and upon the right of reforming, altering, and totally changing the form of government, when the protection, safety, prosperity, and happiness of the people required it. Id. art. 7. Apparently, it was thought that the persons selected for the executive, legislative, and judicial offices, in the manner prescribed in the Constitution, would be men of good character and intelligence, of some experience in affairs, and of some independence of judgment, and would have a better opportunity of obtaining information, taking part in discussion, and carefully considering conflicting opinions, than the people themselves; and the people therefore put the responsibility of carrying on the government upon their representatives. * * *

The Constitutions of the different states resemble one another in many of their principal provisions, and it generally has been held, whenever the subject has come before the courts, that the legislative power cannot be delegated by the legislature to any other body or authority, and that the people themselves have not retained this power, except where they have expressly provided for it.¹ It is true that a general law can be passed by the legislature, to take effect upon the happening of a subsequent event.² Whether this subsequent event can be the adoption of the law by a vote of the people has occasioned some differences of opinion, but the weight of authority is that a general law cannot be made to take effect in this manner.³ Whether such legislation is submitted to the people as a proposal for a law, to be voted upon by them, and to become a law if they approve it, or, as a law, to take effect if they vote to approve it, the substance of the transaction is that the legislative department declines to take the responsibility of passing the law; but the law has force, if at all, in consequence of the votes of the people. They, ultimately, are the legislators. It seems to us that by the Constitution the senate and the house of representatives have been made the legislative department of the government, and that there has not been reserved to the people any direct part in legislation. The various amendments made to the Constitution since its adop-

¹ Accord (submission of general legislation to popular vote): Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 506 (1853); Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 165, 63 Am. Dec. 487 (1856); State ex rel. Pearson v. Hayes, 61 N. H. 264 (1881); Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 17 Am. Rep. 425 (1874); 23 L. R. A. 113, note (cases).

Contra: State v. Parker, 26 Vt. 357 (1854); Smith v. City of Janesville, 26 Wis. 291 (1870), affirmed in State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear, 142 Wis. 320, 125 N. W. 961, 20 Ann. Cas. 633 (1910).

² The determination of the occurrence of such event may be delegated to such officers as the legislature may designate, even though such determination may require the exercise of much judgment. The Brig Aurora, 7 Cranch, 382, 3 L. Ed. 378 (1813); Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 680-691, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294 (1892) (tariff made dependent upon determination of President that duties of other countries on products of United States are unreasonable). See In re Oliver, 17 Wis. 681 (1864).

In State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 550 ff., 9 N. W. 737 (1881), it was denied that legislation could be made dependent upon the opinion of a special non-judicial tribunal as to its constitutionality.

³ See the arguments upon this point in People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 313, 354-356, 380-381, 408-412, 418-420, 425-427 (1854), by an evenly divided court. As to legislation made contingent upon the future adoption of a constitutional amendment enlarging the powers of the legislature, see Pratt v. Allen, 13 Conn. 119, 128 (1839); Etchison Drilling Co. v. Flournoy, 59 South. 867, 871 (1912, La.). As to legislation made dependent, either as to taking effect or as to extent of operation, upon the future legislative action of another jurisdiction, see People v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380 (1883) (retaliatory legislation).

tion have not changed its character in this respect. By article 2 and article 9 of amendments to the Constitution an act constituting a town or towns a city government can be passed only with the consent of the inhabitants of such town or towns; and specific amendments to the Constitution, proposed by the general court, must be submitted to the qualified voters of the commonwealth. A city charter resembles a state Constitution in this: that the government of the town is made by the charter a representative government; and it was originally declared that the people alone have a right to institute government, and to change it. Declaration of Rights, art. 7. These amendments, as well as the other amendments, to the Constitution, indicate no intention of having laws submitted to the people for adoption or rejection.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the first question should be answered in the negative.

The second question requires additional consideration. There have been laws, from the earliest times, which delegated legislative powers to the inhabitants of towns, or permitted legislative powers to be exercised by such inhabitants over subjects which were declared proper for municipal control. Laws conferring additional powers on towns or cities have been passed, and made to take effect in any town or city upon acceptance by the qualified voters of the town or city, or of the city council. Some examples are found in Pub. St. c. 27, §§ 13, 27, 65, 74. Special laws have been passed, conferring special powers on particular towns or cities, and general laws have been passed which relate to towns and cities having a certain population; and the consent of the inhabitants of a city or town, sometimes, has been required, before certain special powers can be used. See Pub. St. c. 44, §§ 2, 7; Id. c. 54, § 13; St. 1887, c. 411, § 92; St. 1891, c. 370. These statutes, in general, relate to local affairs, or to what has been called "police regulations." In Stone v. City of Charlestown, 114 Mass. 214, it was decided that a statute was constitutional which united two municipalities, and provided that the act should not take effect unless accepted by the voters of the respective municipalities. It was said: "Amid all the diversity of opinion upon the much-vexed question how far statutes may be made contingent upon being accepted by popular vote, without violating the principle that legislative power cannot be delegated, there is a complete harmony of adjudication in favor of the authority of the legislature, unless controlled by a special constitutional provision upon the subject, to submit statutes dividing or uniting counties or towns, or establishing or enlarging a city, to a vote of the inhabitants of the territory immediately affected."

There has been some conflict of authority upon the constitutionality of what are called "local option laws," which have been principally laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, but they have been held to be constitutional by a majority of the courts which have considered them. They have been held to be constitutional in this commonwealth. Com. v. Bennett, 108 Mass. 27. In that case it is said:

"It has been argued in other cases, which have been brought before the court since the argument of the present case, that these statutes are unconstitutional, because they delegate to cities and towns a part of the legislative power. But we can see no ground for such a position. Many successive statutes of the commonwealth have made the lawfulness of sales of intoxicating liquors to depend upon licenses from the selectmen of towns or commissioners of counties, and such statutes have been held to be constitutional. 7 Dane, Abr. 43, 44; Com. v. Blackington, 24 Pick. 352. It is equally within the power of the legislature to authorize a town, by vote of the inhabitants, or a city, by vote of the city council, to determine whether the sale of particular kinds of liquors within its limits shall be permitted or prohibited. This subject, although not embraced within the ordinary power to make by-laws and ordinances, falls within the class of police regulations, which may be intrusted by the legislature, by express enactment, to municipal authority."

Certainly, it is a difficult question to determine how far the principle of local option can be carried, and to what subjects it can be applied. An act granting to women the right to vote in town and city elections does not relate to the powers of towns and cities, which in some respects may well be different in different towns and cities, on account of the number, wealth, and pursuits of the inhabitants. Such an act relates solely to the persons who should be invested with a share of political power. Whether women should be permitted to vote in town and city elections seems to us a matter of general, and not of local, concern. There is nothing in the history of Massachusetts which tends to show that the right to vote in towns and cities on town and city affairs has ever been regarded as a matter of police regulation, or of merely local interest, or as a right which might be granted or withheld by a licensing board. It always has been determined by the legislature by a general law, in force uniformly throughout the commonwealth.

Article 9 of the Declaration of Rights declares that "all elections ought to be free; and all the inhabitants of this commonwealth, having such qualifications as they shall establish by their frame of government, have an equal right to elect officers, and to be elected, for public employments." This, in terms, is confined to elections in which the qualifications of the electors and of the persons to be elected are established by the frame of government; but the principle declared has, up to the present time, always been adopted by the legislature, in passing laws relating to the right to vote in the election of town and city officers. The qualified voters in towns in this commonwealth, and their representatives in cities, are possessed of a large measure of political power. They have the taxing power for all municipal purposes, and it is well known that the amount of the city or town tax of any person usually exceeds that of his state and county tax. The tax is imposed on all the inhabitants in the town or city liable to be taxed, and on all the real property situated within the town or city, whether owned by residents or nonresidents. The power of taxation is one of the essential and fundamental powers of government. It certainly would constitute an anomaly heretofore never known in this commonwealth, if, in some cities and towns, women were permitted to vote on questions which concern taxation, and in other cities and towns were not permitted. The question, we think, comes to this: Whether the legislature, constitutionally, can delegate to the qualified voters of the inhabitants of a city or town the power of granting or refusing to grant to women who are inhabitants the right to vote in city and town affairs. We are not aware that, in any of the states where statutes have been passed conferring suffrage or municipal suffrage upon women, the principle of local option has been adopted in such statutes. * * *

Considering the nature of the power intended to be conferred, the history of legislation on the subject from the earliest times, and the language of the Constitution, we are of opinion that, if a law is to be enacted such as the question contemplates, it must operate uniformly throughout the commonwealth, and that the second question should be answered in the negative.

For the reasons hereinbefore given, without considering others which might be suggested, the third question should be answered in the negative.

HOLMES, J. It is assumed in the questions that the legislature has power to grant women the right to vote in town and city elections. I see no reason to doubt that it has that power.

1. I admit that the Constitution establishes a representative government, not a pure democracy. It establishes a general court, which is to be the law-making power. But the question is whether it puts a limit upon the power of that body to make laws. In my opinion, the legislature has the whole law-making power, except so far as the words of the Constitution, expressly or impliedly, withhold it; and I think that, in construing the Constitution, we should remember that it is a frame of government for men of opposite opinions, and for the future, and therefore not hastily import into it our own views, or unexpressed limitations derived merely from the practice of the past. I ask myself, as the only question, what words express or imply that a power to pass a law subject to rejection by the people is withheld? I find none which do so. The question is not whether the people of their own motion could pass a law without any act of the legislature. That, no doubt, whether valid or not, would be outside the Constitution. So, perhaps, might be a statute purporting to confer the power of making laws upon them. But the question, put in a form to raise the fewest technical objections, is whether an act of the legislature is made unconstitutional by a proviso that, if rejected by the people, it shall not go into effect. If it does go into effect, it does so by the express enactment of the representative body. I see no evidence in the instrument that this question ever occurred to the framers of the Constitution. It is but a short step further to say that the Constitution does not forbid such a law. I agree that the discretion of the legislature is intended to be exercised. I agree that confidence is put in it as an agent. But I think that so much confidence is put in it that it is allowed to exercise its discretion by taking the opinion of its principal, if it thinks that course to be wise. It has been asked whether the legislature could pass an act subject to the approval of a single man. I am not clear that it could not. The objection, if sound, would seem to have equal force against all forms of local option. But I will consider the question when it arises. The difference is plain between that case and one where the approval required is that of the sovereign body. The contrary view seems to me an echo of Hobbes' theory that the surrender of sovereignty by the people was final. I notice that the case from which most of the reasoning against the power of the legislature has been taken by later decisions states that theory in language which almost is borrowed from the Leviathan. Rice v. Foster, 4 Har. (Del.) 479, 488. Hobbes urged his notion in the interest of the absolute power of King Charles I, and one of the objects of the Constitution of Massachusetts was to deny it. I answer the first question, "Yes." I may add that, while the tendency of judicial decision seems to be in the other direction, such able judges as Chief Justices Parker, of Massachusetts, Dixon, of Wisconsin, Redfield, of Vermont, and Cooley, of Michigan, have expressed opinions like mine.

2. If the foregoing view of the power of the legislature is right, I am of opinion that the second question also should be answered, "Yes." I find nothing which forbids the legislature to establish a local option upon this point, any more than with regard to the liquor laws. Under the circumstances, I do not argue this or the following question at length.

3. The act suggested by the third question is open to the seeming objection that it might take a part of their power out of the hands of the present possessors, without their assent, except as given by their representatives. But if, as I believe, the legislature could give to women the right to vote, if they accepted it by a preliminary vote, and could impose as a second condition that the grant should not be rejected by the voters of the commonwealth, I do not see why it might not combine the two conditions into one, although, as a result, the grant might become a law against the will of a majority of the male voters. I answer this question, also, "Yes."

KNOWLTON, J. * * * [After answering questions 1 and 3 in the negative, on the ground that the legislature could no more shift to the people the responsibility of deciding that a law should be enacted than that the governor could thus shift the pardoning power or the courts the power of deciding cases:†]

† That judicial power cannot be delegated by the possessor of it, see Runkle v. United States, 122 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 1141, 30 L. Ed. 1167 (1887) (court-martial).

This is the rule in regard to what is strictly legislation,—that is to say, the enactment of general laws for the people of a state,—but it is very generally held that a legislature may submit to the voters of towns and cities questions which are local in their nature, or which have in them a local element, such as to make it proper that they should be dealt with differently in different places. This rule prevails in Massachusetts. * * *

The doctrine on which these statutes are founded is not that the legislature may delegate legislative authority,—that is, authority to enact laws for all the people of the commonwealth,—but that it may submit to the voters of a city or town the right to vote on any question which may affect their interests differently from the interests of those in other parts of the commonwealth. In doing this, the legislature recognizes the principle of local self-government, which has always been a distinctive feature of our New England system.

Voting, in city and town elections, is simply a part of the management of the city's or town's business. It can in no way affect the state at large. The legislature may give cities and towns as large liberty as it chooses in regard to any question which is local. If the education, or experience in business, or wealth, of women, as compared with that of men, or the relative number of women and men, differs materially in different municipalities, so as to make the considerations properly to be regarded in favor of allowing women to vote in town elections much stronger in one town than in another, the legislature may leave to the voters of the town the question whether they will extend municipal suffrage to women. I think the legislature may find great differences in different parts of the commonwealth in regard to the desirability of the proposed change, and that the question to be considered is, in part at least, a local one. * * *

BARKER, J. [Answering all questions, yes, and referring to last question:] * * * Nor is it, to my mind, an objection to the validity of a law so framed that the body whose further assent is required is composed in part of inhabitants other than qualified voters. In the case of acts of incorporation the members of the voting body need not be even inhabitants, and yet without their assent the act is not law, and with their assent it is law.⁵ * * *

⁵ But see the distinction between the validity of popular assent to proffered acts of incorporation, or to authority to tax or to make contracts or to do administrative acts, and a similar assent to legislative acts prescribing rules of conduct, discussed in People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343, 378-380 (1854); City of San Antonio v. Jones, 28 Tex. 19, 32 (1866); Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 508, 13 Am. Rep. 716 (1873).

LOCAL OPTION LEGISLATION.—The principle of local option legislation is generally upheld without express constitutional authorization.

"We may concede that the lawmaking body of the state is not authorized to submit to a popular vote of the state the question whether or not an act proposed by it shall become a law. This court has so held in a number of cases. * * * But while this is so, it does not follow by any means that the lawmaking body may not reserve to the electors of a subdivision of the state—included within the intended scope of operation on an act designed to have effect upon local government conditions—the right to determine on popular vote whether or not they will advantage themselves of the act. If an act in question is complete in itself, and requires nothing further to give it validity as a legislative act, it is not vulnerable to attack on constitutional grounds simply because the limits of its operation are made to depend upon a vote of the people.”—Bishop, J., in Eckerson v. City of Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 452, 478, 115 N. W. 177 (1908) (option to adopt commission form of city government). The cases and arguments on both sides of the question are fully collected in State ex rel. Witter v. Forkner, 94 Iowa, 1, 62 N. W. 772, 28 L. R. A. 206 (1895), and Fouts v. Hood River, 46 Or. 492, 81 Pac. 370, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 7 Ann. Cas. 1160 (1905). See, also, the elaborate opinions in People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343 (1854).

UNITED STATES v. GRIMAUD.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1910. 220 U. S. 506, 31 Sup. Ct. 480, 55 L. Ed. 563.)

[Error to the federal District Court for the Southern District of California. Congress passed various acts for the establishment and management of forest reservations upon the public lands, but permitting the entry of persons for lawful purposes, provided that they complied with the rules and regulations covering such reservations (30 Stat. 36—1897). It was also provided (30 Stat. 35) that the Secretary of Agriculture may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservation:

Nor is such legislation generally held to violate constitutional prohibitions against special legislation. Adams v. City of Beloit, 105 Wis. 363, 81 N. W. 869, 47 L. R. A. 441 (1900); Cole v. Dorr, 80 Kan. 251, 101 Pac. 1016, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534 (1909). See, however, the distinctions taken in State ex rel. Childs v. Copeland, 66 Minn. 315, 69 N. W. 27, 34 L. R. A. 777, 61 Am. St. Rep. 410 (1896).

LEGISLATIVE POWER OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—“It is a cardinal principle of our system of government, that local affairs shall be managed by local authorities, and general affairs by the central authority; and hence, while the rule is also fundamental that the power to make laws cannot be delegated, the creation of municipalities exercising local self-government has never been held to trench upon that rule. Such legislation is not regarded as a transfer of general legislative power, but rather as the grant of the authority to prescribe local regulations, according to immemorial practice, subject, of course, to the interposition of the superior in cases of necessity.”—Fuller, C. J., in Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 147, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637 (1889) (Dist. of Columbia). Congress has generally given the legislatures of the organized territories “powers * * * nearly as extensive as those exercised by any state legislature.” Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. 648, 655, 656, 21 L. Ed. 966 (1874). The wide discretionary power of local self-government that may be vested in municipal subdivisions of the state is often frankly recognized as an historical exception to the general rule that the substance of legislative power may not be delegated. Fox v. McDonald, 101 Ala. 51, 67-68, 13 South. 416, 21 L. R. A. 529, 46 Am. St. Rep. 98 (1892); Brodline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 600, 66 N. E. 607 (1903).

The form that local municipal government may take is a matter of legislative discretion. It may be representative, a pure democracy, or by appointed boards or officers.

“The provision for the so-called initiative and referendum in regard to the adoption of ordinances is not unconstitutional. Legislation in towns, by by-laws, in regard to subjects strictly of local concern, has been a part of the law of Massachusetts from the earliest times. Opinions of the Justices, 160 Mass. 586, 590, 36 N. E. 488, 23 L. R. A. 113. Whether such legislation shall be inaugurated by the people, or entirely by a representative body or board of namely, to regulate their occupancy and use, and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction; and any violation of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations shall be punished, as provided in R. S. U. S. § 5388. The defendants were indicted for grazing sheep on the Sierra Forest Reserve without having obtained the permission required by the regulations adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture. They demurred on the ground that the making of such regulations could not be delegated to the Secretary and their violation made a penal offense. The demurrers were sustained, and this judgment was at first affirmed by the Supreme Court by a divided vote. Upon a rehearing the following opinion was given:]

Mr. Justice LAMAR. * * * Under these acts, therefore, any use of the reservation for grazing or other lawful purpose was re-

officers, is a matter of regulation in regard to which our Constitution is silent. It is therefore for the General Court to determine by enactment. The provisions of the Constitution which forbid the adoption of the so-called initiative and referendum in general legislation do not extend to the making of by-laws and ordinances by towns or cities under the authority of the Legislature, in regard to subjects of local concern. Opinions of the Justices, 160 Mass. 586, 589, 36 N. E. 488, 23 L. R. A. 113.—Graham v. Roberts, 200 Mass. 152, 158, 85 N. E. 1009 (1908), by Knowlton, C. J. Accord: Clarke v. City of Rochester, 28 N. Y. 605, 634 (1864); In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 88 Pac. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 11 Ann. Cas. 911 (1906); Dorr v. United States, 195 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697 (1904) (Philippine Commission); United States v. Heinszen, 206 U. S. 370, 384, 385, 27 Sup. Ct. 742, 51 L. Ed. 1098, 11 Ann. Cas. 688 (1907) (President). See, also, Brodhine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 596, 600, 601, 66 N. E. 607 (1903). Contra: Ex parte Farnsworth, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 342, 135 S. W. 538 (1911) (local initiative and referendum).

In principle, the above doctrine seems to include all forms of local option legislation, as has been judicially observed by Deemer, J., in State ex rel. Witter v. Forkner, 94 Iowa, 1, 13, 62 N. W. 772, 28 L. R. A. 206 (1895), quoting with approval from Cooley, Const. Lim. 144, 145 (6th Ed.): "The same reason would apply in favor of permitting the people of the locality to accept or reject for themselves a particular police regulation, since this is only allowing less extensive powers of local government than a municipal charter would confer; and the fact that the rule of law on that subject might be different in different localities, according as the people accepted or rejected the regulation, would not seem to affect the principle, when the same result is brought about by the different regulations which municipal corporations establish for themselves in the exercise of an undisputed authority."

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.—Apart from express constitutional provisions to the contrary, it is generally held that the delegation of powers of local self-government is wholly within the discretion of the legislature and may be abridged or abrogated at its pleasure. People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, 543-546 (1857); State v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 348, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829 (1886); Commonwealth v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 383-387, 19 N. E. 224, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566 (1889); Commonwealth v. Moir, 199 Pa. 534, 49 Atl. 351, 53 L. R. A. 837, 85 Am. St. Rep. 801 (1901); Redell v. Moores, 63 Neb. 219, 88 N. W. 243, 55 L. R. A. 740, 93 Am. St. Rep. 431 (1901); Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151 (1907). Contra (as to strictly local functions): People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103 (1871); State ex rel. Jameson v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 21 N. E. 252, 4 L. R. A. 79 (1888). See cases collected in 13 Harv. L. Rev. 441, 570, 638; 14 Harv. L. Rev. 20, 116; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 468; 48 L. R. A. 465 ff.; 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 512 ff. The entire subject is discussed in Gray, Lim. of Taxing Power, §§ 616-630a. The federal Constitution secures no rights of local self-government to state municipalities. Hunter v. Pittsburgh, above. As to taxation, see Kelly v. Pittsburgh, post, p. 410, note.

quired to be subject to the rules and regulations established by the Secretary of Agriculture. To pasture sheep and cattle on the reservation, at will and without restraint, might interfere seriously with the accomplishment of the purposes for which they were established. But a limited and regulated use for pasturage might not be inconsistent with the object sought to be attained by the statute. The determination of such questions, however, was a matter of administrative detail. What might be harmless in one forest might be harmful to another. What might be injurious at one stage of timber growth, or at one season of the year, might not be so at another.

In the nature of things it was impracticable for Congress to provide general regulations for these various and varying details of management. Each reservation had its peculiar and special features; and in authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to meet these local conditions, Congress was merely conferring administrative functions upon an agent, and not delegating to him legislative power. The authority actually given was much less than what has been granted to municipalities by virtue of which they make by-laws, ordinances, and regulations for the government of towns and cities. Such ordinances do not declare general rules with reference to rights of persons and property, nor do they create or regulate obligations and liabilities, nor declare what shall be crimes, nor fix penalties therefor.¹

By whatever name they are called, they refer to matters of local management and local police. Brodvine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 599, 66 N. E. 607. They are "not of a legislative character in the highest sense of the term; and as an owner may delegate to his principal agent the right to employ subordinates, giving to them a limited discretion, so it would seem that Congress might rightfully intrust to the local legislature [authorities] the determination of minor matters." Butte City Water Co. v. Baker, 196 U. S. 126, 25 Sup. Ct. 211, 49 L. Ed. 412.²

It must be admitted that it is difficult to define the line which separates legislative power to make laws, from administrative authority to make regulations. This difficulty has often been recognized, and was referred to by Chief Justice Marshall in Wayman v. Southard,

¹ But Congress has ordinarily delegated to territorial legislatures general legislative powers. See Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637 (1890) (denying suffrage to polygamists); New Mexico ex rel. McLean v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 203 U. S. 38, 27 Sup. Ct. 1, 51 L. Ed. 78 (1906) (penal regulation of interstate commerce); Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654 (1888) (legislative divorce); Ex parte Larkin, 1 Okl. 52, 25 Pac. 745, 11 L. R. A. 418 (1891) (general power to define and punish crime), approved in United States v. Pridgeon, 153 U. S. 48, 53, 54, 14 Sup. Ct. 746, 38 L. Ed. 631 (1894).

² Holding that Congress might delegate to the miners of a district or to state legislatures power to make regulations for locating mines upon the public domain. See, also, Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 181, 22 Sup. Ct. 857, 46 L. Ed. 1113 (1902) (Congress may give effect to local exemption laws in the national bankruptcy act). Compare Ex parte Siebold, post, p. 912; Second Employers' Liability Cases, post, p. 953, note.

10 Wheat. 42, 6 L. Ed. 262, where he was considering the authority of courts to make rules.³ He there said: "It will not be contended that Congress can delegate to the courts, or to any other tribunals, powers which are strictly and exclusively legislative. But Congress may certainly delegate to others powers which the legislature may rightfully exercise itself." What were these non-legislative powers which Congress could exercise, but which might also be delegated to others, was not determined, for he said: "The line has not been exactly drawn which separates those important subjects which must be entirely regulated by the legislature itself, from those of less interest, in which a general provision may be made, and power given to those who are to act under such general provisions to fill up the details."

From the beginning of the government, various acts have been passed conferring upon executive officers power to make rules and regulations,—not for the government of their departments, but for administering the laws which did govern. None of these statutes could confer legislative power. But when Congress had legislated and indicated its will, it could give to those who were to act under such general provisions "power to fill up the details" by the establishment of administrative rules and regulations, the violation of which could be punished by fine or imprisonment fixed by Congress, or by penalties fixed by Congress, or measured by the injury done.

Thus it is unlawful to charge unreasonable rates or to discriminate between shippers, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given authority to make reasonable rates and to administer the law against discrimination. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co., 215 U. S. 452, 30 Sup. Ct. 155, 54 L. Ed. 280; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 218 U. S. 88, 30 Sup. Ct. 651, 54 L. Ed. 946. Congress provided that after a given date, only cars with drawbars of uniform height should be used in interstate commerce, and then constitutionally left to the Commission the administrative duty of fixing a uniform standard. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 287, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 52 L. Ed. 1064. In Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523, in re Kollock, 165 U. S. 526, 17 Sup. Ct. 444, 41 L. Ed. 813, and Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 Sup. Ct. 349, 48 L. Ed. 525, it appeared from the statutes involved that Congress had either expressly or by necessary implication made it unlawful, if not criminal, to obstruct navigable streams; to sell unbranded oleomargarine; or to import unwholesome teas. With this unlawfulness as a predicate, the executive officers were authorized to make rules and regulations appropriate to the several matters covered by the various acts. A violation of these rules was then made an offense punishable as prescribed by Congress. But in making these regulations the officers did not legislate. They did not go outside of the circle of that which the act itself had affirmatively required to be done, or treated as unlawful if done. But confining themselves within the field covered by the statute, they could adopt regulations of the nature they had thus been generally authorized to make, in order to administer the law and carry the statute into effect.⁴ * * *

³ It was here held that the courts may be authorized to regulate their procedure

[After distinguishing the case of United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 36 L. Ed. 591:] In Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 386, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 533, Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, said: "By the statute in question, Congress declared in effect that navigation should be freed from unreasonable obstructions arising from bridges of insufficient height, width of span, or other defects. It stopped, however, with this declaration of a general rule, and imposed upon the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining what particular cases came within the rule prescribed by Congress, as well as the duty of enforcing the rule in such cases. In performing that duty the Secretary of War will only execute the clearly expressed will of Congress, and will not, in any true sense, exert legislative or judicial power." * * *

In Brodline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607, a boulevard and park board was given authority to make rules and regulations for the control and government of the roadways under its care. It was there held that the provision in the act that breaches of the rules thus made should be breaches of the peace, punishable in any court having jurisdiction, was not a delegation of legislative power which was unconstitutional. The court called attention to the fact that the punishment was not fixed by the board, saying that the making of the rules was administrative, while the substantive legislation was in the statute, which provided that they should be punished as breaches of the peace.⁵

That "Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution." Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 692, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 309. But the authority to make administrative rules is not a delegation of legislative power, nor are such rules raised from an administrative to a legislative character because the violation thereof is punished as a public offense. * * *

The Secretary of Agriculture could not make rules and regulations for any and every purpose. Williamson v. United States, 207 U. S.

⁴ Where the violation of administrative regulations is made criminal, such regulations "must have clear legislative basis." United States v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 22, 33 Sup. Ct. 412, 415, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

⁵ Accord: Pierce v. Doolittle, 130 Iowa, 333, 106 N. W. 751 (1906) (rules of board of health), annotated in 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143; Whaley v. State, 168 Ala. 152, 52 South. 941, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 499 (1909) (rules of street car companies regarding transfers) [compare Dicey, Law of the Const. (4th Ed.) 89-93].

462, 28 Sup. Ct. 163, 52 L. Ed. 297. As to those here involved, they all relate to matters clearly indicated and authorized by Congress. The subjects as to which the Secretary can regulate are defined. The lands are set apart as a forest reserve. He is required to make provision to protect them from depredations and from harmful uses. He is authorized "to regulate the occupancy and use and to preserve the forests from destruction." A violation of reasonable rules regulating the use and occupancy of the property is made a crime, not by the Secretary, but by Congress. The statute, not the Secretary, fixes the penalty. * * *

Judgments reversed.*

* Accord: Trustees of Village of Saratoga Springs v. Saratoga Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 191 N. Y. 123, 83 N. E. 693, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713 (1908) (excellent discussion of commission rate-making and related topics); State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 Fla. 617, 47 South. 969 (1908) (general regulation of carriers by commission), annotated in 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639.

For the limits of the discretion that may be thus delegated, see State v. Great Northern R. Co., 100 Minn. 445, 111 N. W. 289, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259 (1907) (undefined power to supervise increases of corporate stock); Hewitt v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 Pac. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750 (1906) (power to revoke physician's license); State v. Butler, 105 Me. 91, 73 Atl. 560, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 18 Ann. Cas. 484 (1909) (power to create office of special prosecutor) (cases).

Compare Senate of Happy Home Club of America v. Board of Sup'rs of Alpena Co., 99 Mich. 117, 57 N. W. 1101, 23 L. R. A. 144 (1891).

In Brodline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 601, 66 N. E. 607, 608 (1903), Knowlton, C. J., said (regarding the penal enforcement of rules made by local boards of health): "The validity of these statutes, which has long been recognized, stands upon one or both of two grounds: They may be considered as being within the principle permitting local self-government as to such matters; the board of health being treated as properly representing the inhabitants in making regulations, which often are needed at short notice, and which could not well be made, in all kinds of cases, by the voters in town meeting assembled. Perhaps some of these statutes may also be justified constitutionally on the ground that the work of the board of health is only a determination of details in the nature of administration, which may be by a board appointed for that purpose, and that the substantive legislation is that part of the statute which prescribes a penalty for the disobedience of the rules which they make as agents performing executive and administrative duties."

Compare with the cases in this section the British doctrine which permits a colonial legislature, clothed with limited powers under an act of Parliament, to delegate its powers at discretion. Reg. v. Burah, 3 A. C. 889 (1878) (India); Hodge v. Queen, 9 A. C. 117 (1883) (Canada); Powell v. Apollo Co., 10 A. C. 282 (1885) (New South Wales).

PART II

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

CHAPTER IV

POLITICAL RIGHTS

SECTION 1.—CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

UNITED STATES v. WONG KIM ARK.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.)

[Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. The collector of the port of San Francisco denied admission to the country to Wong Kim Ark, a Chinese person who was admitted to have been born in California and to be then returning from a temporary visit to China. He was ordered to be discharged upon a writ of habeas corpus, and the United States appealed.]

Mr. Justice GRAY. * * * The question presented by the record is whether a child born in the United States, of parents of Chinese descent, who at the time of his birth are subjects of the emperor of China, but have a permanent domicile and residence in the United States, and are there carrying on business, and are not employed in any diplomatic or official capacity under the emperor of China, becomes at the time of his birth a citizen of the United States, by virtue of the first clause of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside."

I. In construing any act of legislation, whether a statute enacted by the legislature, or a Constitution established by the people as the supreme law of the land, regard is to be had, not only to all parts of the act itself, and of any former act of the same lawmaking power, of which the act in question is an amendment, but also to the condition and to the history of the law as previously existing, and in the light of which the new act must be read and interpreted.

The Constitution of the United States, as originally adopted, uses the words "citizen of the United States" and "natural-born citizen of the United States." By the original Constitution, every representative in congress is required to have been "seven years a citizen of the United States," and every senator to have been "nine years a citizen of the United States"; and "no person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of president." The fourteenth article of amendment, besides declaring that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside," also declares that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." And the fifteenth article of amendment declares that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

The Constitution nowhere defines the meaning of these words, either by way of inclusion or of exclusion, except in so far as this is done by the affirmative declaration that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States." In this, as in other respects, it must be interpreted in the light of the common law, the principles and history of which were familiarly known to the framers of the Constitution. Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 422, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 624, 625, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508. The language of the Constitution, as has been well said, could not be understood without reference to the common law. 1 Kent, Comm. 336; Bradley, J., in Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270, 274, 23 L. Ed. 346. * * *

II. The fundamental principle of the common law with regard to English nationality was birth within the allegiance—also called "ligealty," "obedience," "faith," or "power"—of the king. The principle embraced all persons born within the king's allegiance, and subject to his protection. Such allegiance and protection were mutual,—as expressed in the maxim, "Protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectio protectionem,"—and were not restricted to natural-born subjects and naturalized subjects, or to those who had taken an oath of allegiance; but were predicable of aliens in amity, so long as they were within the kingdom. Children, born in England, of such aliens, were therefore natural-born subjects. But the children, born within the realm, of foreign ambassadors, or the children of alien enemies, born during and within their hostile occupation of part of the king's dominions, were not natural-born subjects, because not born within the allegiance, the obedience, or the power, or, as would be said at this day, within the jurisdiction, of the king.

This fundamental principle, with these qualifications or explanations of it, was clearly, though quaintly, stated in the leading case known as Calvin's Case, or the Case of the Postnati, decided in 1608, after a hearing in the Exchequer Chamber before the Lord Chancellor and all the judges of England, and reported by Lord Coke and by Lord Ellesmere. Calvin's Case, 7 Coke, 1, 4b-6a, 18a, 18b; Ellesmere, on Postnati, 62-64; s. c. 2 How. St. Tr. 559, 607, 613-617, 639, 640, 659, 679.

The English authorities ever since are to the like effect. Co. Litt. 8a, 128b; Lord Hale, in Harg. Law Tracts, 210, and in 1 Hale, P. C. 61, 62; 1 Bl. Comm. 366, 369, 370, 374; 4 Bl. Comm. 74, 92; Lord Kenyon, in Doe v. Jones, 4 Term R. 300, 308; Cockb. Nat. 7; Dicey, Confl. Laws, pp. 173-177, 741. * * *

It thus clearly appears that by the law of England for the last three centuries, beginning before the settlement of this country, and continuing to the present day, aliens, while residing in the dominions possessed by the crown of England, were within the allegiance, the obedience, the faith or loyalty, the protection, the power, and the jurisdiction of the English sovereign; and therefore every child born in England¹ of alien parents was a natural-born subject, unless the child of an ambassador or other diplomatic agent of a foreign state, or of an alien enemy in hostile occupation of the place where the child was born.

III. The same rule was in force in all the English colonies upon this continent down to the time of the Declaration of Independence, and in the United States afterwards, and continued to prevail under the Constitution as originally established.² * * *

In Inglis v. Sailors' Snug Harbor (1830) 3 Pet. 99, 7 L. Ed. 617, * * * Mr. Justice Story [said]: "Two things usually concur to create citizenship: First, birth locally within the dominions of the sovereign; and, secondly, birth within the protection and obedience, or, in other words, within the ligeance, of the sovereign. That is, the party must be born within a place where the sovereign is at the time in full possession and exercise of his power, and the party must also at his birth derive protection from, and consequently owe obedience or allegiance to, the sovereign, as such, de facto. There are some exceptions which are founded upon peculiar reasons, and which, indeed, illustrate and confirm the general doctrine. Thus, a person who is born on the ocean is a subject of the prince to whom his parents then owe allegiance; for he is still deemed under the protection of his sovereign, and born in a place where he has dominion in common with all other sovereigns. So the children of an ambassador are held to be subjects of the prince whom he represents, although born under the actual protection and in the dominions of a foreign prince." 3 Pet. 155, 7 L. Ed. 617. "The children of enemies, born in a place within the dominions of another sovereign, then occupied by them by conquest, are still aliens." 3 Pet. 156, 7 L. Ed. 617. "Nothing is better settled at the common law than the doctrine that the children, even of aliens, born in a country, while the parents are resident there under the protection of the government, and owing a temporary allegiance thereto, are subjects by birth." 3 Pet. 164, 7 L. Ed. 617. * * *

¹ The authorities quoted and cited by the court use the words "British dominions" instead of "England."

² See, to this effect, Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 583 (N. Y., 1844) (the leading case before the fourteenth amendment).

IV. It was contended by one of the learned counsel for the United States that the rule of the Roman law, by which the citizenship of the child followed that of the parent, was the true rule of international law as now recognized in most civilized countries, and had superseded the rule of the common law, depending on birth within the realm, originally founded on feudal considerations.

But at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States in 1789, and long before, it would seem to have been the rule in Europe generally, as it certainly was in France, that, as said by Pothier, "citizens, true and native-born citizens, are those who are born within the extent of the dominion of France," and "mere birth within the realm gives the rights of a native-born citizen, independently of the origin of the father or mother, and of their domicile"; and children born in a foreign country, of a French father who had not established his domicile there, nor given up the intention of returning, were also deemed Frenchmen, as Laurent says, by "a favor, a sort of fiction," and Calvo, "by a sort of fiction of extritoriality, considered as born in France, and therefore invested with French nationality." * * * The Code Napoléon of 1807 changed the law of France, and adopted, instead of the rule of country of birth, jus soli, the rule of descent or blood, jus sanguinis, as the leading principle. * * *

The later modifications of the rule in Europe rest upon the Constitutions, laws, or ordinances of the various countries, and have no important bearing upon the interpretation and effect of the Constitution of the United States. The English naturalization act of 33 Vict. (1870) c. 14, and the commissioners' report of 1869, out of which it grew, both bear date since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution; and, as observed by Mr. Dicey, that act has not affected the principle by which any person who, whatever the nationality of his parents, is born within the British dominions, acquires British nationality at birth, and is a natural-born British subject. Dicey, Confl. Laws, 741. At the time of the passage of that act, although the tendency on the continent of Europe was to make parentage, rather than birthplace, the criterion of nationality, and citizenship was denied to the native-born children of foreign parents in Germany, Switzerand, Sweden, and Norway, yet it appears still to have been conferred upon such children in Holland, Denmark, and Portugal, and, when claimed under certain specified conditions, in France, Belgium, Spain, Italy, Greece, and Russia. Cockb. Nat. 14-21.

There is, therefore, little ground for the theory that at the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States there was any settled and definite rule of international law generally recognized by civilized nations, inconsistent with the ancient rule of citizenship by birth within the dominion.

Nor can it be doubted that it is the inherent right of every independent nation to determine for itself, and according to its own Constitution and laws, what classes of persons shall be entitled to its citizenship.

Both in England and in the United States, indeed, statutes have been passed at various times enacting that certain issue born abroad of English subjects, or of American citizens, respectively, should inherit, to some extent at least, the rights of their parents. But those statutes applied only to cases coming within their purport, and they have never been considered, in either country, as affecting the citizenship of persons born within its dominion. * * *

It was enacted by the statute of February 10, 1855, c. 71, that "persons heretofore born, or hereafter to be born, out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or shall be at the time of their birth citizens of the United States, shall be deemed and considered and are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States: provided, however, that the rights of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers never resided in the United States." 10 Stat. 604; Rev. St. § 1993 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1268).

It thus clearly appears that, during the half century intervening between 1802 and 1855, there was no legislation whatever for the citizenship of children born abroad, during that period, of American parents who had not become citizens of the United States before the act of 1802; and that the act of 1855, like every other act of congress upon the subject, has, by express proviso, restricted the right of citizenship, thereby conferred upon foreign-born children of American citizens, to those children themselves, unless they became residents of the United States. Here is nothing to countenance the theory that a general rule of citizenship by blood or descent has displaced in this country the fundamental rule of citizenship by birth within its sovereignty. * * *

The first section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution begins with the words, "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside." As appears upon the face of the amendment, as well as from the history of the times, this was not intended to impose any new restrictions upon citizenship, or to prevent any persons from becoming citizens by the fact of birth within the United States, who would thereby have become citizens according to the law existing before its adoption. It is declaratory in form, and enabling and extending in effect. Its main purpose doubtless was, as has been often recognized by this court, to establish the citizenship of free negroes, which had been denied in the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Taney in Dred Scott v. Sandford (1857) 19 How. 393, 15 L. Ed. 691;³ and to put it beyond doubt that all blacks, as well as whites, born or naturalized within the jurisdiction of the United States, are citizens of the United States. Slaughter House Cases (1873) 16 Wall. 36, 73, 21 L. Ed. 394; Strauder v. West Virginia (1879) 100 U. S. 303, 306, 25 L. Ed. 664; Ex parte Virginia (1879) 100 U. S. 339, 345, 25 L. Ed. 676; Neal v. Delaware (1880) 103 U. S. 370, 386, 26 L. Ed. 567; Elk v. Wilkins (1884) 112 U. S. 94, 101, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643. But the opening words, "All persons born," are general, not to say universal, restricted only by place and jurisdiction, and not by color or race, as was clearly recognized in all the opinions delivered in the Slaughter House Cases, above cited. * * *

Mr. Justice Miller, indeed, while discussing the causes which led to the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, made this remark: "The phrase 'subject to its jurisdiction' was intended to exclude from its operation children of ministers, consuls, and citizens or subjects of foreign states, born within the United States." 16 Wall. 73, 21 L. Ed. 394. This was wholly aside from the question in judgment, and from the course of reasoning bearing upon that question. It was unsupported by any argument, or by any reference to authorities; and that it was not formulated with the same care and exactness as if the case before the court had called for an exact definition of the phrase is apparent from its classing foreign ministers and consuls together; whereas it was then well settled law, as has since been recognized in a judgment of this court in which Mr. Justice Miller concurred, that consuls, as such, and unless expressly invested with a diplomatic character in addition to their ordinary powers, are not considered as intrusted with authority to represent their sovereign in his intercourse with foreign states, or to vindicate his prerogatives, or entitled by the law of nations to the privileges and immunities of ambassadors or public ministers, but are subject to the jurisdiction, civil and criminal, of the courts of the country in which they reside. 1 Kent, Comm. 44; Story, Conf. Laws, § 48; Wheat. Int. Law (8th Ed.) § 249; The Anne (1818) 3 Wheat. 435, 445, 446, 4 L. Ed. 428; Gittings v. Crawford (1838) Taney, 1, 10, Fed. Cas. No. 5,465; In re Baiz (1890) 135 U. S. 403, 424, 10 Sup. Ct. 854, 34 L. Ed. 222. * * *

³ See Taney, C. J., 19 How. 403-427, 15 L. Ed. 691, and compare the opposing view of Curtis, J., 19 How. 569-588, 15 L. Ed. 691. Before the fourteenth amendment it was admitted that a state might confer a purely domestic citizenship upon a person who did not thereby become a United States citizen and was neither entitled to the privileges of citizenship in other states nor to sue in the federal courts as a citizen of a state. See the observations of Taney, C. J., in Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 403, 406, 15 L. Ed. 691, and of Curtis, J., 19 How. 579, 580, 586, 15 L. Ed. 691 (1857). Presumably the same is true to-day. See Slaughter House Cases, post, p. 219, and Hammerstein v. Lyne (D. C.) 200 Fed. 165 (1912) (discussing nature of state citizenship). Compare the practice of several states in permitting aliens to vote, after they have declared an intention to become United States citizens. See Minor v. Happersett, post, p. 113.

The only adjudication that has been made by this court upon the meaning of the clause "and subject to the jurisdiction thereof," in the leading provision of the fourteenth amendment, is Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 5 Sup. Ct. 41, 28 L. Ed. 643, in which it was decided that an Indian born a member of one of the Indian tribes within the United States, which still existed and was recognized as an Indian tribe by the United States, who had voluntarily separated himself from his tribe, and taken up his residence among the white citizens of a state, but who did not appear to have been naturalized or taxed or in any way recognized or treated as a citizen, either by the United States or by the state, was not a citizen of the United States, as a person born in the United States, "and subject to the jurisdiction thereof," within the meaning of the clause in question.

That decision was placed upon the grounds that the meaning of those words was "not merely subject in some respect or degree to the jurisdiction of the United States, but completely subject to their political jurisdiction, and owing them direct and immediate allegiance"; that by the Constitution, as originally established, "Indians not taxed" were excluded from the persons according to whose numbers representatives in congress and direct taxes were apportioned among the several states, and congress was empowered to regulate commerce, not only "with foreign nations," and among the several states, but "with the Indian tribes"; that the Indian tribes, being within the territorial limits of the United States, were not, strictly speaking, foreign states, but were alien nations, distinct political communities, the members of which owed immediate allegiance to their several tribes, and were not part of the people of the United States; that the alien and dependent condition of the members of one of those tribes could not be put off at their own will, without the action or assent of the United States; and that they were never deemed citizens, except when naturalized, collectively or individually, under explicit provisions of a treaty, or of an act of congress; and, therefore, that "Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States, members of, and owing immediate allegiance to, one of the Indian tribes (an alien, though dependent, power), although in a geographical sense born in the United States, are no more 'born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof,' within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth amendment, than the children of subjects of any foreign government born within the domain of that government, or the children born within the United States of ambassadors or other public ministers of foreign nations." And it was observed that the language used, in defining citizenship, in the first section of the civil rights act of 1866, by the very congress which framed the fourteenth amendment, was "all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed." 112 U. S. 99-103, 5 Sup. Ct. 44-46, 28 L. Ed. 643. * * *

The decision in Elk v. Wilkins concerned only members of the Indian tribes within the United States, and had no tendency to deny citizenship to children born in the United States of foreign parents of Caucasian, African, or Mongolian descent, not in the diplomatic service of a foreign country.

The real object of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, in qualifying the words "all persons born in the United States" by the addition "and subject to the jurisdiction thereof," would appear to have been to exclude, by the fewest and fittest words (besides children of members of the Indian tribes, standing in a peculiar relation to the national government, unknown to the common law), the two classes of cases,—children born of alien enemies in hostile occupation, and children of diplomatic representatives of a foreign state,—both of which, as has already been shown, by the law of England and by our own law, from the time of the first settlement of the English colonies in America, had been recognized exceptions to the fundamental rule of citizenship by birth within the country. Calvin's Case, 7 Coke, 1, 18b; Cockb. Nat. 7; Dicey, Confl. Laws, 177; Inglis v. Sailors' Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. 99, 155, 7 L. Ed. 617; 2 Kent. Comm. 39, 42.

The principles upon which each of those exceptions rests were long ago distinctly stated by this court. * * * [Here follows a quotation from United States v. Rice, 4 Wheat. 246, 4 L. Ed. 562 (1819) to the effect that the military occupation of a part of Maine by the British during the War of 1812 temporarily suspended the sovereignty of the United States there.]

In the great case of The Exchange (1812) 7 Cranch, 116, 3 L. Ed. 287, the grounds upon which foreign ministers are, and other aliens are not, exempt from the jurisdiction of this country, were set forth by Chief Justice Marshall in a clear and powerful train of reasoning, of which it will be sufficient, for our present purpose, to give little more than the outlines. The opinion did not touch upon the anomalous case of the Indian tribes, the true relation of which to the United States was not directly brought before this court until some years afterwards, in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia (1831) 5 Pet. 1, 8 L. Ed. 25; nor upon the case of a suspension of the sovereignty of the United States over part of their territory by reason of a hostile occupation, such as was also afterwards presented in U. S. v. Rice, above cited. But in all other respects it covered the whole question of what persons within the territory of the United States are subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

The Chief Justice first laid down the general principle: "The jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving validity from an external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction, and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose such restriction. All exceptions, therefore, to the full and complete power of a nation within its own territories, must be traced up to the consent of the nation itself. They can flow from no other legitimate source. This consent may be either express or implied. In the latter case, it is less determinate, exposed more to the uncertainties of construction; but, if understood, not less obligatory." 7 Cranch, 136, 3 L. Ed. 287.

He then stated, and supported by argument and illustration, the propositions that "this full and absolute territorial jurisdiction, being alike the attribute of every sovereign, and being incapable of conferring extraterritorial power," has "given rise to a class of cases in which every sovereign is understood to waive the exercise of a part of that complete exclusive territorial jurisdiction which has been stated to be the attribute of every nation," the first of which is the exemption from arrest or detention of the person of a foreign sovereign entering its territory with its license, because "a foreign sovereign is not understood as intending to subject himself to a jurisdiction incompatible with his dignity and the dignity of his nation"; "a second case, standing on the same principles with the first, is the immunity which all civilized nations allow to foreign ministers"; "a third case, in which a sovereign is understood to cede a portion of his territorial jurisdiction, is where he allows the troops of a foreign prince to pass through his dominions"; and, in conclusion, that "a public armed ship, in the service of a foreign sovereign, with whom the government of the United States is at peace, and having entered an American port open for her reception, on the terms on which ships of war are generally permitted to enter the ports of a friendly power, must be considered as having come into the American territory, under an implied promise that while necessarily within it, and demeaning herself in a friendly manner, she should be exempt from the jurisdiction of the country." 7 Cranch, 137-139, 147, 3 L. Ed. 287. * * *

The reasons for not allowing to other aliens exemption "from the jurisdiction of the country in which they are found" were stated as follows: "When private individuals of one nation spread themselves through another as business or caprice may direct, mingling indiscriminately with the inhabitants of that other, or when merchant vessels enter for the purposes of trade, it would be obviously inconvenient and dangerous to society, and would subject the laws to continual infraction, and the government to degradation, if such individuals or merchants did not owe temporary and local allegiance, and were not amenable to the jurisdiction of the country. Nor can the foreign sovereign have any motive for wishing such exemption. His subjects thus passing into foreign countries are not employed by him, nor are they engaged in national pursuits. Consequently, there are powerful motives for not exempting persons of this description from the jurisdiction of the country in which they are found, and no one motive for requiring it. The implied license, therefore, under which they enter, can never be construed to grant such exemption." 7 Cranch, 144, 3 L. Ed. 287. * * *

These considerations confirm the view, already expressed in this opinion, that the opening sentence of the fourteenth amendment is throughout affirmative and declaratory, intended to allay doubts and to settle controversies which had arisen, and not to impose any new restrictions upon citizenship. * * *

This sentence of the fourteenth amendment is declaratory of existing rights, and affirmative of existing law, as to each of the qualifications therein expressed,—“born in the United States,” “naturalized in the United States,” and “subject to the jurisdiction thereof”; in short, as to everything relating to the acquisition of citizenship by facts occurring within the limits of the United States. But it has not touched the acquisition of citizenship by being born abroad of American parents; and has left that subject to be regulated, as it had always been, by congress, in the exercise of the power conferred by the Constitution to establish a uniform rule of naturalization.

The effect of the enactments conferring citizenship on foreign-born children of American parents has been defined, and the fundamental rule of citizenship by birth within the dominion of the United States, notwithstanding alienage of parents, has been affirmed, in well-considered opinions of the executive departments of the government, since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. * * * [Here follow quotations from these opinions, which hold] that such statutes cannot, consistently with our own established rule of citizenship by birth in this country, operate extraterritorially so far as to relieve any person born and residing in a foreign country, and subject to its government, from his allegiance to that country.⁴ * * *

The foregoing considerations and authorities irresistibly lead us to these conclusions: The fourteenth amendment affirms the ancient and fundamental rule of citizenship by birth within the territory, in the allegiance and under the protection of the country, including all children here born of resident aliens, with the exceptions or qualifications (as old as the rule itself) of children of foreign sovereigns or their ministers, or born on foreign public ships, or of enemies within and during a hostile occupation of part of our territory, and with the single additional exception of children of members of the Indian tribes owing direct allegiance to their several tribes. The amendment, in clear words and in manifest intent, includes the children born within the territory of the United States of all other persons, of whatever race or color, domiciled within the United States. Every citizen or subject of another country, while domiciled here, is within the allegiance and the protection, and consequently subject to the jurisdiction, of the United States. His allegiance to the United States is direct and immediate, and, although but local and temporary, continuing only so long as he remain within our territory, is yet, in the words of Lord Coke in Calvin's Case, 7 Rep. 6a, "strong enough to make a natural subject, for, if he hath issue here, that issue is a natural-born subject"; and his child, as said by Mr. Bimney in his essay before quoted, "if born in the country, is as much a citizen as the natural-born child of a citizen, and by operation of the same principle." It can hardly be denied that an alien is completely subject to the political jurisdiction of the country in which he resides, seeing that, as said by Mr. Webster, when secretary of state, in his report to the president on Thrasher's Case in 1851, and since repeated by this court: "Independently of a residence with intention to continue such residence; independently of any domiciliation; independently of the taking of any oath of allegiance, or of renouncing any former allegiance,—it is well known that by the public law an alien, or a stranger born, for so long a time as he continues within the dominions of a foreign government, owes obedience to the laws of that government, and may be punished for treason or other crimes as a native-born subject might be, unless his case is varied by some treaty stipulations." Executive Documents H. R. No. 10, 1st Sess. 32d Cong. p. 4; 6 Webster's Works, 526; Carlisle v. United States, 16 Wall. 147, 155, 21 L. Ed. 426; Calvin's Case, 7 Rep. 6a; Ellesmere, Postnati, 63; 1 Hale, P. C. 62; 4 Bl. Comm. 74, 92. * * *

⁴ See, on these topics, Van Dyne, Citizenship, 32-50.

It is true that Chinese persons born in China cannot be naturalized, like other aliens, by proceedings under the naturalization laws. But this is for want of any statute or treaty authorizing or permitting such naturalization, as will appear by tracing the history of the statutes, treaties, and decisions upon that subject, always bearing in mind that statutes enacted by congress, as well as treaties made by the president and senate, must yield to the paramount and supreme law of the Constitution.

The power, granted to congress by the Constitution, "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization," was long ago adjudged by this court to be vested exclusively in congress. Chirac v. Chirac (1817) 2 Wheat. 259, 4 L. Ed. 234.⁵ For many years after the establishment of the original Constitution, and until two years after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, congress never authorized the naturalization or any one but "free white persons." * * * By the act of July 14, 1870, c. 254, § 7, for the first time, the naturalization laws were "extended to aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent." 16 Stat. 256. This extension, as embodied in the Revised Statutes, took the form of providing that those laws should "apply to aliens [being free white persons, and to aliens] of African nativity and to persons of African descent"; and it was amended by the act of Feb. 18, 1875, c. 80, by inserting the words above printed in brackets. Rev. St. (2d Ed.) § 2169, 18 Stat. 318 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1333).⁶ Those statutes were held, by the Circuit Court of the United States in California, not to embrace Chinese aliens. In re Ah Yup (1878) 5 Sawy. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 104. And by the act of May 6, 1882, c. 126, § 14, it was expressly enacted that, "hereafter no state court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship." 22 Stat. 61 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1333).

⁵ The reasons for this are discussed in Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 405, 406, 579, 580, 586, 15 L. Ed. 691 (1857).

In Fong Yue Ting v. U. S. (1893), above cited, this court said: "Chinese persons not born in this country have never been recognized as citizens of the United States, nor authorized to become such under the naturalization laws." 149 U. S. 716, 13 Sup. Ct. 1023, 37 L. Ed. 905. * * *

The power of naturalization, vested in congress by the Constitution, is a power to confer citizenship, not a power to take it away. * * * Congress having no power to abridge the rights conferred by the Constitution upon those who have become naturalized citizens by virtue of acts of congress, a fortiori no act or omission of congress, as to providing for the naturalization of parents or children of a particular race, can affect citizenship acquired as a birthright, by virtue of the Constitution itself, without any aid of legislation. The fourteenth amendment, while it leaves the power, where it was before, in congress, to regulate naturalization, has conferred no authority upon congress to restrict the effect of birth, declared by the Constitution to constitute a sufficient and complete right to citizenship. * * *

VII. Upon the facts agreed in this case, the American citizenship which Wong Kim Ark acquired by birth within the United States has not been lost or taken away by anything happening since his birth. No doubt he might himself, after coming of age, renounce this citizenship, and become a citizen of the country of his parents, or of any other country; for by our law, as solemnly declared by congress, "the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people," and "any declaration, instruction, opinion, order or direction of any officer of the United States, which denies, restricts, impairs or questions the right of expatriation, is declared inconsistent with the fundamental principles of the republic." Rev. St. § 1999, re-enacting Act July 27, 1868, c. 249, § 1, 15 Stat. 223, 224 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1269).⁷ Whether any act of himself, or of his parents, during his minority, could have the same effect, is at least doubtful. But it would be out of place to pursue that inquiry. * * *

⁶ As to the meaning of "free white persons," see In re Halladjian (C. C.) 174 Fed. 834 (1909); United States v. Balsara, 180 Fed. 691, 103 C. C. A. 660 (1910); In re Alverto (D. C.) 198 Fed. 688 (1912); In re Young (D. C.) 198 Fed. 715 (1912).

The collective naturalization of alien inhabitants of a territory may be effected upon its admission as a state, by the recognition of them in the act of admission as voters and members of the new political community. Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer, 143 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103 (1892).

Order affirmed.⁸

[FULLER, C. J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which HARLAN, J., concurred.]

SECTION 2.—SUFFRAGE

MINOR v. HAPPERSETT.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1874. 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Missouri. Mrs. Minor sued in an inferior state court a registrar of voters in Missouri for refusing to register her; his refusal being based upon the terms of the state Constitution which confined the suffrage to male citizens of the United States. Judgment for the registrar was affirmed by the state Supreme Court.]

Mr. Chief Justice WAITE. * * * It is contended that the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the state of Missouri, which

⁷ Prior to the statute of 1868 the federal courts had generally recognized the English common-law rule that forbade the renunciation of allegiance without the sovereign's consent. See John B. Moore in 14 Harv. Law Rev. 179.

⁸ Article III of the Russian treaty ceding Alaska (1867) excepted from citizenship the "uncivilized native tribes" therein. See Downes v. Bidwell, post, at p. 1009.

Article IX of the federal treaty with Spain (1898) provides: "The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress."

Are the native inhabitants of Porto Rico and the Philippines, born before the treaty, citizens of the United States? See Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 171, 48 L. Ed. 317 (1904); F. R. Coudert, Jr., in 3 Col. L. Rev. 13 (1903). What is the status of those born after the treaty? See the reasoning in Downes v. Bidwell, post, p. 988. Compare 34 Stat. 596, § 20 (1906), applying the federal naturalization laws to non-citizens "who owe permanent allegiance to the United States."

On the topic of American citizenship in general, see D. O. McGovney in 11 Col. L. Rev. 231, 326 (1911).

CORPORATIONS AND CITIZENSHIP.—As to how far various clauses in the Constitution concerning the rights of citizens affect corporations or their incorporators, see Paul v. Virginia, post, p. 200; and Ohio & M. Ry. v. Wheeler, post, p. 1340.

confine the right of suffrage and registration therefor to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and therefore void. The argument is, that as a woman, born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is a citizen of the United States and of the state in which she resides, she has the right of suffrage as one of the privileges and immunities of her citizenship, which the state cannot by its laws or Constitution abridge.

There is no doubt that women may be citizens. They are persons, and by the fourteenth amendment "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof" are expressly declared to be "citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside." But, in our opinion, it did not need this amendment to give them that position. Before its adoption the Constitution of the United States did not in terms prescribe who should be citizens of the United States or of the several states, yet there were necessarily such citizens without such provision. There cannot be a nation without a people. The very idea of a political community, such as a nation is, implies an association of persons for the promotion of their general welfare. Each one of the persons associated becomes a member of the nation formed by the association. He owes it allegiance and is entitled to its protection. Allegiance and protection are, in this connection, reciprocal obligations. The one is a compensation for the other; allegiance for protection and protection for allegiance.

For convenience it has been found necessary to give a name to this membership. The object is to designate by a title the person and the relation he bears to the nation. For this purpose the words "subject," "inhabitant," and "citizen" have been used, and the choice between them is sometimes made to depend upon the form of the government. Citizen is now more commonly employed, however, and as it has been considered better suited to the description of one living under a republican government, it was adopted by nearly all of the states upon their separation from Great Britain, and was afterwards adopted in the Articles of Confederation and in the Constitution of the United States. When used in this sense it is understood as conveying the idea of membership of a nation, and nothing more. * * * [Here follow references to the acquisition of citizenship by birth and naturalization—see United States v. Wong Kim Ark, ante, p. 128, and the federal naturalization laws are shown to be applicable to women, as well as the right to sue in the federal courts on grounds of diverse citizenship.]

The fourteenth amendment did not affect the citizenship of women any more than it did of men. In this particular, therefore, the rights of Mrs. Minor do not depend upon the amendment. She has always been a citizen from her birth, and entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizenship. The amendment prohibited the state of which she is a citizen, from abridging any of her privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States; but it did not confer citizenship on her. That she had before its adoption. * * * The Constitution does not define the privileges and immunities of citizens. For that definition we must look elsewhere. In this case we need not determine what they are, but only whether suffrage is necessarily one of them.

It certainly is nowhere made so in express terms. The United States has no voters in the states of its own creation. The elective officers of the United States are all elected directly or indirectly by state voters. The members of the House of Representatives, are to be chosen by the people of the states, and the electors in each state must have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature. Constitution, art. 1, § 2. Senators are to be chosen by the legislatures of the states, and necessarily the members of the legislature required to make the choice are elected by the voters of the state. Id. art. 1, § 3. Each state must appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, the electors to elect the President and Vice President. Id. art. 2, § 2. * * *

The [fourteenth] amendment did not add to the privileges and immunities of a citizen. It simply furnished an additional guaranty for the protection of such as he already had. * * *

It is clear, therefore, we think, that the Constitution has not added the right of suffrage to the privileges and immunities of citizenship as they existed at the time it was adopted. This makes it proper to inquire whether suffrage was co-extensive with the citizenship of the states at the time of its adoption. If it was, then it may with force be argued that suffrage was one of the rights which belonged to citizenship, and in the enjoyment of which every citizen must be protected. But if it was not, the contrary may with propriety be assumed.

When the federal Constitution was adopted, all the states, with the exception of Rhode Island and Connecticut, had Constitutions of their own. These two continued to act under their charters from the Crown. Upon an examination of those Constitutions, we find that in no state were all citizens permitted to vote. Each state determined for itself who should have that power. * * *

[The states are shown to have limited the suffrage variously, by prescribing qualifications of race, sex, age, property, and tax-paying. After referring to the federal guaranty of a republican form of government to the states. Const. art. 4, § 4:]

As has been seen, all the citizens of the states were not invested with the right of suffrage. In all, save perhaps New Jersey, this right was only bestowed upon men and not upon all of them. Under these circumstances it is certainly now too late to contend that a government is not republican, within the meaning of this guaranty in the Constitution, because women are not made voters. * * * Besides this, citizenship has not in all cases been made a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the right of suffrage. Thus, in Missouri, persons of foreign birth, who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, may under certain circumstances vote. The same provision is to be found in the Constitutions of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, and Texas.¹ * * *

Being unanimously of the opinion that the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one, and that the Constitutions and laws of the several states which commit that important trust to men alone are not necessarily void, we affirm the judgment.

POPE v. WILLIAMS (1904) 193 U. S. 621, 632 634, 24 Sup. Ct. 573, 48 L. Ed. 817, Mr. Justice PECKHAM (affirming a decision of the Court of Appeals of Maryland):

"The simple matter to be herein determined is whether, with reference to the exercise of the privilege of voting in Maryland, the legislature of that state had the legal right to provide that a person coming into the state to reside should make the declaration of intent a year before he should have the right to be registered as a voter of the state.

"The privilege to vote in any state is not given by the federal Constitution, or by any of its amendments. It is not a privilege springing from citizenship of the United States. Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627. It may not be refused on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but it does not follow from mere citizenship of the United States. In other words, the privilege to vote in a state is within the jurisdiction of the state itself, to be exercised as the state may direct, and upon such terms as to it may seem proper, provided, of course, no discrimination is made between individuals, in violation of the federal Constitution. The state might provide that persons of foreign birth could vote without being naturalized, and, as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Waite in Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627, such persons were allowed to vote in several of the states upon having declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States. Some states permit women to vote; others refuse them that privilege. A state, so far as the federal Constitution is concerned, might provide by its own Constitution and laws that none but native-born citizens should be permitted to vote, as the federal Constitution does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one, and the conditions under which that right is to be exercised are matters for the states alone to prescribe, subject to the conditions of the federal Constitution, already stated; although it may be observed that the right to vote for a member of congress is not derived exclusively from the state law. See Const. U. S. art. 1, § 2; Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S. 58, 21 Sup. Ct. 17, 45 L. Ed. 84. But the elector must be one entitled to vote under the state statute. Id., Id. See, also, Swafford v. Templeton, 185 U. S. 487, 491, 22 Sup. Ct. 783, 46 L. Ed. 1005, 1007. In this case no question arises as to the right to vote for electors of President and Vice President, and no decision is made thereon. The question whether the conditions prescribed by the state might be regarded by others as reasonable or unreasonable is not a federal one. We do not wish to be understood, however, as intimating that the condition in this statute is unreasonable or in any way improper.

¹ For a more recent list of such states, about a dozen in number, see Stimson, Fed. and State Consts. § 240 (1908).

"We are unable to see any violation of the federal Constitution in the provision of the state statute for the declaration of the intent of a person coming into the state before he can claim the right to be registered as a voter. The statute, so far as it provides conditions precedent to the exercise of the elective franchise within the state, by persons coming therein to reside (and that is as far as it is necessary to consider it in this case), is neither an unlawful discrimination against any one in the situation of the plaintiff in error nor does it deny to him the equal protection of the laws, nor is it repugnant to any fundamental or inalienable rights of citizens of the United States, nor a violation of any implied guaranties of the federal Constitution. The right of a state to legislate upon the subject of the elective franchise as to it may seem good, subject to the conditions already stated, being, as we believe, unassailable, we think it plain that the statute in question violates no right protected by the federal Constitution.

"The reasons which may have impelled the state legislature to enact the statute in question were matters entirely for its consideration, and this court has no concern with them.

"It is unnecessary in this case to assert that under no conceivable state of facts could a state statute in regard to voting be regarded as an infringement upon or a discrimination against, the individual rights of a citizen of the United States removing into the state, and excluded from voting therein by state legislation. The question might arise if an exclusion from the privilege of voting were founded upon the particular state from which the person came, excluding from that privilege, for instance, a citizen of the United States coming from Georgia and allowing it to a citizen of the United States coming from New York or any other state. In such case an argument might be urged that, under the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, the citizen from Georgia was, by the state statute, deprived of the equal protection of the laws. Other extreme cases might be suggested. We neither assert nor deny that, in the case supposed, the claim would be well founded that a Federal right of a citizen of the United States was violated by such legislation, for the question does not arise herein. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

Ex parte YARBROUGH.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1884. 110 U. S. 651, 4 Sup. Ct. 152, 28 L. Ed. 274.)

[Petition for writ of habeas corpus to release several persons convicted in the federal Circuit Court for the Northern District of Georgia of conspiring to intimidate a colored person from voting for member of congress, in violation of a federal statute.]

Mr. Justice MILLER. * * * That a government whose essential character is republican, whose executive head and legislative body are both elective, whose most numerous and powerful branch of the legislature is elected by the people directly, has no power by appropriate laws to secure this election from the influence of violence, of corruption, and of fraud, is a proposition so startling as to arrest attention and demand the gravest consideration. If this government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other states and governments, each of which is superior to the general government, it must have the power to protect the elections on which its existence depends, from violence and corruption. If it has not this power, it is left helpless before the two great natural and

¹ See United States v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 200, 205, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459 (1873); Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 370, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220 (1886); Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 43, 5 Sup. Ct. 747, 29 L. Ed. 47 (1885).

Regarding certain provisions of the Mississippi Constitution, excluding from the suffrage persons not paying poll taxes or who had been convicted of certain crimes, McKenna, J., said, in Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 221, 222, 18 Sup. Ct. 583, 587 (42 L. Ed. 1012) (1898): "The Constitution provides for the payment of a poll tax, and by a section of the Code its payment cannot be compelled by a seizure and sale of property. We gather from the brief of counsel that its payment is a condition of the right to vote, and, in a case to test whether its payment was or was not optional (Blatchiff v. Beal, 74 Miss. 247, 20 South. 865, 34 L. R. A. 472), the supreme court of the state said: 'Within the field of permissible action under the limitations imposed by the federal Constitution, the convention swept the field of expedients, to obstruct the exercise of suffrage by the negro race.' And further the court said, speaking of the negro race: 'By reason of its previous condition of servitude and dependencies, this race had acquired or accentuated certain peculiarities of habit, of temperament, and of character, which clearly distinguished it as a race from the whites: a patient, docile people, but careless, landless, migratory within narrow limits, without forethought, and its criminal members given to furtive offenses, rather than the robust crimes of the whites. Restrained by the federal Constitution from discriminating against the negro race, the convention discriminates against its characteristics, and the offenses to which its criminal members are prone.' But nothing tangible can be deduced from this. If weakness were to be taken advantage of, it was to be done 'within the field of permissible action under the limitations historical enemies of all republics, open violence and insidious corruption. * * *

The congress [has] been slow to exercise the powers expressly conferred upon it in relation to elections by the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution. This section declares that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof; but the congress may at any time make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing senators." It was not until 1842 that congress took any action under the power here conferred. * * *

[Here are mentioned federal statutes requiring members of the house of representatives to be elected by districts, fixing a uniform day for the election of representatives and of presidential electors, and regulating the election of senators.]

Will it be denied that it is in the power of that body to provide laws for the proper conduct of those elections? To provide, if necessary, the officers who shall conduct them and make return of the result? And especially to provide, in an election held under its own authority, for security of life and limb to the voter while in the exercise of this function? Can it be doubted that congress can, by law, protect the act of voting, the place where it is done, and the man who votes from personal violence or intimidation, and the election itself from corruption and fraud? * * *

It is said that the parties assaulted in these cases are not officers of the United States, and their protection in exercising the right to vote by congress does not stand on the same ground. But the distinction is not well taken. The power in either case arises out of the circum-imposed by the federal Constitution,' and the means of it were the alleged characteristics of the negro race, not the administration of the law by officers of the state. Besides, the operation of the Constitution and laws is not limited by their language or effects to one race. They reach weak and vicious white men as well as weak and vicious black men, and whatever is sinister in their intention, if anything, can be prevented by both races by the exertion of that duty which voluntarily pays taxes and refrains from crime."

An amendment to the Oklahoma Constitution (1910), requiring voters to be able to read and write any section of the state Constitution, but excepting therefrom persons who, prior to January 1, 1866, were entitled to vote under any form of government, or who on that date resided in a foreign nation or who were lineal descendants of such persons, was held not to violate either the fourteenth or the fifteenth amendments, in Atwater v. Hasset, 27 Okl. 292, 315, 316, 111 Pac. 802, 812 (1910); Williams, J., saying: "To say, because plaintiff or his ancestors, who were not entitled to vote under any organized form of government on or prior to January 1, 1866, or who were not then non-resident aliens having since come to the United States and become citizens by naturalization, that said amendment discriminates against them on account of race or color, is as unfounded as to say that a property qualification discriminates on account of previous condition of servitude for the reason that, if a man had not been held in bondage, he would have been able to acquire property, as a slave could not acquire property any more than he could vote. It is a matter of common knowledge that the population of this state is cosmopolitan, embracing people of every creed and race from practically every state in the Union. All of those persons who on January 1, 1866, or at any time prior thereto, were entitled to vote under any form of government stance that the function in which the party is engaged or the right which he is about to exercise is dependent on the laws of the United States. In both cases it is the duty of that government to see that he may exercise this right freely, and to protect him from violence while so doing, or on account of so doing. This duty does not arise solely from the interest of the party concerned, but from the necessity of the government itself that its service shall be free from the adverse influence of force and fraud practiced on its agents, and that the votes by which its members of congress and its president are elected shall be the free votes of the electors, and the officers thus chosen the free and uncorrupted choice of those who have the right to take part in that choice.

This proposition answers, also, another objection to the constitutionality of the laws under consideration, namely, that the right to vote for a member of congress is not dependent upon the Constitution or laws of the United States, but is governed by the law of each state respectively. If this were conceded, the importance to the general government of having the actual election—the voting for those members—free from force and fraud is not diminished by the circumstance that the qualification of the voter is determined by the law of the state where he votes. It equally affects the government; it is as indispensable to the proper discharge of the great function of legislating for that government, that those who are to control this legislation shall not owe their election to bribery or violence, whether the class of persons who shall vote is determined by the law of the state, or by law of the United States, or by their united result.

But it is not correct to say that the right to vote for a member of or state or territory of this Union, or who at that time residing in some foreign nation, afterwards came to the United States and by naturalization became citizens of the United States, and their lineal descendants, regardless of race or previous condition of servitude, are permitted to vote at the elections in this state, without complying with the educational requirements of said provision. That is a classification based upon a reason; that is, that any person who was entitled to vote under a form of government on or prior to said date is still presumed to be qualified to exercise such right, and the presumption follows as to his offspring—that is, that the virtues and intelligence of the ancestor will be imputed to his descendants, just as the iniquity of the fathers may be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation. But as to those who were not entitled to vote under any form of government on said date, or at any prior time, and their descendants, there is no presumption in favor of their qualification, and the burden is upon them to show themselves qualified. This does not apply to any one race, but to every race that falls within this disqualification. The alien who resided in some foreign country on the 1st day of January, 1866, who was not entitled to vote under that form of government, and who afterwards came to the United States, and became naturalized, was required to undergo an examination to show himself qualified and fitted for citizenship, and when the courts of this republic, or the different states thereof, exercising the powers of naturalization, have examined and passed upon his qualification, the presumption in favor of his qualification is recognized."

Contra, as to fifteenth amendment, see Anderson v. Myers (C. C.) 182 Fed. 223 (1910) ($500 property qualification for municipal suffrage, with exceptions similar to those of Oklahoma).

congress does not depend on the Constitution of the United States. The office, if it be properly called an office, is created by that Constitution, and by that alone. It also declares how it shall be filled, namely, by election. Its language is: "The house of representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states; and the electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature." Article 1, § 2. The states, in prescribing the qualifications of voters for the most numerous branch of their own legislatures, do not do this with reference to the election for members of congress. Nor can they prescribe the qualification for voters for those so nomine. They define who are to vote for the popular branch of their own legislature, and the Constitution of the United States says the same persons shall vote for members of congress in that state. It adopts the qualification thus furnished as the qualification of its own electors for members of congress. It is not true, therefore, that electors for members of congress owe their right to vote to the state law, in any sense which makes the exercise of the right to depend exclusively on the law of the state.

Counsel for petitioners, seizing upon the expression found in the opinion of the court in the case of Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 173, 22 L. Ed. 627, that "the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one," without reference to the connection in which it is used, insists that the voters in this case do not owe their right to vote in any sense to that instrument. But the court was combating the argument that this right was conferred on all citizens, and therefore upon women as well as men. In opposition to that idea, it was said the Constitution adopts as the qualification for voters of members of congress that which prevails in the state where the voting is to be done; therefore, said the opinion, the right is not definitely conferred on any person or class of persons by the Constitution alone, because you have to look to the law of the state for the description of the class. But the court did not intend to say that when the class or the person is thus ascertained, his right to vote for a member of congress was not fundamentally based upon the Constitution, which created the office of member of congress, and declared it should be elective, and pointed to the means of ascertaining who should be electors. The fifteenth amendment of the Constitution * * * is in the following language:

"Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"Sec. 2. The congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

While it is quite true, as was said by this court in U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 218, 23 L. Ed. 563, that this article gives no affirmative right to the colored man to vote, and is designed primarily to prevent discrimination against him whenever the right to vote may be granted to others, it is easy to see that under some circumstances it may operate as the immediate source of a right to vote. In all cases where the former slave-holding states had not removed from their Constitutions the words "white man" as a qualification for voting, this provision did, in effect, confer on him the right to vote, because, being paramount to the state law, and a part of the state law, it annulled the discriminating word "white," and thus left him in the enjoyment of the same right as white persons. * * *

In the case of U. S. v. Reese, so much relied on by counsel, this court said, in regard to the fifteenth amendment, that "it has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of congress. That right is an exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."¹ This new constitutional right was mainly designed for citizens of African descent. The principle, however, that the protection of the exercise of this right is within the power of congress, is as necessary to the right of other citizens to vote as to the colored citizen, and to the right to vote in general as to the right to be protected against discrimination. The exercise of the right in both instances is guaranteed by the Constitution, and should be kept free and pure by congressional enactments whenever that is necessary.

The reference to cases in this court in which the power of congress under the first section of the fourteenth amendment has been held to relate alone to acts done under state authority can afford petitioners no aid in the present case. For, while it may be true that acts which are mere invasions of private rights, which acts have no sanction in the statutes of a state, or which are not committed by any one exercising its authority, are not within the scope of that amendment, it is quite a different matter when congress undertakes to protect the citizen in the exercise of rights conferred by the Constitution of the United States, essential to the healthy organization of the government itself. * * *

Writ denied.²

¹ For the limits of federal power to protect this right, see United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. Ed. 563 (1876); James v. Bowman, 190 U. S. 127, 23 Sup. Ct. 678, 47 L. Ed. 979 (1903).

² As to the probable meaning of Amend. 14, § 2, reducing state representation in congress for the denial or abridgement of male suffrage, see E. L. Smith in 2 Harv. L. Rev. 374-376.

As regards control of the choice of presidential electors, under Const. art. 2, § 1, pars. 2, 3, see In re Green, 134 U. S. 377, 10 Sup. Ct. 586, 33 L. Ed. 951 (1890); McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 35, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 10, 36 L. Ed. 869 (1892). In the latter case, after an elaborate review of the practice of 100 years, Fuller, C. J., said: "In short, the appointment and mode of appointment of electors belong exclusively to the states under the Constitution of the United States. They are, as remarked by Mr. Justice Gray in Re Green, 134 U. S. 377, 379, 10 Sup. Ct. 586 [33 L. Ed. 951], 'no more officers or agents of the United States than are the members of the state legislatures

SECTION 3.—MISCELLANEOUS POLITICAL RIGHTS

NOTE.

The scope of this volume does not permit the inclusion of material for the specific discussion of several important political rights secured by provisions of the federal Constitution, most of which are also protected by state Constitutions. These are:

(a) REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT, AND PROTECTION AGAINST INVASION AND DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.—Const. art. IV, § 4. Upon this topic, see Luther v. Borden, ante, p. 101; Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. State of Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377 (1912).

(b) FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND PRESS.—Const. Amend. I. See Robertson v. Baldwin, post, p. 154; Patterson v. Colorado ex rel. Attorney General, 205 U. S. 454, 461, 462, 27 Sup. Ct. 556, 51 L. Ed. 879, 10 Ann. Cas. 689 (1907); Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, 437, 438, 31 Sup. Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 871 (1911); Marx & Haas Jeans Clothing Co. v. Watson, 168 Mo. 133, 143-150, 67 S. W. 391, 56 L. R. A. 951, 90 Am. St. Rep. 440 (1902); Lindsay & Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, 37 Mont. 264, 275-277, 96 Pac. 127, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, 127 Am. St. Rep. 722 (1908); Louthan v. Commonwealth, 79 Va. 196, 52 Am. Rep. 626 (1884); State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 85 Neb. 1, 122 N. W. 473, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839 (1909); Ex parte Harrison, 212 Mo. 88, 110 S. W. 709, 126 Am. St. Rep. 557, 15 Ann. Cas. 1 (1908); Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 80 Kan. 312, 102 Pac. 459, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 247, 133 Am. St. Rep. 213, 18 Ann. Cas. 346 (1909); State v. Pioneer Press Co., 100 Minn. 173, 110 N. W. 867, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 117 Am. St. Rep. 684, 10 Ann. Cas. 351 (1907); In re Anderson, 69 Neb. 686, 96 N. W. 149, 5 Ann. Cas. 421 (1903).

(c) RIGHT OF ASSEMBLAGE AND PETITION.—Const. Amend. I. See United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 552, 553, 23 L. Ed. 588 (1876); Commonwealth v. Abrahams, 156 Mass. 57, 30 N. E. 79 (1892); State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 85 Neb. 1, 122 N. W. 473, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839 (1909); State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear, 142 Wis. 320, 336-339, 125 N. W. 961, 20 Ann. Cas. 633 (1910).

(d) RIGHT TO KEEP AND BEAR ARMS.—Const. Amend. II. See United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 553, 23 L. Ed. 588 (1876); Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 282, 17 Sup. Ct. 326, 41 L. Ed. 715 (1897); Salina v. Blaksley, 72 Kan. 230, 83 Pac. 619, 7 Ann. Cas. 925 (1905), annotated in 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168 ff., and in 115 Am. St. Rep. 199-203; and later references in Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S. E. 260, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 323.

when acting as electors of federal senators, or the people of the states when acting as the electors of representatives in congress.' Congress is empowered to determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they are to give their votes, which is required to be the same day throughout the United States; but otherwise the power and jurisdiction of the state is exclusive, with the exception of the provisions as to the number of electors and the ineligibility of certain persons, so framed that congressional and federal influence might be excluded."

As to the effect of so-called "direct primaries" for United States senator held in a state before the seventeenth amendment, see State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear, 142 Wis. 320, 343-351, 125 N. W. 961, 20 Ann. Cas. 633 (1910).

CHAPTER V

PERSONAL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

CIVIL RIGHTS CASES¹ (1883) 109 U. S. 3, 20-25, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835, Mr Justice BRADLEY (holding invalid the act of Congress discussed below):

"It is true that slavery cannot exist without law, any more than property in lands and goods can exist without law: and, therefore, the thirteenth amendment may be regarded as nullifying all state laws which establish or uphold slavery. But it has a reflex character also, establishing and decreeing universal civil and political freedom throughout the United States; and it is assumed, that the power vested in Congress to enforce the article by appropriate legislation, clothes Congress with power to pass all laws necessary and proper for abolishing all badges and incidents of slavery in the United States: and upon this assumption it is claimed, that this is sufficient authority for declaring by law that all persons shall have equal accommodations and privileges in all inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement; the argument being, that the denial of such equal accommodations and privileges is, in itself, a subjection to a species of servitude within the meaning of the amendment. Conceding the major proposition to be true, that Congress has a right to enact all necessary and proper laws for the obliteration and prevention of slavery with all its badges and incidents, is the minor proposition also true, that the denial to any person of admission to the accommodations and privileges of an inn, a public conveyance, or a theatre, does subject that person to any form of servitude, or tend to fasten upon him any badge of slavery? If it does not, then power to pass the law is not found in the thirteenth amendment.

"In a very able and learned presentation of the cognate question as to the extent of the rights, privileges and immunities of citizens which cannot rightfully be abridged by state laws under the fourteenth amendment, made in a former case, a long list of burdens and disabilities of a servile character, incident to feudal vassalage in France, and which were abolished by the decrees of the National Assembly, was presented for the purpose of showing that all inequalities and observances exacted by one man from another were servitudes, or badges of slavery, which a great nation, in its effort to establish universal liberty, made haste to wipe out and destroy. But these were servitudes imposed by the old law, or by long custom, which had the force of law, and exacted by one man from another without the latter's consent. Should any such servitudes be imposed by a state law, there can be no doubt that the law would be repugnant to the fourteenth, no less than to the thirteenth amendment; nor any greater doubt that Congress has adequate power to forbid any such servitude from being exacted. * * *

¹ The remainder of this case is printed post, p. 210.

"The long existence of African slavery in this country gave us very distinct notions of what it was, and what were its necessary incidents. Compulsory service of the slave for the benefit of the master, restraint of his movements except by the master's will, disability to hold property, to make contracts, to have a standing in court, to be a witness against a white person, and such like burdens and incapacities, were the inseparable incidents of the institution. Severer punishments for crimes were imposed on the slave than on free persons guilty of the same offences. Congress, as we have seen, by the Civil Rights Bill of 1866, passed in view of the thirteenth amendment, before the fourteenth was adopted, undertook to wipe out these burdens and disabilities, the necessary incidents of slavery, constituting its substance and visible form; and to secure to all citizens of every race and color, and without regard to previous servitude, those fundamental rights which are the essence of civil freedom, namely, the same right to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to inherit, purchase, lease, sell and convey property, as is enjoyed by white citizens. Whether this legislation was fully authorized by the thirteenth amendment alone, without the support which it afterwards received from the fourteenth amendment, after the adoption of which it was re-enacted with some additions, it is not necessary to inquire." * * *

"The only question under the present head, therefore, is, whether the refusal to any persons of the accommodations of an inn, or a public conveyance, or a place of public amusement, by an individual, and without any sanction or support from any state law or regulation, does inflict upon such persons any manner of servitude, or form of slavery, as those terms are understood in this country? Many wrongs may be obnoxious to the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment which are not, in any just sense, incidents or elements of slavery. Such, for example, would be the taking of private property without due process of law; or allowing persons who have committed certain crimes (horse-stealing, for example) to be seized and hung by the posse comitatus without regular trial; or denying to any person, or class of persons, the right to pursue any peaceful avocations allowed to others. What is called class legislation would belong to this category, and would be obnoxious to the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment, but would not necessarily be so to the thirteenth, when not involving the idea of any subjection of one man to another. * * *

"After giving to these questions all the consideration which their importance demands, we are forced to the conclusion that such an act of refusal has nothing to do with slavery or involuntary servitude, and that if it is violative of any right of the party, his redress is to be sought under the laws of the state; or if those laws are adverse to his rights and do not protect him, his remedy will be found in the corrective legislation which Congress has adopted, or may adopt, for counteracting the effect of state laws, or state action, prohibited by the fourteenth amendment. It would be running the slavery argument into the ground to make it apply to every act of discrimination which a person may see fit to make as to the guests he will entertain, or as to the people he will take into his coach or cab or car, or admit to his concert or theatre, or deal with in other matters of intercourse or business.

² See United States v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 16,151 (1866); United States v. Morris (D. C.) 125 Fed. 322 (1903).

* * * There were thousands of free colored people in this country before the abolition of slavery, enjoying all the essential rights of life, liberty and property the same as white citizens; yet no one, at that time, thought that it was any invasion of his personal status as a freeman because he was not admitted to all the privileges enjoyed by white citizens, or because he was subjected to discriminations in the enjoyment of accommodations in inns, public conveyances and places of amusement. Mere discriminations on account of race or color were not regarded as badges of slavery. If, since that time, the enjoyment of equal rights in all these respects has become established by constitutional enactment, it is not by force of the thirteenth amendment (which merely abolishes slavery), but by force of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.³ * * *

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

³ Accord: Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 68-69, 21 L. Ed. 394 (1873) (law forbidding individuals to maintain slaughter houses); Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256 (1896) (separate coach law); Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65 (1906) (private intimidation of persons from employment); Browner v. Irvin (C. C.) 169 Fed. 964 (1909) (arrest for two hours and beating).

In Hodges v. United States, above, Brewer, J., said (203 U. S. 16-18, 27 Sup. Ct. 8, 9, 51 L. Ed. 65): "The things denounced are slavery and involuntary servitude, and Congress is given power to enforce that denunciation. All understand by these terms a condition of enforced compulsory service of one to another. * * * It is said, however, that one of the disabilities of slavery, one of the indicia of its existence, was a lack of power to make or perform contracts, and that when these defendants, by intimidation and force, compelled the colored men named in the indictment to desist from performing their contract, they, to that extent, reduced those parties to a condition of slavery,—that is, of subjection to the will of defendants, and deprived them of a freeman's power to perform his contract. But every wrong done to an individual by another, acting singly or in concert with others, operates pro tanto to abridge some of the freedom to which the individual is entitled. A freeman has a right to be protected in his person from an assault and battery. He is entitled to hold his property safe from trespass or appropriation; but no mere personal assault or trespass or appropriation operates to reduce the individual to a condition of slavery."

ROBERTSON v. BALDWIN.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1897. 165 U. S. 275, 17 Sup. Ct. 326, 41 L. Ed. 715.)

[Appeal from the federal District Court for the Northern District of California. R. S. U. S. §§ 4598, 4599, provide that seamen who desert their vessel in violation of their contracts may be arrested and forcibly returned to their vessel for service, and section 4596 provides a punishment by imprisonment for desertion or absence without leave. Robertson and others deserted and were returned to their vessel. They refused to work and were held by the federal marshal to answer a charge under section 4596. A writ of habeas corpus was dismissed, and this appeal taken.]

Mr. Justice BROWN. * * * The question whether sections 4598 and 4599 conflict with the thirteenth amendment, forbidding slavery and involuntary servitude, depends upon the construction to be given to the term "involuntary servitude." Does the epithet "involuntary" attach to the word "servitude" continuously, and make illegal any service which becomes involuntary at any time during its existence? or does it attach only at the inception of the servitude, and characterize it as unlawful because unlawfully entered into? If the former be the true construction, then no one, not even a soldier, sailor, or apprentice, can surrender his liberty, even for a day; and the soldier may desert his regiment upon the eve of battle, or the sailor abandon his ship at any intermediate port or landing, or even in a storm at sea, provided, only, he can find means of escaping to another vessel. If the latter, then an individual may, for a valuable consideration, contract for the surrender of his personal liberty for a definite time and for a recognized purpose, and subordinate his going and coming to the will of another during the continuance of the contract; not that all such contracts would be lawful, but that a servitude which was knowingly and willingly entered into could not be termed "involuntary." Thus, if one should agree, for a yearly wage, to serve another in a particular capacity during his life, and never to leave his estate without his consent, the contract might not be enforceable for the want of a legal remedy, or might be void upon grounds of public policy; but the servitude could not be properly termed "involuntary." Such agreements for a limited personal servitude at one time were very common in England, and by statute of June 17, 1823 (4 Geo. IV, c. 34, § 3), it was enacted that if any servant in husbandry, or any artificer, calico printer, handicraftsman, miner, collier, keelman, pitman, glassman, potter, laborer or other person, should contract to serve another for a definite time, and should desert such service during the term of the contract, he was made liable to a criminal punishment. The breach of a contract for personal service has not, however, been recognized in this country, as involving a liability to criminal punishment, except in the cases of soldiers, sailors, and possibly some others; nor would public opinion tolerate a statute to that effect.

But we are also of opinion that, even if the contract of a seaman could be considered within the letter of the thirteenth amendment, it is not, within its spirit, a case of involuntary servitude. The law is perfectly well settled that the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, commonly known as the "Bill of Rights," were not intended to lay down any novel principles of government, but simply to embody certain guaranties and immunities which we had inherited from our English ancestors, and which had, from time immemorial, been subject to certain well-recognized exceptions, arising from the necessities of the case. In incorporating these principles into the fundamental law, there was no intention of disregarding the exceptions, which continued to be recognized as if they had been formally expressed. Thus, the freedom of speech and of the press (article 1) does not permit the publication of libels, blasphemous or indecent articles, or other publications injurious to public morals or private reputation; the right of the people to keep and bear arms (article 2) is not infringed by laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons; the provision that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy (article 5) does not prevent a second trial, if upon the first trial the jury failed to agree, or if the verdict was set aside upon the defendant's motion (U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662, 672, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300); nor does the provision of the same article that no one shall be a witness against himself impair his obligation to testify, if a prosecution against him be barred by the lapse of time, a pardon, or by statutory enactment (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, and cases cited). Nor does the provision that an accused person shall be confronted with the witnesses against him prevent the admission of dying declarations, or the depositions of witnesses who have died since the former trial.

The prohibition of slavery, in the thirteenth amendment, is well known to have been adopted with reference to a state of affairs which had existed in certain states of the Union since the foundation of the government, while the addition of the words "involuntary servitude" were said, in the Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394, to have been intended to cover the system of Mexican peonage and the Chinese coolie trade, the practical operation of which might have been a revival of the institution of slavery under a different and less offensive name. It is clear, however, that the amendment was not intended to introduce any novel doctrine with respect to certain descriptions of service which have always been treated as exceptional, such as military and naval enlistments, or to disturb the right of parents and guardians to the custody of their minor children or wards.¹ The amendment, however, makes no distinction between a public and a private service. To say that persons engaged in a public service are not within the amendment is to admit that there are exceptions to its general language, and the further question is at once presented, where shall the line be drawn? We know of no better answer to make than to say that services which have from time immemorial been treated as exceptional shall not be regarded as within its purview.

From the earliest historical period the contract of the sailor has been treated as an exceptional one, and involving, to a certain extent, the surrender of his personal liberty during the life of the contract. Indeed, the business of navigation could scarcely be carried on without some guaranty, beyond the ordinary civil remedies upon contract, that the sailor will not desert the ship at a critical moment, or leave her at some place where seamen are impossible to be obtained,—as Molloy forcibly expresses it, “to rot in her neglected brine.” Such desertion might involve a long delay of the vessel while the master is seeking another crew, an abandonment of the voyage, and, in some cases, the safety of the ship itself. Hence, the laws of nearly all maritime nations have made provision for securing the personal attendance of the crew on board, and for their criminal punishment for desertion, or absence, without leave, during the life of the shipping articles. * * * [The early maritime laws of various nations are here considered.]

Nearly all of the ancient commercial codes either make provision for payment of damages by seamen who absent themselves from their ships without leave, or for their imprisonment, or forcible conveyance on board. Some of the modern commercial codes of Europe and South America make similar provisions. Argentine Code, art. 1154. Others, including the French and Spanish Codes, are silent upon the subject. * * * [English legislation to the same effect is here considered.]

The earliest American legislation which we have been able to find is an act of the colonial general court of Massachusetts, passed about 1668, wherein it was enacted that any mariner who departs and leaves a voyage upon which he has entered shall forfeit all his wages, and shall be further punished by imprisonment or otherwise, as the case may be circumstanced; and if he shall have received any considerable part of his wages, and shall run away, he shall be pursued as a disobedient runaway servant. Col. Laws Mass. (Ed. 1889) 251, 256.

The provision of Rev. St. § 4598, under which these proceedings were taken, was first enacted by congress in 1790. 1 Stat. 131, § 7.

¹ Accord (whether control be exercised by parents, or by state under its tutorial power): Kennedy v. Meara, 127 Ga. 68, 56 S. E. 243, 9 Ann. Cas. 396 (1906) (apprenticing of children by “home for the friendless”).

This act provided for the apprehension of deserters and their delivery on board the vessel, but apparently made no provision for imprisonment as a punishment for desertion; but by the shipping commissioners' act of June 7, 1872 (17 Stat. 243, 273, c. 322, § 51), now incorporated into the Revised Statutes as section 4596 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3113), the court is authorized to add to forfeiture of wages for desertion imprisonment for a period of not more than three months, and for absence without leave imprisonment for not more than one month. In this act and the amendments thereto very careful provisions are made for the protection of seamen against the frauds and cruelty of masters, the devices of boarding-house keepers, and, as far as possible, against the consequences of their own ignorance and improvidence. At the same time discipline is more stringently enforced by additional punishments for desertion, absence without leave, disobedience, insubordination, and barratry. Indeed, seamen are treated by congress, as well as by the parliament of Great Britain, as deficient in that full and intelligent responsibility for their acts which is accredited to ordinary adults, and as needing the protection of the law in the same sense in which minors and wards are entitled to the protection of their parents and guardians.² "Quemadmodum pater in filios, magister in discipulos, dominus in servos vel familiares." The ancient characterization of seamen as "wards of admiralty" is even more accurate now than it was formerly.

In the face of this legislation upon the subject of desertion and absence without leave, which was in force in this country for more than 60 years before the thirteenth amendment was adopted, and similar legislation abroad from time immemorial, it cannot be open to doubt that the provision against involuntary servitude was never intended to apply to their contracts.

Judgment affirmed.³

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion. GRAY, J., was absent.]

² See Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 23 Sup. Ct. 821, 47 L. Ed. 1002 (1903).

³ The compulsory requirement from certain persons of two days' labor, annually, upon the public highways, has been held not to violate prohibitions against involuntary servitude. In re Dassler, 35 Kan. 678, 12 Pac. 130 (1886); Dennis v. Simon, 51 Ohio St. 233, 36 N. E. 832 (1894). "Such labor has never been regarded or construed by any of the authorities as falling within the terms of the Constitution prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude. * * * There are certain services which may be commanded of every citizen by his government, and obedience enforced thereto. Among these services are labor on the streets or highways and training in the militia."—Horton, C. J., in In re Dassler, above (35 Kan. at page 684, 12 Pac. at page 134).

BAILEY v. ALABAMA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1911. 219 U. S. 219, 31 Sup. Ct. 145, 55 L. Ed. 191.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Alabama, which had affirmed the conviction of Bailey in the Montgomery city court for violation of section 4730, Code of Alabama. The facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice HUGHES. * * * The statute in question is section 4730 of the Code of Alabama of 1896, as amended in 1903 and 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 636), * * * [which] reads as follows:¹ * * *

There is also a rule of evidence enforced by the courts of Alabama which must be regarded as having the same effect as if read into the statute itself, that the accused, for the purpose of rebutting the statutory presumption, shall not be allowed to testify "as to his uncommunicated motives, purpose, or intention." Bailey v. State, 161 Ala. 77, 78, 49 South. 886. * * *

We at once dismiss from consideration the fact that the plaintiff in error is a black man. * * * The statute, on its face, makes no racial discrimination, and the record fails to show its existence in fact. * * *

Prima facie evidence is sufficient evidence to outweigh the presumption of innocence, and, if not met by opposing evidence, to support a verdict of guilty. "It is such as, in judgment of law, is sufficient to establish the fact; and, if not rebutted, remains sufficient for the purpose." Kelly v. Jackson, 6 Pet. 632, 8 L. Ed. 526. * * *

It is not sufficient to declare that the statute does not make it the duty of the jury to convict, where there is no other evidence but the breach of the contract and the failure to pay the debt. The point is that, in such a case, the statute authorizes the jury to convict. It is not enough to say that the jury may not accept that evidence as alone sufficient; for the jury may accept it, and they have the express warrant of the statute to accept it as a basis for their verdict. And it is in this light that the validity of the statute must be determined. * * *

While, in considering the natural operation and effect of the statute, as amended, we are not limited to the particular facts of the case at the bar, they present an illuminating illustration. We may briefly restate them. Bailey made a contract to work for a year at $12 a month. He received $15, and he was to work this out, being entitled monthly only to $10.75 of his wages. No one was present when he made the contract but himself and the manager of the employing company. There is not a particle of evidence of any circumstance indicating that he made the contract or received the money with any intent to injure or defraud his employer. On the contrary, he actually worked for upwards of a month. His motive in leaving does not appear, the only showing being that it was without legal excuse and that he did not repay the money received. For this he is sentenced to a fine of $30 and to imprisonment at hard labor, in default of the payment of the fine and costs, for 136 days. Was not the case the same in effect as if the statute had made it a criminal act to leave the service without just cause and without liquidating the debt? To say that he has been found guilty of an intent to injure or defraud his employer, and not merely for breaking his contract and not paying his debt, is a distinction without a difference to Bailey.

¹ "Any person who, with intent to injure or defraud his employer, enters into a contract in writing for the performance of any act of service, and thereby obtains money or other personal property from such employer, and with like intent, and without just cause, and without refunding such money, or paying for such property, refuses or fails to perform such act or service, must on conviction be punished by a fine in double the damage suffered by the injured party, but not more than $300, one half of said fine to go to the county and one half to the party injured; * * * and the refusal or failure of any person, who enters into such contract, to perform such act or service, * * * or pay for such property, without just cause, shall be prima facie evidence of the intent to injure his employer or landlord or defraud him."

Consider the situation of the accused under this statutory presumption. If, at the outset, nothing took place but the making of the contract and the receipt of the money, he could show nothing else. If there was no legal justification for his leaving his employment, he could show none. If he had not paid the debt, there was nothing to be said as to that. The law of the state did not permit him to testify that he did not intend to injure or defraud. Unless he were fortunate enough to be able to command evidence of circumstances affirmatively showing good faith, he was helpless. He stood, stripped by the statute of the presumption of innocence, and exposed to conviction for fraud upon evidence only of breach of contract and failure to pay. * * *

[After referring to Toney v. State, 141 Ala. 120, 37 South. 332, 67 L. R. A. 286, 109 Am. St. Rep. 23, 3 Ann. Cas. 319:] We cannot escape the conclusion that, although the statute in terms is to punish fraud, still its natural and inevitable effect is to expose to conviction for crime those who simply fail or refuse to perform contracts for personal service in liquidation of a debt; and judging its purpose by its effect, that it seeks in this way to provide the means of compulsion through which performance of such service may be secured. The question is whether such a statute is constitutional.

This court has frequently recognized the general power of every legislature to prescribe the evidence which shall be received, and the effect of that evidence, in the courts of its own government. Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 749, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905, 925. In the exercise of this power numerous statutes have been enacted providing that proof of one fact shall be prima facie evidence of the main fact in issue; and where the inference is not purely arbi trary, and there is a rational relation between the two facts, and the accused is not deprived of a proper opportunity to submit all the facts bearing upon the issue, it has been held that such statutes do not violate the requirements of due process of law.² * * *

In this class of cases where the entire subject-matter of the legislation is otherwise within state control, the question has been whether the prescribed rule of evidence interferes with the guaranteed equality before the law, or violates those fundamental rights and immutable principles of justice which are embraced within the conception of due process of law. But where the conduct or fact, the existence of which is made the basis of the statutory presumption, itself falls within the scope of a provision of the federal Constitution, a further question arises. It is apparent that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions. And the state may not in this way interfere with matters withdrawn from its authority by the federal Constitution, or subject an accused to conviction for conduct which it is powerless to proscribe.

In the present case it is urged that the statute as amended, through the operation of the presumption for which it provides, violates the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress passed for its enforcement.

The thirteenth amendment provides:

"Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Pursuant to the authority thus conferred, Congress passed the act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. 546, c. 187), the provisions of which are now found in sections 1990 and 5526 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1266, 3715), as follows:³ * * *

The act of March 2, 1867 (Rev. Stat. §§ 1990 and 5526, supra), was

² See Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, post, p. 381.

³ "Sec. 1990. The holding of any person to service or labor under the system known as peonage is abolished and forever prohibited in the territory of New Mexico, or in any other territory or state of the United States; and all acts, laws, resolutions, orders, regulations, or usages of the territory of New Mexico, or of any other territory or state, which have heretofore established, maintained, or enforced, or by virtue of which any attempt shall hereafter be made to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise, are declared null and void."

"Sec. 5526. Every person who holds, arrests, returns, or causes to be held, arrested, or returned, or in any manner aids in the arrest or return, of any person to a condition of peonage, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both."

a valid exercise of this express authority. Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 49 L. Ed. 726. * * *

The fact that the debtor contracted to perform the labor which is sought to be compelled does not withdraw the attempted enforcement from the condemnation of the statute. The full intent of the constitutional provision could be defeated with obvious facility if, through the guise of contracts under which advances had been made, debtors could be held to compulsory service. It is the compulsion of the service that the statute inhibits, for when that occurs, the condition of servitude is created, which would be not less involuntary because of the original agreement to work out the indebtedness. The contract exposes the debtor to liability for the loss due to the breach, but not to enforced labor. This has been so clearly stated by this court in the Case of Clyatt, supra, that discussion is unnecessary. The court there said: "The constitutionality and scope of sections 1990 and 5526 present the first questions for our consideration. They prohibit peonage. What is peonage? It may be defined as a status or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness.⁴ * * * Peonage is sometimes classified as voluntary or involuntary, but this implies simply a difference in the mode of origin, but none in the character of the servitude. The one exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor. The other is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. But peonage, however created, is compulsory service, involuntary servitude. The peon can release himself therefrom, it is true, by the payment of the debt, but otherwise the service is enforced. A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject like any other contractor to an action for damages for breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service. We need not stop to consider any possible limits or exceptional cases, such as the service of a sailor (Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 17 Sup. Ct. 326, 41 L. Ed. 715), or the obligations of a child to its parents, or of an apprentice to his master, or the power of the legislature to make unlawful and punish criminally an abandonment by an employee of his post of labor in any extreme cases.⁵ That which is contemplated by the statute is compulsory service to secure the payment of a debt." 197 U. S. 215, 216, 25 Sup. Ct. 430, 49 L. Ed. 726.

⁴ The legal status of peonage before the thirteenth amendment is discussed in Jaramillo v. Romero, 1 N. M. 190 (1857).

⁵ See Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310, 317, 11 C. C. A. 209, 25 L. R. A. 414 (1894).

The act of Congress, nullifying all state laws by which it should be attempted to enforce the "service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise," necessarily embraces all legislation which seeks to compel the service or labor by making it a crime to refuse or fail to perform it. Such laws would furnish the readiest means of compulsion. The thirteenth amendment prohibits involuntary servitude except as punishment for crime. But the exception, allowing full latitude for the enforcement of penal laws, does not destroy the prohibition. It does not permit slavery or involuntary servitude to be established or maintained through the operation of the criminal law by making it a crime to refuse to submit to the one or to render the service which would constitute the other. The state may impose involuntary servitude as a punishment for crime, but it may not compel one man to labor for another in payment of a debt, by punishing him as a criminal if he does not perform the service or pay the debt.⁶

If the statute in this case had authorized the employing company to seize the debtor, and hold him to the service until he paid the $15, or had furnished the equivalent in labor, its invalidity would not be questioned. It would be equally clear that the state could not authorize its constabulary to prevent the servant from escaping, and to force him to work out his debt. But the state could not avail itself of the sanction of the criminal law to supply the compulsion any more than it could use or authorize the use of physical force. "In contemplation of the law, the compulsion to such service by the fear of punishment under a criminal statute is more powerful than any guard which the employer could station." Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 22, 60 S. E. 24, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249, 14 Ann. Cas. 1109.

What the state may not do directly it may not do indirectly. If it cannot punish the servant as a criminal for the mere failure or refusal to serve without paying his debt, it is not permitted to accomplish the same result by creating a statutory presumption which, upon proof of no other fact, exposes him to conviction and punishment. * * * There is no more important concern than to safeguard the freedom of labor upon which alone can enduring prosperity be based. * * * The act of Congress deprives of effect all legislative measures of any state through which, directly or indirectly, the prohibited thing, to wit, compulsory service to secure the payment of a debt, may be established or maintained; and we conclude that section 4730, as amended, of the Code of Alabama, in so far as it makes the refusal or failure to perform the act or service, without refunding the money or paying for the property received, prima facie evidence of the commission of the crime which the section defines, is in conflict with the thirteenth amendment, and the legislation authorized by that amendment, and is therefore invalid. * * *

⁶ Accord: Ex parte Drayton (D. C.) 153 Fed. 986 (1907); Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 9, 60 S. E. 19 (1908), annotated 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242 ff., 14 Ann. Cas. 1105. See, also, United States v. Clement (D. C.) 171 Fed. 974 (1909). In Ex parte Hollman, Woods, J., said (79 S. C. 26, 60 S. E. 26, 21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105): "Even if prosperity is not always promoted by constitutional guarantees, liberty is better than prosperity."

Judgment reversed.⁷

[HOLMES, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which LURTON, J., concurred, on the ground that the thirteenth amendment did not forbid a state to make breach of contract a crime with the usual penal consequences. "Compulsory work for no private master in a jail is not peonage" (219 U. S. 247, 31 Sup. Ct. 153, 55 L. Ed. 191).]

⁷ As to the effect of the thirteenth amendment upon the power of courts of equity to decree performance of contracts of personal service, or to enjoin strikes, see Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310 (1891); In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 658, 41 L. Ed. 1110 (1897).

As to the extent of a state's power to compel and to hire out the labor of convicts, see 27 L. R. A. 593 ff., note; In re Thompson, 117 Mo. 83, 22 S. W. 863, 20 L. R. A. 462, 38 Am. St. Rep. 629 (1893).

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—Most of our state Constitutions now forbid imprisonment for debt, unless fraudulently incurred. Stimson, Fed. and State Consts. § 80. For the general scope of these provisions, see the authorities in 34 L. R. A. 634 ff.; 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140 ff.; 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259 ff.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.—See Const. Amend. I. Similar clauses are found in the state Constitutions. For their general scope and interpretation, see Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 161-167, 25 L. Ed. 244 (1879) (religious belief as excusing polygamy); Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637 (1890) (same); People v. Pierson, 176 N. Y. 201, 68 N. E. 243, 63 L. R. A. 187, 98 Am. St. Rep. 666 (1903) (same, failure to call physician for minor); Sweeney v. Webb, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 324, 76 S. W. 766 (1903), affirmed in 97 Tex. 250, 77 S. W. 1135 (same, use of sacramental wine); Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 548 (1861), affirmed in Neuendorf v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557, 25 Am. Rep. 235 (1877) (Sunday laws); State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 324, 50 N. E. 900, 41 L. R. A. 854 (1898) (same); Pfeiffer v. Board of Education of Detroit, 118 Mich. 560, 77 N. W. 250, 42 L. R. A. 536 (1898) (devotional exercises and Bible reading in schools); State ex rel. Freeman v. Scherer, 65 Neb. 853, 91 N. W. 846, 93 N. W. 169, 59 L. R. A. 927 (1902) (same); People ex rel. v. Board of Education of Dist. 21, 215 Ill. 334, 92 N. E. 251, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442, 19 Ann. Cas. 220 (1910) (same).

CHAPTER VI

PROTECTION TO PERSONS ACCUSED OF CRIME

SECTION 1.—EX POST FACTO LAWS—BILLS OF ATTAINDER

CALDER v. BULL.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1798. 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Connecticut. In March, 1793, the probate court for Hartford disapproved the will of Normand Morrison, under which Bull claimed, the result being that a right to recover certain property vested in Calder and his wife as heir of said Morrison. More than eighteen months later, after Bull's right of appeal had been barred by statute, the legislature in May, 1795, passed an act setting aside the decree of the probate court and granting Bull a new trial. On this trial the will was approved and Bull's claim was upheld, which was later affirmed by the state Supreme Court.]

Mr. Justice CHASE. * * * The sole inquiry is, whether this resolution or law of Connecticut, having such operation, is an ex post facto law within the prohibition of the federal Constitution? * * *

All the restrictions contained in the Constitution of the United States, on the power of the state legislatures, were provided in favor of the authority of the federal government. The prohibition against their making any ex post facto laws was introduced for greater caution, and very probably arose from the knowledge that the Parliament of Great Britain claimed and exercised a power to pass such laws, under the denomination of bills of attainder, or bills of pains and penalties; the first inflicting capital, and the other less punishment. These acts were legislative judgments; and an exercise of judicial power. Sometimes they respected the crime, by declaring acts to be treason which were not treason when committed;¹ at other times they violated the rules of evidence, to supply a deficiency of legal proof, by admitting one witness, when the existing law required two; by receiving evidence without oath; or the oath of the wife against the husband; or other testimony which the courts of justice would not admit;² at other times they inflicted punishments where the party was not by law liable to any punishment;³ and in other cases they inflicted greater punishment than the law annexed to the offence.⁴ The ground for the exercise of such legislative power was this, that the safety of the kingdom depended on the death, or other punishment, of the offender; as if traitors, when discovered, could be so formidable, or the government so insecure. With very few exceptions, the advocates of such laws were stimulated by ambition, or personal resentment and vindictive malice. To prevent such, and similar acts of violence and injustice, I believe the federal and state legislatures were prohibited from passing any bill of attainder, or any ex post facto law.

¹ The case of the Earl of Strafford, in 1640.—Rep.

The Constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 9, prohibits the legislature of the United States from passing any ex post facto law; and in section 10 lays several restrictions on the authority of the legislatures of the several states; and among them, "that no state shall pass any ex post facto law."

It may be remembered that the legislatures of several of the states, to wit, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and North and South Carolina, are expressly prohibited, by their state Constitutions, from passing any ex post facto law.

I shall endeavor to show what law is to be considered an ex post facto law, within the words and meaning of the prohibition in the federal Constitution. The prohibition, "that no state shall pass any ex post facto law," necessarily requires some explanation; for naked and without explanation it is unintelligible, and means nothing. Literally it is only that a law shall not be passed concerning, and after the fact, or thing done, or action committed. I would ask, what fact; of what nature or kind; and by whom done? That Charles I. King of England, was beheaded; that Oliver Cromwell was Protector of England; that Louis XVI, late King of France, was guillotined,—are all facts that have happened, but it would be nonsense to suppose that the states were prohibited from making any law after either of these events, and with reference thereto. The prohibition in the letter is not to pass any law concerning and after the fact, but the plain and obvious meaning and intention of the prohibition is this, that the legislatures of the several states shall not pass laws after a fact done by a subject, or citizen, which shall have relation to such fact, and shall punish him for having done it. The prohibition, considered in this light, is an additional bulwark in favor of the personal security of the subject, to protect his person from punishment by legislative acts, having a retrospective operation. I do not think it was inserted to secure the citizen in his private rights, of either property or contracts. The prohibitions not to make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts, and not to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, were inserted to secure private rights; but the restriction not to pass any ex post facto law, was to secure the person of the subject from injury or punishment, in consequence of such law. If the prohibition against making ex post facto laws was intended to secure personal rights from being affected or injured by such laws, and the prohibition is sufficiently extensive for that object, the other restraints I have enumerated were unnecessary, and therefore improper, for both of them are retrospective.

² The case of Sir John Fenwick, in 1696.—Rep.

³ The banishment of Lord Clarendon, 1667, 19 Car. II, c. 10, and of Bishop Atterbury, in 1723, 9 Geo. I, c. 17.—Rep.

⁴ The Coventry Act, in 1670, 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 1.—Rep.

I will state what laws I consider ex post facto laws, within the words and the intent of the prohibition. 1st. Every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal; and punishes such action. 2d. Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was, when committed. 3d. Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime, when committed. 4th. Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offence, in order to convict the offender. All these and similar laws are manifestly unjust and oppressive. In my opinion, the true distinction is between ex post facto laws and retrospective laws. Every ex post facto law must necessarily be retrospective, but every retrospective law is not an ex post facto law; the former only are prohibited. Every law that takes away or impairs rights vested, agreeable to existing laws, is retrospective, and is generally unjust, and may be oppressive; and it is a good general rule that a law should have no retrospect; but there are cases in which laws may justly, and for the benefit of the community, and also of individuals, relate to a time antecedent to their commencement; as statutes of oblivion, or of pardon. They are certainly retrospective, and literally both concerning, and after, the facts committed. But I do not consider any law ex post facto, within the prohibition, that mollifies the rigor of the criminal law; but only those that create, or aggravate, the crime; or increase the punishment, or change the rules of evidence, for the purpose of conviction. Every law that is to have an operation before the making thereof, as to commence at an antecedent time, or to save time from the statute of limitations, or to excuse acts which were unlawful, and before committed, and the like, is retrospective. But such laws may be proper or necessary, as the case may be. There is a great and apparent difference between making an unlawful act lawful, and the making an innocent action criminal, and punishing it as a crime. The expressions "ex post facto laws" are technical; they had been in use long before the Revolution, and had acquired an appropriate meaning by legislators, lawyers, and authors. The celebrated and judicious Sir William Blackstone, in his Commentaries, considers an ex post facto law precisely in the same light as I have done. His opinion is confirmed by his successor, Mr. Wooddeson, and by the author of the Federalist, whom I esteem superior to both, for his extensive and accurate knowledge of the true principles of government.

I also rely greatly on the definition, or explanation of ex post facto laws as given by the conventions of Massachusetts, Maryland, and North Carolina, in their several Constitutions, or forms of government. * * * [Here follow quotations from these Constitutions, expressly forbidding retrospective criminal laws.]

I am of opinion, that the fact, contemplated by the prohibition, and not to be affected by a subsequent law, was some fact to be done by a citizen or subject. In 2 Lord Raymond, 1352, Raymond, J., called the Stat. 7 Geo. I, stat. 2, pt. 8, about registering contracts for South Sea stock, an ex post facto law; because it affected contracts made before the statute. * * * There is no doubt that a man may be a trespasser from the beginning, by matter of after fact; as where an entry is given by law, and the party abuses it; or where the law gives a distress, and the party kills, or works the distress. I admit, an act unlawful in the beginning may, in some cases, become lawful by matter of after fact. * * * There appears to me a manifest distinction between the case where one fact relates to, and affects another fact, as where an after fact, by operation of law, makes a former fact either lawful or unlawful; and the case where a law made after a fact done, is to operate on, and to affect such fact. In the first case both the acts are done by private persons. In the second case the first act is done by a private person, and the second act is done by the legislature to affect the first act. I believe that but one instance can be found in which a British judge called a statute that affected contracts made before the statute, an ex post facto law; but the judges of Great Britain always considered penal statutes, that created crimes, or increased the punishment of them, as ex post facto laws.

If the term ex post facto law is to be construed to include and to prohibit the enacting any law after a fact, it will greatly restrict the power of the federal and state legislatures; and the consequences of such a construction may not be foreseen. If the prohibition to make no ex post facto law extends to all laws made after the fact, the two prohibitions, not to make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts, and not to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, were improper and unnecessary.

It was further urged, that if the provision does not extend to prohibit the making any law after a fact, then all choses in action, all lands by devise, all personal property by bequest or distribution, by elegit, by execution, by judgments, particularly on torts, will be unprotected from the legislative power of the states; rights vested may be divested at the will and pleasure of the state legislatures; and, therefore, that the true construction and meaning of the prohibition is, that the states pass no law to deprive a citizen of any right vested in him by existing laws. It is not to be presumed that the federal or state legislatures will pass laws to deprive citizens of rights vested in them by existing laws; unless for the benefit of the whole community; and on making full satisfaction. The restraint against making any ex post facto laws was not considered, by the framers of the Constitution, as extending to prohibit the depriving a citizen even of a vested right to property; or the provision, "that private property should not be taken for public use, without just compensation," was unnecessary. * * *

Decree affirmed.⁵

[The concurring opinions of PATERSON, IREDELL, and CUSHING, JJ., are omitted.]

SHEPHERD v. PEOPLE.

(Court of Appeals of New York, 1862. 25 N. Y. 406.)

[Writ of error to the Supreme Court of New York. Shepherd was indicted in the Court of General Sessions in October, 1857, for arson in the first degree, committed in June, 1857, and was found guilty in February, 1861. When the crime was committed its punishment was death. In April, 1860, it was changed to imprisonment for life at hard ⁵The meaning given by this case to the words "ex post facto" was the one intended by the Philadelphia Convention and understood by the state conventions that adopted the Constitution. See 5 Ed. Debates, 488; Federalist, (No. 84—Ford's Ed.) 571; Id., appendix, 641.

BILLS OF ATTAINDER.—These are also prohibited by Const. art. I, § 9, par. 3. They are judicially discussed in Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 323-325, 18 L. Ed. 356 (1867), Field, J., saying: "A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes, in the language of the text-books, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party, without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offence."

See, also, Pierce v. Carskadon, 16 Wall. 234, 21 L. Ed. 276 (1873).

As to the validity of the federal Confiscation Acts during the Civil War, see Const. art. III, § 3, par. 2; Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. 339, 19 L. Ed. 696 (1870); Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 268, 20 L. Ed. 135 (1871).

EX POST FACTO DECISIONS OF COURTS.—The constitutional prohibition applies only to legislative acts of the states or United States, not to changes of decision by courts in criminal cases with a retroactive effect. Ross v. Oregon, 227 U. S. 150, 161 ff., 33 Sup. Ct. 220, 57 L. Ed. — (1913). See State v. O'Neil, 147 Iowa, 513, 126 N. W. 454, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 691 (1910), annotated in 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788 ff.

Compare the doctrine in similar cases arising under the contract clause of the Constitution, post, p. 791.

labor. Shepherd was sentenced to the latter punishment, and this was affirmed by the state Supreme Court.]

SUTHERLAND, J. When the crime of which the prisoner was convicted was committed it was punishable with death. The prisoner was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison at Sing Sing for life. The prisoner must have been sentenced on the theory that the provisions of the Act of April 14, 1860, substituting imprisonment for life, for death, as the punishment for arson in the first degree, were intended to apply not only to an offence committed after that act took effect, but also to the offence of which the prisoner had been convicted, committed in 1857, before the passage of the act. * * *

If, however, the provisions of the act, changing the punishment of arson in the first degree, should be held to have been intended to apply to offences committed before the passage of the act, in my opinion so far the act should be held to be ex post facto and void.¹

I think this is shown conclusively by Judge Denio in his opinion in the Hartung Case;² but I will add that a law which increased the punishment with which an act was punishable when committed would be plainly ex post facto, although it might be said, perhaps, that the new law did not change the manner of the punishment; as, for instance, if, when the act was committed, it was punishable with thirty days' imprisonment and the new law declared that it should be punished with forty days' imprisonment; for as to the number of days' imprisonment by which the punishment was increased, the case would be precisely the same as if the act when committed had not been punishable at all, and under the new law the criminal could not be sentenced to any less number of days than were prescribed by it.

So also if an act, when committed, was punishable by thirty days' imprisonment, a subsequent law changing the punishment of the act to thirty stripes or to thirty dollars fine would be plainly ex post facto, for when the act was committed it was not punishable in that manner, and in view of the constitutional prohibition of ex post facto laws, the case would be precisely the same as if the act had not been punishable at all when committed. If you do not hold a law punishing an act in a different manner than it was punishable when committed to be ex post facto, irrespective of the question whether the new punishment is or is not more merciful or lenient, you will leave it to the discretion of the legislature and of judges to say whether the new punishment is or is not more merciful or lenient than the old; and such a construction of the constitutional prohibition would impair its value and certainty of protection. A law, the effect of which is simply to reduce or diminish the punishment with which an act was punishable when committed, cannot be an ex post facto law, because it inflicts no new or additional punishment. In Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. Ed. 162, Chief Justice Marshall defined an ex post facto law to be one which makes an act punishable "in a manner in which it was not punishable when committed." Add to this, or which increases the punishment with which the act was punishable when committed, and I think the definition will be as complete, and certain and safe, as can well be made.

¹ As to whether an ex post facto law fails altogether, so that it does not repeal the prior law, under which prior crimes may still be punished, or whether it merely releases former criminals from punishment, being effectual as to future crimes, see Flaherty v. Thomas, 12 Allen (Mass.) 428, 434-437 (1866); People v. McNulty, 93 Cal. 427, 436, 26 Pac. 597, 29 Pac. 61 (1892).

² Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95 (1860), holding a law ex post facto which substituted, for execution within four to eight weeks after sentence for murder, a year's imprisonment at hard labor and execution thereafter at the pleasure of the governor.

It is plain, then, that the moral or philosophical disquisition as to whether imprisonment for life at hard labor is better or more desirable or less severe than death, has really nothing to do with the question whether the Act of 1860, assuming that it was intended to have a retrospective operation, is, so far, ex post facto or not. Imprisonment for life at hard labor is an entirely different kind or manner of punishment, from punishment by death. The Act of 1860 entirely changed the punishment for arson in the first degree. It changed it from death to imprisonment for life. The two punishments have no elements in common. If it should be held that the Act of 1860 merely diminished the punishment with which the prisoner's crime was punishable when committed, because imprisonment for life at hard labor is generally considered a more lenient punishment than death, or one which the criminal would prefer to suffer, then it could be held that a law changing the punishment of an act from imprisonment for a certain number of days or months to a fine, or from a certain number of stripes to imprisonment for a certain number of days, was not ex post facto, because the court might think the new punishment more lenient than the old, or that the criminal would prefer to suffer the new punishment. Indeed, as I have before said, if you depart from the principle that a law is ex post facto because it punishes the offence in a different manner, or by a different kind of punishment, than it was punishable with when committed, the question whether the law is ex post facto is left to judicial discretion; for a decision of the question must depend upon the opinion of judges, as to whether the new punishment is more severe than the old, or whether the new punishment would or would not generally be preferred by criminals to the old. The construction of constitutional limitations should be left as little as possible to either legislative or judicial discretion.

My conclusion is, then, that the provisions of the Act of 1860, changing the punishment of arson in the first degree, were intended to apply only to offences thereafter committed; but if it should be held otherwise, then that those provisions are ex post facto and void, so far as they were intended to apply to a crime of arson in the first degree, committed before the passage of the act. In either view of the act, and upon either holding, the judgment of the court below must be reversed. * * *

Judgment reversed.*

[Three judges dissented upon another point in the case.]

* Accord: In re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 10 Sup. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 835 (1890) (requiring short period of solitary confinement to precede execution and increasing prisoner's uncertainty as to time of execution). But compare Storti's Case, 186 Mass. 57, 61 N. E. 759 (1901), and Rooney v. North Dakota, 196 U. S. 319, 25 Sup. Ct. 264, 49 L. Ed. 494, 3 Ann. Cas. 76 (1905).

In People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 492, 35 N. E. 951, 953, 23 L. R. A. 830, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572 (1894), Peckham, J., said: "I do not think that the mere fact of an alteration in the manner of punishment, without reference to the question of mitigation, necessarily renders an act obnoxious to the constitutional provision. I know it is alluded to in the two cases in this state above cited,—that of Hartung and of Shepherd. * * * I think that where a change is made in the manner of the punishment, if the change be of that nature which no sane man could by any possibility regard in any other light than that of a mitigation of punishment, the act would not be ex post facto where made applicable to offenses committed before its passage."

In several cases changes in the manner of punishment have been held valid. Commonwealth v. Wyman, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 237 (1853) (death to life imprisonment); Commonwealth v. Gardner, 11 Gray (Mass.) 438 (1858) (same); McGuire v. State, 76 Miss. 504, 25 South. 495 (1898) (same); Rooney v. North Dakota, above (period of confinement before execution increased from 3—6 months to 6—9 months), Harlan, J., saying (196 U. S. 325, 25 Sup. Ct. 266, 49 L. Ed. 494, 3 Ann. Cas. 76): "The court must assume that every rational person desires to live as long as he may;" State v. Williams, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 418, 45 Am. Dec. 741 (1846) (death to whipping, imprisonment and fine); Strong v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 193 (1822) (whipping to imprisonment).

Where a statute expressly provides that previous crimes shall not be affected by a new punishment, unless it mitigates the old one, it has been held that the defendant may choose between the old and new punishments. Herber v. State, 7 Tex. 69 (1851); Clarke v. State, 23 Miss. 261 (1852). This election is expressly given by statute in Texas: Texas Penal Code, arts. 15, 19; McInturf v. State, 20 Tex. App. 335 (1886).

The remission of a separable part of the former punishment is of course valid. People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 23 L. R. A. 830, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572 (1894).

A change in punishment that is in good faith referable to prison discipline as its primary object is valid, even though more onerous. Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95, 105 (1860); Murphy v. Commonwealth, 172 Mass. 264, 269, 52 N. E. 505, 43 L. R. A. 151, 70 Am. St. Rep. 266 (1899) (cases).

A law changing the punishment for crime is ex post facto if it requires any penalty that may be more severe than the best one that could be imposed under the old law, or if it permits a penalty more severe than the haviest one authorized by the old law. Flaherty v. Thomas, 12 Allen (Mass.) 428 (1866); In re Lambrecht, 137 Mich. 450, 100 N. W. 606 (1901); State ex rel. Theus v. Edwards, 109 La. 236, 33 South. 209 (1902). A subsequent law authorizing an indeterminate sentence not violating these rules is valid. Commonwealth v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 45 N. E. 1 (1896). As to the validity of an indeterminate sentence which qualifies prior definite rights to a shortening of term and permits of liberty for good conduct in prison, see Murphy v. Commonwealth, above.

A law imposing a heavier penalty upon second offenders, passed between the two offences, is valid. McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 21 Sup. Ct. 389, 45 L. Ed. 542 (1901).

THOMPSON v. UTAH.¹

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Utah. Thompson was charged with grand larceny, committed while Utah was a territory, and, after having been found guilty, was granted a new trial. The second trial was held after Utah became a state, and he was found guilty by a jury of eight jurors, this number being prescribed by the new Utah Constitution. His objection to the constitutionality of this was overruled in the state courts, and this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * As the offense of which the plaintiff in error was convicted was a felony, and as, by the law in force when the crime was committed, he could not have been tried by a jury of a less number than twelve jurors, the question is presented whether the provision in the Constitution of Utah, providing for a jury of eight persons in courts of general jurisdiction, except in capital cases, can be made applicable to a felony committed within the limits of the state while it was a territory, without bringing that provision into conflict with the clause of the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the passage by any state of an ex post facto law. * * *

It is not necessary to review the numerous cases in which the courts have determined whether particular statutes come within the constitutional prohibition of ex post facto laws. It is sufficient now to say that a statute belongs to that class which by its necessary operation and "in its relation to the offense, or its consequences, alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage." U. S. v. Hall, 2 Wash. C. C. 366, Fed. Cas. No. 15,285; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 228, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506; In re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 171, 10 Sup. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 835. Of course, a statute is not of that class unless it materially impairs the right of the accused to have the question of his guilt determined according to the law as it was when the offense was committed. And therefore it is well settled that the accused is not entitled of right to be tried in the exact mode, in all respects, that may be prescribed for the trial of criminal cases at the time of the commission of the offense charged against him. Cooley, in his Treatise on Constitutional Limitations, after referring to some of the adjudged cases relating to ex post facto laws, says: "But, so far as mere modes of procedure are concerned, a party has no more right, in a criminal than in a civil action, to insist that his case shall be disposed of under the law in force when the act to be investigated is charged to have taken place. Remedies must always be under the control of the legislature, and it would create endless confusion in legal proceedings if every case was to be conducted only in accordance with the rules of practice and heard only by the courts in existence when its facts arose. The legislature may abolish courts and create new ones, and it may prescribe altogether different modes of procedure in its discretion, though it cannot lawfully, we think, in so doing, dispense with any of those substantial protections with which the existing law surrounds the person accused of crime." Chapter 9 (6th Ed.) p. 326. And this view was substantially approved by this court in Kring v. Missouri, above cited. So, in Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 590, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262, it was said that no one had a vested right in mere modes of procedure, and that it was for the state, upon grounds of public policy, to regulate procedure at its pleasure. This court, in Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 378, 382, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485, said that statutes regulating procedure, if they leave untouched all the substantial protections with which existing law surrounds the person accused of crime, are not within the constitutional inhibition of ex post facto laws. But it was held in Hopt v. Utah, above cited, that a statute that takes from the accused a substantial right given to him by the law in force at the time to which his guilt relates would be ex post facto in its nature and operation, and that legislation of that kind cannot be sustained simply because, in a general sense, it may be said to regulate procedure. The difficulty is not so much as to the soundness of the general rule that an accused has no vested right in particular modes of procedure as in determining whether particular statutes by their operation take from an accused any right that was regarded, at the time of the adoption of the constitution, as vital for the protection of life and liberty, and which he enjoyed at the time of the commission of the offense charged against him.

¹ Parts of this case dealing with other topics appear post, p. 193.

Now, Thompson's crime, when committed, was punishable by the territory of Utah proceeding in all its legislation under the sanction of and in subordination to the authority of the United States. The court below substituted, as a basis of judgment and sentence to imprisonment in the penitentiary, the unanimous verdict of eight jurors in place of a unanimous verdict of twelve. It cannot, therefore, be said that the Constitution of Utah, when applied to Thompson's Case, did not deprive him of a substantial right involved in his liberty, and did not materially alter the situation to his disadvantage. If, in respect to felonies committed in Utah while it was a territory, it was competent for the state to prescribe a jury of eight persons, it could just as well have prescribed a jury of four or two, and, perhaps, have dispensed altogether with a jury, and provided for a trial before a single judge. * * *

In our opinion, the provision in the Constitution of Utah providing for the trial in courts of general jurisdiction of criminal cases, not capital, by a jury composed of eight persons, is ex post facto in its application to felonies committed before the territory became a state.

because, in respect of such crimes, the Constitution of the United States gave the accused, at the time of the commission of his offense, the right to be tried by a jury of twelve persons, and made it impossible to deprive him of his liberty except by the unanimous verdict of such a jury.

Judgment reversed.²

[BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissented.]

THOMPSON v. MISSOURI.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 171 U. S. 380, 18 Sup. Ct. 922, 43 L. Ed. 201.)

[Error to Supreme Court of Missouri. Thompson was indicted for murder in 1894, the evidence against him being wholly circumstantial. One issue of fact concerned the authorship of a prescription for strychnine and of a letter addressed to a church organist. Thompson denied that he had written either, and at the first trial certain letters written by him to his wife were admitted in evidence for comparison with the writing in the other documents. Thompson was convicted, but a new trial was ordered on appeal; the Missouri Supreme Court holding that the letters to his wife were erroneously admitted in evidence. Subsequently, in 1895, the legislature passed an act permitting such a comparison to be made. At the second trial in 1896 the letters were again used in evidence, Thompson was again convicted, and the conviction affirmed on appeal.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * The contention of the accused is that, as the letters to his wife were not, at the time of the commission of the alleged offense, admissible in evidence for the purpose of comparing them with other writings charged to be in his handwriting, the subsequent statute of Missouri changing this rule of evidence was ex post facto when applied to his case.

It is not to be denied that the position of the accused finds apparent support in the general language used in some opinions. Mr. Justice Chase, in his classification of ex post facto laws in Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 390, 1 L. Ed. 648, includes "every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender."

In Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 228, 232, 235, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506, the question arose as to the validity of a statute of Missouri under which the accused was found guilty of the crime of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be hanged. That case was tried several times, and was three times in the supreme court of the state. At the trial immediately preceding the last one Kring was allowed to plead guilty of murder in the second degree. The plea was accepted, and he was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of 25 years. Having understood that upon this plea he was to be sentenced to imprisonment for only 10 years, he prosecuted an appeal, which resulted in a reversal of the judgment. At the last trial the court set aside the plea of guilty of murder in the second degree,—the accused having refused to withdraw it,—and, against his objection, ordered a plea of not guilty to be entered in his behalf. Under the latter plea he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged. By the law of Missouri at the time of the commission of Kring's offense, his conviction and sentence under the plea of guilty of murder in the second degree was an absolute acquittal of the charge of murder in the first degree. But, that law having been changed before the final trial occurred,¹ Kring contended that the last statute, if applied to his case, would be within the prohibition of ex post facto laws. And that view was sustained by this court, four of its members dissenting. * * *

² Accord: State v. Ardoin, 51 La. Ann. 109, 24 South. 802, 72 Am. St. Rep. 454 (1899) (nine out of twelve jurors authorized to find verdict).

Considering the suggestion that the Missouri statute under which Kring was convicted only regulated procedure, Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for this court, said: "Can any substantial right which the law gave the defendant at the time to which his guilt relates be taken away from him by ex post facto legislation, because, in the use of a modern phrase, it is called a law of procedure? We think it cannot." In conclusion it was said: "Tested by these criteria, the provision of the Constitution of Missouri which denies to plaintiff in error the benefit which the previous law gave him of acquittal of the charge of murder in the first degree, on conviction of murder in the second degree, is, as to his case, an ex post facto law within the meaning of the constitution of the United States." * * *

The right to such protection was deemed a substantial one,—indeed, it constituted a complete defense against the charge of murder in the first degree,—that could not be taken from the accused by subsequent legislation. This is clear from the statement in Kring's Case that the question before the court was whether the statute of Missouri deprived "the defendant of any right of defense which the law gave him when the act was committed, so that, as to that offense, it is ex post facto."

This general subject was considered in Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 588, 589, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262. Hopt was indicted, tried, and convicted of murder in the territory of Utah, the punishment therefor being death. At the time of the commission of the offense it was the law of Utah that no person convicted of a felony could be a witness in a criminal case. After the date of the alleged offense, and prior to the trial of the case, an act was passed removing the disqualification as witnesses of persons who had been convicted of felonies; and the point was made that the statute, in its application to Hopt's Case, was ex post facto.

¹ The law was changed before the first plea of guilty of murder in the second degree was made. See 107 U. S. 236-239, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506. Even under the original law the defendant had no right to make this plea, except with the consent of the prosecution. Id. Otherwise, under the statutes considered in Garvey v. People, 6 Colo. 559, 45 Am. Rep. 531 (1883).

This court said: "The provision of the Constitution which prohibits the states from passing ex post facto laws was examined in Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506. * * * That decision proceeded upon the ground that the state Constitution deprived the accused of a substantial right which the law gave him when the offense was committed, and therefore, in its application to that offense and its consequences, altered the situation of the party to his disadvantage. By the law as established when the offense was committed, Kring could not have been punished with death after his conviction of murder in the second degree, whereas by the abrogation of that law by the constitutional provision subsequently adopted he could thereafter be tried and convicted of murder in the first degree, and subjected to the punishment of death. Thus the judgment of conviction of murder in the second degree was deprived of all force as evidence to establish his absolute immunity thereafter from punishment for murder in the first degree. This was held to be the deprivation of a substantial right which the accused had at the time the alleged offense was committed. But there are no such features in the case before us. Statutes which simply enlarge the class of persons who may be competent to testify in criminal cases are not ex post facto in their application to prosecutions for crimes committed prior to their passage, for they do not attach criminality to any act previously done, and which was innocent when done, nor aggravate any crime theretofore committed, nor provide a greater punishment therefor than was prescribed at the time of its commission, nor do they alter the degree or lessen the amount or measure of the proof which was made necessary to conviction when the crime was committed."

The court added: "The crime for which the present defendant was indicted, the punishment prescribed therefor, and the quantity or the degree of proof necessary to establish his guilt, all remained unaffected by the subsequent statute. Any statutory alteration of the legal rules of evidence which would authorize conviction upon less proof, in amount or degree, than was required when the offense was committed, might, in respect of that offense, be obnoxious to the constitutional inhibition upon ex post facto laws. But alterations which do not increase the punishment, nor change the ingredients of the offense, or the ultimate facts necessary to establish guilt, but, leaving untouched the nature of the crime, and the amount or degree of proof essential to conviction, only remove existing restrictions upon the competency of certain classes of persons as witnesses, relate to modes of procedure only, in which no one can be said to have a vested right, and which the state, upon grounds of public policy, may regulate at pleasure. Such regulations of the mode in which the facts constituting guilt may be placed before the jury can be made applicable to prosecutions or trials thereafter had, without reference to the date of the commission of the offense charged." * * *

Applying the principles announced in former cases, without attaching undue weight to general expressions in them that go beyond the questions necessary to be determined, we adjudge that the statute of Missouri relating to the comparison of writings is not ex post facto when applied to prosecutions for crimes committed prior to its passage. If persons excluded upon grounds of public policy at the time of the commission of an offense, from testifying as witnesses for or against the accused, may, in virtue of a statute, become competent to testify, we cannot perceive any ground upon which to hold a statute to be ex post facto which does nothing more than admit evidence of a particular kind in a criminal case upon an issue of fact which was not admissible under the rules of evidence as enforced by judicial decisions at the time the offense was committed. The Missouri statute, when applied to this case, did not enlarge the punishment to which the accused was liable when his crime was committed, nor make any act involved in his offense criminal that was not criminal at the time he committed the murder of which he was found guilty. It did not change the quality or degree of his offense. Nor can the new rule introduced by it be characterized as unreasonable; certainly not so unreasonable as materially to affect the substantial rights of one put on trial for crime.

The statute did not require "less proof, in amount or degree," than was required at the time of the commission of the crime charged upon him. It left unimpaired the right of the jury to determine the sufficiency or effect of the evidence declared to be admissible, and did not disturb the fundamental rule that the state, as a condition of its right to take the life of an accused, must overcome the presumption of his innocence, and establish his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Whether he wrote the prescription for strychnine, or the threatening letter to the church organist, was left for the jury; and the duty of the jury, in that particular, was the same after as before the passage of the statute. The statute did nothing more than remove an obstacle arising out of a rule of evidence that withdrew from the consideration of the jury testimony which, in the opinion of the legislature, tended to elucidate the ultimate, essential fact to be established, namely, the guilt of the accused. Nor did it give the prosecution any right that was denied to the accused. It placed the state and the accused upon an equality, for the rule established by it gave to each side the right to have disputed writings compared with writings proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine. Each side was entitled to go to the jury upon the question of the genuineness of the writing upon which the prosecution relied to establish the guilt of the accused. It is well known that the adjudged cases have not been in harmony touching the rule relating to the comparison of handwritings, and the object of the legislature, as we may assume, was to give the jury all the light that could be thrown upon an issue of that character. We cannot adjudge that the accused had any vested right in the rule of evidence which obtained prior to the passage of the Missouri statute, nor that the rule established by that statute entrenched upon any of the essential rights belonging to one put on trial for a public offense.

Of course, we are not to be understood as holding that there may not be such a statutory alteration of the fundamental rules in criminal trials as might bring the statute in conflict with the ex post facto clause of the Constitution. If, for instance, the statute had taken from the jury the right to determine the sufficiency or effect of the evidence which it made admissible, a different question would have been presented. We mean now only to adjudge that the statute is to be regarded as one merely regulating procedure, and may be applied to crimes committed prior to its passage without impairing the substantial guaranties of life and liberty that are secured to an accused by the supreme law of the land.

Judgment affirmed.²

² See Frisby v. United States, 38 D. C. App. 22, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96 (1912) (ex post facto to permit use against defendant of evidence voluntarily produced by him in an equity suit under a former statute excluding it from criminal prosecutions). Other cases of alterations of rules of admissibility of evidence are collected in 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96, 97.

In the following cases changes in the law were held to be merely procedural and not ex post facto: Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. Ed. 264 (1856) (depriving defendant of appeal to higher court); Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. 35, 19 L. Ed. 573 (1869) (changing place of trial); Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485 (1894) (change in number of appellate judges); Commonwealth v. Phelps, 210 Mass. 78, 96 N. E. 349, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1119 (1911) (same of trial judges); Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 904, 40 L. Ed. 1075 (1896) (requiring higher qualifications of jurors); Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 21 Sup. Ct. 730, 45 L. Ed. 1015 (1901) (granting to state an appeal from judgment of intermediate appellate court giving convicted defendant a new trial); Harris v. United States, 4 Okl. Cr. 317, 111 Pac. 982, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 820, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 810 (1910) (reducing defendant's or increasing state's peremptory challenges).

As to the effect of a change in the mode of beginning a prosecution, from indictment to information, see Garnsey v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 547, 112 Pac. 24, (1910), annotated in 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 600-602. See also, State v. McCoy, 87 Neb. 385, 127 N. W. 137, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 583 (1910) (increase in amount of penal bond required to suspend sentence is ex post facto). Compare Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506 (1882) (digested in principal case), and Ratzky v. People, 29 N. Y. 124 (1864) (law that an erroneous sentence entitles defendant to a discharge may be changed to permit correction of error).

COMMONWEALTH v. GETCHELL.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1835. 16 Pick. 452.)

[Appeal from a municipal court judgment upon demurrer in February, 1835, imposing an additional punishment upon Getchell, who in 1827 was convicted of forgery, in 1830 discharged from prison therefor, and in April, 1831, was again convicted of forgery and sent to prison for four years. St. 1827, c. 118, made a convict liable to additional punishment if he were twice convicted; St. 1832, c. 73, imposed this only if he were twice discharged from prison; and St. 1833, c. 85, repealed the act of 1832, reviving the act of 1827.]

WILDE, J. In this case the defendant has been but twice convicted, and but once discharged. He would not, therefor, under the Statute of 1832, c. 73, be liable to an additional punishment. We apprehend that the act was not intended to have such an effect; but the language of the statute is express, and it will admit of but one construction. That statute, however, has been repealed by the Statute of 1833, c. 85, and the question is, whether the suspension of the liability of the defendant, while the former statute continued in force, is a legal discharge of his liability at the time of his second conviction. And we are of opinion that it is not. The offence for which he was a second time convicted, was committed, and he was also convicted, before the passage of the Statute of 1832.

If the crime had been committed, or if the defendant had been convicted, during the time that the Statute of 1832 was in force, the repealing Statute of 1833 might be considered as an ex post facto law in regard to him. But as the conviction took place in 1831, and he was then liable to the additional punishment, the act of 1832 operated only as a suspension of his liability, and not in nature of a pardon. That act having been repealed, his liability remains as it was at the time of his conviction.

Demurrer overruled.¹

¹ Accord: Commonwealth v. Mott, 21 Pick. 492 (1839), under the same statutes; the last crime being committed in 1830 and a conviction for it had in 1834. The same principle applies to the prohibition against state laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Knights Templars' & M. L. Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 208, 23 Sup. Ct. 108, 47 L. Ed. 139 (1902).

If defendant is tried while the second statute increasing the punishment is in force, this is ex post facto; nor can he be convicted under the first statute in the absence of a saving clause. He must therefore be acquitted, and then the revival of the first statute is ineffectual as to him. Hartung v. People, 26 N. Y. 167 (1863).

HAWKER v. NEW YORK.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 170 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002.)

[Error to the Court of Sessions of New York City. The defendant had been convicted of the crime of abortion in New York in 1878 and sentenced to ten years imprisonment. A New York statute of 1893, amended in 1895, made it a misdemeanor for any person to practice medicine after conviction of a felony. The defendant was convicted under this statute and the conviction affirmed by the highest state court; final judgment being entered in the said Court of Sessions.]

Mr. Justice BREWER. The single question presented is as to the constitutionality of this statute when applied to one who had been convicted of a felony prior to its enactment. * * *

On the one hand, it is said that defendant was tried, convicted, and sentenced for a criminal offense. He suffered the punishment pronounced. The legislature has no power to thereafter add to that punishment. The right to practice medicine is a valuable property right. To deprive a man of it is in the nature of punishment, and, after the defendant has once fully atoned for his offense, a statute imposing this additional penalty is one simply increasing the punishment for the offense, and is ex post facto.

On the other, it is insisted that, within the acknowledged reach of the police power, a state may prescribe the qualifications of one engaged in any business so directly affecting the lives and health of the people as the practice of medicine. It may require both qualifications of learning and of good character, and, if it deems that one who has violated the criminal laws of the state is not possessed of sufficient good character, it can deny to such a one the right to practice medicine; and, further, it may make the record of a conviction conclusive evidence of the fact of the violation of the criminal law, and of the absence of the requisite good character. In support of this latter argument, counsel for the state, besides referring to the legislation of many states prescribing in a general way good character as one of the qualifications of a physician, has made a collection of special provisions as to the effect of a conviction of felony. In the footnote¹ will be found his collection.

We are of opinion that this argument is the more applicable, and must control the answer to this question. No precise limits have been placed upon the police power of a state, and yet it is clear that legislation which simply defines the qualifications of one who attempts to practice medicine is a proper exercise of that power. Care for the public health is something confessedly belonging to the domain of that power. The physician is one whose relations to life and health are of the most intimate character. It is fitting, not merely that he should possess a knowledge of diseases and their remedies, but also that he should be one who may safely be trusted to apply those remedies. Character is as important a qualification as knowledge, and if the legislature may properly require a definite course of instruction, or a certain examination as to learning, it may with equal propriety prescribe what evidence of good character shall be furnished. These propositions have been often affirmed. In Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 122, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 233, 32 L. Ed. 623, it was said in respect to the qualifications of a physician: "The power of the state to provide for the general welfare of its people authorizes it to prescribe all such regulations as, in its judgment, will secure or tend to secure them against the consequences of ignorance and incapacity as well as of deception and fraud." * * * [Here follow quotations from various state decisions holding that a good moral character may be required as a condition of the right to practice medicine.]

¹ This collection of statutes (170 U. S. 191-193, 18 Sup. Ct. 574, 575, 42 L. Ed. 1004, 1005) shows that six or seven American states, Great Britain, and a number of self-governing British colonies give a similar effect to a conviction of felony.

But if a state may require good character as a condition of the practice of medicine, it may rightfully determine what shall be the evidences of that character. We do not mean to say that it has an arbitrary power in the matter, or that it can make a conclusive test of that which has no relation to character, but it may take whatever, according to the experience of mankind, reasonably tends to prove the fact and make it a test. County Seat of Linn Co., 15 Kan. 500-528. Whatever is ordinarily connected with bad character, or indicative of it, may be prescribed by the legislature as conclusive evidence thereof. It is not the province of the courts to say that other tests would be more satisfactory, or that the naming of other qualifications would be more conducive to the desired result. These are questions for the legislature to determine. "The nature and extent of the qualifications required must depend primarily upon the judgment of the state as to their necessity." Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 122, 9 Sup. Ct. 233, 32 L. Ed. 623.

It is not open to doubt that the commission of crime—the violation of the penal laws of a state—has some relation to the question of character. It is not, as a rule, the good people who commit crime. When the legislature declares that whoever has violated the criminal laws of the state shall be deemed lacking in good moral character, it is not laying down an arbitrary or fanciful rule, one having no relation to the subject-matter, but is only appealing to a well-recognized fact of human experience; and, if it may make a violation of criminal law a test of bad character, what more conclusive evidence of the fact of such violation can there be than a conviction duly had in one of the courts of the state? The conviction is, as between the state and the defendant, an adjudication of the fact. So, if the legislature enacts that one who has been convicted of crime shall no longer engage in the practice of medicine, it is simply applying the doctrine of res judicata, and invoking the conclusive adjudication of the fact that the man has violated the criminal law, and is presumptively, therefore, a man of such bad character as to render it unsafe to trust the lives and health of citizens to his care.

That the form in which this legislation is cast suggests the idea of the imposition of an additional punishment for past offenses is not conclusive. We must look at the substance, and not the form; and the statute should be regarded as though it in terms declared that one who had violated the criminal laws of the state should be deemed of such bad character as to be unfit to practice medicine, and that the record of a trial and conviction should be conclusive evidence of such violation. All that is embraced in these propositions is condensed into the single clause of the statute, and it means that, and nothing more. The state is not seeking to further punish a criminal, but only to protect its citizens from physicians of bad character. The vital matter is not the conviction, but the violation of law. The former is merely the prescribed evidence of the latter. Suppose the statute had contained only a clause declaring that no one should be permitted to act as a physician who had violated the criminal laws of the state, leaving the question of violation to be determined according to the ordinary rules of evidence: would it not seem strange to hold that that which conclusively established the fact effectually relieved from the consequences of such violation?

It is no answer to say that this test of character is not in all cases absolutely certain, and that sometimes it works harshly. Doubtless, one who has violated the criminal law may thereafter reform, and become in fact possessed of a good moral character. But the legislature has power in cases of this kind to make a rule of universal application, and no inquiry is permissible back of the rule to ascertain whether the fact of which the rule is made the absolute test does or does not exist. Illustrations of this are abundant. At common law, one convicted of crime was incompetent as a witness; and this rule was in no manner affected by the lapse of time since the commission of the offense, and could not be set aside by proof of a complete reformation. So, in many states a convict is debarred the privileges of an elector, and an act so debarring was held applicable to one convicted before its passage. Washington v. State, 75 Ala. 582, 51 Am. Rep. 479. In Foster v. Commissioners, 102 Cal. 483, 492, 37 Pac. 763, 41 Am. St. Rep. 194, the question was as to the validity of an ordinance revoking a license to sell liquor on the ground of misconduct prior to the issue of the license, and the ordinance was sustained. In commenting upon the terms of the ordinance the court said: "Though not an ex post facto law, it is retrospective in so far as it determines from the past conduct of the party his fitness for the proposed business. Felons are also excluded from obtaining such a license, not as an additional punishment, but because the conviction of a felony is evidence of the unfitness of such persons as a class; nor can we perceive why such evidence should be more conclusive of unfitness were the act done after the passage of the ordinance than if done before."

In a certain sense such a rule is arbitrary, but it is within the power of a legislature to prescribe a rule of general application based upon a state of things which is ordinarily evidence of the ultimate fact sought to be established. "It was obviously the province of the state legislature to provide the nature and extent of the legal presumption to be deduced from a given state of facts, and the creation by law of such presumptions is, after all, but an illustration of the power to classify." Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 183, 17 Sup. Ct. 282, 41 L. Ed. 677. * * *

Judgment affirmed.²

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which concurred PECKHAM and McKENNA, JJ.]

² Accord: Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration & Examination, 66 Kan. 710, 72 Pac. 247, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811 (1903) (revocation of physician's license for past immorality); Shepherd v. Grinnett, 3 Idaho (Hash.) 403, 31 Pac. 793 (1892) (past polygamists excluded from suffrage); Boyd v. Mills, 53 Kan. 594, 37 Pac. 16, 25 L. R. A. 486, 42 Am. St. Rep. 306 (1894) (same, for past disloyalty to government).

In Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 319, 320, 18 L. Ed. 356 (1867), Field, J., said (holding invalid part of the Missouri Constitution of 1865 which disqualified persons guilty of various acts of past disloyalty from various offices and occupations, including those of teacher and clergyman): "Among the rights reserved to the states is the right of each state to determine the qualifications for office, and the conditions upon which its citizens may exercise their various callings and pursuits within its jurisdiction. * * * But it by no means follows that, under the form of creating a qualification or attaching a condition, the states can in effect inflict a punishment for a past act which was not punishable at the time it was committed. * * * Qualifications relate to the fitness or capacity of the party for a particular pursuit or profession. Webster defines the term to mean 'any natural endowment or any acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment, or enables him to sustain any character, with success.' It is evident from the nature of the pursuits and professions of the parties, placed under disabilities by the Constitution of Missouri, that many of the acts, from the taint of which they must purge themselves, have no possible relation to their fitness for those pursuits and professions. There can be no connection between the fact that Mr. Cummings entered or left the state of Missouri to avoid enrolment or draft in the military service of the United States and his fitness to teach the doctrines or administer the sacraments of his church; nor can a fact of this kind or the expression of words of sympathy with some of the persons drawn into the Rebellion constitute any evidence of the unfitness of the attorney or counsellor to practice his profession, or of the professor to teach the ordinary branches of education, or of the want of business knowledge or business capacity in the manager of a corporation, or in any director or trustee. It is manifest upon the simple statement of many of the acts and of the professions and pursuits, that there is no such relation between them as to render a denial of the commission of the acts at all appropriate as a condition of allowing the exercise of the professions and pursuits. The oath could not, therefore, have been required as a means of ascertaining

SECTION 2.—SELF-CRIMINATION—SEARCHES AND SEIZURES

HALE v. HENKEL.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1906. 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652.)

[Appeal from the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York. In a proceeding before the federal grand jury to determine whether an indictment should be found against the American Tobacco Company and MacAndrews & Forbes Company for violating the federal anti-trust statutes, Hale, secretary and treasurer of the latter company, was served with a subpoena duces tecum ordering him to appear before the grand jury and testify, and to bring with him a large amount of documentary evidence specified in the opinion below. He refused to obey, for the reasons stated below, and was committed to custody by the Circuit Judge for contempt. From an order dismissing a writ of habeas corpus this appeal was taken.]

Mr. Justice BROWN. [After deciding that a grand jury might pursue an investigation before a regular indictment was laid before it:] 2. Appellant also invokes the protection of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which declares that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," and in reply to whether parties were qualified or not for their respective callings or the trusts with which they were charged. It was required in order to reach the person, not the calling. It was exacted, not from any notion that the several acts designated indicated unfitness for the callings, but because it was thought that the several acts deserved punishment, and that for many of them there was no way to inflict punishment except by depriving the parties, who had committed them, of some of the rights and privileges of the citizen."

So, also, In re Garland, 4 Wall, 333, 18 L. Ed. 366 (1867) (oath of non-support of rebellion against United States required for admission to practice in federal courts). See the comment upon these cases in Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 111, 125-128, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 32 L. Ed. 623 (1889).

Compare Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227, 242, 32 Sup. Ct. 613, 617, 56 L. Ed. 1066 (1912), in which Pitney, J., said (upholding a federal act authorizing the cancellation of naturalization certificates previously procured by fraud): "The act imposes no punishment upon an alien who has previously procured a certificate of citizenship by fraud or other illegal conduct. It simply deprives him of his ill-gotten privileges. * * * The act makes nothing fraudulent or unlawful that was honest and lawful when it was done. It imposes no new penalty upon the wrongdoer. But if, after fair hearing, it is judicially determined that by wrongful conduct he has obtained a title to citizenship, the act provides that he shall be deprived of a privilege that was never rightfully his. Such a statute is not to be deemed an ex post facto law." And so Bugajewitz v. Adams, 228 U. S. 585, 591, 33 Sup. Ct. 607, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (deportation of alien for past prostitution—semble).

various questions put to him he declined to answer, on the ground that he would thereby incriminate himself.

The answer to this is found in a proviso to the general appropriation act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat. 854-904, c. 755 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1905, p. 602]), that "no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under said acts," of which the antitrust law is one, providing, however, that "no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for perjury committed in so testifying." * * *

The object of the amendment is to establish in express language and upon a firm basis the general principle of English and American jurisprudence, that no one shall be compelled to give testimony which may expose him to prosecution for crime. It is not declared that he may not be compelled to testify to facts which may impair his reputation for probity, or even tend to disgrace him; but the line is drawn at testimony that may expose him to prosecution. If the testimony relate to criminal acts long since past, and against the prosecution of which the statute of limitations has run, or for which he has already received a pardon or is guaranteed an immunity, the amendment does not apply.

The interdiction of the fifth amendment operates only where a witness is asked to incriminate himself,—in other words, to give testimony which may possibly expose him to a criminal charge. But if the criminality has already been taken away, the amendment ceases to apply. The criminality provided against is a present, not a past, criminality, which lingers only as a memory, and involves no present danger of prosecution. To put an extreme case, a man in his boyhood or youth may have committed acts which the law pronounces criminal; but it would never be asserted that he would thereby be made a criminal for life. It is here that the law steps in and says that if the offense be outlawed or pardoned, or its criminality has been removed by statute, the amendment ceases to apply.

The extent of this immunity was fully considered by this court in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110, 3 Interst. Com. R. 816, in which the immunity offered by Rev. St. § 860 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661), was declared to be insufficient. In consequence of this decision an act was passed applicable to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission in almost the exact language of the act of February 25, 1903, above quoted. This act was declared by this court in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, 5 Interst. Com. R. 369, to afford absolute immunity against prosecution for the offense to which the question related, and deprived the witness of his constitutional right to refuse to answer. Indeed, the act was passed apparently to meet the declaration in Counselman v. Hitchcock (142 U. S. 586, 12 Sup. Ct. 206, 35 L. Ed. 1122, 3 Interst. Com. R. 828), that "a statutory enactment, to be valid, must afford absolute immunity against future prosecution for the offense to which the question relates." If the constitutional amendment were unaffected by the immunity statute, it would put it within the power of the witness to be his own judge as to what would tend to incriminate him, and would justify him in refusing to answer almost any question in a criminal case, unless it clearly appeared that the immunity was not set up in good faith.

We need not restate the reasons given in Brown v. Walker, both in the opinion of the court, and in the dissenting opinion, wherein all the prior authorities were reviewed, and a conclusion reached by a majority of the court, which fully covers the case under consideration.

The suggestion that a person who has testified compulsorily before a grand jury may not be able, if subsequently indicted for some matter concerning which he testified, to procure the evidence necessary to maintain his plea, is more fanciful than real. He would have not only his own oath in support of his immunity, but the notes often, though not always, taken of the testimony before the grand jury, as well as the testimony of the prosecuting officer, and of every member of the jury present. It is scarcely possible that all of them would have forgotten the general nature of his incriminating testimony or that any serious conflict would arise therefrom. In any event, it is a question relating to the weight of the testimony, which could scarcely be considered in determining the effect of the immunity statute. The difficulty of maintaining a case upon the available evidence is a danger which the law does not recognize. In prosecuting a case, or in setting up a defense, the law takes no account of the practical difficulty which either party may have in procuring his testimony. It judges of the law by the facts which each party claims, and not by what he may ultimately establish.

The further suggestion that the statute offers no immunity from prosecution in the state courts was also fully considered in Brown v. Walker, and held to be no answer. The converse of this was also decided in Jack v. Kansas, 199 U. S. 372, 26 Sup. Ct. 73, 50 L. Ed. 234, 4 Ann. Cas. 689,—namely, that the fact that an immunity granted to a witness under a state statute would not prevent a prosecution of such witness for a violation of a federal statute did not invalidate such statute under the fourteenth amendment. It was held both by this court and by the supreme court of Kansas that the possibility that information given by the witness might be used under the federal act did not operate as a reason for permitting the witness to refuse to answer, and that a danger so unsubstantial and remote did not impair the legal immunity. Indeed, if the argument were a sound one it might be carried still further and held to apply not only to state prosecutions within the same jurisdiction, but to prosecutions under the criminal laws of other states to which the witness might have subjected himself. The question has been fully considered in England, and the conclusion reached by the courts of that country that the only danger to be considered is one arising within the same jurisdiction and under the same sovereignty. Queen v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311; King of the Two Sicilies v. Willcox, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1049, 1068; State v. March, 46 N. C. (1 Jones L.) 526; State v. Thomas, 98 N. C. 599, 4 S. E. 518, 2 Am. St. Rep. 351. The entire question of immunity is also exhaustively treated in Wigmore on Evidence, §§ 2255-2259. * * *

But it is further insisted that, while the immunity statute may protect individual witnesses, it would not protect the corporation of which appellant was the agent and representative. This is true, but the answer is that it was not designed to do so. The right of a person under the fifth amendment to refuse to incriminate himself is purely a personal privilege of the witness. It was never intended to permit him to plead the fact that some third person might be incriminated by his testimony, even though he were the agent of such person. A privilege so extensive might be used to put a stop to the examination of every witness who was called upon to testify before the grand jury with regard to the doings or business of his principal, whether such principal were an individual or a corporation. The question whether a corporation is a "person" within the meaning of this amendment really does not arise, except, perhaps, where a corporation is called upon to answer a bill of discovery, since it can only be heard by oral evidence in the person of some one of its agents or employees. The amendment is limited to a person who shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; and if he cannot set up the privilege of a third person, he certainly cannot set up the privilege of a corporation. As the combination or conspiracies provided against by the Sherman anti-trust act can ordinarily be proved only by the testimony of parties thereto, in the person of their agents or employees, the privilege claimed would practically nullify the whole act of Congress. Of what use would it be for the legislature to declare these combinations unlawful if the judicial power may close the door of access to every available source of information upon the subject? Indeed, so strict is the rule that the privilege is a personal one that it has been held in some cases that counsel will not be allowed to make the objection. We hold that the questions should have been answered.

3. The second branch of the case relates to the nonproduction by the witness of the books and papers called for by the subpoena duces tecum. The witness put his refusal on the ground, first, that it was impossible for him to collect them within the time allowed; second, because he was advised by counsel that, under the circumstances, he was under no obligation to produce them; and finally, because they might tend to incriminate him.

Had the witness relied solely upon the first ground, doubtless the court would have given him the necessary time. The last ground we have already held untenable. While the second ground does not set forth with technical accuracy the real reason for declining to produce them, the witness could not be expected to speak with legal exactness, and we think is entitled to assert that the subpoena was an infringement upon the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, paper, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

The construction of this amendment was exhaustively considered in the case of Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 622, 634, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 528, 534, 29 L. Ed. 746, 748, 752, which was an information in rem against certain cases of plate glass, alleged to have been imported in fraud of the revenue acts. On the trial it became important to show the quantity and value of the glass contained in a number of cases previously imported; and the district judge, under section 5 of the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat. 187, c. 391 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2018]), directed a notice to be given to the claimants, requiring them to produce the invoice of these cases under penalty that the allegations respecting their contents should be taken as confessed. We held "that a compulsory production of a man's private papers to establish a criminal charge against him, or to forfeit his property, is within the scope of the fourth amendment to the Constitution, in all cases in which a search and seizure would be," and that the order in question was an unreasonable search and seizure within that amendment.

The history of this provision of the Constitution and its connection with the former practice of general warrants, or writs of assistance, was given at great length, and the conclusion reached that the compulsory extortion of a man's own testimony, or of his private papers, to connect him with a crime or a forfeiture of his goods, is illegal, "is compelling a man to be a witness against himself, within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, and is the equivalent of a search and seizure—and an unreasonable search and seizure—within the fourth amendment."

Subsequent cases treat the fourth and fifth amendments as quite distinct, having different histories, and performing separate functions. Thus, in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047, 4 Interst. Com. R. 545, the constitutionality of the interstate commerce act, so far as it authorized the Circuit Courts to use their processes in aid of inquiries before the Commission, was sustained, the court observing in that connection: "It was clearly competent for Congress, to that end, to invest the Commission with authority to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter legally committed to that body for investigation. We do not understand that any of these propositions are disputed in this case."

The case of Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575, which was a writ of error to the supreme court of the state of New York, involving the seizure of certain gambling paraphernalia, was treated as involving the construction of the fourth and fifth amendments to the federal Constitution. It was held, in substance, that the fact that papers pertinent to the issue may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered was not a valid objection to their admissibility; that the admission as evidence in a criminal trial of papers found in the execution of a valid search warrant prior to the indictment was not an infringement of the fifth amendment, and that, by the introduction of such evidence, defendant was not compelled to incriminate himself. The substance of the opinion is contained in the following paragraph. It was contended that: "If a search warrant is issued for stolen property, and burglars' tools be discovered and seized, they are to be excluded from testimony by force of these amendments. We think they were never intended to have that effect, but are rather designed to protect against compulsory testimony from a defendant against himself in a criminal trial, and to punish wrongful invasion of the home of the citizen or the unwarranted seizure of his papers and property, and to render invalid legislation or judicial procedure having such effect."

The Boyd Case must also be read in connection with the still later case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860, which arose upon the petition of the Commission for orders requiring the testimony of witnesses and the production of certain books, papers, and documents. The case grew out of a complaint against certain railway companies that they charged unreasonable and unjust rates for the transportation of anthracite coal. Objection was made to the production of certain contracts between these companies upon the ground that it would compel the witnesses to furnish evidence against themselves, in violation of the fifth amendment, and would also subject the parties to unreasonable searches and seizures. It was held that the circuit court erred in holding the contracts to be irrelevant, and in refusing to order their production as evidence by the witnesses who were parties to the appeal. In delivering the opinion of the court the Boyd Case was again considered in connection with the fourth and fifth amendments, and the remark made by Mr. Justice Day that the immunity statute of 1893 "protects the witness from such use of the testimony given as will result in his punishment for crime or the forfeiture of his estate."

Having already held that, by reason of the immunity act of 1903, the witness could not avail himself of the fifth amendment, it follows that he cannot set up that amendment as against the production of the books and papers, since, in respect to these, he would also be protected by the immunity act. We think it quite clear that the search and seizure clause of the fourth amendment was not intended to interfere with the power of courts to compel, through a subpoena duces tecum, the production, upon a trial in court, of documentary evidence. As remarked in Summers v. Moseley, 2 Comp. & M. 477, it would be "utterly impossible to carry on the administration of justice" without this writ. The following authorities are conclusive upon this question: Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 9; United States Exp. Co. v. Henderson, 69 Iowa, 40, 28 N. W. 426; Greenl. Ev. 469a.

If, whenever an officer or employee of a corporation were summoned before a grand jury as a witness he could refuse to produce the books and documents of such corporation, upon the ground that they would incriminate the corporation itself, it would result in the failure of a large number of cases where the illegal combination was determinable only upon the examination of such papers. Conceding that the witness was an officer of the corporation under investigation, and that he was entitled to assert the rights of the corporation with respect to the production of its books and papers, we are of the opinion that there is a clear distinction in this particular between an individual and a corporation, and that the latter has no right to refuse to submit its books and papers for an examination at the suit of the state. The individual may stand upon his constitutional rights as a citizen. He is entitled to carry on his private business in his own way. His power to contract is unlimited. He owes no duty to the state or to his neighbors to divulge his business, or to open his doors to an investigation, so far as it may tend to criminate him. He owes no such duty to the state, since he receives nothing therefrom, beyond the protection of his life and property. His rights are such as existed by the law of the land long antecedent to the organization of the state, and can only be taken from him by due process of law, and in accordance with the Constitution. Among his rights are a refusal to incriminate himself, and the immunity of himself and his property from arrest or seizure except under a warrant of the law. He owes nothing to the public so long as he does not trespass upon their rights.

Upon the other hand, the corporation is a creature of the state. It is presumed to be incorporated for the benefit of the public. It receives certain special privileges and franchises, and holds them subject to the laws of the state and the limitations of its charter. Its powers are limited by law. It can make no contract not authorized by its charter. Its rights to act as a corporation are only preserved to it so long as it obeys the laws of its creation. There is a reserved right in the legislature to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has exceeded its powers. It would be a strange anomaly to hold that a state, having chartered a corporation to make use of certain franchises, could not, in the exercise of its sovereignty, inquire how these franchises had been employed, and whether they had been abused, and demand the production of the corporate books and papers for that purpose. The defense amounts to this: That an officer of a corporation which is charged with a criminal violation of the statute, may plead the criminality of such corporation as a refusal to produce its books. To state this proposition is to answer it. While an individual may lawfully refuse to answer incriminating questions unless protected by an immunity statute, it does not follow that a corporation, vested with special privileges and franchises, may refuse to show its hand when charged with an abuse of such privileges.

It is true that the corporation in this case was chartered under the laws of New Jersey, and that it receives its franchise from the legislature of that state; but such franchises, so far as they involve questions of interstate commerce, must also be exercised in subordination to the power of Congress to regulate such commerce, and in respect to this the general government may also assert a sovereign authority to ascertain whether such franchises have been exercised in a lawful manner, with a due regard to its own laws. Being subject to this dual sovereignty, the general government possesses the same right to see that its own laws are respected as the state would have with respect to the special franchises vested in it by the laws of the state. The powers of the general government in this particular in the vindication of its own laws are the same as if the corporation had been created by an act of Congress. It is not intended to intimate, however, that it has a general visitatorial power over the state corporations.

4. Although, for the reasons above stated, we are of the opinion that an officer of a corporation which is charged with a violation of a statute of the state of its creation, or of an act of Congress passed in the exercise of its constitutional powers, cannot refuse to produce the books and papers of such corporation, we do not wish to be understood as holding that a corporation is not entitled to immunity, under the fourth amendment, against unreasonable searches and seizures. A corporation is, after all, but an association of individuals under an assumed name and with a distinct legal entity. In organizing itself as a collective body it waives no constitutional immunities appropriate to such body. Its property cannot be taken without compensation. It can only be proceeded against by due process of law, and is protected, under the fourteenth amendment, against unlawful discrimination. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 154, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666, 667, and cases cited. Corporations are a necessary feature of modern business activity, and their aggregated capital has become the source of nearly all great enterprises.

We are also of opinion that an order for the production of books and papers may constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the fourth amendment. While a search ordinarily implies a quest by an officer of the law, and a seizure contemplates a forcible dispossession of the owner, still, as was held in the Boyd Case, the substance of the offense is the compulsory production of private papers, whether under a search warrant or a subpoena duces tecum, against which the person, be he individual or corporation, is entitled to protection.

Applying the test of reasonableness to the present case, we think the subpoena duces tecum is far too sweeping in its terms to be regarded as reasonable. It does not require the production of a single contract, or of contracts with a particular corporation, or a limited number of documents, but all understandings, contracts, or correspondence between the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, and no less than six different companies, as well as all reports made and accounts rendered by such companies from the date of the organization of the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, as well as all letters received by that company since its organization from more than a dozen different companies, situated in seven different states in the Union.

If the writ had required the production of all the books, papers, and documents found in the office of the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, it would scarcely be more universal in its operation or more completely put a stop to the business of that company. Indeed, it is difficult to say how its business could be carried on after it had been denuded of this mass of material, which is not shown to be necessary in the prosecution of this case, and is clearly in violation of the general principle of law with regard to the particularity required in the description of documents necessary to a search warrant or subpoena. Doubtless many, if not all, of these documents may ultimately be required, but some necessity should be shown, either from an examination of the witnesses orally, or from the known transactions of these companies with the other companies implicated, or some evidence of their materiality produced, to justify an order for the production of such a mass of papers. A general subpoena of this description is equally [as] indefensible as a search warrant would be if couched in similar terms. Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426; Shaftsbury v. Arrowsmith, 4 Ves. Jr. 66; Lee v. Angas, L. R. 2 Eq. 59.

Of course, in view of the power of Congress over interstate commerce, to which we have adverted, we do not wish to be understood as holding that an examination of the books of a corporation, if duly authorized by act of Congress, would constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the fourth amendment.

Order affirmed.¹

[HARLAN and McKENNA, JJ., gave concurring opinions on the ground that the fourth amendment extended no protection whatever to corporations. BREWER, J., gave a dissenting opinion in which FULLER, C. J., concurred.]

SECTION 3.—JURY TRIAL.—PROCEDURE AND PUNISHMENT

THOMPSON v. UTAH.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Utah. The facts are printed ante, p. 172.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * The Constitution of the United States provides: "The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the state where

¹ As to the kind of facts and form of disclosure protected by the constitutional provision, see 4 Wigmore, Evidence, §§ 2254-2267, as well as Boyd v. United States, Counselman v. Hitchcock, Brown v. Walker, and Jack v. Kansas, all cited and discussed in the principal case, and In re Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877 (1878) (protection afforded to sealed letters in the mail). As to the compulsory exhibition of any part of a defendant's person, see, also, 10 Mich. L. Rev. 400, 401.

In Willson v. United States, 221 U. S. 361, 377-386, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558 (1911) it was held that a corporation could not claim protection from self-implication against the visitatorial power of the state or United States, even when the subpoena for its books and papers was directed to it, instead of to its agent, and that the agent in actual custody of such documents on behalf of the corporation must produce them in obedience to such a subpoena, even though they contained matter incriminating himself personally. He was protected only as to his own private papers in his custody. The same rule applies (semble, 221 U. S. 380, 31 Sup. Ct. 544, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558) to all public records and those required by law to be kept for the information of the government.

In Wheeler v. United States, 226 U. S. 478, 33 Sup. Ct. 158, 57 L. Ed. — (1913), the same ruling was applied to books of a dissolved corporation in the possession of its former officers; and in Grant v. United States, 227 U. S. 74, 33 Sup. Ct. 190, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) this was affirmed, even when title to the corporate documents had passed to their present possessor, and would tend to incriminate him. Compare Johnson v. United States, 228 U. S. 457, 33 Sup. Ct. 572, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

See Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658 (1908) (similar powers exercised by state court under fourteenth amendment).

As to the non-applicability to corporations of various constitutional guarantees, see San Mateo Co. v. So. Pac. Ry., post p. 219.

the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any state, the trial shall be at such place or places as the congress may by law have directed." Const. U. S. art. 3, § 2. And by the sixth amendment of the Constitution it is declared: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense." * * *

Assuming, then, that the provisions of the Constitution relating to trials for crimes and to criminal prosecutions apply to the territories of the United States, the next inquiry is whether the jury referred to in the original Constitution and in the sixth amendment is a jury constituted, as it was at common law, of twelve persons, neither more nor less. 2 Hale, P. C. 161; 1 Chit. Cr. Law, 505. This question must be answered in the affirmative. When Magna Charta declared that no freeman should be deprived of life, etc., "but by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land," it referred to a trial by twelve jurors. Those who emigrated to this country from England brought with them this great privilege "as their birthright and inheritance, as a part of that admirable common law which had fenced around and interposed barriers on every side against the approaches of arbitrary power." 2 Story, Const. § 1779. In Bac. Abr. tit. "Juries," it is said: "The trial per pais, or by a jury of one's country, is justly esteemed one of the principal excellencies of our Constitution; for what greater security can any person have in his life, liberty, or estate than to be sure of not being devested of nor injured in any of these without the sense and verdict of twelve honest and impartial men of his neighborhood? And hence we find the common law herein confirmed by Magna Charta." So, in 1 Hale, P. C. 33: "The law of England hath afforded the best method of trial that is possible of this and all other matters of fact, namely, by a jury of twelve men all concurring in the same judgment, by the testimony of witnesses viva voce in the presence of the judge and jury, and by the inspection and direction of the judge."

It must consequently be taken that the word "jury" and the words "trial by jury" were placed in the Constitution of the United States with reference to the meaning affixed to them in the law as it was in this country and in England at the time of the adoption of that instrument; and that when Thompson committed the offense of grand larceny in the territory of Utah—which was under the complete jurisdiction of the United States for all purposes of government and legislation—the supreme law of the land required that he should be tried by a jury composed of not less than twelve persons. And such was the requirement of the statutes of Utah while it was a territory.

Was it, then, competent for the state of Utah, upon its admission into the Union, to do, in respect of Thompson's crime, what the United States could not have done while Utah was a territory, namely, to provide for his trial by a jury of eight persons? * * * [This was held invalid as an ex post facto law. See ante, p. 173.]

It is said that the accused did not object, until after verdict, to a trial jury composed of eight persons, and therefore he should not be heard to say that his trial by such a jury was in violation of his constitutional rights. It is sufficient to say that it was not in the power of one accused of felony, by consent expressly given or by his silence, to authorize a jury of only eight persons to pass upon the question of his guilt. The law in force when this crime was committed did not permit any tribunal to deprive him of his liberty, except one constituted of a court and a jury of twelve persons. In the case of Hopt v. Utah [110 U. S. 574, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262], the question arose whether the right of an accused, charged with felony, to be present before triors of challenges to jurors was waived by his failure to object to their retirement from the court room, or to their trial of the several challenges in his absence. The court said:

"We are of opinion that it was not within the power of the accused or his counsel to dispense with the statutory requirement as to his personal presence at the trial. The argument to the contrary necessarily proceeds upon the ground that he alone is concerned as to the mode by which he may be deprived of his life or liberty, and that the chief object of the prosecution is to punish him for the crime charged. But this is a mistaken view as well of the relations which the accused holds to the public as of the end of human punishment. The natural life, says Blackstone, cannot legally be disposed of or destroyed by any individual, neither by the person himself nor by any other of his fellow creatures, merely upon their own authority. 1 Bl. Comm. 133. The public has an interest in his life and liberty. Neither can be lawfully taken except in the mode prescribed by law. That which the law makes essential in proceedings involving the deprivation of life or liberty cannot be dispensed with or affected by the consent of the accused, much less by his mere failure, when on trial and in custody, to object to unauthorized methods. The great end of punishment is not the expiation or atonement of the offense committed, but the prevention of future offenses of the same kind. 4 Bl. Comm. 11. Such being the relation which the citizen holds to the public, and the object of punishment for public wrongs, the legislature has deemed it essential to the protection of one whose life or liberty is involved in a prosecution for felony that he shall be personally present at the trial; that is, at every stage of the trial when his substantial rights may be affected by the proceedings against him. If he be deprived of his life or liberty without being so present, such deprivation would be without that due process of law required by the Constitution."

If one under trial for a felony the punishment of which is confinement in a penitentiary could not legally consent that the trial proceed in his absence, still less could he assent to be deprived of his liberty by a tribunal not authorized by law to determine his guilt. * * *

Judgment reversed.¹

[BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissented.]

¹The right of trial by jury includes all of its substantial common-law incidents, such as the defendant's right of challenge, Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 370, 13 Sup. Ct. 136, 36 L. Ed. 1011 (1892); and unanimity of verdict, Maxwell v. Dow, post, at p. 225.

"Trial by jury," in the primary and usual sense of the term at the common law and in the American Constitutions, is not merely a trial by a jury of 12 men before an officer vested with authority to cause them to be summoned and impaneled, to administer oaths to them and to the constable in charge, and to enter judgment and issue execution on their verdict; but it is a trial by a jury of 12 men in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and (except on acquittal of a criminal charge) to set aside their verdict, if, in his opinion, it is against the law or the evidence."—Gray, J., in Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 13, 14, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873 (1899). This power of the federal courts to advise the jury upon the facts cannot be controlled by state statutes to the contrary, though they may be valid in the state courts. Vicksburg & M. Ry. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 545, 553, 7 Sup. Ct. 1, 30 L. Ed. 257 (1886).

Aliens may be detained in confinement, pending deportation, without a jury trial, but may not be compelled to labor or to suffer confiscation of property. Wong Wing v. United States, post, p. 981 note, 16 Sup. Ct. 977, 41 L. Ed. 140. The constitutional requirement is confined to crimes, and does not include misdemeanors punishable by a small fine or short imprisonment. A jury trial of the latter may be omitted by statute or waived by the defendant. Schiek v. United States, 195 U. S. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585 (1904).

WAIVER OF TRIAL BY JURY.—"A jury of 12 men being the only legally constituted tribunal for the trial of an indictment for a felony, it necessarily follows that the court or judge is not such tribunal, and that, in the absence of a jury, he has by law no jurisdiction. There is no law which authorizes him to sit as a substitute for a jury, and perform their functions in such cases, and, if he attempts to do so, his act must be regarded as nugatory. Especially must this be true where the jury are not only the judges of the facts as at common law, but are also the judges of the law as provided by our statute. But it is said that the right to a trial by a jury is a right which the defendant may waive. This may be admitted, since every plea of guilty is, in legal effect, a waiver of the right to a trial by the legally constituted tribunal. But, while a defendant may waive his right to a jury trial, he cannot by such waiver confer jurisdiction to try him upon a tribunal which has no such jurisdiction by law. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter must always be derived from the law, and not from the consent of the parties, but in the present case jurisdiction is sought to be based, not upon any law conferring it, but upon the defendant's consent and agreement to waive a jury, and submit her cause to the court for trial."—Bailey, J., in Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585, 591, 21 N. E. 563, 564, 15 Am. St. Rep. 153 (1889).

The cases upon the validity of waivers of jury trial in criminal cases are collected in 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136 ff.

As to the validity in general of waivers of constitutional rights by accused persons, see Starr v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 440, 467, 468, 115 Pac. 356, 367 (1911) (presence of accused—confronting witnesses), Doyle, J., saying: "Generally speaking, the constitutional provisions guaranteeing to every accused person in a criminal action certain rights may be separated into two classes: First, those in which the public generally, and as a community, is interested, as well as the accused, and which are jurisdictional as affecting the power of

CHAPTER VII

INTERSTATE PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENS

CORFIELD v. CORYELL (1825) 4 Wash. C. C. 371, 380-382, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230, Mr. Justice WASHINGTON (upholding a New Jersey statute forbidding any person not an actual inhabitant or resident of the state from gathering oysters therein on board any vessel not wholly owned by an inhabitant or resident thereof):

"2. The next question is, whether this act infringes that section of the Constitution which declares that 'the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states'? The inquiry is, what are the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states? We feel no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are, in the court to try the cause; second, those more in the nature of privileges which are for the benefit of the accused alone, and do not affect the general public. The former cannot be waived. Jurisdiction to try the cause is conferred by the law. Consent cannot confer jurisdiction, but the accused may waive a constitutional right or privilege designed for his protection, where no question of public policy is involved. The public as well as the accused have an interest in every criminal trial. The life and liberty of the citizen is a matter of supreme importance to the state, and it should not allow him to throw either away by a failure, intentional or otherwise, to take advantage of his constitutional safeguards. It will not do, however, to say that because the state has a peculiar interest in protecting the citizen accused of crime to the extent of his constitutional rights that he shall in no case be allowed to waive them, for in some cases it may be to his interest to waive them, and the denial of the right to do so would defeat the very object in view when the rights were given, and cause them to operate to the injury rather than to the benefit of the accused."

See, also, 11 Mich. L. Rev. 465-469 and first three cases in note L. Twining v. New Jersey, post p. 283.

JURISDICTION OF EQUITY TO RESTRAIN CRIMINAL ACTS.—The constitutional requirement is not violated by the original exercise or by the statutory enlargement of the power of courts of equity, in suits brought on behalf of the public, to enjoin conduct prejudicial to the public interest, even though it be also criminal. See In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092 (1895) (in general); Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 22 N. W. 641, 54 Am. Rep. 19 (1885) (illegal sale of liquor); State v. Markuson, 5 N. D. 147, 64 N. W. 934 (1895) (same); Stead v. Fortner, 255 Ill. 468, 99 N. E. 680 (1912) (same); State v. Ohio Oil Co., 150 Ind. 21, 49 N. E. 809, 47 L. R. A. 627 (1898) (waste of natural gas) (cases); State ex rel. Crow v. Canty, 207 Mo. 439, 105 S. W. 1078, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, 123 Am. St. Rep. 393, 13 Ann. Cas. 7-7 (1907) (bull fight); United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 342, 343, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007 (1897) (anti-trust act); United States v. Michigan Cent. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 122 Fed. 544 (1903) (interstate commerce act); United States v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co. (C. C.) 143 Fed. 1007 (1906) (same); North American Ins. Co. v. Gates, 214 Ill. 272, 73 N. E. 423 (1905) (exclusion of foreign corporations); Attorney General v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 35 Wis. 425, 523-553 (1874) (abuse of corporate their nature, fundamental; which belong, of right, to the citizens of all free governments; and which have, at all times, been enjoyed by the citizens of the several states which compose this Union, from the time of their becoming free, independent, and sovereign. What these fundamental principles are, it would perhaps be more tedious than difficult to enumerate. They may, however, be all comprehended under the following general heads: protection by the government; the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety; subject nevertheless to such restraints as the government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole. The right of a citizen of one state to pass through, or to reside in any other state, for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits, or otherwise; to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus; to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts of the state; to take, hold and dispose of property, either real or personal; and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by the other citizens of the state; may be mentioned as some of the particular privileges and immunities of franchise); People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tool, 35 Colo. 225, 86 Pac. 224, 229, 231, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 117 Am. St. Rep. 198 (1905) (election frauds). See, also, 7 Col. L. Rev. 357; E. S. Mack in 16 Harv. L. Rev. 389.

In State v. Canty, above, Valliant, P. J., said (207 Mo. 460, 461, 105 S. W. 1085, 15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 747, 123 Am. St. Rep. 393, 13 Ann. Cas. 787): "A man charged with the commission of a crime has a constitutional right to a trial by jury, but a man who has not yet acted, but who merely proposes to commit an act which is not only criminal in its character, but also flagrantly offensive as a public nuisance, has no constitutional right to commit the act in order that he may thereafter enjoy the constitutional right of trial by jury."

PROCEDURE AND PUNISHMENT.—The consideration of the provisions of the fifth amendment, securing a grand jury and forbidding double jeopardy; of the sixth amendment, regarding the conduct of criminal trials; and of the eighth amendment regarding bail, fines, and punishments—all properly belong to the subject of Criminal Procedure, and are not treated in this collection. See, however, as to grand juries, In re Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89 (1885); Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 348, 6 Sup. Ct. 777, 29 L. Ed. 909 (1886); double jeopardy, In re Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. Ed. 872 (1874); Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S. 100, 24 Sup. Ct. 797, 49 L. Ed. 114, 1 Ann. Cas. 655 (1904); Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, 26 Sup. Ct. 121, 50 L. Ed. 292, 4 Ann. Cas. 773 (1905); Grafton v. United States, 206 U. S. 333, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 51 L. Ed. 1084, 11 Ann. Cas. 640 (1907); trial in district where crime committed, Hyde v. United States, 225 U. S. 347, 32 Sup. Ct. 793, 56 L. Ed. 1114 (1912); Brown v. Elliott, 225 U. S. 392, 32 Sup. Ct. 812, 56 L. Ed. 1136 (1912); information of nature of accusation, Rosen v. United States, 161 U. S. 29, 16 Sup. Ct. 434, 480, 40 L. Ed. 606 (1896); Bartell v. United States, 227 U. S. 427, 33 Sup. Ct. 383, 57 L. Ed. — (1913); exact punishment, Weems v. United States, 217 U. S. 349, 30 Sup. Ct. 544, 54 L. Ed. 703, 19 Ann. Cas. 705 (1910).

As to how far the provisions of the Constitution for the protection of persons accused of crime apply to actions for penalties, civil in form, though quasi-criminal in nature, see Hepner v. United States, 213 U. S. 103, 29 Sup. Ct. 474, 53 L. Ed. 720, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 739, 16 Ann. Cas. 960 (1909) (cases); Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 29 Sup. Ct. 671, 53 L. Ed. 1013 (1909).

citizens, which are clearly embraced by the general description of privileges deemed to be fundamental; to which may be added, the elective franchise, as regulated and established by the laws or Constitution of the state in which it is to be exercised. These, and many others which might be mentioned, are, strictly speaking, privileges and immunities, and the enjoyment of them by the citizens of each state, in every other state, was manifestly calculated (to use the expressions of the preamble of the corresponding provision in the old Articles of Confederation) 'the better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different states of the Union.'

"But we cannot accede to the proposition which was insisted on by the counsel, that, under this provision of the Constitution, the citizens of the several states are permitted to participate in all the rights which belong exclusively to the citizens of any other particular state, merely upon the ground that they are enjoyed by those citizens; much less, than in regulating the use of the common property of the citizens of such state, the legislature is bound to extend to the citizens of all the other states the same advantages as are secured to their own citizens. A several fishery, either as the right to it respects running fish, or such as are stationary, such as oysters, clams, and the like, is as much the property of the individual to whom it belongs, as dry land, or land covered by water; and is equally protected by the laws of the state against the aggressions of others, whether citizens or strangers. Where those private rights do not exist to the exclusion of the common right, that of fishing belongs to all the citizens or subjects of the state. It is the property of all; to be enjoyed by them in subordination to the laws which regulate its use. They may be considered as tenants in common of this property; and they are so exclusively entitled to the use of it, that it cannot be enjoyed by others without the tacit consent, or the express permission of the sovereign who has the power to regulate its use. * * *

"That this exclusive right of taking oysters in the waters of New Jersey has never been ceded by that state, in express terms, to the United States, is admitted by the counsel for the plaintiff; and having shown, as we think we have, that this right is a right of property, vested either in certain individuals, or in the state, for the use of the citizens thereof; it would, in our opinion, be going quite too far to construe the grant of privileges and immunities of citizens, as amounting to a grant of a co-tenancy in the common property of the state, to the citizens of all the other states. Such a construction would, in many instances, be productive of the most serious public inconvenience and injury, particularly, in regard to those kinds of fish, which, by being exposed to too general use, may be exhausted. The oyster beds belonging to a state may be abundantly sufficient for the use of the citizens of that state, but might be totally exhausted and destroyed if the legislature could not so regulate the use of them as to exclude the citizens of the other states from taking them, except under such limitations and restrictions as the laws may prescribe."¹

PAUL v. VIRGINIA (1869) 8 Wall. 168, 178, 180-182, 19 L. Ed. 357, Mr. Justice FIELD (upholding a Virginia statute requiring foreign insurance corporations alone to deposit certain securities with the state treasurer before doing business in the state):

"In no case which has come under our observation, either in the state or federal courts, has a corporation been considered a citizen within the meaning of that provision of the Constitution which declares that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states. * * * [Here follows a statement of the reasoning in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 586, 10 L. Ed. 274 denying that this provision referred to corporations.]

"It was undoubtedly the object of the clause in question to place the citizens of each state upon the same footing with citizens of other states, so far as the advantages resulting from citizenship in those states are concerned. * * *

"But the privileges and immunities secured to citizens of each state in the several states, by the provision in question, are those privileges and immunities which are common to the citizens in the latter states under their constitution and laws by virtue of their being citizens. Special privileges enjoyed by citizens in their own states are not secured in other states by this provision. It was not intended by the provision to give to the laws of one state any operation in other states. They can have no such operation, except by the permission, express or implied, of those states. The special privileges which they confer must, therefore, be enjoyed at home, unless the assent of other states to their enjoyment therein be given.

"Now a grant of corporate existence is a grant of special privileges to the incorporators, enabling them to act for certain designated purposes as a single individual, and exempting them (unless otherwise specially provided) from individual liability. The corporation being the mere creation of local law, can have no legal existence beyond the limits of the sovereignty where created. As said by this court in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 'It must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty.' The recognition of its existence even by other states, and the enforcement of its contracts made therein, depend purely upon the comity of those states—a comity which is never extended where the existence of the corporation or the exercise of its powers are prejudicial to their interests or repugnant to their policy. * * *

¹ Accord (as to various species of common property): McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248 (1877) (planting oysters in public waters); Chambers v. Church, 14 R. I. 398, 51 Am. Rep. 410 (1884) (fish); State v. Tower, 84 Me. 444, 24 Atl. 898 (1892) (same) [see Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159 (1891) and Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 528 ff., 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793 (1896)]; Geer v. Connecticut, above (wild game); Allen v. Wyckoff, 48 N. J. Law, 90, 2 Atl. 659, 57 Am. Rep. 548 (1886) (same); McCarter v. Hudson County Water Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 695, 65 Atl. 489, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197, 118 Am. St. Rep. 754, 10 Ann. Cas. 116 (1906) (running water in navigable stream), affirmed in 209 U. S. 549, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 560 (1908). Compare State v. Smith, 71 Ark. 478, 75 S. W. 1081 (1903) (stock of non-residents forbidden to run at large).

Contra: Rossmiller v. State, 114 Wis. 169, 89 N. W. 839, 58 L. R. A. 93, 91 Am. St. Rep. 910 (1902) (semlé) (ice on navigable waters).

"If the right asserted of the foreign corporation, when composed of citizens of one state, to transact business in other states were even restricted to such business as corporations of those states were authorized to transact it would still follow that those states would be unable to limit the number of corporations doing business therein. They could not charter a company for any purpose, however restricted, without at once opening the door to a flood of corporations from other states to engage in the same pursuits. They could not repel an intruding corporation, except on the condition of refusing incorporation for a similar purpose to their own citizens; and yet it might be of the highest public interest that the number of corporations in the state should be limited; that they should be required to give publicity to their transactions; to submit their affairs to proper examination; to be subject to forfeiture of their corporate rights in case of mismanagement, and that their officers should be held to a strict accountability for the manner in which the business of the corporations is managed, and be liable to summary removal. 'It is impossible,' to repeat the language of this court in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 'upon any sound principle, to give such a construction to the article in question,'—a construction which would lead to results like these." ¹

¹ Accord: Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., 191 U. S. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. 92, 48 L. Ed. 225 (1903) (foreign corporation excluded from domestic courts in certain classes of cases); Blake v. McClung, post, at p. 209.

² Presumably the members of a common-law partnership are protected by this clause. See State v. Cadigan, 73 Vt. 245, 50 Atl. 1079, 57 L. R. A. 666, 87 Am. St. Rep. 714 (1901).

³ As to the status of free negroes before the fourteenth amendment, see Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 15 L. Ed. 691 (1857), mentioned in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, ante, at p. 123.

BLAKE v. McCLUNG.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 172 U. S. 239, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Tennessee. The Embreeville Company, a British corporation, had complied with the provisions of the statute stated in the opinion below, and did business in Tennessee. The company became insolvent, and, upon a creditors' bill filed by McClung and others, a receiver was appointed who administered the assets. The chancery court entered a decree adjudicating that the creditors who were residents of Tennessee were, under the aforesaid statute, entitled to priority in the distribution of assets as against all creditors resident out of the state, whether citizens of other states or not. This was affirmed by the state Supreme Court, and a writ of error was taken by Blake and others, citizens of Ohio, and by the Hull Coal Company, a Virginia corporation, all of whom were creditors of the Embreeville Company.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * The plaintiffs in error contend that the judgment of the state court, based upon the statute, denies to them rights secured by the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, providing that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." * * *

We have seen that, by the third section of the Tennessee statute, corporations organized under the laws of other states or countries, and which complied with the provisions of the statute, were to be deemed and taken to be corporations of that state; and by the fifth section it is declared, in respect of the property of corporations doing business in Tennessee under the provisions of the statute, that creditors who are residents of that state shall have a priority in the distribution of assets, or the subjection of the same, or any part thereof, to the payment of debts, over all simple contract creditors, being residents of any other country or countries.

The suggestion is made that, as the statute refers only to "residents," there is no occasion to consider whether it is repugnant to the provision of the national Constitution relating to citizens. We cannot accede to this view. * * * Looking at the purpose and scope of the Tennessee statute, it is plain that the words "residents of this state" refer to those whose residence in Tennessee was such as indicated that their permanent home or habitation was there, without any present intention of removing therefrom, and having the intention, when absent from that state, to return thereto,—such residence as appertained to or inhered in citizenship. And the words, in the same statute, "residents of any other country or countries," refer to those whose respective habitations were not in Tennessee, but who were citizens, not simply residents, of some other state or country. It is impossible to believe that the statute was intended to apply to creditors of whom it could be said that they were only residents of other states, but not to creditors who were citizens of such states. The state did not intend to place creditors, citizens of other states, upon an equality with creditors, citizens of Tennessee, and to give priority only to Tennessee creditors over creditors who resided in, but were not citizens of, other states. The manifest purpose was to give to all Tennessee creditors priority over all creditors residing out of that state, whether the latter were citizens or only residents of some other state or country. Any other interpretation of the statute would defeat the object for which it was enacted. * * *

Beyond question, a state may, through judicial proceedings, take possession of the assets of an insolvent foreign corporation within its limits, and distribute such assets or their proceeds among creditors according to their respective rights. But may it exclude citizens of other states from such distribution until the claims of its own citizens shall have been first satisfied? In the administration of the property of an insolvent foreign corporation by the courts of the state in which it is doing business, will the Constitution of the United States permit discrimination against individual creditors of such corporation because of their being citizens of other states, and not citizens of the state in which such administration occurs?

These questions are presented for our determination. Let us see how far they have been answered by the former decisions of this court.

This court has never undertaken to give any exact or comprehensive definition of the words "privileges and immunities," in article 4 of the Constitution of the United States. Referring to this clause, Mr. Justice Curtis, speaking for the court in Conner v. Elliot, 18 How. 591, 593 (15 L. Ed. 497), said: "We do not deem it needful to attempt to define the meaning of the word 'privileges' in this clause of the Constitution. It is safer, and more in accordance with the duty of a judicial tribunal, to leave its meaning to be determined, in each case, upon a view of the particular rights asserted and denied therein. And especially is this true when we are dealing with so broad a provision, involving matters not only of great delicacy and importance, but which are of such a character that any merely abstract definition could scarcely be correct; and a failure to make it so would certainly produce mischief." Nevertheless, what has been said by this and other courts upon the general subject will assist us in determining the particular questions now pressed upon our attention. * * * [Here follow quotations from Corfield v. Coryell, ante, p. 198, and from McCready v. Va., 94 U. S. 391, 395, 24 L. Ed. 248.]

In Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 180 (19 L. Ed. 357), the court observed that "it was undoubtedly the object of the clause in question to place the citizens of each state upon the same footing with citizens of other states, so far as the advantages resulting from citizenship in those states are concerned. It relieves them from the disabilities of alienage in other states; it inhibits discriminating legislation against them by other states;¹ it gives them the right of free ingress into other states, and egress from them; it insures to them in other states the same freedom possessed by the citizens of those states in the acquisition and enjoyment of property, and in the pursuit of happiness; and it secures to them in other states the equal protection of their laws. It has been justly said that no provision in the Constitution has tended so strongly to constitute the citizens of the United States one people as this. Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 607. Indeed, without some provision of the kind, removing from the citizens of each state the disabilities of alienage in the other states, and giving them equality of privilege with citizens of those states, the republic would have constituted little more than a league of states; it would not have constituted the Union which now exists."

Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 430 (20 L. Ed. 449), involved the validity of a statute of Maryland requiring all traders, not being permanent residents of the state, to take out licenses for the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise in Maryland, other than agricultural products and articles there manufactured. This court said: "Attempt will not be made to define the words 'privileges and immunities,' or to specify the rights which they are intended to secure and protect, beyond what may be necessary to the decision of the case before the court. Beyond doubt, those words are words of very comprehensive meaning, but it will be sufficient to say that the clause plainly and unmistakably secures and protects the right of a citizen of one state to pass into any other state of the Union, for the purpose of engaging in lawful commerce, trade, or business, without molestation, to acquire personal property, to take and hold real estate,² to maintain actions in the courts of the states, and to be exempt from any higher taxes or excises than are imposed by the state upon its own citizens. Comprehensive as the power of the states is to lay and collect taxes and excises, it is nevertheless clear, in the judgment of the court, that the power cannot be exercised to any extent in a manner forbidden by the Constitution; and, inasmuch as the Constitution provides that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, it follows that the defendant might lawfully sell or offer or expose for sale within the district described in the indictment, any goods which the permanent residents of the state might sell or offer or expose for sale in that district, without being subjected to any higher tax or excise than that exacted by law of such permanent residents." ³

¹ The clause does not forbid the discrimination of private individuals, but only that of the state. See United States v. Morris (D. C.) 125 Fed. 322-323 (1903). Compare Civil Rights Cases, post, p. 240.

² Statutes are invalid that confine to residents the right to act as trustee of property within a state, Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Chicago & A. Ry. (C. C.) 27 Fed. 146 (1886); Roby v. Smith, 131 Ind. 342, 30 N. E. 1093, 15 L. R. A. 792, 31 Am. St. Rep. 439 (1892); or to take property by will, Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 408 (1833).

In the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 77 (21 L. Ed. 394), the court, referring to what was said in Paul v. Virginia, above cited, in reference to the scope and meaning of section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution, said: "The constitutional provision there alluded to did not create those rights which it called privileges and immunities of citizens of the states. It threw around them in that clause no security for the citizen of the state in which they were claimed or exercised. Nor did it profess to control the power of the state governments over the rights of its own citizens. Its sole purpose was to declare to the several states, that whatever those rights, as you grant or establish them to your own citizens, or as you limit or qualify, or impose restrictions on their exercise, the same, neither more nor less, shall be the measure of the rights of citizens of other states within your jurisdiction." ⁴

In Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 113, 114, 10 Sup. Ct. 271, 33 L. Ed. 538 this court cited with approval the language of Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, to the effect that the object of the constitutional guaranty was to confer on the citizens of the several states "a general citizenship, and to communicate all the privileges and immunities which the citizens of the same state would be entitled to under like circumstances, and this includes the right to institute actions."

These principles have not been modified by any subsequent decision of this court.

The foundation upon which the above cases rest cannot, however, stand, if it be adjudged to be in the power of one state, when establishing regulations for the conduct of private business of a particular kind, to give its own citizens essential privileges connected with that business which it denies to citizens of other states. By the statute in question the British company was to be deemed and taken to be a corporation of Tennessee, with authority to carry on its business in that state. It was the right of citizens of Tennessee to deal with it, as it was their right to deal with corporations created by Tennessee. And it was equally the right of citizens of other states to deal with that corporation. The state did not assume to declare, even if it could legally have declared, that that company, being admitted to do business in Tennessee, should transact business only with citizens of Tennessee, or should not transact business with citizens of other states. No one would question the right of the individual plaintiffs in error, although not residents of Tennessee, to sell their goods to that corporation upon such terms in respect of payment as might be agreed upon, and to ship them to the corporation at its place of business in that state.

³ Accord: Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 268 (1865) (tax on corporate dividends); Sprague v. Fletcher, 69 Vt. 69, 37 Atl. 239, 37 L. R. A. 840 (1896) (tax on personal property); Estate of Johnson, 139 Cal. 532, 73 Pac. 424, 96 Am. St. Rep. 161 (1903) (inheritance tax).

But non-residents may be taxed in a different manner from residents, if in the result there is no substantial discrimination. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Connecticut, 185 U. S. 364, 22 Sup. Ct. 673, 46 L. Ed. 949 (1902); Redd v. St. Francis County, 17 Ark. 416 (1856); Taylor v. Crawford, 72 Ohio St. 560, 74 N. E. 1065, 69 L. R. A. 805 (1905).

⁴ Accord, see Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 562, 608 (1860).

But the enjoyment of these rights is materially obstructed by the statute in question; for that statute, by its necessary operation, excludes citizens of other states from transacting business with that corporation upon terms of equality with citizens of Tennessee. By force of the statute alone, citizens of other states, if they contracted at all with the British corporation, must have done so subject to the onerous condition that, if the corporation became insolvent, its assets in Tennessee should first be applied to meet its obligations to residents of that state, although liability for its debts and engagements was "to be enforced in the manner provided by law for the application of the property of natural persons to the payment of their debts, engagements, and contracts." But, clearly, the state could not in that mode secure exclusive privileges to its own citizens in matters of business. If a state should attempt, by statute regulating the distribution of the property of insolvent individuals among their creditors, to give priority to the claims of such individual creditors as were citizens of that state over the claims of individual creditors citizens of other states, such legislation would be repugnant to the Constitution, upon the ground that it withheld from citizens of other states, as such, and because they were such, privileges granted to citizens of the state enacting it. Can a different principle apply, as between individual citizens of the several states, when the assets to be distributed are the assets of an insolvent private corporation lawfully engaged in business, and having the power to contract with citizens residing in states other than the one in which it is located? * * *

We hold such discrimination against citizens of other states to be repugnant to the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, although, generally speaking, the state has the power to prescribe the conditions upon which foreign corporations may enter its territory for purposes of business. Such a power cannot be exerted with the effect of defeating or impairing rights secured to citizens of the several states by the supreme law of the land. Indeed, all the powers possessed by a state must be exercised consistently with the privileges and immunities granted or protected by the Constitution of the United States. * * *

We must not be understood as saying that a citizen of one state is entitled to enjoy in another state every privilege that may be given in the latter to its own citizens. There are privileges that may be accorded by a state to its own people, in which citizens of other states may not participate, except in conformity to such reasonable regulations as may be established by the state. For instance, a state cannot forbid citizens of other states from suing in its courts, that right being enjoyed by its own people; but it may require a nonresident, although a citizen of another state, to give bond for costs, although such bond be not required of a resident. Such a regulation of the internal affairs of a state cannot reasonably be characterized as hostile to the fundamental rights of citizens of other states.⁵ So, a state may, by rule uniform in its operation as to citizens of the several states, require residence within its limits for a given time before a citizen of another state, who becomes a resident thereof, shall exercise the right of suffrage or become eligible to office.⁶ It has never been supposed that regulations of that character materially interfered with the enjoyment by citizens of each state of the privileges and immunities secured by the Constitution to citizens of the several states. The Constitu-

⁵ Accord: Pyrolusite Manganese Co. v. Ward, 73 Ga. 491 (1884) (attachment against non-resident debtors); Campbell v. Morris, 3 Har. & McIl. (Md.) 535 (1797) (same); Head v. Daniels, 38 Kan. 1, 15 Pac. 911 (1887) (attachment bond required of non-residents); Marsh v. Steele, 9 Neb. 96, 1 N. W. 869, 31 Am. Rep. 406 (1879) (same); Holt v. Tennytown & R. R. Co., 81 Md. 219, 31 Atl. 809 (1895) (security for costs); Cummings v. Wingo, 31 S. C. 427, 10 S. E. 107 (1889) (same); Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299 (1879) (same); Frost v. Brisbit, 19 Wend. 11, 32 Am. Dec. 423 (1837) (arrest for debt).

A statute of limitations may bar claims of non-resident plaintiffs against non-residents, and not bar similar claims of resident plaintiffs. Chemung Canal Bank v. Lowery, 93 U. S. 72, 23 L. Ed. 806 (1876). A foreign attachment against the property of non-resident debtors may be granted to resident creditors only. Kincaid v. Francis, Cooke (3 Tenn.) 49 (1812). The jurisdiction of courts in suits against foreign corporations may be confined to cases where the plaintiffs are residents, or where the cause of action arose in the state, or the subject of it is situated there. Robinson v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., 112 N. Y. 315, 19 N. E. 625, 2 L. R. A. 636 (1889); Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Georgia Const. & Invest. Co., 32 S. C. 319, 11 S. E. 192 (1890). Contra: Cofrode v. Circuit Judge of Wayne County, 79 Mich. 332, 44 N. W. 623, 7 L. R. A. 511 (1890) (semble); Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co., 94 Wis. 70, 68 N. W. 664, 34 L. R. A. 503, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859 (1896) (semble).

A number of common procedural discriminations against non-residents are enumerated in Marsh v. Steele, 9 Neb. 96, 100, 1 N. W. 869, 31 Am. Rep. 406 (1879). Among the most frequent is the exemption of property from execution. See 18 Cyc. 1406 (cases).

⁶ Accord: People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 607, 608, 51 N. E. 785 (1898); Austin v. State, 10 Mo. 591 (1817) (semble). The same is true of jury service. Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 366, 25 L. Ed. 676 (1879), in opinion dissenting upon other grounds.

Rights attached by law to certain relations usually governed by the law of the domicile may be confined to residents who maintain such relations. Conner v. Elliot, 18 How. 591, 15 L. Ed. 497 (1855) (matrimonial community of property); Buttington v. Grosvenor, 46 Kan. 730, 27 Pac. 137, 13 L. R. A. 282 (1891) (dower); Bennett v. Harms, 51 Wis. 251, 8 N. W. 222 (1881) (dower); Conner v. Elliot, above rights of partners inter sese—semble.

"The clause has nothing to do with the distinctions founded on domicile."—Denio, J., in Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 562, 608 (1860). "It does not obliterate all distinctions which may arise from the fact of residence. * * * A non-resident cannot vote, hold office, practice law, or enjoy school and many other privileges simply because he is a citizen and has those rights in another state."—Stiness, J., in Chambers v. Church, 14 R. I. 398, 399, 400, 51 Am. Rep. 410 (1884).

tion forbids only such legislation affecting citizens of the respective states as will substantially or practically put a citizen of one state in a condition of alienage when he is within or when he removes to another state, or when asserting in another state the rights that commonly appertain to those who are part of the political community known as the People of the United States, by and for whom the government of the Union was ordained and established.

Nor must we be understood as saying that a state may not, by its courts, retain within its limits the assets of a foreign corporation, in order that justice may be done to its own citizens, nor, by appropriate action of its judicial tribunals, see to it that its own citizens are not unjustly discriminated against by reason of the administration in other states of the assets there of an insolvent corporation doing business within its limits. For instance, if the Embreeville Company had property in Virginia at the time of its insolvency, the Tennessee court administering its assets in that state could take into account what a Virginia creditor, seeking to participate in the distribution of the company's assets in Tennessee, had received or would receive from the company's assets in Virginia, and make such order touching the assets of the company in Tennessee as would protect Tennessee creditors against wrongful discrimination arising from the particular action taken in Virginia for the benefit of creditors residing in that commonwealth.⁷

It may be appropriate to observe that the objections to the statute of Tennessee do not necessarily embrace enactments that are found in some of the states requiring foreign insurance corporations, as a condition of their coming into the state for purposes of business, to deposit with the state treasurer funds sufficient to secure policy holders in its midst. Legislation of that character does not present any question of discrimination against citizens forbidden by the Constitution.⁸ Insurance funds set apart in advance for the benefit of home policy holders of a foreign insurance company doing business in the state are a trust fund of a specific kind, to be administered for the exclusive benefit of certain persons. Policy holders in other states know that those particular funds are segregated from the mass of property owned by the company, and that they cannot look to them to the prejudice of those for whose special benefit they were deposited. The present case is not one of that kind. The statute of Tennessee did not make it a condition of the right of the British corporation to come into Tennessee for purposes of business that it should, at the outset, deposit with the state a fixed amount, to stand exclusively or primarily for the protection of its Tennessee creditors. * * *

⁷ A state may forbid its own citizens from enjoying in another state privileges extended by the latter state to all within its borders. Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. 269, 33 L. Ed. 538 (1890) (foreign attachment to gain preference over creditors at domicile); Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 203, 28 Am. Rep. 448 (1877) (same to evade domestic exemption laws); Sweeny v. Hunter, 145 Pa. 363, 22 Atl. 653, 14 L. R. A. 594 (1891) (same).

⁸ Accord: People v. Granite State Provident Ass'n, 161 N. Y. 492, 55 N. E. 1053 (1900) (building and loan association); Maynard v. Granite State Provident Ass'n, 92 Fed. 435, 34 C. C. A. 458 (1899) (semble).

We adjudge that when the general property and assets of a private corporation lawfully doing business in a state are in course of administration by the courts of such state, creditors who are citizens of other states are entitled, under the Constitution of the United States, to stand upon the same plane with creditors of like class who are citizens of such state, and cannot be denied equality of right simply because they do not reside in that state, but are citizens residing in other states of the Union. The individual plaintiffs in error were entitled to contract with this British corporation, lawfully doing business in Tennessee, and deemed and taken to be a corporation of that state; and no rule in the distribution of its assets among creditors could be applied to them as resident citizens of Ohio, and because they were not residents of Tennessee, that was not applied by the courts of Tennessee to creditors of like character who were citizens of Tennessee. * * *

[It was decided that the Virginia corporation, the Hull Coal Company, was not protected by this provision, following Paul v. Virginia, ante, p. 200.]

Judgment accordingly.*

[BREWER, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which FULLER, C. J., concurred, on the ground that the Tennessee statute discriminated, not against non-citizens, but against non-residents of the state.¹⁰]

EX PARTE SPINNEY.

(Supreme Court of Nevada, 1875. 10 Nev. 323.)

[Habeas corpus before the Supreme Court. Spinney was in custody under a warrant of arrest charging him with violating a state statute enacted to prevent the practice of medicine by unqualified persons. Other facts appear in the opinion below.]

BEATTY, J. * * * The illegality of the imprisonment is alleged to consist in this: That the statute defining the offence and prescribing the penalty is unconstitutional and void, because [among other reasons] in conflict with * * * the second section of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." * * *

* Accord: Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 20 Sup. Ct. 935, 44 L. Ed. 10 (1900).

See W. J. Meyers in 1 Mich. L. Rev. 286, 364 (1903) collecting authorities upon this provision of the Constitution. In Chambers v. Baltimore & O. Ry., 207 U. S. 142, 28 Sup. Ct. 31, 52 L. Ed. 113 (1907) a discrimination was upheld, based, not upon the citizenship of parties to the action, but upon the citizenship of the decedent, for whose wrongfully caused death suit was brought. See both the majority and the dissenting opinion.

¹⁰ Compare the language of the fourteenth amendment: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States * * * are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside."

The law says, in effect, that, outside of his own family, except in the specified cases of emergency, no man shall practice or prescribe as a physician or surgeon in this state unless he is either a regular graduate, or unless he has practiced in this state for ten years next preceding the passage of the act. This is the rule of qualification for medical or surgical practice. It is contended that it is purely arbitrary in these particulars: * * * Second. In admitting those who have practiced the requisite period in this state and excluding those who have practiced during the same period in other states. * * * The second point was more strenuously insisted upon, the petitioner contending that there cannot be any reasonable ground for a distinction between those who have practiced ten years in this state and those who have practiced ten years elsewhere.

But I am not prepared to say that there may not be grounds for such a distinction. Disregarding individual exceptions, which can never be made the basis of general legislation, it may have been considered that physicians and surgeons who are versed in the sciences upon which the intelligent practice of their arts depends are always graduates, and that those who are not graduates and whose qualifications depend mainly upon their individual experience, while they may be reasonably safe advisers in the locality and among the diseases they are accustomed to, might be very unsafe advisers in another locality and climate, among a population mainly employed in other avocations, and where, as a consequence, different diseases prevail, and the same diseases may be modified by different surrounding circumstances, not only in their development, but even in their earliest stage. To express the idea more plainly, the legislature may have thought: The graduate is a man of science; his knowledge enables him to refer effects to their causes; it enables him to discriminate between the essential relations of phenomena and their accidental coincidence; it is sufficiently comprehensive to anticipate the operation of new causes and the influence of changed conditions. He will, therefore, be able to adapt his practice to the peculiar diseases or modifications of disease of any locality. The mere practitioner, on the other hand, who has not pursued the regular course of medical education, and who has learned merely to meet a certain symptom with a certain drug, without knowing what pathological condition is indicated by the symptom or what is the specific action of the drug, may do very well in the diseases he is accustomed to, or where the same symptom means the same thing, and the accustomed remedy meets the same counteracting or co-operating conditions; but he will be dangerous among new diseases or new modifications of disease.

If this was the idea of the legislature, there is certainly some rea son and some truth to sustain it, and we are bound to presume that if they had no better reason for the rule they have established, the true reason was found in the consideration indicated. How much truth there may be in these suggestions, or how important it may be as a principle of discrimination, was a question solely for the legislature. Having the power to discriminate, it had full discretion, so far as the clause of our Constitution in question is concerned, to discriminate upon any principle which will serve as the basis of a general classification. The question was one of policy, and its decision is not subject to our review.

It is urged, however, that in point of fact there is no essential difference of climate between this state and Utah or California. This may be true, or may not be; but I again say of that the legislature was the judge. There is undoubtedly a difference between Nevada and Florida or Louisiana. If the extremes were to be divided, it could only be by a geographical line, and wherever that line was drawn it must necessarily have been arbitrary in the same sense that the distinction between ten years and nine years and eleven months is arbitrary.

It may be said, in conclusion, that the idea of the necessity of local experience as a qualification to practice a licensed calling is by no means novel. The case of pilots is an extreme case, where the necessity is apparent. The case of lawyers, however, is entirely analogous to that of physicians, and certainly it has not been unusual to require a local apprenticeship to the law as a condition of license to practice it. I presume the constitutionality of a law requiring a term of service in the office of a Nevada attorney as an essential condition of license to practice here would not be questioned, and yet there is probably less difference between the laws and law practice of California and Nevada than there is between diseases and their treatment in the two states. * * *

But is this law in conflict with the Constitution of the United States? The first provision referred to, considered with reference to this case, amounts to no more than this: that citizens of other states are entitled to practice medicine and surgery here on precisely the same terms and subject only to the same restrictions as our own citizens. Now this law makes no distinction in terms between our own citizens and citizens of other states. It merely prescribes the qualifications that practitioners are required to possess, and admits all to practice who can bring themselves within the rule, whether they are citizens of this state or other states. But it is argued that one of the sorts of qualification recognized is such, that of necessity none but citizens of this state can possess it. This is so, but it does not follow, therefore, that the law is unconstitutional; for if the qualification is in itself reasonable, and such as tends to subserve public interests, the legislature had the right to exact it, and the circumstance that citizens of other states cannot possess it may be a misfortune to them, but is no reason why a precaution, proper in itself, should be dispensed with. * * *

Prisoner remanded.¹

[HAWLEY, C. J., gave a concurring opinion.]

¹ The principal case has been generally followed. Many of the cases in accord are collected in 1 Mich. Law Rev. 291, and others are cited in Craig v. Board of Medical Examiners, 12 Mont. 203, 29 Pac. 532 (1892). Contra: State v. Hlinman, 65 N. H. 103, 18 Atl. 194, 23 Am. St. Rep. 22 (1889). A similar statute has been upheld as applied to dentists. State v. Creditor, 44 Kan. 565, 24 Pac. 346, 21 Am. St. Rep. 306 (1890); and see State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 129, 43 N. W. 789, 6 L. R. A. 119 (1889).

Retail liquor dealers are in several states required to be residents. Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71, 25 N. E. 883, 9 L. R. A. 664 (1890); Austin v. State, 10 Mo. 591 (1847); Mette v. McGuckin, 18 Neb. 323, 25 N. W. 338 (1885), affirmed by a divided court in United States Supreme Court, 37 L. Ed. 934 (1892). "It is not an unreasonable requirement that a person who desires to avail himself of a license to retail intoxicating liquor shall submit himself to the jurisdiction of the state, by becoming an inhabitant thereof, to the end that he may be readily apprehended and punished for any violation of the law in connection with his business."—Coffey, J., in Welsh v. State, above, 126 Ind. 78, 25 N. E. 885, 9 L. R. A. 664.

So, also, in State v. Richcreek, 167 Ind. 217, 229, 230, 77 N. E. 1085, 1089, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, 119 Am. St. Rep. 491, 10 Ann. Cas. 899 (1906), holding that an individual, or one member of a firm, conducting a banking business, must be a resident of the state, Montgomery, J., said: "The propriety of this provision is readily manifest. A private banker inviting the confidence and patronage of the public should not only possess suitable capital, but also a good character. The people entrusting their money to his care should be afforded an opportunity of learning something of his character, habits, and mode of life without going beyond state lines for information. A good character will not insure the safety of a business entrusted wholly to employes, but personal supervision is highly requisite. The situs of the bank assets for the purposes of taxation should be definitely fixed, and not left open to dispute by the nonresidence of the owner. It is important that the banker should be within the jurisdiction of our courts, civil and criminal, and be answerable personally to the complaints of creditors, and easily apprehended in case of a violation of the laws governing his business."

CHAPTER VIII

OPERATION OF FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT* IN SECURING CIVIL RIGHTS

SECTION 1.—IN GENERAL

BARRON v. MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1833. 7 Pet. 213, 8 L. Ed. 672.)

[Error to the Maryland Court of Appeals for the western shore of the state. The city of Baltimore in grading its streets diverted certain streams from their natural course, so that they made deposits of earth near Barron's wharf and prevented the access of vessels. He sued in case for these injuries. A verdict for him for $4,500 in the county court was reversed by the Court of Appeals, and this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL. The judgment brought up by this writ of error having been rendered by the court of a state, this tribunal can exercise no jurisdiction over it, unless it be shown to come within the provisions of the twenty-fifth section¹ of the Judiciary Act. 1 Stats. at Large, 85. The plaintiff in error contends that it comes within that clause in the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which inhibits the taking of private property for public use, without just compensation. He insists that this amendment, being in favor of the liberty of the citizen, ought to be so construed as to restrain the legislative power of a state, as well as that of the United States. If this proposition be untrue, the court can take no jurisdiction of the cause.

The question thus presented is, we think, of great importance, but not of much difficulty. The Constitution was ordained and established by the people of the United States for themselves, for their own government, and not for the government of the individual states. Each state established a Constitution for itself, and, in that Constitution, provided such limitations and restrictions on the powers of its particular government as its judgment dictated. The people of the United States framed such a government for the United States as they supposed best adapted to their situation, and best calculated to promote their interests. The powers they conferred on this government were to be exercised by itself; and the limitations on power, if expressed in general terms, are naturally, and, we think, necessarily applicable to the government created by the instrument. They are limitations of power granted in the instrument itself; not of distinct governments, framed by different persons and for different purposes.

*So far as the matter in this chapter concerns the "due process" clause of the fourteenth amendment, the principles involved are equally applicable to the "due process" clause of the fifth amendment.

¹ This section gave jurisdiction over questions arising under the federal Constitution, laws, and treaties.

If these propositions be correct, the fifth amendment must be understood as restraining the power of the general government, not as applicable to the states. In their several Constitutions they have imposed such restrictions on their respective governments as their own wisdom suggested; such as they deemed most proper for themselves. It is a subject on which they judge exclusively, and with which others interfere no further than they are supposed to have a common interest.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error insists that the Constitution was intended to secure the people of the several states against the undue exercise of power by their respective state governments; as well as against that which might be attempted by their general government. In support of this argument he relies on the inhibitions contained in the tenth section of the first article. We think that section affords a strong if not a conclusive argument in support of the opinion already indicated by the court. The preceding section contains restrictions which are obviously intended for the exclusive purpose of restraining the exercise of power by the departments of the general government. Some of them use language applicable only to Congress; others are expressed in general terms. The third clause, for example, declares that "no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." No language can be more general; yet the demonstration is complete that it applies solely to the government of the United States. In addition to the general arguments furnished by the instrument itself, some of which have been already suggested, the succeeding section, the avowed purpose of which is to restrain state legislation, contains in terms the very prohibition. It declares that "no state shall pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law." This provision, then, of the ninth section, however comprehensive its language, contains no restriction on state legislation.

The ninth section having enumerated, in the nature of a bill of rights, the limitations intended to be imposed on the powers of the general government, the tenth proceeds to enumerate those which were to operate on the state legislatures. These restrictions are brought together in the same section, and are by express words applied to the states. "No state shall enter into any treaty," etc. Perceiving that in a Constitution framed by the people of the United States for the government of all, no limitation of the action of government on the people would apply to the state government, unless expressed in terms; the restrictions contained in the tenth section are in direct words so applied to the states.

It is worthy of remark, too, that these inhibitions generally restrain state legislation on subjects intrusted to the general government, or in which the people of all the states feel an interest. A state is forbidden to enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation. If these compacts are with foreign nations, they interfere with the treaty-making power, which is conferred entirely on the general government; if with each other, for political purposes, they can scarcely fail to interfere with the general purpose and intent of the Constitution. To grant letters of marque and reprisal, would lead directly to war; the power of declaring which is expressly given to Congress. To coin money is also the exercise of a power conferred on Congress. It would be tedious to recapitulate the several limitations on the powers of the states which are contained in this section. They will be found, generally, to restrain state legislation on subjects intrusted to the government of the Union, in which the citizens of all the states are interested. In these alone were the whole people concerned. The question of their application to states is not left to construction. It is averred in positive words.

If the original Constitution, in the ninth and tenth sections of the first article, draws this plain and marked line of discrimination between the limitations it imposes on the powers of the general government, and on those of the states; if in every inhibition intended to act on state power, words are employed which directly express that intent,—some strong reason must be assigned for departing from this safe and judicious course in framing the amendments, before that departure can be assumed. We search in vain for that reason.

Had the people of the several states, or any of them, required changes in their Constitutions; had they required additional safeguards to liberty from the apprehended encroachments of their particular governments; the remedy was in their own hands, and could have been applied by themselves. A convention could have been assembled by the discontented state, and the required improvements would have been made by itself. The unwieldy and cumbrous machinery of procuring a recommendation from two-thirds of Congress, and the assent of three-fourths of their sister states, could never have occurred to any human being as a mode of doing that which might be effected by the state itself. Had the framers of these amendments intended them to be limitations on the powers of the state governments, they would have imitated the framers of the original Constitution, and have expressed that intention. Had Congress engaged in the extraordinary occupation of improving the Constitutions of the several states by affording the people additional protection from the exercise of power by their own governments in matters which concerned themselves alone, they would have declared this purpose in plain and intelligible language.

But it is universally understood, it is a part of the history of the day, that the great revolution which established the Constitution of the United States was not effected without immense opposition. Serious fears were extensively entertained that those powers which the patriot statesmen, who then watched over the interests of our country, deemed essential to union, and to the attainment of those invaluable objects for which union was sought, might be exercised in a manner dangerous to liberty. In almost every convention by which the Constitution was adopted, amendments to guard against the abuse of power were recommended. These amendments demanded security against the apprehended encroachments of the general government, not against those of the local governments. In compliance with a sentiment thus generally expressed to quiet fears thus extensively entertained, amendments were proposed by the required majority in Congress, and adopted by the states. These amendments contain no expression indicating an intention to apply them to the state governments. This court cannot so apply them. * * *

Writ dismissed.²

SLAUGHTER-HOUSE CASES.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1873. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Louisiana. A Louisiana statute conferred upon the Crescent City Live-Stock Landing & Slaughter-House Company, a domestic corporation, the sole and exclusive right for 25 years to maintain within the parishes of Orleans, Jefferson, and St. Bernard a place for slaughtering animals to be sold for meat, and to have slaughtered therein all animals the meat of which was destined for sale in the parishes of Orleans and Jefferson. The company was to erect suitable slaughter houses and stock landings to accommodate all butchers, and was empowered to charge certain fees for the use thereof, and the animals were to be slaughtered under state inspection. The three parishes contained over 1,100 square miles and between 200,000 and 300,000 people, and the act affected

² The doctrine of the principal case as to the first ten amendments to the Constitution has been repeatedly affirmed. See Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 166, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80 (1887) and Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 174, 20 Sup. Ct. 77, 44 L. Ed. 119 (1899), citing many later cases. An earlier state case to the same effect is Murphy v. People, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 815 (1824). In People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 188, 201, 9 Am. Dec. 203 (1820), is a dictum to the contrary. See Jackson ex dem. Wood v. Wood, 2 Cow. 819 (1824), for an account of the rejection by the United States Senate of a proposed amendment restricting state action.

Counsel's error in alleging in the record that state legislation violates the due process clause of the fifth amendment, instead of the fourteenth, is fatal to the federal Supreme Court's jurisdiction on writ of error from a state court. Chapin v. Fye, 179 U. S. 127, 21 Sup. Ct. 71, 45 L. Ed. 119 (1900); Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 199 U. S. 182, 26 Sup. Ct. 41, 50 L. Ed. 143 (1905).

the business of about 1,000 persons. In several test suits the monopoly was upheld by the Louisiana courts, and writs of error were taken.]

Mr. Justice MILLER. * * * The plaintiffs in error * * * allege that the statute is a violation of the Constitution of the United States in these several particulars: * * *

That it creates an involuntary servitude forbidden by the thirteenth article of amendment;¹

That it abridges the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States;

That it denies to the plaintiffs the equal protection of the laws; and,

That it deprives them of their property without due process of law; contrary to the provisions of the first section of the fourteenth article of amendment.

This court is thus called upon for the first time to give construction to these articles.

We do not conceal from ourselves the great responsibility which this duty devolves upon us. No questions so far-reaching and pervading in their consequences, so profoundly interesting to the people of this country, and so important in their bearing upon the relations of the United States, and of the several states to each other and to the citizens of the states and of the United States, have been before this court during the official life of any of its present members. We have given every opportunity for a full hearing at the bar; we have discussed it freely and compared views among ourselves; we have taken ample time for careful deliberation, and we now propose to announce the judgments which we have formed in the construction of those articles, so far as we have found them necessary to the decision of the cases before us, and beyond that we have neither the inclination nor the right to go.

Twelve articles of amendment were added to the federal Constitution soon after the original organization of the government under it in 1789. Of these all but the last were adopted so soon afterwards as to justify the statement that they were practically contemporaneous with the adoption of the original; and the twelfth, adopted in eighteen hundred and three, was so nearly so as to have become, like all the others, historical and of another age. But within the last eight years three other articles of amendment of vast importance have been added by the voice of the people to that now venerable instrument.

The most cursory glance at these articles discloses a unity of purpose, when taken in connection with the history of the times, which cannot fail to have an important bearing on any question of doubt concerning their true meaning. Nor can such doubts, when any reasonably exist, be safely and rationally solved without a reference to that history; for in it is found the occasion and the necessity for recurring again to the great source of power in this country, the people of the states, for additional guarantees of human rights; additional powers to the federal government; additional restraints upon those of the states. Fortunately that history is fresh within the memory of us all, and its leading features, as they bear upon the matter before us, free from doubt. * * * [Here follows a brief history of the adoption of the thirteenth amendment.]

¹ The parts of the opinion dealing with the thirteenth amendment are omitted. See chapter V, ante, pp. 151-153.

The process of restoring to their proper relations with the federal government and with the other states those which had sided with the Rebellion, undertaken under the proclamation of President Johnson in 1865, and before the assembling of Congress, developed the fact that, notwithstanding the formal recognition by those states of the abolition of slavery, the condition of the slave race would, without further protection of the federal government, be almost as bad as it was before. Among the first acts of legislation adopted by several of the states in the legislative bodies which claimed to be in their normal relations with the federal government, were laws which imposed upon the colored race onerous disabilities and burdens, and curtailed their rights in the pursuit of life, liberty, and property to such an extent that their freedom was of little value, while they had lost the protection which they had received from their former owners from motives both of interest and humanity.

They were in some states forbidden to appear in the towns in any other character than menial servants. They were required to reside on and cultivate the soil without the right to purchase or own it. They were excluded from many occupations of gain, and were not permitted to give testimony in the courts in any case where a white man was a party. It was said that their lives were at the mercy of bad men, either because the laws for their protection were insufficient or were not enforced.

These circumstances, whatever of falsehood or misconception may have been mingled with their presentation, forced upon the statesmen who had conducted the federal government in safety through the crisis of the Rebellion, and who supposed that by the thirteenth article of amendment they had secured the result of their labors, the conviction that something more was necessary in the way of constitutional protection to the unfortunate race who had suffered so much. They accordingly passed through Congress the proposition for the fourteenth amendment, and they declined to treat as restored to their full participation in the government of the Union the states which had been in insurrection, until they ratified that article by a formal vote of their legislative bodies. * * * [Here is briefly stated the history of the adoption of the fifteenth amendment.]

We repeat, then, in the light of this recapitulation of events, almost too recent to be called history, but which are familiar to us all; and on the most casual examination of the language of these amendments, no one can fail to be impressed with the one pervading purpose found in them all, lying at the foundation of each, and without which none of them would have been even suggested; we mean the freedom of the slave race, the security and firm establishment of that freedom, and the protection of the newly-made freeman and citizen from the oppressions of those who had formerly exercised unlimited dominion over him. It is true that only the fifteenth amendment, in terms, mentions the negro by speaking of his color and his slavery. But it is just as true that each of the other articles was addressed to the grievances of that race, and designed to remedy them as the fifteenth.

We do not say that no one else but the negro can share in this protection. Both the language and spirit of these articles are to have their fair and just weight in any question of construction. Undoubtedly while negro slavery alone was in the mind of the Congress which proposed the thirteenth article, it forbids any other kind of slavery, now or hereafter. If Mexican peonage or the Chinese cooly labor system shall develop slavery of the Mexican or Chinese race within our territory, this amendment may safely be trusted to make it void. And so if other rights are assailed by the states which properly and necessarily fall within the protection of these articles, that protection will apply, though the party interested may not be of African descent. But what we do say, and what we wish to be understood [as saying] is, that in any fair and just construction of any section or phrase of these amendments, it is necessary to look to the purpose which we have said was the pervading spirit of them all, the evil which they were designed to remedy, and the process of continued addition to the Constitution, until that purpose was supposed to be accomplished, as far as constitutional law can accomplish it.

The first section of the fourteenth article, to which our attention is more specially invited, opens with a definition of citizenship—not only citizenship of the United States, but citizenship of the states.
* * * “All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside.” * * * That its main purpose was to establish the citizenship of the negro can admit of no doubt. * * *

The next observation is more important in view of the arguments of counsel in the present case. It is, that the distinction between citizenship of the United States and citizenship of a state is clearly recognized and established. Not only may a man be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of a state, but an important element is necessary to convert the former into the latter. He must reside within the state to make him a citizen of it, but it is only necessary that he should be born or naturalized in the United States to be a citizen of the Union.

It is quite clear, then, that there is a citizenship of the United States, and a citizenship of a state, which are distinct from each other, and which depend upon different characteristics or circumstances in the individual.

We think this distinction and its explicit recognition in this amendment of great weight in this argument, because the next paragraph of this same section, which is the one mainly relied on by the plaintiffs in error, speaks only of privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, and does not speak of those of citizens of the several states. The argument, however, in favor of the plaintiffs rests wholly on the assumption that the citizenship is the same, and the privileges and immunities guaranteed by the clause are the same.

The language is, "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." It is a little remarkable, if this clause was intended as a protection to the citizen of a state against the legislative power of his own state, that the word citizen of the state should be left out when it is so carefully used, and used in contradistinction to citizens of the United States, in the very sentence which precedes it. It is too clear for argument that the change in phraseology was adopted understandingly and with a purpose.

Of the privileges and immunities of the citizen of the United States, and of the privileges and immunities of the citizen of the state, and what they respectively are, we will presently consider; but we wish to state here that it is only the former which are placed by this clause under the protection of the federal Constitution, and that the latter, whatever they may be, are not intended to have any additional protection by this paragraph of the amendment.

If, then, there is a difference between the privileges and immunities belonging to a citizen of the United States as such, and those belonging to the citizen of the state as such, the latter must rest for their security and protection where they have heretofore rested; for they are not embraced by this paragraph of the amendment.

The first occurrence of the words "privileges and immunities" in our constitutional history, is to be found in the fourth of the Articles of the old Confederation.

It declares "that the better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different states in this Union, the free inhabitants of each of these states, paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice excepted, shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several states; and the people of each state shall have free ingress and regress to and from any other state, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce, subject to the same duties, impositions, and restrictions as the inhabitants thereof respectively."

In the Constitution of the United States, which superseded the Articles of Confederation, the corresponding provision is found in section two of the fourth article, in the following words: "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states."

There can be but little question that the purpose of both these provisions is the same, and that the privileges and immunities intended are the same in each. In the Articles of the Confederation we have some of these specifically mentioned, and enough perhaps to give some general idea of the class of civil rights meant by the phrase.

Fortunately we are not without judicial construction of this clause of the Constitution. * * * [Here follow quotations from Coryell v. Coryell, ante, p. 197, and Paul v. Virginia, ante, p. 200.]

The constitutional provision there alluded to did not create those rights, which it called privileges and immunities of citizens of the states. It threw around them in that clause no security for the citizen of the state in which they were claimed or exercised. Nor did it profess to control the power of the state governments over the rights of its own citizens.

Its sole purpose was to declare to the several states, that whatever those rights, as you grant or establish them to your own citizens, or as you limit or qualify, or impose restrictions on their exercise, the same, neither more nor less, shall be the measure of the rights of citizens of other states within your jurisdiction.

It would be the vainest show of learning to attempt to prove by citations of authority, that up to the adoption of the recent amendments, no claim or pretence was set up that those rights depended on the federal government for their existence or protection, beyond the very few express limitations which the federal Constitution imposed upon the states—such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But with the exception of these and a few other restrictions, the entire domain of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the states, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative power of the states, and without that of the federal government. Was it the purpose of the Fourteenth amendment, by the simple declaration that no state should make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned, from the states to the federal government? And where it is declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article, was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the states?

All this and more must follow, if the proposition of the plaintiffs in error be sound. For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed to be abridged by state legislation, but that body may also pass laws in advance, limiting and restricting the exercise of legislative power by the states, in their most ordinary and usual functions, as in its judgment it may think proper on all such subjects. And still further, such a construction followed by the reversal of the judgments of the Supreme Court of Louisiana in these cases, would constitute this court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the states, on the civil rights of their own citizens, with authority to nullify such as it did not approve as consistent with those rights, as they existed at the time of the adoption of this amendment. The argument, we admit, is not always the most conclusive which is drawn from the consequences urged against the adoption of a particular construction of an instrument. But when, as in the case before us, these consequences are so serious, so far-reaching and pervading, so great a departure from the structure and spirit of our institutions; when the effect is to fetter and degrade the state governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress, in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character; when in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the state and federal governments to each other and of both these governments to the people; the argument has a force that is irresistible, in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.

We are convinced that no such results were intended by the Congress which proposed these amendments, nor by the legislatures of the states which ratified them.

Having shown that the privileges and immunities relied on in the argument are those which belong to citizens of the states as such, and that they are left to the state governments for security and protection, and not by this article placed under the special care of the federal government, we may hold ourselves excused from defining the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States which no state can abridge, until some case involving those privileges may make it necessary to do so.

But lest it should be said that no such privileges and immunities are to be found if those we have been considering are excluded, we venture to suggest some which owe their existence to the federal government, its national character, its Constitution, or its laws.

One of these is well described in the case of Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 36, 18 L. Ed. 745. It is said to be the right of the citizen of this great country, protected by implied guarantees of its Constitution, "to come to the seat of government to assert any claim he may have upon that government, to transact any business he may have with it, to seek its protection, to share its offices, to engage in administering its functions. He has the right of free access to its seaports, through which all operations of foreign commerce are conducted, to the sub-treasuries, land offices, and courts of justices in the several states." And quoting from the language of Chief Justice Taney in another case, it is said "that for all the great purposes for which the federal government, was established, we are one people, with one common country, we are all citizens of the United States;" and it is, as such citizens, that their rights are supported in this court in Crandall v. Nevada.

Another privilege of a citizen of the United States is to demand the care and protection of the federal government over his life, liberty, and property when on the high seas or within the jurisdiction of a foreign government. Of this there can be no doubt, nor that the right depends upon his character as a citizen of the United States. The right to peaceably assemble and petition for redress of grievances, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, are rights of the citizen guaranteed by the federal Constitution. The right to use the navigable waters of the United States, however they may penetrate the territory of the several states, all rights secured to our citizens by treaties with foreign nations, are dependent upon citizenship of the United States, and not citizenship of a state. One of these privileges is conferred by the very article under consideration. It is that a citizen of the United States can, of his own volition, become a citizen of any state of the Union by a bona fide residence therein, with the same rights as other citizens of that state.² To these may be added the rights secured by the thirteenth and fifteenth articles of amendment, and by the other clause of the fourteenth, next to be considered.

But it is useless to pursue this branch of the inquiry, since we are of opinion that the rights claimed by these plaintiffs in error, if they have any existence, are not privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States within the meaning of the clause of the fourteenth amendment under consideration. * * * [This restraint upon the New Orleans butchers was held not to be a taking of their property without due process of law.]

"Nor shall any state deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In the light of the history of these amendments, and the pervading purpose of them, which we have already discussed, it is not difficult to give a meaning to this clause. The existence of laws in the states where the newly emancipated negroes resided, which discriminated with gross injustice and hardship against them as a class, was the evil to be remedied by this clause, and by it such laws are forbidden.

If, however, the states did not conform their laws to its requirements, then by the fifth section of the article of amendment Congress was authorized to enforce it by suitable legislation. We doubt very much whether any action of a state not directed by way of discrimination against the negroes as a class, or on account of their race, will ever be held to come within the purview of this provision.³ It is so clearly a provision for that race and that emergency, that a strong case would be necessary for its application to any other. But as it is a state that is to be dealt with, and not alone the validity of its laws, we may safely leave that matter until Congress shall have exercised its power, or some case of state oppression, by denial of equal justice in its courts, shall have claimed a decision at our hands. We find no such case in the one before us, and do not deem it necessary to go over the argument again, as it may have relation to this particular clause of the amendment.

² Other implied privileges of national citizenship are mentioned in Twinning v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 97, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97 (1908).

³ "[This] suggestion that only discrimination by a state against the negroes as a class or on account of their race was covered by the amendment as to

In the early history of the organization of the government, its statesmen seem to have divided on the line which should separate the powers of the national government from those of the state governments, and though this line has never been very well defined in public opinion, such a division has continued from that day to this.

The adoption of the first eleven amendments to the Constitution so soon after the original instrument was accepted, shows a prevailing sense of danger at that time from the federal power. And it cannot be denied that such a jealousy continued to exist with many patriotic men until the breaking out of the late Civil War. It was then discovered that the true danger to the perpetuity of the Union was in the capacity of the state organizations to combine and concentrate all the powers of the state, and of contiguous states, for a determined resistance to the general government.

Unquestionably this has given great force to the argument and added largely to the number, of those who believe in the necessity of a strong national government.

But, however pervading this sentiment, and however it may have contributed to the adoption of the amendments we have been considering, we do not see in those amendments any purpose to destroy the main features of the general system. Under the pressure of all the excited feeling growing out of the war, our statesmen have still believed that the existence of the states with powers for domestic and local government, including the regulation of civil rights—the rights of person and of property—was essential to the perfect working of our complex form of government, though they have thought proper to impose additional limitations on the states, and to confer additional power on that of the nation.

But whatever fluctuations may be seen in the history of public opinion on this subject during the period of our national existence, we think it will be found that this court, so far as its functions required, has always held with a steady and an even hand the balance between state and federal power, and we trust that such may continue the equal protection of the laws has not been affirmed by the later cases.

* * * That the primary reason for that amendment was to secure the full enjoyment of liberty to the colored race is not denied, yet it is not restricted to that purpose, and it applies to every one, white or black, that comes within its provisions."—Peckham, J., in Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 591, 593, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 452, 453, 44 L. Ed. 597 (1900).

to be the history of its relation to that subject so long as it shall have duties to perform which demand of it a construction of the Constitution, or of any of its parts.

Judgment affirmed.

[Dissenting opinions were given by FIELD, BRADLEY, and SWAYNE, JJ. CHASE, C. J., also dissented.]

MAXWELL v. DOW.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1900. 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 418, 494. 44 L. Ed. 597.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Utah. Upon an information filed against Maxwell, charging him with robbery, he was tried in Utah by a jury of eight jurors, was found guilty, and sent to prison. He applied for a writ of habeas corpus upon the ground, among others, that this procedure, though authorized by the Utah Constitution, abridged his privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States, in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution. The Utah Supreme Court denied his petition, and this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * What are the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States which no state can abridge? Do they include the right to be exempt from trial, for an infamous crime, in a state court and under state authority except upon presentment by a grand jury? And do they also include the right in all criminal prosecutions in a state court to be tried by a jury composed of twelve jurors?

That a jury composed, as at common law, of twelve jurors was intended by the sixth amendment to the federal Constitution, there can be no doubt. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 349, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061. And as the right of trial by jury in certain suits at common law is preserved by the seventh amendment, such a trial implies that there shall be an unanimous verdict of twelve jurors in all federal courts where a jury trial is held. American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 17 Sup. Ct. 618, 41 L. Ed. 1079; Springville v. Thomas, 166 U. S. 707, 17 Sup. Ct. 717, 41 L. Ed. 1172.

It would seem to be quite plain that the provision in the Utah Constitution for a jury of eight jurors in all state criminal trials, for other than capital offenses, violates the sixth amendment, provided that amendment is now to be construed as applicable to criminal prosecutions of citizens of the United States in state courts.

It is conceded that there are certain privileges or immunities possessed by a citizen of the United States, because of his citizenship, and that they cannot be abridged by any action of the states. In order to limit the powers which it was feared might be claimed or exercised by the federal government, under the provisions of the Constitution as it was when adopted, the first ten amendments to that instrument were proposed to the legislatures of the several states by the first Congress on the 25th of September, 1789. They were intended as restraints and limitations upon the powers of the general government, and were not intended to and did not have any effect upon the powers of the respective states. This has been many times decided. * * *

It is claimed, however, that since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment the effect of the former amendments has been thereby changed and greatly enlarged. It is now urged in substance that all the provisions contained in the first ten amendments, so far as they secure and recognize the fundamental rights of the individual as against the exercise of federal power, are by virtue of this amendment to be regarded as privileges or immunities of a citizen of the United States, and therefore the states cannot provide for any procedure in state courts which could not be followed in a federal court because of the limitations contained in those amendments. This was also the contention made upon the argument in the Spies Case, 123 U. S. 131, 151, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80; but in the opinion of the court therein, which was delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, the question was not decided because it was held that the case did not require its decision.

In the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394, the subject of the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, as distinguished from those of a particular state, was treated by Mr. Justice Miller in delivering the opinion of the court. * * * [This opinion, which appears ante, p. 216, is here discussed at length, and quotations are made from it and from the opinion of Washington, J., in Corfield v. Coryell, ante, p. 197.]

We have made this extended reference to the case because of its great importance, the thoroughness of the treatment of the subject, and the great ability displayed by the author of the opinion. Although his suggestion that only discrimination by a state against the negroes as a class or on account of their race was covered by the amendment as to the equal protection of the laws has not been affirmed by the later cases, yet it was but the expression of his belief as to what would be the decision of the court when a case came before it involving that point. The opinion upon the matters actually involved and maintained by the judgment in the case has never been doubted or overruled by any judgment of this court. It remains one of the leading cases upon the subject of that portion of the fourteenth amendment of which it treats.

The definition of the words "privileges and immunities," as given by Mr. Justice Washington, was adopted in substance in Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 180, 19 L. Ed. 360, and in Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 430, 20 L. Ed. 453. These rights, it is said in the Slaugh- ter-House Cases, have always been held to be the class of rights which the state governments were created to establish and secure. * * *

It was said in Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627, that the amendment did not add to the privileges and immunities of a citizen; it simply furnished an additional guaranty for the protection of such as he already had. And in Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 448, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 934, 34 L. Ed. 519, 524, it was stated by the present Chief Justice that: "The fourteenth amendment did not radically change the whole theory of the relations of the state and federal governments to each other, and of both governments to the people. The same person may be at the same time a citizen of the United States and a citizen of a state. Protection to life, liberty, and property rests primarily with the states, and the amendment furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the states upon those fundamental rights which belong to citizenship, and which the state governments were created to secure. The privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, as distinguished from the privileges and immunities of citizens of the states, are indeed protected by it; but those are privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and essential character of the national government, and granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States. United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394." * * *

In Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678, it was held that a trial by jury in suits at common law in the state courts was not a privilege or immunity belonging to a person as a citizen of the United States, and protected, therefore, by the fourteenth amendment. * * *

This case shows that the fourteenth amendment in forbidding a state to abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States does not include among them the right of trial by jury in a civil case, in a state court, although the right to such a trial in the federal courts is specially secured to all persons in the cases mentioned in the seventh amendment.

Is any one of the rights secured to the individual by the fifth or by the sixth amendment any more a privilege or immunity of a citizen of the United States than are those secured by the seventh? In none are they privileges or immunities granted and belonging to the individual as a citizen of the United States, but they are secured to all persons as against the federal government, entirely irrespective of such citizenship. As the individual does not enjoy them as a privilege of citizenship of the United States, therefore, when the fourteenth amendment prohibits the abridgement by the states of those privileges or immunities which he enjoys as such citizen, it is not correct or reasonable to say that it covers and extends to certain rights which he does not enjoy by reason of his citizenship, but simply because those rights exist in favor of all individuals as against federal governmental powers. The nature or character of the right of trial by jury is the same in a criminal prosecution as in a civil action, and in neither case does it spring from nor is it founded upon the citizenship of the individual as a citizen of the United States, and if not, then it cannot be said that in either case it is a privilege or immunity which alone belongs to him as such citizen. * * * Those are not distinctly privileges or immunities of such citizenship, where everyone has the same as against the federal government, whether citizen or not. * * *

In Re Kenna, 136 U. S. 436, 448, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519, 524, it was stated that it was not contended and could not be that the eighth amendment to the federal Constitution was intended to apply to the states. * * * In Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615, it was held that the second amendment to the Constitution, in regard to the right of the people to bear arms, is a limitation only on the power of Congress and the national government, and not of the states. * * * In O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 332, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450, 456, it was stated that as a general question it has always been ruled that the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not apply to the states. In Thorington v. Montgomery, 147 U. S. 490, 13 Sup. Ct. 394, 37 L. Ed. 252, it was said that the fifth amendment to the Constitution operates exclusively in restraint of federal power, and has no application to the states.

We have cited these cases for the purpose of showing that the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States do not necessarily include all the rights protected by the first eight amendments to the federal Constitution against the powers of the federal government. They were decided subsequently to the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, and if the particular clause of that amendment, now under consideration, had the effect claimed for it in this case, it is not too much to say that it would have been asserted and the principles applied in some of them. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

DAVIDSON v. NEW ORLEANS (1878) 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616, Mr. Justice MILLER (upholding a Louisiana special assessment for draining swamp lands):

¹ Accord: Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 93-99, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 19, 20, 53 L. Ed. 97 (1908) (right against self-incrimination) (cases); Moody, J., saying: "It is possible that some of the personal rights safeguarded by the first eight amendments against national action may also be safeguarded against state action, because a denial of them would be a denial of due process of law. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979. If this is so, it is not because these rights are enumerated in the first eight amendments, but because they are of such a nature that they are included in the conception of due process of law."

"The prohibition against depriving the citizen or subject of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law, is not new in the constitutional history of the English race. It is not new in the constitutional history of this country, and it was not new in the Constitution of the United States when it became a part of the fourteenth amendment, in the year 1866.

"The equivalent of the phrase 'due process of law,' according to Lord Coke, is found in the words 'law of the land,' in the Great Charter, in connection with the writ of habeas corpus, the trial by jury, and other guarantees of the rights of the subject against the oppression of the Crown. In the series of amendments to the Constitution of the United States, proposed and adopted immediately after the organization of the government, which were dictated by the jealousy of the states as further limitations upon the power of the federal government, it is found in the fifth, in connection with other guarantees of personal rights of the same character. Among these are protection against prosecutions for crimes, unless sanctioned by a grand jury, against being twice tried for the same offense, against the accused being compelled, in a criminal case, to testify against himself, and against taking private property for public use without just compensation.

"Most of these provisions, including the one under consideration, either in terms or in substance, have been embodied in the constitutions of the several states, and in one shape or another have been the subject of judicial construction. It must be confessed, however, that the constitutional meaning or value of the phrase 'due process of law,' remains to-day without that satisfactory precision of definition which judicial decisions have given to nearly all the other guarantees of personal rights found in the constitutions of the several states and of the United States.

"It is easy to see that when the great barons of England wrung from King John, at the point of the sword, the concession that neither their lives nor their property should be disposed of by the Crown, except as provided by the law of the land, they meant by 'law of the land' the ancient and customary laws of the English people, or laws enacted by the Parliament of which those barons were a controlling element. It was not in their minds, therefore, to protect themselves against the enactment of laws by the Parliament of England. But when, in the year of grace 1866, there is placed in the Constitution of the United States a declaration that 'no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law,' can a state make anything due process of law which, by its own legislation, it chooses to declare such? To affirm this is to hold that the prohibition to the states is of no avail, or has no application where the invasion of private rights is effected under the forms of state legislation. It seems to us that a statute which declares in terms, and without more, that the full and exclusive title of a described piece of land, which is now in A., shall be and is hereby vested in B., would, if effectual, deprive A. of his property without due process of law, within the meaning of the constitutional provision.

"A most exhaustive judicial inquiry into the meaning of the words 'due process of law,' as found in the fifth amendment, resulted in the unanimous decision of this court, that they do not necessarily imply a regular proceeding in a court of justice, or after the manner of such courts. Murray's Lessee et al. v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372. [See post, p. 262, for this case.]

"It is not a little remarkable, that while this provision has been in the Constitution of the United States, as a restraint upon the authority of the federal government, for nearly a century, and while, during all that time, the manner in which the powers of that government have been exercised has been watched with jealousy, and subjected to the most rigid criticism in all its branches, this special limitation upon its powers has rarely been invoked in the judicial forum or the more enlarged theatre of public discussion. But while it has been a part of the Constitution, as a restraint upon the power of the states, only a very few years, the docket of this court is crowded with cases in which we are asked to hold that state courts and state legislatures have deprived their own citizens of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision as found in the fourteenth amendment. In fact, it would seem, from the character of many of the cases before us, and the arguments made in them, that the clause under consideration is looked upon as a means of bringing to the test of the decision of this court the abstract opinions of every unsuccessful litigant in a state court of the justice of the decision against him, and of the merits of the legislation on which such a decision may be founded. If, therefore, it were possible to define what it is for a state to deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, in terms which would cover every exercise of power thus forbidden to the state, and exclude those which are not, no more useful construction could be furnished by this or any other court to any part of the fundamental law.

"But, apart from the imminent risk of a failure to give any definition which would be at once perspicuous, comprehensive, and satisfactory, there is wisdom, we think, in the ascertaining of the intent and application of such an important phrase in the federal Constitution, by the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded.¹ This court is, after an experience of nearly a century, still engaged in defining the obligation of contracts, the regulation of commerce, and other powers conferred on the federal government, or limitations imposed upon the states."

¹ Compare the remark of Brewer, J., dissenting, in Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 383, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 147, 45 L. Ed. 224 (1900): "I think, and I say it with all respect, that no case involving a constitutional question should be turned off on the simple declaration that upon its peculiar facts it falls on one side or the other of some undisclosed line of demarcation."

HURTADO v. CALIFORNIA (1884) 110 U. S. 516, 530-532, 535-536, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232, Mr. Justice MATTHEWS (upholding a California criminal prosecution begun by information instead of by indictment):¹

"The concessions of Magna Charta were wrung from the king as guarantees against the oppressions and usurpations of his prerogative. It did not enter into the minds of the barons to provide security against their own body or in favor of the Commons by limiting the power of Parliament; so that bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, laws declaring forfeitures of estates, and other arbitrary acts of legislation which occur so frequently in English history, were never regarded as inconsistent with the law of the land; for notwithstanding what was attributed to Lord Coke in Bonham's Case, 8 Rep. 115, 118a, the omnipotence of Parliament over the common law was absolute, even against common right and reason. The actual and practical security for English liberty against legislative tyranny was the power of a free public opinion represented by the Commons.

"In this country written constitutions were deemed essential to protect the rights and liberties of the people against the encroachments of power delegated to their governments, and the provisions of Magna Charta were incorporated into bills of rights. They were limitations upon all the powers of government, legislative as well as executive and judicial.

"It necessarily happened, therefore, that as these broad and general maxims of liberty and justice held in our system a different place and performed a different function from their position and office in English constitutional history and law, they would receive and justify a corresponding and more comprehensive interpretation. Applied in England only as guards against executive usurpation and tyranny, here they have become bulwarks also against arbitrary legislation; but, in that application, as it would be incongruous to measure and restrict them by the ancient customary English law, they must be held to guarantee, not particular forms of procedure, but the very substance of individual rights to life, liberty, and property.

"Restraints that could be fastened upon executive authority with precision and detail, might prove obstructive and injurious when imposed on the just and necessary discretion of legislative power; and, while in every instance, laws that violated express and specific injunctions and prohibitions might, without embarrassment, be judicially declared to be void, yet, any general principle or maxim, founded on the essential nature of law, as a just and reasonable expression of the public will and of government, as instituted by popular consent and for the general good, can only be applied to cases coming clearly within the scope of its spirit and purpose, and not to legislative provisions merely establishing forms and modes of attainment. * * *

¹ The remainder of the case is printed post, p. 270.

"But it is not to be supposed that these legislative powers are absolute and despotic, and that the amendment prescribing due process of law is too vague and indefinite to operate as a practical restraint. It is not every act, legislative in form, that is law. Law is something more than mere will exerted as an act of power. It must be not a special rule for a particular person or a particular case, but, in the language of Mr. Webster, in his familiar definition, 'the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial,' so 'that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society;' and thus excluding, as not due process of law, acts of attainer, bills of pains and penalties, acts of confiscation, acts reversing judgments, and acts directly transferring one man's estate to another, legislative judgments and decrees, and other similar special, partial, and arbitrary exertions of power under the forms of legislation. Arbitrary power, enforcing its edicts to the injury of the persons and property of its subjects, is not law, whether manifested as the decree of a personal monarch or of an impersonal multitude. And the limitations imposed by our constitutional law upon the action of the governments, both state and national, are essential to the preservation of public and private rights, notwithstanding the representative character of our political institutions. The enforcement of these limitations by judicial process is the device of self-governing communities to protect the rights of individuals and minorities, as well against the power of numbers as against the violence of public agents transcending the limits of lawful authority, even when acting in the name and wielding the force of the government."

ALLGEYER v. LOUISIANA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1897. 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Louisiana. A Louisiana statute forbade, under penalty of a fine of $1,000 for each offence, any person, firm, or corporation from doing any act in that state to effect, for himself or for another, insurance on property in the state, in any marine insurance company which had not complied with the laws of the state. E. Allgeyer & Co. made a contract in New York, with a New York insurance company not doing business in Louisiana, for an open policy of marine insurance for $200,000 upon future shipments of cotton.

By the terms of the policy Allgeyer was to notify the company from time to time of shipments applicable to the policy, and the sending of such notices was a condition precedent to the attaching of the risk. A separate policy was issued in New York for each risk, the premium to be there paid in cash by Allgeyer. Allgeyer & Co. sent a notice of a shipment, under this contract, and remitted the premium from New Orleans to New York. The state court held them liable to the statutory penalty therefor, and this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * In this case the only act which it is claimed was a violation of the statute in question consisted in sending the letter through the mail notifying the company of the property to be covered by the policy already delivered. We have, then, a contract which it is conceded was made outside and beyond the limits of the jurisdiction of the state of Louisiana, being made and to be performed within the state of New York, where the premiums were to be paid, and losses, if any, adjusted. The letter of notification did not constitute a contract made or entered into within the state of Louisiana. It was but the performance of an act rendered necessary by the provisions of the contract already made between the parties outside of the state. It was a mere notification that the contract already in existence would attach to that particular property. In any event, the contract was made in New York, outside of the jurisdiction of Louisiana, even though the policy was not to attach to the particular property until the notification was sent.

It is natural that the state court should have remarked that there is in this "statute an apparent interference with the liberty of defendants in restricting their rights to place insurance on property of their own whenever and in what company they desired." Such interference is not only apparent, but it is real, and we do not think that it is justified for the purpose of upholding what the state says is its policy with regard to foreign insurance companies which had not complied with the laws of the state for doing business within its limits. In this case the company did no business within the state, and the contracts were not therein made.

The supreme court of Louisiana says that the act of writing within that state the letter of notification was an act therein done to effect an insurance on property then in the state, in a marine insurance company which had not complied with its laws, and such act was therefore prohibited by the statute. As so construed, we think the statute is a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, in that it deprives the defendants of their liberty without due process of law. The statute which forbids such act does not become due process of law, because it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the Union. The "liberty" mentioned in that amendment means, not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation; and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned.

It was said by Mr. Justice Bradley, in Butchers' Union Slaughterhouse Co. v. Crescent City Live-Stock Landing Co., 111 U. S. 746, at page 762, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, at page 657, 28 L. Ed. 585, in the course of his concurring opinion in that case, that "the right to follow any of the common occupations of life is an inalienable right. It was formulated as such under the phrase 'pursuit of happiness' in the Declaration of Independence, which commenced with the fundamental proposition that 'all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' This right is a large ingredient in the civil liberty of the citizen." Again, on page 764 of 111 U. S., and on page 658 of 4 Sup. Ct. (28 L. Ed. 585), the learned justice said: "I hold that the liberty of pursuit—the right to follow any of the ordinary callings of life—is one of the privileges of a citizen of the United States." And again, on page 765 of 111 U. S., and on page 658 of 4 Sup. Ct. (28 L. Ed. 585): "But if it does not abridge the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States to prohibit him from pursuing his chosen calling, and giving to others the exclusive right of pursuing it, it certainly does deprive him (to a certain extent) of his liberty; for it takes from him the freedom of adopting and following the pursuit which he prefers, which, as already intimated, is a material part of the liberty of the citizen." It is true that these remarks were made in regard to questions of monopoly, but they well describe the rights which are covered by the word "liberty," as contained in the fourteenth amendment.

Again, in Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 684, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 995, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253, Mr. Justice Harlan, in stating the opinion of the court, said: "The main proposition advanced by the defendant is that his enjoyment upon terms of equality with all others in similar circumstances of the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, and of acquiring, holding, and selling property, is an essential part of his rights of liberty and property, as guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment. The court assents to this general proposition as embodying a sound principle of constitutional law." It was there held, however, that the legislation under consideration in that case did not violate any of the constitutional rights of the plaintiff in error.

The foregoing extracts have been made for the purpose of showing what general definitions have been given in regard to the meaning of the word "liberty" as used in the amendment, but we do not intend to hold that in no such case can the state exercise its police power. When and how far such power may be legitimately exercised with regard to these subjects must be left for determination to each case as it arises. * * *

In the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, and of acquiring, holding, and selling property, must be embraced the right to make all proper contracts in relation thereto; and although it may be conceded that this right to contract in relation to persons or property or to do business within the jurisdiction of the state may be regulated, and sometimes prohibited, when the contracts or business conflict with the policy of the state as contained in its statutes, yet the power does not and cannot extend to prohibiting a citizen from making contracts of the nature involved in this case outside of the limits and jurisdiction of the state, and which are also to be performed outside of such jurisdiction; nor can the state legally prohibit its citizens from doing such an act as writing this letter of notification, even though the property which is the subject of the insurance may at the time when such insurance attaches be within the limits of the state. The mere fact that a citizen may be within the limits of a particular state does not prevent his making a contract outside its limits while he himself remains within it. Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. 241, 22 L. Ed. 632. The contract in this case was thus made. It was a valid contract, made outside of the state, to be performed outside of the state, although the subject was property temporarily within the state. As the contract was valid in the place where made and where it was to be performed, the party to the contract, upon whom is devolved the right or duty to send the notification in order that the insurance provided for by the contract may attach to the property specified in the shipment mentioned in the notice, must have the liberty to do that act and to give that notification within the limits of the state, any prohibition of the state statute to the contrary notwithstanding. The giving of the notice is a mere collateral matter. It is not the contract itself, but is an act performed pursuant to a valid contract, which the state had no right or jurisdiction to prevent its citizens from making outside the limits of the state. * * *

Judgment reversed.¹

¹ Compare Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297 (1895), and Nutting v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 553, 22 Sup. Ct. 238, 46 L. Ed. 324 (1902), cases of acts within the state by agents of prohibited foreign insurance companies.

"The right to life includes the right of the individual to his body in its completeness and without dismemberment; the right to liberty, the right to exercise his faculties and to follow a lawful avocation for the support of life; the right of property, the right to acquire, possess, and enjoy it in any way consistent with the equal rights of others and the just exactions and demands of the state."—Andrews, J., in Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323 (1878).

"Of course the liberty of contract relating to labor includes both parties to it. The one has as much right to purchase as the other to sell labor."—Peckham, J., in Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 56, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 543 (49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133) (1905).

"The terms 'life,' 'liberty,' and 'property,' are representative terms, and

Ex parte VIRGINIA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1880. 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676.)

[Petition for a writ of habeas corpus. One Coles, a county court judge of Virginia, was indicted in the federal District Court of that state and arrested, charged with violating the statute quoted in the opinion below, in that he excluded colored persons from the jury lists made out by him, on account of their race, color, and previous condition of servitude. The state statute under which he acted made no discrimination against the colored race, but required him to prepare a jury list of inhabitants of the county that in his opinion were "well qualified to serve as jurors," "of sound judgment and free from legal exception." He and the state of Virginia both sought his discharge by habeas corpus.]

Mr. Justice STRONG. * * * [After holding the petition to be within the appellate jurisdiction of the court:]

The indictment and bench-warrant, in virtue of which the petitioner Coles has been arrested and is held in custody, have their justification,—if any they have,—in the Act of Congress of March 1, 1875, sect. 4. 18 Stat., part 3, 336. That section enacts that "no citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a intended to cover every right, to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. These terms include the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, the right freely to buy and sell as others may. Indeed, they may embrace all our liberties, personal, civil, and political, including the rights to labor, to contract, to terminate contracts, and to acquire property. None of these liberties and rights can be taken away, except by due process of law. 2 Story, Const. (5th Ed.) § 1950. The rights of life, liberty, and property embrace whatever is necessary to secure and effectuate the enjoyment of those rights. The rights of liberty and of property include the right to acquire property by labor and by contract. Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 40 N. E. 451, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315. If an owner cannot be deprived of his property without due process of law, he cannot be deprived of any of the essential attributes which belong to the right of property without due process of law. Labor is property. The laborer has the same right to sell his labor, and to contract with, reference thereto, as any other property owner. The right of property involves, as one of its essential attributes, the right not only to contract, but also to terminate contracts."—Gillespie v. People, 188 Ill. 176, 182, 183, 58 N. E. 1007, 1009, 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176 (1900), by Magruder, J.

See C. E. Shattuck in 4 Harv. L. Rev. 365 (1891), discussing the historical meaning of "liberty" in our Constitutions, as derived from various equivalent terms in Magna Carta and other English constitutional documents; and see McKechnie, Magna Carta, 436-459 (1905).

misdeemeanor, and be fined not more than $5,000." The defendant has been indicted for the misdemeanor described in this act, and it is not denied that he is now properly held in custody to answer the indictment, if the Act of Congress was warranted by the Constitution. The whole merits of the case are involved in the question, whether the act was thus warranted. [The provisions of the Constitution that relate to this subject are found in the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments.] * * *

One great purpose of these amendments was to raise the colored race from that condition of inferiority and servitude in which most of them had previously stood, into perfect equality of civil rights with all other persons within the jurisdiction of the states. They were intended to take away all possibility of oppression by law because of race or color. They were intended to be, what they really are, limitations of the power of the states and enlargements of the power of Congress. They are to some extent declaratory of rights, and though in form prohibitions, they imply immunities, such as may be protected by congressional legislation. * * * This protection and this guarantee, as the fifth section of the amendment expressly ordains, may be enforced by Congress by means of appropriate legislation.

All of the amendments derive much of their force from this latter provision. It is not said the judicial power of the general government shall extend to enforcing the prohibitions and to protecting the rights and immunities guaranteed. It is not said that branch of the government shall be authorized to declare void any action of a state in violation of the prohibitions. It is the power of Congress which has been enlarged. Congress is authorized to enforce the prohibitions by appropriate legislation.¹ Some legislation is contemplated to make the amendments fully effective. Whatever legislation is appropriate, that is, adapted to carry out the objects the amendments have in view, whatever tends to enforce submission to the prohibitions they contain, and to secure to all persons the enjoyment of perfect equality of civil rights and the equal protection of the laws against state denial or invasion, if not prohibited, is brought within the domain of congressional power. * * *

¹ "Congress, by virtue of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department of the state. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right, that is, enforce its recognition, by removing the case from a state court in which it is denied, into a federal court where it will be acknowledged."—Strong, J., in Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 318 (25 L. Ed. 667) (1880).

For the application of the present federal removal statutes to cases of denial of equal civil rights in the state courts, see Virginia v. Rives, above; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567 (1880); Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 904, 40 L. Ed. 1075 (1896). As to the stage of the controversy at which relief may be sought in the federal courts against unauthorized acts of subordinate state officers, see Home Telephone Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278, 33 Sup. Ct. 312, 57 L. Ed. — (1913), substantially overruling Barney v. New York, 193 U. S. 430, 24 Sup. Ct. 502, 48 L. Ed. 737 (1904).

We have said the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment are addressed to the states. They are, "No state shall make or enforce a law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, * * * nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." They have reference to actions of the political body denominated a state, by whatever instruments or in whatever modes that action may be taken. A state acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the state, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a state government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the state, and is clothed with the state's power, his act is that of the state. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the state has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it. * * * [Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 16 L. Ed. 717, is here distinguished, on the ground that the fourteenth amendment, § 5, expressly authorizes congressional enforcement.]

We do not perceive how holding an office under a state, and claiming to act for the state, can relieve the holder from obligation to obey the Constitution of the United States, or take away the power of Congress to punish his disobedience.

It was insisted during the argument on behalf of the petitioner that Congress cannot punish a state judge for his official acts; and it was assumed that Judge Coles, in selecting the jury as he did, was performing a judicial act. This assumption cannot be admitted. Whether the act done by him was judicial or not is to be determined by its character, and not by the character of the agent. Whether he was a county judge or not is of no importance. The duty of selecting jurors might as well have been committed to a private person as to one holding the office of a judge. It often is given to county commissioners, or supervisors, or assessors. In former times, the selection was made by the sheriff. In such cases, it surely is not a judicial act, in any such sense as is contended for here. It is merely a ministerial act, as much so as the act of a sheriff holding an execution, in determining upon what piece of property he will make a levy, or the act of a roadmaster in selecting laborers to work upon the roads. That the jurors are selected for a court makes no difference. So are court-criers, tipstaves, sheriffs, &c. Is their election or their appointment a judicial act?

But if the selection of jurors could be considered in any case a judicial act, can the act charged against the petitioner be considered such when he acted outside of his authority and in direct violation of the spirit of the state statute? That statute gave him no authority, when selecting jurors, from whom a panel might be drawn for a circuit court, to exclude all colored men merely because they were colored. Such an exclusion was not left within the limits of his discretion. It is idle, therefore, to say that the Act of Congress is unconstitutional because it inflicts penalties upon state judges for their judicial action.² It does no such thing. * * *

Petition denied.

[FIELD, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which CLIFFORD, J., concurred, upon the ground, among others, that the act of selecting state jurors was an act of judicial discretion and not subject to federal control.] *

² "The constitutional provision is, 'Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.' Certainly a state cannot be deemed guilty of a violation of this constitutional obligation simply because one of its courts, while acting within its jurisdiction, has made an erroneous decision."—Waite, C. J., in Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 191, 195, 196, 6 Sup. Ct. 1023, 1024, 30 L. Ed. 213 (1886).

³ "These prohibitions extend to all acts of the state, whether through its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities." Gray, J., in Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 45, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 1112, 38 L. Ed. 896 (1894) (improper judicial action), approved in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 233-235, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979 (1897).

"The state board of equalization is one of the instrumentalities provided by the state for the purpose of raising the public revenue by way of taxation. * * * Acting under the Constitution and laws of the state, the board therefore represents the state, and its action is the action of the state. The provisions of the fourteenth amendment are not confined to the action of the state through its legislature, or through the executive or judicial authority. Those provisions relate to and cover all the instrumentalities by which the state acts; and so it has been held that whoever, by virtue of public position under a state government, deprives another of any right protected by that amendment against deprivation by the state, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name of the state and for the state, and is clothed with the state's powers, his act is that of the state."—Peckham, J., in Raymond v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 35, 36, 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 12, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757 (1907).

That the state officer is acting without actual state authority, or even in obvious violation of his authority, does not prevent the application of the amendment. See Yick Wo v. Hopkins, post, p. 383, and Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 390, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 1051, 38 L. Ed. 1014 (1894), Brewer, J., saying: "Neither will the constitutionality of the statute, if that be conceded, avail to oust the federal court of jurisdiction. A valid law may be wrongfully administered by officers of the state, and so as to make such administration an illegal burden and exaction upon the individual."

In Home Telephone Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278, 287, 33 Sup. Ct. 312, 314, 57 L. Ed. — (1913), White, C. J., said (answering a contention to the contrary): "The proposition relied upon presupposes that the terms of the fourteenth amendment reach only acts done by state officers which are within the scope of the power conferred by the state. The proposition, hence, applies to the prohibitions of the amendment the law of principal and agent governing contracts between individuals, and consequently assumes that no act done by an officer of a state is within the reach of the amendment unless such act can be held to be the act of the state by the application of such law

CIVIL RIGHTS CASES.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1883. 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835.)

[Writs of error to federal Circuit Courts and certificates of division of opinion among the judges below in a number of cases involving the constitutionality of the act of Congress known as the Civil Rights Act. Various colored persons had been denied by the proprietors of hotels, theaters, and railway companies the full enjoyment of the accommodations thereof, for reasons other than those excepted by said statute, and those proprietors had been indicted or sued for the penalty prescribed by the act. The act provided (see note below).¹]

Mr. Justice BRADLEY. * * * Are these sections constitutional? The first section, which is the principal one, cannot be fairly understood without attending to the last clause, which qualifies the preceding part. The essence of the law is, not to declare broadly that all persons shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances, and theaters; but that such enjoyment shall not be subject to any condiof agency. In other words, the proposition is that the amendment deals only with the acts of state officers within the strict scope of the public powers possessed by them, and does not include an abuse of power by an officer as the result of a wrong done in excess of the power delegated. Here again the settled construction of the amendment is that it presupposes the possibility of an abuse by a state officer or representative of the powers possessed, and deals with such a contingency. It provides, therefore, for a case where one who is in possession of state power uses that power to the doing of the wrongs which the amendment forbids, even although the consummation of the wrong may not be within the powers possessed, if the commission of the wrong itself is rendered possible or is efficiently aided by the state authority lodged in the wrongdoer. That is to say, the theory of the amendment is that where an officer or other representative of a state, in the exercise of the authority with which he is clothed, misuses the power possessed to do a wrong forbidden by the amendment, inquiry concerning whether the state has authorized the wrong is irrelevant, and the federal judicial power is competent to afford redress for the wrong by dealing with the officer and the result of his exertion of power."

The fourteenth amendment is not violated, however, merely because the acts of a state agency are illegal under the existing laws or Constitution of the state, if the state could authorize or ratify them without violation of the amendment. Missouri ex rel. Hill v. Dockery, 191 U. S. 165, 171, 24 Sup. Ct. 52, 48 L. Ed. 133 (1903); Owensboro Waterworks Co. v. Owensboro, 200 U. S. 38, 45-47, 26 Sup. Ct. 249, 50 L. Ed. 361 (1906).

¹ "Section 1. That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theaters, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude.

"Sec. 2. That any person who shall violate the foregoing section by denying to any citizen, except for reasons by law applicable to citizens of every race and color, and regardless of any previous condition of servitude, the full enjoyment of any of the" aforesaid accommodations, etc., shall for each offence forfeit the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved and be guilty of a misdemeanor, these remedies being enforceable in the alternative.

tions applicable only to citizens of a particular race or color, or who had been in a previous condition of servitude. In other words, it is the purpose of the law to declare that, in the enjoyment of the accommodations and privileges of inns, public conveyances, theaters, and other places of public amusement, no distinction shall be made between citizens of different race or color, or between those who have, and those who have not, been slaves. Its effect is to declare that in all inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement, colored citizens, whether formerly slaves or not, and citizens of other races, shall have the same accommodations and privileges in all inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement, as are enjoyed by white citizens; and vice versa. The second section makes it a penal offense in any person to deny to any citizen of any race or color, regardless of previous servitude, any of the accommodations or privileges mentioned in the first section.

Has congress constitutional power to make such a law? Of course, no one will contend that the power to pass it was contained in the Constitution before the adoption of the last three amendments. The power is sought, first, in the fourteenth amendment, and the views and arguments of distinguished senators, advanced while the law was under consideration, claiming authority to pass it by virtue of that amendment, are the principal arguments adduced in favor of the power. We have carefully considered those arguments, as was due to the eminent ability of those who put them forward, and have felt, in all its force, the weight of authority which always invests a law that congress deems itself competent to pass. But the responsibility of an independent judgment is now thrown upon this court; and we are bound to exercise it according to the best lights we have.

The first section of the fourteenth amendment,—which is the one relied on,—after declaring who shall be citizens of the United States, and of the several states, is prohibitory in its character, and prohibitory upon the states. It declares that “no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.” It is state action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject-matter of the amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all state legislation, and state action of every kind, which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the laws. It not only does this, but, in order that the national will, thus declared, may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the amendment invests congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation. To enforce what? To enforce the prohibition. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited state law and state acts, and thus to render them effectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power conferred upon congress, and this is the whole of it. It does not invest congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of state legislation; but to provide modes of relief against state legislation, or state action, of the kind referred to. It does not authorize congress to create a code of municipal law for the regulation of private rights; but to provide modes of redress against the operation of state laws, and the action of state officers, executive or judicial, when these are subversive of the fundamental rights specified in the amendment. Positive rights and privileges are undoubtedly secured by the fourteenth amendment; but they are secured by way of prohibition against state laws and state proceedings affecting those rights and privileges, and by power given to congress to legislate for the purpose of carrying such prohibition into effect; and such legislation must necessarily be predicated upon such supposed state laws or state proceedings, and be directed to the correction of their operation and effect. A quite full discussion of this aspect of the amendment may be found in U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588, Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667, and Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676.

An apt illustration of this distinction may be found in some of the provisions of the original Constitution. Take the subject of contracts, for example. The Constitution prohibited the states from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. This did not give to congress power to provide laws for the general enforcement of contracts; nor power to invest the courts of the United States with jurisdiction over contracts, so as to enable parties to sue upon them in those courts. It did, however, give the power to provide remedies by which the impairment of contracts by state legislation might be counteracted and corrected; and this power was exercised. The remedy which congress actually provided was that contained in the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act of 1789 [1 Stat. 85], giving to the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction by writ of error to review the final decisions of state courts whenever they should sustain the validity of a state statute or authority, alleged to be repugnant to the Constitution or laws of the United States. By this means, if a state law was passed impairing the obligation of a contract, and the state tribunals sustained the validity of the law, the mischief could be corrected in this court. The legislation of congress, and the proceedings provided for under it, were corrective in their character. No attempt was made to draw into the United States courts the litigation of contracts generally, and no such attempt would have been sustained. We do not say that the remedy provided was the only one that might have been provided in that case. Probably congress had power to pass a law giving to the courts of the United States direct jurisdiction over contracts alleged to be impaired by a state law; and, under the broad provisions of the act of March 3, 1875 [18 Stat. 470, c. 137], giving to the circuit courts jurisdiction of all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, it is possible that such jurisdiction now exists. But under that or any other law, it must appear, as well by allegation as proof at the trial, that the Constitution had been violated by the action of the state legislature. Some obnoxious state law passed, or that might be passed, is necessary to be assumed in order to lay the foundation of any federal remedy in the case, and for the very sufficient reason that the constitutional prohibition is against state laws impairing the obligation of contracts.

And so in the present case, until some state law has been passed, or some state action through its officers or agents has been taken, adverse to the rights of citizens sought to be protected by the fourteenth amendment, no legislation of the United States under said amendment, nor any proceeding under such legislation, can be called into activity, for the prohibitions of the amendment are against state laws and acts done under state authority. Of course, legislation may and should be provided in advance to meet the exigency when it arises, but it should be adapted to the mischief and wrong which the amendment was intended to provide against; and that is, state laws or state action of some kind adverse to the rights of the citizen secured by the amendment. Such legislation cannot properly cover the whole domain of rights appertaining to life, liberty, and property, defining them and providing for their vindication. That would be to establish a code of municipal law regulative of all private rights between man and man in society. It would be to make congress take the place of the state legislatures and to supersede them. It is absurd to affirm that, because the rights of life, liberty, and property (which include all civil rights that men have) are by the amendment sought to be protected against invasion on the part of the state without due process of law, congress may, therefore, provide due process of law for their vindication in every case; and that, because the denial by a state to any persons of the equal protection of the laws is prohibited by the amendment, therefore congress may establish laws for their equal protection. In fine, the legislation which congress is authorized to adopt in this behalf is not general legislation upon the rights of the citizen, but corrective legislation; that is, such as may be necessary and proper for counteracting such laws as the states may adopt or enforce, and which by the amendment they are prohibited from making or enforcing, or such acts and proceedings as the states may commit or take, and which by the amendment they are prohibited from committing or taking. It is not necessary for us to state, if we could, what legislation would be proper for congress to adopt. It is sufficient for us to examine whether the law in question is of that character.

An inspection of the law shows that it makes no reference whatever to any supposed or apprehended violation of the fourteenth amendment on the part of the states. It is not predicated on any such view. It proceeds ex directo to declare that certain acts committed by individuals shall be deemed offenses, and shall be prosecuted and punished by proceedings in the courts of the United States. It does not profess to be corrective of any constitutional wrong committed by the states; it does not make its operation to depend upon any such wrong committed. It applies equally to cases arising in states which have the justest laws respecting the personal rights of citizens, and whose authorities are every ready to enforce such laws as to those which arise in states that may have violated the prohibition of the amendment. In other words, it steps into the domain of local jurisprudence, and lays down rules for the conduct of individuals in society towards each other, and imposes sanctions for the enforcement of those rules, without referring in any manner to any supposed action of the state or its authorities.

If this legislation is appropriate for enforcing the prohibitions of the amendment, it is difficult to see where it is to stop. Why may not congress, with equal show of authority, enact a code of laws for the enforcement and vindication of all rights of life, liberty, and property? If it is supposable that the states may deprive persons of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, (and the amendment itself does suppose this,) why should not congress proceed at once to prescribe due process of law for the protection of every one of these fundamental rights, in every possible case, as well as to prescribe equal privileges in inns, public conveyances, and theaters. The truth is that the implication of a power to legislate in this manner is based upon the assumption that if the states are forbidden to legislate or act in a particular way on a particular subject, and power is conferred upon congress to enforce the prohibition, this gives congress power to legislate generally upon that subject, and not merely power to provide modes of redress against such state legislation or action. The assumption is certainly unsound. It is repugnant to the tenth amendment of the Constitution, which declares that powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively or to the people.

We have not overlooked the fact that the fourth section of the act now under consideration has been held by this court to be constitutional. That section declares "that no citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than five thousand dollars." In Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676, it was held that an indictment against a state officer under this section for excluding persons of color from the jury list is sustainable. But a moment's attention to its terms will show that the section is entirely corrective in its character. Disqualifications for service on juries are only created by the law, and the first part of the section is aimed at certain disqualifying laws, namely, those which make mere race or color a disqualification; and the second clause is directed against those who, assuming to use the authority of the state government, carry into effect such a rule of disqualification. In the Virginia case, the state, through its officer, enforced a rule of disqualification which the law was intended to abrogate and counteract. Whether the statute-book of the state actually laid down any such rule of disqualification or not, the state, through its officer, enforced such a rule; and it is against such state action, through its officers and agents, that the last clause of the section is directed. This aspect of the law was deemed sufficient to divest it of any unconstitutional character, and makes it differ widely from the first and second sections of the same act which we are now considering. * * *

[After distinguishing the so-called "Civil Rights Bill" of 1866 and 1868 (14 Stat. 27; 16 Stat. 140), which made guilty of a misdemeanor any person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation or custom, subjected any inhabitant of a state or territory to the deprivation of any of certain enumerated important civil rights:] The civil rights bill here referred to is analogous in its character to what a law would have been under the original Constitution, declaring that the validity of contracts should not be impaired, and that if any person bound by a contract should refuse to comply with it under color or pretense that it had been rendered void or invalid by a state law, he should be liable to an action upon it in the courts of the United States, with the addition of a penalty for setting up such an unjust and unconstitutional defense.

In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against state aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by state authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the state, or not done under state authority, his rights remain in full force, and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the state for redress. An individual cannot deprive a man of his right to vote, to hold property, to buy and sell, to sue in the courts, or to be a witness or a juror; he may, by force or fraud, interfere with the enjoyment of the right in a particular case; he may commit an assault against the person, or commit murder, or use ruffian violence at the polls, or slander the good name of a fellow-citizen; but unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of state law or state authority, he cannot destroy or injure the right; he will only render himself amenable to satisfaction or punishment; and amenable therefor to the laws of the state where the wrongful acts are committed. Hence, in all those cases where the Constitution seeks to protect the rights of the citizen against discriminative and unjust laws of the state by prohibiting such laws, it is not individual offenses, but abrogation and denial of rights, which it denounces, and for which it clothes the congress with power to provide a remedy. This abrogation and denial of rights, for which the states alone were or could be responsible, was the great seminal and fundamental wrong which was intended to be remedied. And the remedy to be provided must necessarily be predicated upon that wrong. It must assume that in the cases provided for, the evil or wrong actually committed rests upon some state law or state authority for its excuse and perpetration.

Of course, these remarks do not apply to those cases in which congress is clothed with direct and plenary powers of legislation over the whole subject, accompanied with an express or implied denial of such power to the states, as in the regulation of commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes, the coining of money, the establishment of post-offices and post-roads, the declaring of war, etc. In these cases congress has power to pass laws for regulating the subjects specified, in every detail, and the conduct and transactions of individuals in respect thereof. But where a subject is not submitted to the general legislative power of congress, but is only submitted thereto for the purpose of rendering effective some prohibition against particular state legislation or state action in reference to that subject, the power given is limited by its object, and any legislation by congress in the matter must necessarily be corrective in its character, adapted to counteract and redress the operation of such prohibited state laws or proceedings of state officers.

If the principles of interpretation which we have laid down are correct, as we deem them to be,—and they are in accord with the principles laid down in the cases before referred to, as well as in the recent case of U. S. v. Harris [106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290],—it is clear that the law in question cannot be sustained by any grant of legislative power made to congress by the fourteenth amendment. That amendment prohibits the states from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws, and declares that congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of the amendment. The law in question, without any reference to adverse state legislation on the subject, declares that all persons shall be entitled to equal accommodations and privileges of inns, public conveyances, and places of public amusement, and imposes a penalty upon any individual who shall deny to any citizen such equal accommodations and privileges. This is not corrective legislation; it is primary and direct; it takes immediate and absolute possession of the subject of the right of admission to inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement. It supersedes and displaces state legislation on the same subject, or only allows it permissive force. It ignores such legislation, and assumes that the matter is one that belongs to the domain of national regulation. Whether it would not have been a more effective protection of the rights of citizens to have clothed congress with plenary power over the whole subject, is not now the question. What we have to decide is, whether such plenary power has been conferred upon congress by the fourteenth amendment, and, in our judgment, it has not. * * * [Portions of the opinion below this point, dealing with the thirteenth amendment, are omitted. See Chapter V, supra.]

We must not forget that the province and scope of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments are different: the former simply abolished slavery: the latter prohibited the states from abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, from depriving them of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and from denying to any the equal protection of the laws. The amendments are different, and the powers of congress under them are different. What congress has power to do under one, it may not have power to do under the other. Under the thirteenth amendment, it has only to do with slavery and its incidents. Under the fourteenth amendment, it has power to counteract and render nugatory all state laws and proceedings which have the effect to abridge any of the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; or to deprive them of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or to deny to any of them the equal protection of the laws. Under the thirteenth amendment the legislation, so far as necessary or proper to eradicate all forms and incidents of slavery and involuntary servitude, may be direct and primary, operating upon the acts of individuals, whether sanctioned by state legislation or not; under the fourteenth, as we have already shown, it must necessarily be, and can only be, corrective in its character, addressed to counteract and afford relief against state regulations or proceedings. * * *

Innkeepers and public carriers, by the laws of all the states, so far as we are aware, are bound, to the extent of their facilities, to furnish proper accommodation to all unobjectionable persons who in good faith apply for them. If the laws themselves make any unjust discrimination, amenable to the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment, congress has full power to afford a remedy under that amendment and in accordance with it.

When a man has emerged from slavery, and by the aid of beneficent legislation has shaken off the inseparable concomitants of that state, there must be some stage in the progress of his elevation when he takes the rank of a mere citizen, and ceases to be the special favorite of the laws, and when his rights as a citizen, or a man, are to be protected in the ordinary modes by which other men's rights are protected. * * *

On the whole, we are of opinion that no countenance of authority for the passage of the law in question can be found in either the thirteenth or fourteenth amendment of the Constitution; and no other ground of authority for its passage being suggested, it must necessarily be declared void, at least so far as its operation in the several states is concerned.²

Judgment accordingly.³

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

SECTION 2.—APPLICATION TO CORPORATIONS

COUNTY OF SAN MATEO v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (1882) 13 Fed. 722, 743, 744, 746, 747, Mr. Justice FIELD (holding a California tax upon the property of a railroad corporation invalid, both because valued in an improperly discriminatory manner, and for lack of due process of law under the fourteenth amendment, in failing to afford proper notice and hearing):

"Is the defendant, being a corporation, a person within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, so as to be entitled, with respect to its property, to the equal protection of the laws? * * * Private corporations are, it is true, artificial persons, but with the exception of a sole corporation, with which we are not concerned, they consist of aggregations of individuals united for some legitimate busi-

² See Butts v. Mercantile Transp. Co., 230 U. S. 126, 33 Sup. Ct. 964, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (act also invalid in places under federal jurisdiction outside of states because of inseparability of provisions of act).

³ Accord: Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 14, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65 (1906) (semble). So as to fifteenth amendment, James v. Bowman, 190 U. S. 127, 23 Sup. Ct. 678, 49 L. Ed. 979 (1903) (conspiracy of individuals to bribe negroes not to vote); and as to interstate privileges and immunities clause (Const. art. IV, § 2), United States v. Morris (D. C.) 125 Fed. 322 (1903). Compare Ex parte Higgins (C. C.) 134 Fed. 404 (1904), and United States v. Powell (C. C.) 151 Fed. 648 (1907); one suggesting and the other denying that the act of private individuals in lynching a prisoner to prevent a state from affording him due process of law is punishable by the United States under the fourteenth amendment. See, also, United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290 (1883). As to when the lynching of a state prisoner may be contempt of a federal court, see United States v. Shipp, 203 U. S. 563, 27 Sup. Ct. 165, 51 L. Ed. 319, 8 Ann. Cas. 265 (1906); Id., 214 U. S. 386, 29 Sup. Ct. 637, 53 L. Ed. 1041 (1909); Id., 215 U. S. 581, 30 Sup. Ct. 397, 54 L. Ed. 337 (1909).

A state may alter its law of public callings so as to permit individuals engaged therein to refuse certain kinds of service to any or all persons. State v. Lasater, 9 Baxt. (68 Tenn.) 584 (1877); Allen v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 191 U. S. 171, 182-183, 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 48 L. Ed. 134 (1903); McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 186 Fed. 966, 109 C. C. A. 110 (1911).

ness. In this state they are formed under general laws; and the Civil Code provides that they 'may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves.' Any five or more persons may by voluntary association form themselves into a corporation. And, as a matter of fact, nearly all enterprises in this state, requiring for their execution an expenditure of large capital, are undertaken by corporations. They engage in commerce; they build and sail ships; they cover our navigable streams with steamers; they construct houses; they bring the products of earth and sea to market; they light our streets and buildings; they open and work mines; they carry water into our cities; they build railroads, and cross mountains and deserts with them; they erect churches, colleges, lyceums, and theaters; they set up manufactories, and keep the spindle and shuttle in motion; they establish banks for savings; they insure against accidents on land and sea; they give policies on life; they make money exchanges with all parts of the world; they publish newspapers and books, and send news by lightning across the continent and under the ocean. Indeed, there is nothing which is lawful to be done to feed and clothe our people, to beautify and adorn their dwellings, to relieve the sick, to help the needy, and to enrich and ennoble humanity, which is not to a great extent done through the instrumentalities of corporations. There are over 500 corporations in this state; there are 30,000 in the United States, and the aggregate value of their property is several thousand millions. It would be a most singular result if a constitutional provision intended for the protection of every person against partial and discriminating legislation by the states, should cease to exert such protection the moment the person becomes a member of a corporation. We cannot accept such a conclusion. On the contrary, we think that it is well established by numerous adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the several states, that whenever a provision of the Constitution, or of a law, guarantees to persons the enjoyment of property, or affords to them means for its protection, or prohibits legislation injuriously affecting it, the benefits of the provision extend to corporations, and that the courts will always look beyond the name of the artificial being to the individuals whom it represents.¹

"The fifth amendment to the Constitution declares that 'no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be put twice in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.'

¹ In Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 118 U. S. 394, 396, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 118 (1886), Walte, C. J., said: "The court does not wish to hear argument on the question whether the provision in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which forbids a state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, applies to these corporations. We are all of opinion that it does." This is the earliest judicial statement to this effect by the federal Supreme Court. See, also, Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 154, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666 (1897).

"From the nature of the prohibitions in this amendment it would seem, with the exception of the last one, as though they could apply only to natural persons. No others can be witnesses; no others can be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb, or compelled to be witnesses against themselves;² and therefore it might be said with much force that the word 'person,' there used in connection with the prohibition against the deprivation of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, is in like manner limited to a natural person. But such has not been the construction of the courts. A similar provision is found in nearly all of the state Constitutions; and everywhere, and at all times, and in all courts, it has been held, either by tacit assent or express adjudication, to extend, so far as their property is concerned, to corporations.³ And this has been because the property of a corporation is in fact the property of the corporators. To deprive the corporation of its property, or to burden it, is, in fact, to deprive the corporators of their property or to lessen its value. Their interest, undivided though it be, and constituting only a right during the continuance of the corporation to participate in its dividends, and on its dissolution to receive a proportionate share of its assets, has an appreciable value, and is property in a commercial sense, and whatever affects the property of the corporation necessarily affects the commercial value of their interests. If, for example, to take the illustration given by counsel, a corporation created for banking purposes acquires land, notes, stocks, bonds, and money, no stockholder can claim that he owns any particular item of this property, but he owns an interest in the whole of it which the courts will protect against unlawful seizure or appropriation by others, and on the dissolution of the company he will receive a proportionate share of its assets. Now, if a statute of the state takes the entire property, who suffers loss by the legislation? Whose property is taken? Certainly, the corporation is deprived of its property; but at the same time, in every just sense of the constitutional guaranty, corporators are also deprived of their property.

"The prohibition against the deprivation of life and liberty in the same clause of the fifth amendment does not apply to corporations,⁴ because, as stated by counsel, the lives and liberties of the individual corporators are not the life and liberty of the corporation."

² Accord: Wilson v. United States, ante, p. 193, note. See, also, Hale v. Henkel, ante, p. 184.

³ "It is now settled that corporations are persons within the meaning of the constitutional provisions forbidding the deprivation of property without due process of law, as well as a denial of the equal protection of the laws." —Harlan, J., in Covington & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Sanford, 164 U. S. 578, 592, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 203, 41 L. Ed. 560 (1896) (citing cases).

PEMBINA CONSOL. SILVER MIN. & MILL. CO. v. PENNSYLVANIA (1888) 125 U. S. 181, 188-190, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650, Mr. Justice FIELD (upholding a Pennsylvania statute requiring an annual license fee from foreign corporations not investing or using their capital in the state):

"3. The application of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution to the statute imposing the license tax in question is not more apparent than the application of the clause of the Constitution [as] to the rights of citizens of one state to the privileges and immunities of citizens in other states. The inhibition of the amendment that no state shall deprive any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws was designed to prevent any person or class of persons from being singled out as a special subject for discriminating and hostile legislation. Under the designation of person there is no doubt that a private corporation is included. Such corporations are merely associations of individuals united for a special purpose, and permitted to do business under a particular name, and have a succession of members without dissolution. As said by Chief Justice Marshall, 'The great object of a corporation is to bestow the character and properties of individuality on a collective and changing body of men.' Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 562 [7 L. Ed. 939]. The equal protection of the laws which these bodies may claim is only such as is accorded to similar associations within the jurisdiction of the state. The plaintiff in error is not a corporation within the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania. The office it hires is within such jurisdiction, and on condition that it pays the required license tax it can claim the same protection in the use of the office that any other corporation having a similar office may claim. It would then have the equal protection of the law so far as it had anything within the jurisdiction of the state, and the constitutional amendment requires nothing more. The state is not prohibited from discriminating in the privileges it may grant to foreign corporations as a condition of their doing business or hiring offices within its limits, provided always such discrimination does not interfere with any transaction by such corporations of interstate or foreign commerce. It is not every corporation, lawful in the state of its creation, that other states may be willing to admit within their jurisdiction or consent that it have offices in them; such, for example, as a corporation for lotteries. And even where the business of a foreign corporation is not unlawful in other states the latter may wish to limit the number of such corporations, or to subject their business to such control as would be in accordance with the policy governing domestic corporations of a similar character. The states may, therefore, require for the admission within their limits of the corporations of other states, or of any number of them, such conditions as they may choose, without acting in conflict with the concluding provision of the first section of the fourteenth amendment. * * *

⁴ "The liberty guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment against deprivation without due process of law is the liberty of natural, not artificial, persons. Northwestern Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243 [27 Sup. Ct. 126, 51 L. Ed. 168, 7 Ann. Cas. 1104]."—Harlan, J., in Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 363, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 386, 51 L. Ed. 520 (1907).

"The only limitation upon this power of the state to exclude a foreign corporation from doing business within its limits, or hiring offices for that purpose, or to exact conditions, for allowing the corporation to do business or hire offices there, arises where the corporation is in the employ of the federal government, or where its business is strictly commerce, interstate or foreign. The control of such commerce, being in the federal government, is not to be restricted by state authority."

[BRADLEY, J., took no part in the decision.]

PHILADELPHIA FIRE ASS'N v. NEW YORK (1886) 119 U. S. 110, 119, 120, 7 Sup. Ct. 108, 30 L. Ed. 342, Mr. Justice BLATCHFORD (upholding the imposition by New York upon a Pennsylvania corporation of a discriminatory annual license fee for the privilege of continuing to do business in the state, in retaliation for the imposition of like taxes of like amount by Pennsylvania upon foreign corporations doing business there):

"This Pennsylvania corporation came into the state of New York to do business, by the consent of the state, under this act of 1853, with a license granted for a year, and has received such license annually, to run for a year. It is within the state for any given year under such license, and subject to the conditions prescribed by statute. The state, having the power to exclude entirely, has the power to change the conditions of admission at any time for the future, and to impose as a condition the payment of a new tax, or a further tax, as a license fee. If it imposes such license fee as a prerequisite for the future, the foreign corporation, until it pays such license fee, is not admitted within the state, or within its jurisdiction. It is outside, at the threshold, seeking admission, with consent not yet given. The act of 1865 had been passed when the corporation first established an agency in the state. The amendment of 1875 changed the act of 1865 only by giving to the superintendent the power of remitting the fees and charges required to be collected by then existing laws. Therefore the corporation was at all times after 1872 subject, as a prerequisite to its power to do business in New York, to the same license fee its own state might thereafter impose on New York companies doing business in Pennsylvania. By going into the state of New York in 1872, it assented to such prerequisite as a condition of its admission within the jurisdiction of New York. It could not be of right within such jurisdiction until it should receive the consent of the state to its entrance therein under the new provisions, and such consent could not be given until the tax, as a license fee for the future should be paid."

[HARLAN, J., dissented.]

BLAKE v. McCLUNG (1898) 172 U. S. 239, 260, 261, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432, Mr. Justice HARLAN (upholding a Tennessee statute giving a preference to claims of resident creditors over those of a foreign corporation in the distribution of the Tennessee assets of an insolvent foreign corporation):

"It is equally clear that the Virginia corporation cannot rely upon the clause declaring that no state shall 'deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.' That prohibition manifestly relates only to the denial by the state of equal protection to persons 'within its jurisdiction.' Observe that the prohibition against the deprivation of property without due process of law is not qualified by the words 'within its jurisdiction,' while those words are found in the succeeding clause relating to the equal protection of the laws. The court cannot assume that those words were inserted without any object, nor is it at liberty to eliminate them from the Constitution, and to interpret the clause in question as if they were not to be found in that instrument. Without attempting to state what is the full import of the words, 'within its jurisdiction,' it is safe to say that a corporation not created by Tennessee, nor doing business there under conditions that subjected it to process issuing from the courts of Tennessee at the instance of suitors, is not, under the above clause of the fourteenth amendment, within the jurisdiction of that state.¹ Certainly, when the statute in question was enacted, the Virginia corporation was not within the jurisdiction of Tennessee. So far as the record discloses, its claim against the Embreeville Company was on account of coke sold and shipped from Virginia to the latter corporation at its place of business in Tennessee. It does not appear to have been doing business in Tennessee under the statute here involved, or under any statute that would bring it directly under the jurisdiction of the courts of Tennessee by service of process on its officers or agents. Nor do we think it came within the jurisdiction of Tennessee, within the meaning of the amendment, simply by presenting its claim in the state court, and thereby becoming a party to this cause. Under any other interpretation, the fourteenth amendment would be given a scope not contemplated by its framers or by the people, nor justified by its language. We adjudge that the statute, so far as it subordinates the claims of private business corporations not within the jurisdiction of the state of Tennessee (although such private corporations may be creditors of a corporation doing business in the state under the authority of that statute) to the claims against the latter corporation of creditors residing in Tennessee, is not a denial of the 'equal protection of the laws' secured by the fourteenth amendment to persons within the jurisdiction of the state, however unjust such a regulation may be deemed."²

¹ As to what constitutes "doing business" within a state, so as to subject a corporation to the service of process there, see the citations and references in 24 L. R. A. 295-297; 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693; 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834; 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142; and International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103 (1910).

[FULLER, C. J., and BREWER, J., dissented upon other grounds.]

SECURITY MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. PREWITT (1906) 202 U. S. 246, 248, 249, 252, 256-258, 26 Sup. Ct. 619, 50 L. Ed. 1013, 6 Ann. Cas. 317, Mr. Justice PECKHAM (upholding a Kentucky statute authorizing yearly permits to be granted to foreign insurance companies to do business in the state, and making it the duty of the commissioner of insurance at once to revoke such permit to any company that removed to a federal court or instituted therein any suit between it and citizens of Kentucky. The insurance company asked an injunction against such revocation of its permit):

"The matter to be now determined is whether a state has the right to provide that if a foreign insurance company shall remove a case to the federal court, which has been commenced in a state court, the license of such company to do business within the state shall be thereupon revoked. * * * A state has the right to prohibit a foreign corporation from doing business within its borders, unless such prohibition is so conditioned as to violate some provision of the federal Constitution. * * * Having the power to prevent a foreign insurance company from doing business at all within the state, we think the state can enact a statute such as is above set forth. The question is, in our opinion, settled by the decisions of this court. * * * [Here follow statements of Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365, and Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148.]

"In these two cases this court decided that any agreement made by a foreign insurance company not to remove a cause to the federal court was void, whether made pursuant to a statute of the state providing for such agreement, or in the absence of such statute; but that the state, having power to exclude altogether a foreign insurance company from doing business within the state, had power to enact a statute which, in addition to providing for the agreement mentioned, also provided that if the company did remove a case from the state to a federal court, its right to do business within the state should cease, and its permit should be revoked. It was held there was a distinction between the two propositions, and one might be held void and the other not. * * *

² See, also, Paul v. Virginia, ante, p. 200. A non-resident individual mortgagee of land in Tennessee is likewise not "within its jurisdiction," as against discriminating legislation by that state. Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 20 Sup. Ct. 935, 44 L. Ed. 1072 (1900).

[Here follows a statement of Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 7 Sup. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 915, holding invalid an Iowa statute requiring, as a condition precedent to a permit to do business in the state, that a foreign corporation agree not to remove into a federal court suit brought against it in the state courts. A railroad had not taken out this permit and its agents were held not punishable by the state for acting without such a permit.]

"The most that can be contended for is that the Barron Case holds that where the statute exacts a stipulation in advance, as a condition of granting a permit, and the statute is not separable into parts, the whole statute is void, and a provision for withdrawing the permit, if a case is removed, is not saved. That principle, as we have said, does not touch this case, as there is no exaction of a stipulation at any time.

"It has not been decided that a statute which has no requirement for a stipulation or agreement not to remove is void if there be simply a provision therein for a revocation of the permit, such as is contained in the statute under review.

"As a state has power to refuse permission to a foreign insurance company to do business at all within its confines, and as it has power to withdraw that permission when once given, without stating any reason for its action, the fact that it may give what some may think a poor reason or none for a valid act is immaterial.

"Counsel for the companies, in their brief, admit that the state 'has the right at any time to pass a statute expelling a company or revoking its license, and the validity of the statute of expulsion would not be affected by the motives of the state in so doing, even though the preamble expressly recited that the license was revoked because the company had removed a case. The statute would be valid—for the company had no constitutional right to remain in the state any longer than it chose to allow; and the statute would not abridge any right of removal—for, as the case had already been fully removed before the statute was in existence, the right of removal could not be said to have been hindered or abridged by a statute not even in existence.'

"Thus it is admitted that a state has power to prevent a company from coming into its domain, and that it has power to take away its right to remain after having been permitted once to enter, and that right may be exercised from good or bad motives; but what the companies deny is the right of a state to enact in advance that if a company remove a case to a federal court its license shall be revoked.

"We think this distinction is not well founded. The truth is that the effect of the statute is simply to place foreign insurance companies upon a par with the domestic ones doing business in Kentucky. No stipulation or agreement being required as a condition for coming into the state and obtaining a permit to do business therein, the mere enactment of a statute which, in substance, says if you choose to exercise your right to remove a case into a federal court, your right to further do business within the state shall cease and your permit shall be withdrawn, is not open to any constitutional objection. The reasoning in the Doyle Case we think is good."¹

[DAY and HARLAN, JJ., dissented in an opinion by DAY, J.]

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. KANSAS ex rel.
COLEMAN.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1910. 216 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 190, 54 L. Ed. 355.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Kansas. Since 1854 defendant company had done a general telegraph business in Kansas, having entered the state unconditionally in accordance with its laws, and had constructed lines and established over 800 offices there. A statute of 1908 made it a condition of foreign corporations entering the state or continuing to do local business in it that they should pay to the state school fund a fee ranging from one-tenth to one-fiftieth of 1 per cent. of their total authorized capital. Defendant's entire capitalization was $100,000,000, on which the fee would be $20,100. Most of this capital was employed outside of Kansas. Defendant refused to pay this fee, and the state brought suit to oust defendant from the exercise of corporate powers in doing intrastate business in Kansas. A decree enjoining its transaction of such business was rendered, not affecting its interstate or federal governmental business. The opinion of the United States Supreme Court by HARLAN, J., reversed this decree as in violation both of the commerce and the due process clauses of the Constitution—the latter because being in substance a tax upon property outside of the state. The opinion upon the former point is printed post, p.1122.]

Mr. Justice WHITE, concurring: It is shown that the telegraph company, many years ago, went into the state of Kansas, constructed its lines, established its offices, etc., and has since been engaged in business, both interstate and local. It is not disputed that there was no law in the state forbidding the company from doing as it did.

¹ See National Council v. State Council, 203 U. S. 151, 27 Sup. Ct. 46, 51 L. Ed. 132 (1906); Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 312-313, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645 (1903).

From this it results that the corporation went into the state, constructed its plant, and carried on its business, on the implied invitation, or, at least, with the tacit consent, of the state. No one questions that the tax which is here in dispute, imposed by the law of Kansas upon the corporation, is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States because wanting in due process, and that it is therefore confiscatory in character. The tax being thus conceded to be inherently vicious, there is, of course, no attempt to sustain its validity on its intrinsic merits. The sole contention is that, although the tax is void, the telegraph company may not invoke the protection of the Constitution of the United States, because it is in a position where it is not entitled to avail itself of the fundamental safeguards which it was the purpose of the Constitution to secure to all. The reasoning by which it is thus sought to sustain the right of the state to exert a power prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, and to outlaw the corporation by depriving it of the protection afforded by that instrument, is this:

The state, it is insisted, has the right to prevent a foreign corporation from coming into its jurisdiction and engaging there in local business, and this power, in the nature of things, must include the right to affix such conditions to the privilege of coming in as the state chooses to impose. Under these circumstances, the argument proceeds, it becomes immaterial to consider the character of the condition annexed by the state to the enjoyment of the right to come in, since, although such conditions be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and destructive of the most obvious and sacred rights, as the condition only becomes operative provided the corporation elects to come in, therefore the condition is not obligatory, but is voluntarily assented to by the corporation, and hence may not be by it questioned.

But even if, for the sake of the argument only, the general correctness of the proposition be conceded, it has no application to the case here presented. Such is the case, since this cause is concerned not with the power of the state to prevent a corporation from coming in for the purpose of doing local business, and to attach conditions to the privilege of so coming in, but involves the right of the state to confiscate the property of the corporation already within the state, and which has been there for years, devoted to the doing of local business, as the result of the implied invitation or tacit consent of the state, arising from its failure to forbid or to regulate the coming in. In other words, this case involves determining, not how far a state may arbitrarily exclude, but to what extent, after allowing a corporation to come in and acquire property, a state may take its property within the state without compensation, upon the theory that the corporation is not in the state, and has no property right therein which is not subject to confiscation. The difference between the premise upon which the proposition contended for rests and the situation here presented seems to me self-evident. I say this because my mind fails to perceive how the doctrine of election or voluntary assumption of an unconstitutional burden can have any possible application to a case like this.

Let me illustrate. The telegraph company has expended in the state large sums of money, adequate for the purpose of enabling it to do both local and interstate business. The investment is there, and its magnitude, it is fair to assume, is, in part, a resultant of the requirements of the local business. The continued beneficial existence of the investment depends upon the right to use the property for the purpose for which it was acquired; that is, for both interstate and local business. The state law takes the property, or what is equivalent thereto, imposes an unconstitutional and confiscatory burden, upon the condition that such burden be discharged or the local business be abandoned. What possible election can there be? The property is in the state. It has been invested therein for the very purpose of doing local as well as other business. If the unconstitutional burden be not assumed, local business must cease, and hence the property established for the purpose of doing the local business becomes worthless and is in effect confiscated. If, on the other hand, the unconstitutional burden be borne, a like result takes place. * * *

Mr. Justice HOLMES, dissenting: I think that the judgment of the supreme court of Kansas was right, and it will not take me long to give my reasons. I assume that a state cannot tax a corporation on commerce carried on by it with another state, or on property outside the jurisdiction of the taxing state, and I assume further that, for that reason, a tax on or measured by the value of the total stock of a corporation like the Western Union Telegraph Company is void. But I also assume that it is not intended to deny or overrule what has been regarded as unquestionable since Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 284, that, as to foreign corporations seeking to do business wholly within a state, that state is the master, and may prohibit or tax such business at will. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 249, 26 Sup. Ct. 619, 50 L. Ed. 1013, 1014, 6 Ann. Cas. 317; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 20 Sup. Ct. 518, 44 L. Ed. 657; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357. I make the same assumption as to what has been decided twice, at least, since I have sat on this bench, that the right to prohibit, regulate, or tax foreign corporations in respect of business done wholly within a state is not taken away by the fact that they also are engaged there in commerce among the states. Pullman Co. v. Adams, 189 U. S. 420, 23 Sup. Ct. 494, 47 L. Ed. 877; Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 191 U. S. 171, 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 48 L. Ed. 134.

If it should be said that the corporation had a right to enter the state for commerce with other states, and, being there, had the same right to use its property as others, I reply that this begs the question, if the premises be granted. If the corporation has the right to enter for one purpose, and the state has a right to exclude its entry for another, the two rights can coexist. To say that the disappearance of the latter is an incident of the ownership of property there is to declare that what is allowed only for a limited purpose must have general results. I think it more logical and more true to the scheme of the Union to recognize that what comes in only for a special purpose can claim constitutional protection only in its use for that purpose, and for nothing else. That, at all events, has been decided in the cases to which I have referred.

Now what has Kansas done? She has not undertaken to tax the Western Union. She has not attempted to impose an absolute liability for a single dollar. She simply has said to the company that, if it wants to do local business, it must pay a certain sum of money, just as Mississippi said to the Pullman Company that, if it wanted to carry on local traffic, it must pay a certain sum. It does not matter if the sum is extravagant. Even in the law the whole generally includes its parts. If the state may prohibit, it may prohibit with the privilege of avoiding the prohibition in a certain way. I hardly can suppose that the provision is made any the worse by giving a bad reason for it or by calling it by a bad name. I quite agree that we must look through form to substance. The whole matter is left in the Western Union's hands. If the license fee is more than the local business will bear, it can stop that business and avoid the fee. Whether economically wise or not, I am far from thinking that the charge is inherently vicious or bad. If the imposition were absolute, or if the attempt were to oust the corporation from the state if it did not pay, the arguments that prevail would be apposite. But the state seeks only to oust the corporation from that part of its business that the corporation has no right to do unless the state gives leave.

Of course, the suggestion on the other side is that this is an attempt by indirection to break the taboo on the telegraph company's business with other states. The local and the interstate business may be necessary each to the other to make the whole pay. Or the telegraph company might carry on the local business at a loss, for the sake of popularity or other indirect sources of gain. In the last case the fee would come out of earnings that the state has no right to touch. But these considerations do not reach their aim. To deny the right of Kansas to do as it chooses with the local business is to require the local business to help to sustain that between the states. If the latter does not pay alone, that is no reason for cutting down powers that up to this time the states always have possessed. If the telegraph company chooses to pay the fee out of its other earnings, that is its affair. It is master of the situation and can stop if it sees fit. Exactly this argument was pressed in Pullman Co. v. Adams, 189 U. S. 420, 421, 23 Sup. Ct. 494, 47 L. Ed. 877, 878, and was rejected without dissent. See Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 444, 14 Sup. Ct. 865, 38 L. Ed. 773, 777, 4 Interest. Com. R. 654.

What I have said shows, I think, the fallacy involved in talking about unconstitutional conditions. Of course, if the condition was the making of a contract contrary to the policy of the Constitution of the United States, the contract would be void. That was all that was decided in Southern P. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 13 Sup. Ct. 44, 36 L. Ed. 942. But it does not follow that, if keeping the contract was made a condition of staying in the state, the condition would be void. I confess my inability to understand how a condition can be unconstitutional when attached to a matter over which a state has absolute arbitrary power. This court was equally unable to understand it in Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 315, 12 Sup. Ct. 403, 36 L. Ed. 164, 168, 4 Interest. Com. R. 57. In that case it was said: "Having the absolute power of excluding the foreign corporation, the state may, of course, impose such conditions upon permitting the corporation to do business within its limits as it may judge expedient; and it may make the grant or privilege dependent upon the payment of a specific license tax, or a sum proportioned to the amount of its capital."

The consequence is the measure of the condition. When the only consequence of a breach is a result that the state may bring about directly in the first place, the condition cannot be unconstitutional. If, after this decision, the state of Kansas, without giving any reason, sees fit simply to prohibit the Western Union Telegraph Company from doing any more local business there, or from doing local business until it has paid $20,100, I shall be curious to see upon what ground that legislation will be assailed. I am aware that the battle has raged with varying fortunes over this matter of unconstitutional conditions, but it appears to me ground for regret that the court so soon should abandon its latest decision. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 26 Sup. Ct. 619, 50 L. Ed. 1013, 6 Ann. Cas. 317.

Finally, in the absence of contract, the power of the state is not affected by the fact that the corporation concerned already is in the state, or even has been there for some time. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 20 Sup. Ct. 518, 44 L. Ed. 657; National Council v. State Council of Virginia, 203 U. S. 151, 163, 27 Sup. Ct. 46, 51 L. Ed. 132, 137. Whatever the corporation may do or acquire there is infected with the original weakness of dependence upon the will of the state. This is a general principle, illustrated by many cases. * * * In Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 12 Sup. Ct. 403, 36 L. Ed. 164, 4 Interst. Com. Rep. 57, the corporation showed by its answer that it had employed part of its capital in manufacturing in New York. It had got into the state and was at work there, yet it was held liable to pay a percentage of its entire capital, although the greater part was outside the state. But furthermore, it is a short answer to this part of the argument that, in the present case, according to decisions relied upon by the majority, the state could not have prevented the entry of the corporation, because it entered for the purpose of commerce with other states.

[FULLER, C. J., and McKENNA, J., concurred in this dissent, as did PECKHAM, J., before his death.] ¹

¹ Accord (with the majority opinion): Pullman Co. v. Kansas ex rel. Coleman, 216 U. S. 56, 30 Sup. Ct. 232, 54 L. Ed. 378 (1910) (sleeping car company); Ludwig v. Western Union Tel. Co., 216 U. S. 116, 30 Sup. Ct. 280, 54 L. Ed. 423 (1910); Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 30 Sup. Ct. 287, 51 L. Ed. 536, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247 (1910). See particularly the opinion in the latter case, post, p. 623. Compare the opinions of White, J., and of Holmes, J., in the Pullman Case above (where the property in use could be easily withdrawn from the state), in 216 U. S. at pages 63, 64, and 75, 30 Sup. Ct. 232, 54 L. Ed. 378.

In Herndon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 218 U. S. 135, 158, 159, 30 Sup. Ct. 633, 639, 54 L. Ed. 970 (1910), Day, J., said (holding invalid a Missouri statute requiring the secretary of state to revoke the license to do intrastate business of any foreign railway corporation that removed to a federal court or instituted therein any suit between it and citizens of Missouri): "Applying the principles announced in those cases [cited above in this note] it is evident, that the act in controversy cannot stand, in view of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. Moreover, this is not a case where the state has undertaken to prevent the coming of the corporation into its borders for the purpose of carrying on business. The corporation was within the state, complying with its laws, and had acquired, under the sanction of the state, a large amount of property within its borders, and thus had become a person within the state, within the meaning of the Constitution, and entitled to its protection. Under the statute in controversy, a domestic railroad company might bring an action in the federal court, or, in a proper case, remove one thereto, without being subject to the forfeiture of its right to do business, or to the imposition of penalties provided for in the act. In all the cases in this court, discussing the right of the states to exclude foreign corporations, and to prevent them from removing cases to the federal courts, it has been conceded that while the right to do local business within the state may not have been derived from the federal Constitution, the right to resort to the federal courts is a creation of the Constitution of the United States and the statutes passed in pursuance thereof."

In Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 20 Sup. Ct. 518, 44 L. Ed. 657 (1900), it was held that a foreign corporation, doing both local and interstate business in Texas under an unexpired license, might be excluded from the former as a penalty for violating the state anti-trust act.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—As to how far the federal Constitution protects the property or powers of municipal corporations from state legislative action, see Hunter v. Pittsburg, 207 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151 (1907).

CHAPTER IX

DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW: PROCEDURE

SECTION 1.—DUE PROCESS

DEN ex dem. MURRAY v. HOBOKEN LAND AND IMPROVE-MENT CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1855. 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372.)

[Certificate of division of opinion from the federal Circuit Court for New Jersey. An act of Congress of May 15, 1820, provided that when a federal revenue collector was found indebted to the United States by the Treasury Department a distress warrant could be issued by the agent of the department for the balance due, and that from the time of the record of the levy on the debtor's property under this warrant a lien for the amount due should exist on the lands of the debtor. Under this law a distress warrant was issued and levy made upon the lands of Swartwout, federal collector of the port of New York, and defendant claimed title under a sale by virtue of this warrant. Plaintiff claimed under an execution upon a judgment against Swartwout, rendered subsequently to the record of the levy under the warrant. The judges were divided in opinion upon plaintiff's action of ejectment, and asked the opinion of this court as to the validity of the warrant.]

Mr. Justice CURTIS. * * * [The validity of the warrant] is denied by the plaintiffs, upon the ground that so much of the act of Congress as authorized it, is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

In support of this position, the plaintiff relies on that part of the first section of the third article of the Constitution which requires the judicial power of the United States to be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish; the judges whereof shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. Also, on the second section of the same article, which declares that the judicial power shall extend to controversies to which the United States shall be a party.

It must be admitted that, if the auditing of this account, and the ascertainment of its balance, and the issuing of this process, was an exercise of the judicial power of the United States, the proceeding was void; for the officers who performed these acts could exercise no part of that judicial power. They neither constituted a court of the United States, nor were they, or either of them, so connected with any such court as to perform even any of the ministerial duties which arise out of judicial proceedings.

The question, whether these acts were an exercise of the judicial power of the United States, can best be considered under another inquiry, raised by the further objection of the plaintiff, that the effect of the proceedings authorized by the act in question is to deprive the party, against whom the warrant issues, of his liberty and property, "without due process of law"; and, therefore, is in conflict with the fifth article of the amendments of the Constitution.

Taking these two objections together, they raise the questions, whether, under the Constitution of the United States, a collector of the customs, from whom a balance of account has been found to be due by accounting officers of the treasury, designated for that purpose by law, can be deprived of his liberty, or property, in order to enforce payment of that balance, without the exercise of the judicial power of the United States, and yet by due process of law, within the meaning of those terms in the Constitution; and if so, then, secondly, whether the warrant in question was such due process of law?

The words, "due process of law," were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words, "by the law of the land," in Magna Charta. Lord Coke, in his commentary on those words (2 Inst. 50), says they mean due process of law. The constitutions which had been adopted by the several states before the formation of the federal Constitution, following the language of the great charter more closely, generally contained the words, "but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land." The ordinance of Congress of July 13, 1787, for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, used the same words.

The Constitution of the United States, as adopted, contained the provision, that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury." When the fifth article of amendment containing the words now in question was made, the trial by jury in criminal cases had thus already been provided for. By the sixth and seventh articles of amendment, further special provisions were separately made for that mode of trial in civil and criminal cases. To have followed, as in the state Constitutions, and in the ordinance of 1787, the words of Magna Charta, and declared that no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land, would have been in part superfluous and inappropriate. To have taken the clause, "law of the land," without its immediate context, might possibly have given rise to doubts, which would be effectually dispelled by using those words which the great commentator on Magna Charta had declared to be the true meaning of the phrase, "law of the land," in that instrument, and which were undoubtedly then received as their true meaning.

That the warrant now in question is legal process, is not denied. It was issued in conformity with an act of Congress. But is it "due process of law"? The Constitution contains no description of those processes which it was intended to allow or forbid. It does not even declare what principles are to be applied to ascertain whether it be due process. It is manifest that it was not left to the legislative power to enact any process which might be devised. The article is a restraint on the legislative as well as on the executive and judicial powers of the government, and cannot be so construed as to leave Congress free to make any process "due process of law," by its mere will. To what principles, then, are we to resort to ascertain whether this process, enacted by Congress, is due process? To this the answer must be twofold. We must examine the Constitution itself, to see whether this process be in conflict with any of its provisions. If not found to be so, we must look to those settled usages and modes of proceeding existing in the common and statute law of England, before the emigration of our ancestors, and which are shown not to have been unsuited to their civil and political condition by having been acted on by them after the settlement of this country. We apprehend there has been no period, since the establishment of the English monarchy, when there has not been, by the law of the land, a summary method for the recovery of debts due to the Crown, and especially those due from receivers of the revenues. It is difficult, at this day, to trace with precision all the proceedings had for these purposes in the earliest ages of the common law. That they were summary and severe, and had been used for purposes of oppression, is inferable from the fact that one chapter of Magna Charta treats of their restraint. It declares: "We or our bailiffs shall not seize any land or rent for any debt as long as the present goods and chattels of the debtor do suffice to pay the debt, and the debtor himself be ready to satisfy therefor." * * *

By the common law, the body, lands, and goods of the king's debtor were liable to be levied on to obtain payment. In conformity with the above provision of Magna Charta, a conditional writ was framed, commanding the sheriff to inquire of the goods and chattels of the debtor, and, if they were insufficient, then to extend on the lands. 3 Co. 12 b; Com. Dig. Debt, G. 2; 2 Inst. 19. But it is said that since the statute 33 Hen. VIII, c. 39, the practice has been to issue the writ in an absolute form, without requiring any previous inquisition as to the goods. Gilbert's Exch. 127.

To authorize a writ of extent, however, the debt must be matter of record in the king's exchequer. The 33 Hen. VIII, c. 39, § 50, made all specialty debts due to the king of the same force and effect as debts by statute staple, thus giving to such debts the effect of debts of record. In regard to debts due upon simple contract, other than those due from collectors of the revenue and other accountants of the Crown, the practice, from very ancient times, has been to issue a commission to inquire as to the existence of the debt.

This commission being returned, the debt found was thereby evidenced by a record, and an extent could issue thereon. No notice was required to be given to the alleged debtor of the execution of this commission (2 Tidd's Pr. 1047), though it seems that, in some cases, an order for notice might be obtained (1 Ves. 269). Formerly, no witnesses were examined by the commission (Chitty's Prerog. 267; West, 22); the affidavit prepared to obtain an order for an immediate extent being the only evidence introduced. But this practice has been recently changed. 11 Price, 29. By the statute 13 Eliz. ch. 4, balances due from receivers of the revenue and all other accountants of the Crown were placed on the same footing as debts acknowledged to be due by statute staple. These balances were found by auditors, the particular officers acting thereon having been, from time to time, varied by legislation and usage. The different methods of accounting in ancient and modern times are described in Mr. Price's Treatise on the Law and Practice of the Exchequer, ch. 9. Such balances, when found, were certified to what was called the pipe office, to be given in charge to the sheriffs for their levy. Price, 231.

If an accountant failed to render his accounts, a process was issued, termed a capias nomine districtionis, against the body, goods, and lands of the accountant. Price, 162, 233, note 3.

This brief sketch of the modes of proceeding to ascertain and enforce payment of balances due from receivers of the revenue in England, is sufficient to show that the methods of ascertaining the existence and amount of such debts, and compelling their payment, have varied widely from the usual course of the common law on other subjects; and that, as respects such debts due from such officers, "the law of the land" authorized the employment of auditors, and an inquisition without notice, and a species of execution bearing a very close resemblance to what is termed a warrant of distress in the act of 1820, now in question.

It is certain that this diversity in "the law of the land" between public defaulters and ordinary debtors was understood in this country, and entered into the legislation of the colonies and provinces, and more especially of the states, after the Declaration of Independence and before the formation of the Constitution of the United States. Not only was the process of distress in nearly or quite universal use for the collection of taxes, but what was generally termed a warrant of distress, running against the body, goods, and chattels of defaulting receivers of public money, was issued to some public officer, to whom was committed the power to ascertain the amount of the default, and by such warrant proceed to collect it. * * * [Here follow references to similar legislation early passed by the states and by Congress.]

Tested by the common and statute law of England prior to the emigration of our ancestors, and by the laws of many of the states at the time of the adoption of this amendment, the proceedings authorized by the act of 1820 cannot be denied to be due process of law, when applied to the ascertainment and recovery of balances due to the government from a collector of customs, unless there exists in the Constitution some other provision which restrains Congress from authorizing such proceedings. For, though "due process of law" generally implies and includes, actor, reus, judex, regular allegations, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceedings (2 Inst. 47, 50; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 15, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill [N. Y.] 146, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Vanzant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg. [Tenn.] 260; State Bank v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. [Tenn.] 599, 24 Am. Dec. 517; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. [Tenn.] 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430; Greene v. Briggs, 1 Curt. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 5,764), yet, this is not universally true. There may be, and we have seen that there are, cases, under the law of England after Magna Charta, and as it was brought to this country and acted on here, in which process, in its nature final, issues against the body, lands, and goods of certain public debtors without any such trial; and this brings us to the question, whether those provisions of the Constitution which relate to the judicial power are incompatible with these proceedings?

That the auditing of the accounts of a receiver of public moneys may be, in an enlarged sense, a judicial act, must be admitted. So are all those administrative duties the performance of which involves an inquiry into the existence of facts and the application to them of rules of law. In this sense the act of the President in calling out the militia under the act of 1795 (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 19, 6 L. Ed. 537), or of a commissioner who makes a certificate for the extradition of a criminal, under a treaty, is judicial. But it is not sufficient to bring such matters under the judicial power, that they involve the exercise of judgment upon law and fact. United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40, 14 L. Ed. 42. It is necessary to go further, and show not only that the adjustment of the balances due from accounting officers may be, but from their nature must be, controversies to which the United States is a party, within the meaning of the second section of the third article of the Constitution. We do not doubt the power of Congress to provide by law that such a question shall form the subject-matter of a suit in which the judicial power can be exerted. The act of 1820 makes such a provision for reviewing the decision of the accounting officers of the treasury. But, until reviewed, it is final and binding; and the question is, whether its subject-matter is necessarily, and without regard to the consent of Congress, a judicial controversy. And we are of opinion it is not.

Among the legislative powers of Congress are the powers "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defence and welfare of the United States; to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a navy; and to make all laws which may be necessary and proper for carrying into execution those powers." What officers should be appointed to collect the revenue thus authorized to be raised, and to disburse it in payment of the debts of the United States; what duties should be required of them; when and how, and to whom they should account, and what security they should furnish, and to what remedies they should be subjected to enforce the proper discharge of their duties, Congress was to determine. In the exercise of their powers, they have required collectors of customs to be appointed; made it incumbent on them to account, from time to time, with certain officers of the treasury department, and to furnish sureties, by bond, for the payment of all balances of the public money which may become due from them. And by the act of 1820, now in question, they have undertaken to provide summary means to compel these officers—and in case of their default, their sureties—to pay such balances of the public money as may be in their hands.

The power to collect and disburse revenue, and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying that power into effect, includes all known and appropriate means of effectually collecting and disbursing that revenue, unless some such means should be forbidden in some other part of the Constitution. The power has not been exhausted by the receipt of the money by the collector. Its purpose is to raise money and use it in payment of the debts of the government; and, whoever may have possession of the public money, until it is actually disbursed, the power to use those known and appropriate means to secure its due application continues.

As we have already shown, the means provided by the act of 1820, do not differ in principle from those employed in England from remote antiquity—and in many of the states, so far as we know without objection—for this purpose, at the time the Constitution was formed. It may be added, that probably there are few governments which do or can permit their claims for public taxes, either on the citizen or the officer employed for their collection or disbursement, to become subjects of judicial controversy, according to the course of the law of the land. Imperative necessity has forced a distinction between such claims and all others, which has sometimes been carried out by summary methods of proceeding, and sometimes by systems of fines and penalties, but always in some way observed and yielded to. * * *

It was strongly urged by the plaintiff's counsel, that though the government might have the rightful power to provide a summary remedy for the recovery of its public dues, aside from any exercise of the judicial power, yet it had not done so in this instance. That it had enabled the debtor to apply to the judicial power, and having thus brought the subject-matter under its cognizance, it was not for the government to say that the subject-matter was not within the judicial power. That if it were not in its nature a judicial controversy, Congress could not make it such, nor give jurisdiction over it to the district courts. In short, the argument is, that if this were not, in its nature, a judicial controversy, Congress could not have conferred on the district court power to determine it upon a bill filed by the collector. If it be such a controversy, then it is subject to the judicial power alone; and the fact that Congress has enabled the district court to pass upon it, is conclusive evidence that it is a judicial controversy.

We cannot admit the correctness of the last position. If we were of opinion that this subject-matter cannot be the subject of a judicial controversy, and that, consequently, it cannot be made a subject of judicial cognizance, the consequence would be, that the attempt to bring it under the jurisdiction of a court of the United States would be ineffectual. But the previous proceedings of the executive department would not necessarily be affected thereby. They might be final, instead of being subject to judicial review.

But the argument leaves out of view an essential element in the case, and also assumes something which cannot be admitted.

It assumes that the entire subject-matter is or is not, in every mode of presentation, a judicial controversy, essentially and in its own nature, aside from the will of Congress to permit it to be so; and it leaves out of view the fact that the United States is a party.

It is necessary to take into view some settled rules.

Though, generally, both public and private wrongs are redressed through judicial action, there are more summary extra-judicial remedies for both. An instance of extra-judicial redress of a private wrong is, the recapture of goods by their lawful owner; of a public wrong, by a private person, is the abatement of a public nuisance; and the recovery of public dues by a summary process of distress, issued by some public officer authorized by law, is an instance of redress of a particular kind of public wrong, by the act of the public through its authorized agents. There is, however, an important distinction between these. Though a private person may retake his property, or abate a nuisance, he is directly responsible for his acts to the proper judicial tribunals. His authority to do these acts depends not merely on the law, but upon the existence of such facts as are, in point of law, sufficient to constitute that authority; and he may be required, by an action at law, to prove those facts; but a public agent, who acts pursuant to the command of a legal precept, can justify his act by the production of such precept. He cannot be made responsible in a judicial tribunal for obeying the lawful command of the government; and the government itself, which gave the command, cannot be sued without its own consent.

At the same time there can be no doubt that the mere question, whether a collector of the customs is indebted to the United States, may be one of judicial cognizance. It is competent for the United States to sue any of its debtors in a court of law. It is equally clear that the United States may consent to be sued, and may yield this consent upon such terms and under such restrictions as it may think just. Though both the marshal and the government are exempt from suit, for anything done by the former in obedience to legal process, still, Congress may provide by law, that both, or either, shall, in a particular class of cases, and under such restrictions as they may think proper to impose, come into a court of law or equity and abide by its determination. The United States may thus place the government upon the same ground which is occupied by private persons who proceed to take extra-judicial remedies for their wrongs, and they may do so to such extent, and with such restrictions, as may be thought fit.

When, therefore, the act of 1820 enacts, that after the levy of the distress warrant has been begun, the collector may bring before a district court the question, whether he is indebted as recited in the warrant, it simply waives a privilege which belongs to the government, and consents to make the legality of its future proceedings dependent on the judgment of the court; as we have already stated in case of a private person, every fact upon which the legality of the extra-judicial remedy depends may be drawn in question by a suit against him. The United States consents that this fact of indebtedness may be drawn in question by a suit against them. Though they might have withheld their consent, we think that, by granting it, nothing which may not be a subject of judicial cognizance is brought before the court.

To avoid misconstruction upon so grave a subject, we think it proper to state that we do not consider Congress can either withdraw from judicial cognizance any matter which, from its nature, is the subject of a suit at the common law, or in equity, or admiralty; nor, on the other hand, can it bring under the judicial power a matter which, from its nature, is not a subject for judicial determination. At the same time there are matters, involving public rights, which may be presented in such form that the judicial power is capable of acting on them, and which are susceptible of judicial determination, but which Congress may or may not bring within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, as it may deem proper. Equitable claims to land by the inhabitants of ceded territories form a striking instance of such a class of cases; and as it depends upon the will of Congress whether a remedy in the courts shall be allowed at all, in such cases, they may regulate it and prescribe such rules of determination as they may think just and needful. Thus it has been repeatedly decided in this class of cases, that upon their trial the acts of executive officers, done under the authority of Congress, were conclusive, either upon particular facts involved in the inquiry or upon the whole title. Foley v. Harrison, 15 How. 433, 14 L. Ed. 761; Burgess v. Gray, 16 How. 48, 14 L. Ed. 839; Minnesota Mining Co. v. National Mining Co., 3 Wall. 332, 18 L. Ed. 42, at the present term. See, also, Cooper v. Roberts, 18 How. 173, 15 L. Ed. 338.

It is true, also, that even in a suit between private persons to try a question of private right, the action of the executive power, upon a matter committed to its determination by the Constitution and laws, is conclusive. Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. Ed. 581; Doe ex dem. Clark v. Braden, 16 How. 635, 14 L. Ed. 1090.

To apply these principles to the case before us, we say that, though a suit may be brought against the marshal for seizing property under such a warrant of distress, and he may be put to show his justification; yet the action of the executive power in issuing the warrant, pursuant to the act of 1820, passed under the powers to collect and disburse the revenue granted by the Constitution, is conclusive evidence of the facts recited in it, and of the authority to make the levy; that though no suit can be brought against the United States without the consent of Congress, yet Congress may consent to have a suit brought, to try the question whether the collector be indebted, that being a subject capable of judicial determination, and may empower a court to act on that determination, and restrain the levy of the warrant of distress within the limits of the debt judicially found to exist. * * *

Questions answered in favor of defendant.¹

HURTADO v. CALIFORNIA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1884. 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of California. The California Constitution of 1879 provided that offences theretofore prosecuted by indictment should be prosecuted by information after examination and commitment by a magistrate, or by indictment, as might be prescribed by law. Hurtado was found guilty of murder by a jury, after an information had been filed against him, and was sentenced to death. His objections to the proceeding by information were overruled by the California Supreme Court, and this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Justice MATTHEWS. * * * It is claimed on behalf of the prisoner that the conviction and sentence are void, on the ground that they are repugnant to that clause of the fourteenth article of amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which is in these words: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

The proposition of law we are asked to affirm is that an indictment or presentment by a grand jury, as known to the common law of England, is essential to that "due process of law," when applied to prosecutions for felonies, which is secured and guaranteed by this provision of the Constitution of the United States, and which accordingly it is forbidden to the states respectively to dispense with in the administration of criminal law. * * *

¹ Accord: Springer v. United States, 102 U. S. 586, 26 L. Ed. 253 (1881) (distrain of land for non-payment of tax); Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611, 25 Sup. Ct. 345, 49 L. Ed. 619 (1906) (same of personal property); Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 10 Sup. Ct. 324, 33 L. Ed. 772 (1890) (seizure of person for same). In all of these cases the prior assessment of the tax was accompanied by notice and an opportunity for a hearing.

It is maintained on behalf of the plaintiff in error that the phrase "due process of law" is equivalent to "law of the land," as found in the 29th chapter of Magna Charta; that by immemorial usage it has acquired a fixed, definite, and technical meaning; that it refers to and includes, not only the general principles of public liberty and private right, which lie at the foundation of all free government, but the very institutions which, venerable by time and custom, have been tried by experience and found fit and necessary for the preservation of those principles, and which, having been the birthright and inheritance of every English subject, crossed the Atlantic with the colonists and were transplanted and established in the fundamental laws of the state; that, having been originally introduced into the Constitution of the United States as a limitation upon the powers of the government, brought into being by that instrument, it has now been added as an additional security to the individual against oppression by the states themselves; that one of these institutions is that of the grand jury, an indictment or presentment by which against the accused in cases of alleged felonies is an essential part of due process of law, in order that he may not be harassed or destroyed by prosecutions founded only upon private malice or popular fury.

This view is certainly supported by the authority of the great name of Chief Justice Shaw and of the court in which he presided, which, in Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329, decided that the 12th article of the Bill of Rights of Massachusetts, a transcript of Magna Charta in this respect, made an indictment or presentment of a grand jury essential to the validity of a conviction in cases of prosecutions for felonies. * * *

Mr. Reeve, in 2 History of Eng. Law, 43, translates the phrase, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ, "But by the judgment of his peers, or by some other legal process or proceeding adapted by the law to the nature of the case."

Chancellor Kent, 2 Com. 13, adopts this mode of construing the phrase. Quoting the language of Magna Charta, and referring to Lord Coke's comment upon it, he says: "The better and larger definition of due process of law is that it means law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice."

This accords with what is said in Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 212, 62 Am. Dec. 160, by Denio, J.: "The provision was designed to protect the citizen against all mere acts of power, whether flowing from the legislative or executive branches of the government."

The principal and true meaning of the phrase has never been more tersely or accurately stated than by Mr. Justice Johnson, in Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 235-244, 4 L. Ed. 559: "As to the words from Magna Charta, incorporated into the Constitution of Maryland, after volumes spoken and written with a view to their exposition, the good sense of mankind has at last settled down to this: that they were intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private right and distributive justice."

And the conclusion rightly deduced is, as stated by Mr. Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, 356: "The principles, then, upon which the process is based, are to determine whether it is 'due process' or not, and not any considerations of mere form. Administrative and remedial process may be changed from time to time, but only with due regard to the landmarks established for the protection of the citizen."

It is urged upon us, however, in argument, that the claim made in behalf of the plaintiff in error is supported by the decision of this court in Den dex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Company, 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372. * * * [Here is quoted a passage from this case, printed ante, at p. 264.]

This, it is argued, furnishes an indispensable test of what constitutes "due process of law"; that any proceeding otherwise authorized by law, which is not thus sanctioned by usage, or which supersedes and displaces one that is, cannot be regarded as due process of law.

But this inference is unwarranted. The real syllabus of the passage quoted is, that a process of law, which is not otherwise forbidden, must be taken to be due process of law, if it can show the sanction of settled usage both in England and in this country; but it by no means follows that nothing else can be due process of law. The point in the case cited arose in reference to a summary proceeding, questioned on that account, as not due process of law. The answer was: however exceptional it may be, as tested by definitions and principles of ordinary procedure, nevertheless, this, in substance, has been immemorially the actual law of the land, and, therefore, is due process of law. But to hold that such a characteristic is essential to due process of law, would be to deny every quality of the law but its age, and to render it incapable of progress or improvement. It would be to stamp upon our jurisprudence the unchangeableness attributed to the laws of the Medes and Persians.

This would be all the more singular and surprising, in this quick and active age, when we consider that, owing to the progressive development of legal ideas and institutions in England, the words of Magna Charta stood for very different things at the time of the separation of the American colonies from what they represented originally. For at first the words nisi per legale iudicium parium had no reference to a jury; they applied only to the pares regni, who were the constitutional judges in the court of exchequer and coram rege. Bac. Abr. "Juries," (7th Ed. Lond.) note; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 41. And as to the grand jury itself, we learn of its constitution and functions from the assize of Clarendon, (A. D. 1164,) and that of Northampton, (A. D. 1176,) Stubbs, Chart. 143-150 * * * "The system thus established," says Mr. Justice Stephens, (1 Hist. Crim. Law Eng. 252,) "is simple. The body of the country are the accusers. Their accusation is practically equivalent to a conviction, subject to the chance of a favorable termination of the ordeal by water. If the ordeal fails, the accused person loses his foot and his hand. If it succeeds, he is, nevertheless, to be banished. Accusation, therefore, was equivalent to banishment, at least." When we add to this that the primitive grand jury heard no witnesses in support of the truth of the charges to be preferred, but presented upon their own knowledge, or indicted upon common fame and general suspicion, we shall be ready to acknowledge that it is better not to go too far back into antiquity for the best securities for our "ancient liberties." It is more consonant to the true philosophy of our historical legal institutions to say that the spirit of personal liberty and individual right, which they embodied, was preserved and developed by a progressive growth and wise adaptation to new circumstances and situations of the forms and processes found fit to give, from time to time, new expression and greater effect to modern ideas of self-government. * * *

The Constitution of the United States was ordained, it is true, by descendants of Englishmen, who inherited the traditions of English law and history; but it was made for an undefined and expanding future, and for a people gathered, and to be gathered, from many nations and of many tongues; and while we take just pride in the principles and institutions of the common law, we are not to forget that in lands where other systems of jurisprudence prevail, the ideas and processes of civil justice are also not unknown. Due process of law, in spite of the absolutism of continental governments, is not alien to that Code which survived the Roman empire as the foundation of modern civilization in Europe, and which has given us that fundamental maxim of distributive justice, summum cuique tribuere. There is nothing in Magna Charta, rightly construed as a broad charter of public right and law, which ought to exclude the best ideas of all systems and of every age; and as it was the characteristic principle of the common law to draw its inspiration from every fountain of justice, we are not to assume that the sources of its supply have been exhausted. On the contrary, we should expect that the new and various experiences of our own situation and system will mould and shape it into new and not less useful forms. * * * [Here follows the passage printed ante, at p. 231, and quotations from various cases in this court.]

We are to construe this phrase in the fourteenth amendment by the usus loquendi of the Constitution itself. The same words are contained in the fifth amendment. That article makes specific and express provision for perpetuating the institution of the grand jury, so far as relates to prosecutions for the more aggravated crimes under the laws of the United States. It declares that: "No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be witness against himself." It then immediately adds: "Nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

According to a recognized canon of interpretation, especially applicable to formal and solemn instruments of constitutional law, we are forbidden to assume, without clear reason to the contrary, that any part of this most important amendment is superfluous. The natural and obvious inference is, that in the sense of the Constitution, "due process of law" was not meant or intended to include, ex vi termini, the institution and procedure of a grand jury in any case. The conclusion is equally irresistible, that when the same phrase was employed in the fourteenth amendment to restrain the action of the states, it was used in the same sense and with no greater extent; and that if in the adoption of that amendment it had been part of its purpose to perpetuate the institution of the grand jury in all the states, it would have embodied, as did the fifth amendment, express declarations to that effect. Due process of law in the latter refers to that law of the land which derives its authority from the legislative powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution of the United States, exercised within the limits therein prescribed, and "interpreted according to the principles of the common law. In the fourteenth amendment, by parity of reason, it refers to that law of the land in each state which derives its authority from the inherent and reserved powers of the state, exerted within the limits of those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions, and the greatest security for which resides in the right of the people to make their own laws, and alter them at their pleasure. * * * [Here follows the passage printed ante, at p.232.]"

It follows that any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law. * * * Tried by these principles, we are unable to say that the substitution for a presentment or indictment by a grand jury of the proceeding by information, after examination and commitment by a magistrate, certifying to the probable guilt of the defendant, with the right on his part to the aid of counsel, and to the cross-examination of the witnesses produced for the prosecution, is not due process of law. It is, as we have seen, an ancient proceeding at common law, which might include every case of an offence of less grade than a felony, except misprision of treason; and in every circumstance of its administration, as authorized by the statute of California, it carefully considers and guards the substantial interest of the prisoner. It is merely a preliminary proceeding, and can result in no final judgment, except as the consequence of a regular judicial trial, conducted precisely as in cases of indictments. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

HAGAR v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 108.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1884. 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569.)

[Appeal from the federal Circuit Court for California. A California statute provided for the creation by county boards of supervisors of reclamation districts out of overflowed lands so situated as to be susceptible of one mode of reclamation. After the necessary expenses of reclamation had been estimated commissioners appointed by the supervisors were to assess upon each acre reclaimed or benefited an amount proportionate to the whole expense and to the benefits of the reclamation. Hagar's land was included in such a district and he refused to pay his assessment. Suits were brought against him to

¹ Accord: Ellenbecker v. Plymouth Co., 134 U. S. 31, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801 (1890) (enforcement of prohibition law by injunction and contempt proceedings); Iowa Cent. Ry. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 16 Sup. Ct. 344, 40 L. Ed. 467 (1896) (common-law jury not necessary in civil cases); Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597 (1900) (same in criminal cases). As to procedural changes in general, see Holden v. Hardy, post, at pp. 409-410.

"It is clear that the fourteenth amendment in no way undertakes to control the power of a state to determine by what process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations be enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for these purposes gives reasonable notice, and affords fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided."—White, J., in Iowa Cent. Ry. v. Iowa, above (160 U. S. 393, 16 Sup. Ct. 345, 40 L. Ed. 467).

JURY TRIAL IN CIVIL CASES.—Though due process of law does not require a jury trial in either civil or criminal cases, the federal Constitution and most of the state Constitutions have other provisions expressly requiring jury trials in all criminal prosecutions and in civil suits at common law. The provision for criminal cases is considered in Thompson v. Utah, ante, p. 193.

For the interpretation of the seventh amendment, regarding the right of trial by jury in suits at common law, see Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873 (1899) (in general); Maxwell v. Dow, ante, at p. 225 (unanimity); Henderson's Distilled Spirits, 14 Wall. 44, 53, 20 L. Ed. 815 (1872) (walver); Slocum v. New York Life Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (control by appellate courts). As to what kinds of actions are "suits at common law," under such constitutional provisions, see Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L. Ed. 732 (1830); Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 11 Sup. Ct. 712, 35 L. Ed. 358 (1891); McElrath v. United States, 102 U. S. 426, 440, 26 L. Ed. 189 (1880); 443 Cans of Egg Product v. United States, 226 U. S. 172, 33 Sup. Ct. 50, 57 L. Ed. — (1912). Not only equity and admiralty cases, but most special, summary, and administrative proceedings are generally held to be excluded. See 24 Cyc. 100-141; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. (2d Ed.) 974-986; State v. Clausen, post, p. 517, note; Cunningham v. Northwestern Imp. Co., 44 Mont. 180, 215-217, 119 Pac. 554 (1911).

enforce liens on his land for the assessment. These suits were removed to the federal Circuit Court, which held the liens valid and ordered the land sold to satisfy them.]

Mr. Justice FIELD. * * * The objections urged to the validity of the assessment on federal grounds are substantially these: that the law under which the assessment was made and levied conflicts with the clause of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution declaring that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. * * * It is sufficient to observe here that by "due process" is meant one which, following the forms of law, is appropriate to the case,¹ and just to the parties to be affected. It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by the law; it must be adapted to the end to be attained; and wherever it is necessary for the protection of the parties, it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the judgment sought. The clause in question means, therefore, that there can be no proceeding against life, liberty, or property which may result in the deprivation of either, without the observance of those general rules established in our system of jurisprudence for the security of private rights. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 536, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232.

The appellant contends that this fundamental principle was violated in the assessment of his property, inasmuch as it was made without notice to him, or without his being afforded any opportunity to be heard respecting it; the law authorizing it containing no provision for such notice or hearing. His contention is that notice and opportunity to be heard are essential to render any proceeding due process of law which may lead to the deprivation of life, liberty, or property. Undoubtedly where life and liberty are involved, due process requires that there be a regular course of judicial proceedings, which imply that the party to be affected shall have notice and an opportunity to be heard; so, also, where title or possession of property is involved. But where the taking of property is in the enforcement of a tax, the proceeding is necessarily less formal, and whether notice to him is at all necessary may depend upon the character of the tax, and the manner in which its amount is determinable. The necessity of revenue for the support of the government does not admit of the delay attendant upon proceedings in a court of justice, and they are not required for the enforcement of taxes or assessments. As stated by Mr. Justice Bradley, in his concurring opinion in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S.

¹ See, also, for the dependence of the requisites of due process upon the nature of the case, In re Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 288-290, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552 (1883) (disbarment of attorney); Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S. 78, 84, 29 Sup. Ct. 235, 53 L. Ed. 410 (1909) (executive acts to suppress insurrection); Reaves v. Ainsworth, 219 U. S. 296, 304, 31 Sup. Ct. 230, 233, 55 L. Ed. 225 (1911), in which McKenna, J., said: "What is due process of law must be determined by circumstances. To those in the military or naval service of the United States the military law is due process. The decision, therefore, of a military tribunal acting within the scope of its lawful powers cannot be reviewed or set aside by the courts."

97, 24 L. Ed. 616: "In judging what is 'due process of law' respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking, whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or some of these; and, if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be 'due process of law,' but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it may be declared to be not 'due process of law.'"

The power of taxation possessed by the state may be exercised upon any subject within its jurisdiction, and to any extent not prohibited by the Constitution of the United States. As said by this court: "It may touch property in every shape, in its natural condition, in its manufactured form, and in its various transmutations. And the amount of the taxation may be determined by the value of the property, or its use, or its capacity, or its productiveness. It may touch business in the almost infinite forms in which it is conducted, in professions, in commerce, in manufactures, and in transportation. Unless restrained by provisions of the federal Constitution, the power of the state, as to the mode, form, and extent of taxation, is unlimited where the subjects to which it applies are within her jurisdiction." State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 319, 21 L. Ed. 179.

Of the different kinds of taxes which the state may impose, there is a vast number of which, from their nature, no notice can be given to the tax-payer, nor would notice be of any possible advantage to him, such as poll-taxes, license taxes, (not dependent upon the extent of his business,) and, generally, specific taxes on things or persons or occupations. In such cases the legislature in authorizing the tax fixes its amount, and that is the end of the matter. If the tax be not paid the property of the delinquent may be sold, and he be thus deprived of his property. Yet there can be no question that the proceeding is due process of law, as there is no inquiry into the weight of evidence, or other element of a judicial nature, and nothing could be changed by hearing the tax-payer. No right of his is therefore invaded. Thus, if the tax on animals be a fixed sum per head, or on articles a fixed sum per yard or bushel or gallon, there is nothing the owner can do which can affect the amount to be collected from him. So, if a person wishes a license to do business of a particular kind, or at a particular place, such as keeping a hotel or a restaurant, or selling liquors or cigars or clothes, he has only to pay the amount required by the law and go into the business. There is no need in such cases for notice or hearing. So, also, if taxes are imposed in the shape of licenses for privileges, such as those on foreign corporations for doing business in the state, or on domestic corporations for franchises, if the parties desire the privilege they have only to pay the amount required. In such cases there is no necessity for notice or hearing. The amount of the tax would not be changed by it. But where a tax is levied on property not specifically, but according to its value, to be ascertained by assessors appointed for that purpose, upon such evidence as they may obtain, a different principle comes in. The officers in estimating the value act judicially, and in most of the states provision is made for the correction of errors committed by them, through boards of revision or equalization, sitting at designated periods provided by law, to hear complaints respecting the justice of the assessments. The law, in prescribing the time when such complaints will be heard, gives all the notice required, and the proceeding by which the valuation is determined, though it may be followed, if the tax be not paid, by a sale of the delinquent's property, is due process of law.²

In some states, instead of a board of revision or equalization, the assessment may be revised by proceedings in the courts and be there corrected if erroneous, or set aside if invalid; or objections to the validity or amount of the assessment may be taken when the attempt is made to enforce it. In such cases all the opportunity is given to the tax-payer to be heard respecting the assessment which can be deemed essential to render the proceedings due process of law. In Davidson v. New Orleans, this court decided this precise point. * * * The court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said that it would lay down the following proposition as applicable to the case: "That whenever by the laws of a state, or by state authority, a tax, assessment, servitude, or other burden is imposed upon property for the public use, whether it be for the whole state or of some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, however obnoxious it may be to other objections." 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616.

This decision covers the cases at bar. The assessment under consideration could, by the law of California, be enforced only by legal proceedings, and in them any defense going either to its validity or amount could be pleaded. In ordinary taxation assessments, if not altered by a board of revision or of equalization, stand good, and the tax levied may be collected by a sale of the delinquent's property; but assessments in California, for the purpose of reclaiming overflowed and swamp lands, can be enforced only by suits, and, of course, to their validity it is essential that notice be given to the tax-payer, and opportunity be afforded him to be heard respecting the assessment. In them he may set forth, by way of defense, all his grievances. Reclamation Dist. No. 108 v. Evans, 61 Cal. 104. If property taken upon an assessment, which can only be enforced in this way, be not taken by due process of law, then, as said by Mr. Justice Miller in the New Orleans Case, these words, as used in the Constitution, can have no definite meaning. * * *

² That the duties of assessors in estimating the value of property for purposes of general taxation are judicial, see Barhyte v. Shepherd, 35 N. Y. 238, 250; Hassan v. City of Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, 536; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Williams v. Weaver, 75 N. Y. 30, 33; Cooley, Tax'n, 266; Burroughs, Tax'n, § 102; Jordan v. Hyatt, 3 Barb. 275, 283; Ireland v. City of Rochester, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 416, 430, 431; State v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City, 24 N. J. Law, 662, 666; State v. Mayor, etc., of Town of Morristown, 34 N. J. Law, 445; Griffin v. Mixon, 38 Miss. 437, 438.—Rep.

Decrees affirmed.*

* For the procedure necessary in taxation, see, also, Spencer v. Merchant, post, p. 640; Norwood v. Baker, post, p. 649, and notes.

In Turpin v. Lemon, 187 U. S. 51, 60, 23 Sup. Ct. 20, 24, 47 L. Ed. 70 (1902), Brown, J., said (holding a tax deed might be made prima facie evidence of the regularity of all prior proceedings upon which it was based): "Under the fourteenth amendment the legislature is bound to provide a method for the assessment and collection of taxes that shall not be inconsistent with natural justice; but it is not bound to provide that the particular steps of a procedure for the collection of such taxes shall be proved by written evidence; and it may properly impose upon the taxpayer the burden of showing that in a particular case the statutory method was not observed."

As to the power of the legislature over presumptions and prima facie evidence in general, see the cases below under Chapter X, section 3, pp. 381-383.

As to the kind of notice and hearing necessary in taxation, see Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 210 U. S. 373, 385, 386, 28 Sup. Ct. 708, 714, 52 L. Ed. 1103 (1908), in which Moody, J., said: "Where the legislature of a state, instead of fixing the tax itself, commits to some subordinate body the duty of determining whether, in what amount, and upon whom it shall be levied, and of making its assessment and apportionment, due process of law requires that, at some stage of the proceedings, before the tax becomes irrevocably fixed, the taxpayer shall have an opportunity to be heard, of which he must have notice, either personal, by publication, or by a law fixing the time and place of the hearing. * * * If it is enough that, under such circumstances, an opportunity is given to submit in writing all objections to and complaints of the tax to the board, then there was a hearing afforded in the case at bar. But we think that something more than that, even in proceedings for taxation, is required by due process of law. Many requirements essential in strictly judicial proceedings may be dispensed with in proceedings of this nature. But even here a hearing, in its very essence, demands that he who is entitled to it shall have the right to support his allegations by argument, however brief; and, if need be, by proof, however informal. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 426, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031, 1036; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 171 et seq., 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369, 393."

In Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 188, 30 Am. Rep. 289 (1878), Earl, J., said (regarding an assessment for local improvements): "It is not enough that the owners may by chance have notice, or that they may as a matter of favor have a hearing. The law must require notice to them, and give them the right to a hearing and an opportunity to be heard. It matters not, upon the question of the constitutionality of such a law, that the assessment has in fact been fairly apportioned. The constitutional validity of a law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but by what may by its authority be done."

See, also, Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. Minnesota, 159 U. S. 526, 16 Sup. Ct. 83, 40 L. Ed. 247 (1895); Glidden v. Harrington, 189 U. S. 255, 23 Sup. Ct. 574, 47 L. Ed. 798 (1903); Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Wright, 207 U. S. 127, 28 Sup. Ct. 47, 52 L. Ed. 134, 12 Ann. Cas. 163 (1907) (hearing conditional only upon admitting taxability of property is insufficient).

COLLECTION OF TAXES FROM PROPERTY OF STRANGERS TO THE TAX.—See cases in note to Tappan v. Bank, post, at p. 560, and also Common Council of City of Detroit v. Board of Assessors of City of Detroit, 91 Mich. 78, 51 N. W. 787, 16 L. R. A. 59 (1892) (tax on interest of mortgagee a lien on mortgagor's fee); Hodge v. Muscatine County, 196 U. S. 276, 25 Sup. Ct. 237, 49 L. Ed. 477 (1905) (tax on business of tenant a lien on land); Morrow v. Dows, 28 N. J. Eq.

TWINING v. NEW JERSEY.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1908. 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97.)

[Error to the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. Twin- ing and another were convicted in the Monmouth court of quarter sessions of a high misdemeanor in deceiving a state bank examiner, and were sentenced to six and four years of imprisonment respectively. In accordance with the law of the state, the jury were instructed that they might draw an unfavorable inference against the defendants' failure to testify in denial of evidence tending to incriminate him. The convictions being affirmed by the state appellate courts, this writ was taken on the ground that compulsory self-incrimination had been enforced against the defendants in violation of due process of law.]

Mr. Justice MOODY. * * * The exemption from testimonial compulsion, that is, from disclosure as a witness of evidence against oneself, forced by any form of legal process, is universal in American law, though there may be differences as to its exact scope and limits. At the time of the formation of the Union the principle that no person could be compelled to be a witness against himself had become embodied in the common law and distinguished it from all other systems of jurisprudence. It was generally regarded then, as now, as a privilege of great value, a protection to the innocent, though a shelter to the guilty, and a safeguard against heedless, unfounded, or tyrannical prosecutions. * * * The privilege was not included in the federal Constitution as originally adopted, but was placed in one of the ten amendments which were recommended to the states by the first Congress, and by them adopted. Since then all the states of the Union have, from time to time, with varying form, but uniform meaning, included the privilege in their Constitutions, except the states of New Jersey and Iowa, and in those states it is held to be part of the existing law. * * * [After referring to the historical interpretation of "due process of law" set forth in Murray v. Hoboken Land Co., ante, p. 262, and in Hurtado v. California, ante, p. 270:]

The question under consideration may first be tested by the application of these settled doctrines of this court. If the statement of Mr. Justice Curtis, as elucidated in Hurtado v. California, is to be taken literally, that alone might almost be decisive. For nothing is more certain, in point of historical fact, than that the practice of compulsory self-incrimination in the courts and elsewhere existed for four hundred years after the granting of Magna Charta, continued throughout the reign of Charles I (though then beginning to be seriously questioned), gained at least some foothold among the early colonists of this country, and was not entirely omitted at trials in England until the eighteenth century. Wigmore, Ev. § 2250 (see for the colonies, note 108); Hallam's Constitutional History of England, chapter 8, Widdleton's American Ed. vol. 2, p. 37 (describing the criminal jurisdiction of the court of star chamber); Bentham's Rationale of Judicial Evidence, book 9, chap. 3, § 4. [Here follow references to particular English and colonial practices in this regard.]

459 (1877) (goods of tenant seizable for tax on land); Hersee v. Porter, 100 N. Y. 403, 3 N. E. 338 (1885) (goods of A., with A.'s consent in possession of B., seizable for tax on any land of B.). Compare (contra in part to these doctrines): Daniels v. Nelson, 41 Vt. 161, 98 Am. Dec. 577 (1868); Chauvin v. Valiton, 8 Mont. 451, 20 Pac. 658, 3 L. R. A. 194 (1889); Knoxville Traction Co. v. McMillan, 111 Tenn. 521, 77 S. W. 665, 65 L. R. A. 296 (1903).

But, without repudiating or questioning the test proposed by Mr. Justice Curtis for the court, or rejecting the inference drawn from English law, we prefer to rest our decision on broader grounds, and inquire whether the exemption from self-incrimination is of such a nature that it must be included in the conception of due process. Is it a fundamental principle of liberty and justice which inheres in the very idea of free government and is the inalienable right of a citizen of such a government? * * * In the decision of this question we have the authority to take into account only those fundamental rights which are expressed in that provision; not the rights fundamental in citizenship, state or national, for they are secured otherwise; but the rights fundamental in due process, and therefore an essential part of it. We have to consider whether the right is so fundamental in due process that a refusal of the right is a denial of due process.

One aid to the solution of the question is to inquire how the right was rated during the time when the meaning of due process was in a formative state, and before it was incorporated in American constitutional law. Did those who then were formulating and insisting upon the rights of the people entertain the view that the right was so fundamental that there could be no due process without it? It has already appeared that, prior to the formation of the American Constitutions, in which the exemption from compulsory self-incrimination was specifically secured, separately, independently, and side by side with the requirement of due process, the doctrine was formed, as other doctrines of the law of evidence have been formed, by the course of decision in the courts, covering a long period of time. Searching further, we find nothing to show that it was then thought to be other than a just and useful principle of law. None of the great instruments in which we are accustomed to look for the declaration of the fundamental rights made reference to it. The privilege was not dreamed of for hundreds of years after Magna Charta (1215), and could not have been implied in the "law of the land" there secured. The Petition of Right (1629), though it insists upon the right secured by Magna Charta to be condemned only by the law of the land, and sets forth, by way of grievance, divers violations of it, is silent upon the practice of compulsory self-incrimination, though it was then a matter of common occurrence in all the courts of the realm. The Bill of Rights of the first year of the reign of William and Mary (1689) is likewise silent, though the practice of questioning the prisoner at his trial had not then ceased.

The negative argument which arises out of the omission of all reference to any exemption from compulsory self-incrimination in these three great declarations of English liberty (though it is not supposed to amount to a demonstration) is supported by the positive argument that the English courts and Parliaments, as we have seen, have dealt with the exemption as they would have dealt with any other rule of evidence, apparently without a thought that the question was affected by the law of the land of Magna Charta, or the due process of law which is its equivalent. * * * [Here follow references to the amendments to the original Constitution proposed by the states ratifying it.]

Thus it appears that four only of the thirteen original states insisted upon incorporating the privilege in the Constitution, and they separately and simultaneously with the requirement of due process of law, and that three states proposing amendments were silent upon this subject. It is worthy of note that two of these four states did not incorporate the privilege in their own Constitutions, where it would have had a much wider field of usefulness, until many years after. New York in 1821 and Rhode Island in 1842 (its first Constitution). This survey does not tend to show that it was then in this country the universal or even general belief that the privilege ranked among the fundamental and inalienable rights of mankind; and what is more important here, it affirmatively shows that the privilege was not conceived to be inherent in due process of law, but, on the other hand, a right separate, independent, and outside of due process. Congress, in submitting the amendments to the several states, treated the two rights as exclusive of each other. Such also has been the view of the states in framing their own Constitutions, for in every case, except in New Jersey and Iowa, where the due process clause or its equivalent is included, it has been thought necessary to include separately the privilege clause. Nor have we been referred to any decision of a state court, save one (State v. Height, 117 Iowa, 650, 91 N. W. 935, 59 L. R. A. 437, 94 Am. St. Rep. 323), where the exemption has been held to be required by due process of law. The inference is irresistible that it has been the opinion of constitution makers that the privilege, if fundamental in any sense, is not fundamental in due process of law, nor an essential part of it. We believe that this opinion is proved to have been correct by every historical test by which the meaning of the phrase can be tried.

The decisions of this court, though they are silent on the precise question before us, ought to be searched to discover if they present any analogies which are helpful in its decision. The essential elements of due process of law, already established by them, are singularly few, though of wide application and deep significance. We are not here concerned with the effect of due process in restraining substantive laws, as, for example, that which forbids the taking of private property for public use without compensation. We need notice now only those cases which deal with the principles which must be observed in the trial of criminal and civil causes. Due process requires that the court which assumes to determine the rights of parties shall have jurisdiction (Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 733, 24 L. Ed. 565, 572; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896; Old Wayne Mut. Life Asso. v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 27 Sup. Ct. 236, 51 L. Ed. 345), and that there shall be notice and opportunity for hearing given the parties (Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 17 Sup. Ct. 841, 42 L. Ed. 215; Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 20 Sup. Ct. 410, 44 L. Ed. 520; and see Londoner v. Denver, 210 U. S. 373, 28 Sup. Ct. 708, 52 L. Ed. 1103). Subject to these two fundamental conditions, which seem to be universally prescribed in all systems of law established by civilized countries, this court has, up to this time, sustained all state laws, statutory or judicially declared, regulating procedure, evidence, and methods of trial, and held them to be consistent with due process of law.¹ * * *

The cases proceed upon the theory that, given a court of justice which has jurisdiction, and acts, not arbitrarily, but in conformity, with a general law, upon evidence, and after inquiry made with notice to the parties affected and opportunity to be heard, then all the requirements of due process, so far as it relates to procedure in court and methods of trial and character and effect of evidence, are complied with. * * * [Here follow quotations from various cases to this effect.]

In Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the whole court, said, in effect, that the fourteenth amendment would not prevent a state from adopting or continuing the civil law instead of the common law. This dictum has been approved and made an essential part of the reasoning of the decision in Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 387, 389, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 789, 790, and Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 598, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597. The statement excludes the possibility that the privilege is essential to due process, for it hardly need be said that the interrogation of the accused at his trial is the practice in the civil law.

¹ Here follows a rather full citation of cases. See Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 579, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262 (1884) (presence of accused at trial); Howard v. Kentucky, 200 U. S. 164, 26 Sup. Ct. 189, 50 L. Ed. 421 (1906) (same); Diaz v. United States, 223 U. S. 442, 32 Sup. Ct. 250, 56 L. Ed. 500 (1912) (same); Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 45 L. Ed. 1165 (1901) (same—lunacy proceedings); Schwab v. Berggren, 143 U. S. 442, 12 Sup. Ct. 525, 36 L. Ed. 218 (1892) (same—appellate proceedings); Felts v. Murphy, 201 U. S. 123, 26 Sup. Ct. 366, 50 L. Ed. 689 (1906) (accused too deaf to hear evidence); Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Schmidt, 177 U. S. 230, 20 Sup. Ct. 620, 44 L. Ed. 747 (1900) (judgment against non-party); West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258, 24 Sup. Ct. 650, 48 L. Ed. 965 (1904) (use of depositions as criminal evidence); Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563 (1903) (no appeal necessary); Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638, 26 Sup. Ct. 560, 50 L. Ed. 899, 5 Ann. Cas. 783 (1906) (constitution of jury); Crain v. United States, 162 U. S. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. 952, 40 L. Ed. 1097 (1896) (necessity of criminal pleadings); Mobile, etc., Ry. v. Turnipseed, post, p. 381 (presumptions).

Even if the historical meaning of due process of law and the decisions of this court did not exclude the privilege from it, it would be going far to rate it as an immutable principle of justice which is the inalienable possession of every citizen of a free government. Salutary as the principle may seem to the great majority, it cannot be ranked with the right to hearing before condemnation, the immunity from arbitrary power not acting by general laws, and the inviolability of private property. The wisdom of the exemption has never been universally assented to since the days of Bentham, many doubt it to-day, and it is best defended not as an unchangeable principle of universal justice, but as a law proved by experience to be expedient. See Wigmore, Ev. § 2251. It has no place in the jurisprudence of civilized and free countries outside the domain of the common law, and it is nowhere observed among our own people in the search for truth outside the administration of the law. It should, must, and will be rigidly observed where it is secured by specific constitutional safeguards, but there is nothing in it which gives it a sanctity above and before Constitutions themselves. * * *

Judgment affirmed.²

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

² JURISDICTION.—What constitutes jurisdiction of a court to render judgments in personam and in rem is generally discussed in connection with the subject of Conflict of Laws. See, however, in addition to the cases cited in the principal case: York v. Texas, 137 U. S. 15, 11 Sup. Ct. 9, 34 L. Ed. 604 (1890); Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 98, 11 Sup. Ct. 36, 34 L. Ed. 608 (1890); Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517 (1895); Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569 (1899); Schibsy v. Westenholz, L. R. 6 Q. B. 155 (1870); De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82 (1896), annotated in 53 Am. St. Rep. 179-191; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 92, 34 L. Ed. 670 (1890); Feyerick v. Bulbard, 71 L. J. K. B. 509 (1902); Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 10 Sup. Ct. 557, 33 L. Ed. 918 (1890) (proceedings in rem); Cunnius v. Reading School Dist., 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121 (1905) (same); Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1 (1906) (divorce); Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry, 228 U. S. 346, 33 Sup. Ct. 550, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (accounts of administrator); Selover, Bates & Co. v. Walsh, 226 U. S. 112, 33 Sup. Ct. 69, 57 L. Ed. — (1912) (contract to sell foreign land).

As to jurisdiction to impose personal obligations (other than judgments) upon non-residents not subject to state process, see Dewey v. Des Moines, post, p. 571 (land taxes); Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 27 Sup. Ct. 755, 51 L. Ed. 1163 (1907) (stockholder's liability for corporate debts); Corry v. Baltimore, 196 U. S. 466, 25 Sup. Ct. 297, 49 L. Ed. 556 (1905) (same—for taxes on shares of stock). As to jurisdiction to penalize extraterritorial acts, see United States v. Holmes, 5 Wheat. 412, 5 L. Ed. 122 (1820) (pirate vessel); United States v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071

UNITED STATES v. JU TOY.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1905. 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 49 L. Ed. 1040.)

Mr. Justice HOLMES. This case comes here on a certificate from the circuit court of appeals presenting certain questions of law. It appears that the appellee, being detained by the master of the steamship Doric for return to China, presented a petition for habeas corpus to the district court, alleging that he was a native-born citizen of the United States, returning after a temporary departure, and was denied permission to land by the collector of the port of San Francisco. It also appears from the petition that he took an appeal from the denial, and that the decision was affirmed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. No further grounds are stated. The writ issued, and the United States made return, and answered, showing all the proceedings before the Department, which are not denied to have been in regular form, and setting forth all of the evidence and the orders made. The answer also denied the allegations of the petition. Motions to dismiss the writ were made on the grounds that the decision of the Secretary was conclusive, and that no abuse of authority was shown. These were denied, and the district court decided, seemingly on new evidence, subject to exceptions, that Ju Toy was a native-born citizen of the United States. An appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals, alleging errors the nature of which has been indicated. Thereupon the latter court certified the following questions: * * *

"Third. In a habeas corpus proceeding in a district court of the (1893) (domestic vessel); Nielsen v. Oregon, 212 U. S. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. 383, 53 L. Ed. 528 (1909) (non-resident); American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347, 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 826, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047 (1909) (domestic corporation); U. S. v. Nord-Deutscher Lloyd, 223 U. S. 512, 32 Sup. Ct. 214, 56 L. Ed. 531 (1912) (foreign corporation); Strassheim v. Daily, 221 U. S. 280, 284, 285, 31 Sup. Ct. 558, 55 L. Ed. 735 (1911) (foreign acts producing effect within state).

As to jurisdiction for taxation, see post, pp. 535-573.

NOTICE.—As to what constitutes a proper mode of giving notice, see Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691 (1896) (publication—escheat); Cummins v. Reading School Dist., 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121 (1905) (same—distributing estate of absentee); Jacob v. Roberts, 223 U. S. 261, 32 Sup. Ct. 303, 56 L. Ed. 429 (1912) (same—quieting title); Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 509, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563 (1903) (statutory notice); Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 20 Sup. Ct. 410, 44 L. Ed. 520 (1900) (length of notice necessary); In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 658, 41 L. Ed. 1110 (1897) (notice valid against non-parties to suit); Straub v. Lyman Land Co. (S. D.) 138 N. W. 957 (1912) (notice served out of state); Wetmore, Use of McKay, v. Karrick, 205 U. S. 141, 27 Sup. Ct. 434, 51 L. Ed. 745 (1907) (vacation of judgment).

As to necessary content of notice, see Ontario Land Co. v. Wilfong, 223 U. S. 543, 32 Sup. Ct. 328, 56 L. Ed. 544 (1912) (description of property taxed); Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. Missouri ex inf. Hadley, 224 U. S. 279, 32 Sup. Ct. 406, 56 L. Ed. 760 (1912) (judgment must be responsive to complaint); Washington v. Fairchild, 224 U. S. 510, 32 Sup. Ct. 535, 56 L. Ed. 863 (1912) (same of railway commission's orders).

HEARING.—As to what constitutes a proper hearing, see Louisville & N. Ry.

United States, instituted * * * [upon the grounds of this case], should the court treat the finding and action of such executive officers upon the question of citizenship and other questions of fact as having been made by a tribunal authorized to decide the same, and as final and conclusive unless it be made affirmatively to appear that such officers, in the case submitted to them, abused the discretion vested in them, or, in some other way, in hearing and determining the same, committed prejudicial error?" * * *

The broad question is presented whether or not the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is conclusive. It was held in United States v. Sing Tuck, 194 U. S. 161, 167, 920, 24 Sup. Ct. 621, 48 L. Ed. 917, that the act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat. 372, 390, c. 301, § 1, [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1303]), purported to make it so, but whether the statute could have that effect constitutionally was left untouched, except by a reference to cases where an opinion already had been expressed. To quote the latest first, in Japanese Immigrant Case (Yamataya v. Fisher) 189 U. S. 86, 97, 724, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 613, 47 L. Ed. 721, it was said: "That Congress may exclude aliens of a particular race from the United States, prescribe the terms and conditions upon which certain classes of aliens may come to this country, establish regulations for sending out of the country such aliens as come here in violation of law, and commit the enforcement of such provisions, conditions, and regulations exclusively to executive officers, without judicial intervention, are principles firmly established by the decisions of this court." See, also, United States ex rel. Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279, 290, 291, 24 Sup. Ct. 719, 48 L. Ed. 979, Co. v. Woodson, 134 U. S. 614, 10 Sup. Ct. 628, 33 L. Ed. 1032 (1890); Lowe v. Kansas, 163 U. S. 81, 16 Sup. Ct. 1031, 41 L. Ed. 78 (1896); Chin Yow v. United States, 208 U. S. 8, 28 Sup. Ct. 201, 52 L. Ed. 369 (1908); Londoner v. Denver, ante, p. 279, note; United States C. & C. Traction Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 226 U. S. 14, 20, 33 Sup. Ct. 5, 57 L. Ed. — (1912) (private investigation by tribunal); Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S. 460, 32 Sup. Ct. 734, 56 L. Ed. 1165 (1912) (power to compel attendance of witnesses in alien exclusion case not necessary). It is sufficient if a hearing is afforded at any time before final judgment. Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 415, 22 Sup. Ct. 384, 46 L. Ed. 612 (1902).

As to how far a party's own misconduct may validly operate to deprive him of a hearing, see Allen v. Georgia, 166 U. S. 138, 17 Sup. Ct. 525, 41 L. Ed. 949 (1897); Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 17 Sup. Ct. 841, 42 L. Ed. 215 (1897); Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 349 ff., 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645 (1909).

NON-PROCEDURAL PROTECTION TO PERSONS ACCUSED OF CRIME.—The principal case and its notes consider how far various procedural requirements (some of which are usually specifically secured by other constitutional provisions) are necessary to due process of law. Most Constitutions also secure to persons accused of crime certain additional privileges not strictly of a procedural character. As to how far some of these are also included in the notion of due process, see Ex parte Ulrich (D. C.) 42 Fed. 587 (1890) (double jeopardy) [reversed on other grounds in (C. C.) 43 Fed. 661 (1890)]; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519 (1890) (punishment); Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 111, 29 Sup. Ct. 220, 53 L. Ed. 417 (1909) (same); Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658 (1908) (searches and seizures).

983, 984; Chin Bak Kan v. United States, 186 U. S. 193, 200, 22 Sup. Ct. 891, 46 L. Ed. 1121, 1125. In Fok Young Yo v. United States, 185 U. S. 296, 304, 305, 22 Sup. Ct. 686, 46 L. Ed. 917, 921, it was held that the decision of the collector of customs on the right of transit across the territory of the United States was conclusive, and, still more to the point, in Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 15 Sup. Ct. 967, 39 L. Ed. 1082, where the petitioner for habeas corpus alleged facts which, if true, gave him a right to enter and remain in the country, it was held that the decision of the collector was final as to whether or not he belonged to the privileged class.

It is true that it may be argued that these cases are not directly conclusive of the point now under decision. It may be said that the parties concerned were aliens, and that although they alleged absolute rights, and facts which it was contended went to the jurisdiction of the officer making the decision, still their rights were only treaty or statutory rights, and therefore were subject to the implied qualification imposed by the later statute, which made the decision of the collector with regard to them final. The meaning of the cases, and the language which we have quoted, is not satisfied by so narrow an interpretation, but we do not delay upon them. They can be read.

It is established, as we have said, that the act purports to make the decision of the Department final, whatever the ground on which the right to enter the country is claimed,—as well when it is citizenship as when it is domicile, and the belonging to a class excepted from the exclusion acts. United States v. Sing Tuck, 194 U. S. 161, 167, 24 Sup. Ct. 621, 48 L. Ed. 917, 920; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 546, 547, 39 L. Ed. 1082, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967. It also is established by the former case and others which it cites that the relevant portion of the act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat. 372, c. 301), is not void as a whole. The statute has been upheld and enforced. But the relevant portion being a single section, accomplishing all its results by the same general words, must be valid as to all that it embraces, or altogether void. An exception of a class constitutionally exempted cannot be read into those general words merely for the purpose of saving what remains. That has been decided over and over again * * * [citing U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, and other cases]. It necessarily follows that when such words are sustained, they are sustained to their full extent.

In view of the cases which we have cited it seems no longer open to discuss the question propounded as a new one. Therefore we do not analyze the nature of the right of a person presenting himself at the frontier for admission. In re Ross (Ross v. McIntyre) 140 U. S. 453, 464, 11 Sup. Ct. 897, 35 L. Ed. 581, 586. But it is not improper to add a few words. The petitioner, although physically within our boundaries, is to be regarded as if he had been stopped at the limit of our jurisdiction, and kept there while his right to enter was under debate. If, for the purpose of argument, we assume that the fifth amendment applies to him, and that to deny entrance to a citizen is to deprive him of liberty, we nevertheless are of opinion that with regard to him due process of law does not require judicial trial. That is the result of the cases which we have cited, and the almost necessary result of the power of Congress to pass exclusion laws. That the decision may be intrusted to an executive officer, and that his decision is due process of law, was affirmed and explained in Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 660, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146, 1149, and in Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 713, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905, 913, before the authorities to which we already have referred. It is unnecessary to repeat the often-quoted remarks of Mr. Justice Curtis, speaking for the whole court in Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co., 18 How. 272, 280, 15 L. Ed. 372, 376, to show that the requirement of a judicial trial does not prevail in every case. Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 546, 547, 15 Sup. Ct. 967, 39 L. Ed. 1082, 1085; Japanese Immigrant Case (Yamataya v. Fisher) 189 U. S. 86, 100, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 47 L. Ed. 721, 725; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 508, 509, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 48 L. Ed. 1092, 1098.

We are of opinion that * * * the third question should be answered, "Yes." * * *

So certified.

[BREWER, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which PECKHAM, J., concurred. DAY, J., also dissented.]

ADMINISTRATIVE DETERMINATION OF FACTS.—In respect to controversies arising out of the administration of law on behalf of the public, not involving the punishment of offenses, due process of law is afforded, in the absence of fraud or other manifest abuse of authority, by submitting to an administrative tribunal the final determination of facts, after a fair hearing. Hilton v. Merritt, 110 U. S. 97, 3 Sup. Ct. 548, 28 L. Ed. 83 (1884) (appraisal of imports); Burfenning v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 163 U. S. 321, 16 Sup. Ct. 1018, 41 L. Ed. 175 (1896) (administration of public land system); Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 167-170, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369 (1896) (lands benefited by an irrigation scheme); Bushnell v. Leland, 164 U. S. 684, 17 Sup. Ct. 209, 41 L. Ed. 598 (1897) (appointment of national bank receiver); Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 695, 17 Sup. Ct. 718, 41 L. Ed. 1165 (1897) (value of property taken by eminent domain); United States ex rel. Bernardin v. Duell, 172 U. S. 576, 583, 19 Sup. Ct. 286, 43 L. Ed. 559 (1899) (issuing of patents prior to 1836); Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 515, 516, 22 Sup. Ct. 95, 46 L. Ed. 298 (1902) (long and short haul regulation); Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 24 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195 (1903) (benefits from street improvement); Bates & G. Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 48 L. Ed. 894 (1904) (classification of mail matter); Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 48 L. Ed. 1092 (1904) (excluding fraudulent matter from the mails); Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523 (1907) (obstruction of navigation by bridge).

ADMINISTRATIVE DETERMINATION OF LAW.—Likewise, whenever the determination of questions of law arising in administrative proceedings is clearly left to the final decision of an administrative tribunal, there can be no appeal to the courts save for abuse of authority. United States ex rel. Riverside Oil Co. v. Hitchcock, 190 U. S. 316, 23 Sup. Ct. 638, 47 L. Ed. 1074 (1903), approved in Bates & G. Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 109, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 48 L. Ed. 894 (1904) (citing earlier cases).

In Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 507, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 391, 47 L. Ed. 563 (1903), upholding the action of a state board vested with power finally to determine certain questions of law and fact upon which depended an applicant's right to practice medicine, Brewer, J., said: "We know of no provision in the federal Constitution which forbids a state from granting to a tribunal, whether called a court or a board of registration, the final determination of a legal question. Indeed, it not infrequently happens that a full discharge of their duties compels boards, or officers of a purely ministerial character, to consider and determine questions of a legal nature. Due process is not necessarily judicial process. Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; In re Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 289, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552, 562; Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 83, 23 Sup. Ct. 28, 32, 47 L. Ed. 79; People v. Hasbrouck, 11 Utah, 291, 39 Pac. 918. In the last case this very question was presented, and in the opinion, on page 305, of 11 Utah, on page 921, of 39 Pac., it was said: 'The objection that the statute attempts to confer judicial power on the board is not well founded. Many executive officers, even those who are spoken of as purely ministerial officers, act judicially in the determination of facts in the performance of their official duties; and in so doing they do not exercise "judicial power," as that phrase is commonly used, and as it is used in the organic act in conferring judicial power upon specified courts. The powers conferred on the board of medical examiners are nowise different in character in this respect from those exercised by the examiners of candidates to teach in our public schools, or by tax assessors or boards of equalization in determining for purposes of taxation, the value of property. The ascertainment and determination of qualifications to practice medicine by a board of competent experts, appointed for that purpose, is not the exercise of a power which appropriately belongs to the judicial department of the government.'"

So, also, Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration & Examination, 66 Kan. 719, 72 Pac. 247 (1903) (revocation of physician's license), affirmed Meffert v. Packer, 195 U. S. 625, 25 Sup. Ct. 790, 49 L. Ed. 350, annotated in 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811-813.

See, also, State v. Thorne, ante, p. 72, note for the distinction between "acting judicially" and exercising such particular judicial powers as are generally vested in courts.

DETERMINATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE JURISDICTION.—Questions as to the existence or extent of the jurisdiction or authority claimed by an administrative tribunal are seldom left to its final determination, even if this would be consistent with due process, American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 23 Sup. Ct. 33, 47 L. Ed. 90 (1902); Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 171, 48 L. Ed. 317 (1901); and no doubt statutes will be less readily interpreted as designed to give such tribunals the final word in questions of law than in questions of fact. As to the distinction between a tribunal's power to determine its jurisdiction and to determine controversies within its jurisdiction, see Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 234, 235, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039 (1908); Interstate Commerce Commission v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 216 U. S. 538, 30 Sup. Ct. 417, 54 L. Ed. 608 (1910); Interstate Commerce Commission v. United States ex rel. Humboldt S. S. Co., 224 U. S. 474, 484, 32 Sup. Ct. 556, 56 L. Ed. 819 (1912).

In Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. Ry. Co., 227 U. S. 88, 91, 92, 33 Sup. Ct. 185, 186, 57 L. Ed. — (1913), the Interstate Commerce Commission had acted under its statutory power to set aside a railroad rate, if, after a hearing, it was of the opinion that the rate was unreasonable. In discussing the extent to which a judicial review of this determination was permissible, Lamar, J., said: "The statute gave the right to a full hearing, and that conferred the privilege of introducing testimony, and at the same time imposed the duty of deciding in accordance with the facts proved. A finding without evidence is arbitrary and baseless. And if the government's contention is correct, it would mean that the Commission had a power possessed by no other officer, administrative body, or tribunal under our government. It would mean that, where rights depended upon facts, the Commission could disregard all rules of evidence, and capriciously make findings by administrative fiat. Such authority, however beneficently exercised in one case, could be injuriously exerted in another, is inconsistent with rational justice, and comes under the Constitution's condemnation of all arbitrary exercise of power. In the comparatively few cases in which such questions have arisen it has been distinctly recognized that administrative orders, quasi judicial in character, are void if a hearing was denied; if that granted was inadequate or manifestly unfair; if the finding was contrary to the 'indisputable character of the evidence' (Tang Tun v. Edsell, 223 U. S. 681, 32 Sup. Ct. 359, 56 L. Ed. 610; Chin Yow v. United States, 208 U. S. 13, 28 Sup. Ct. 201, 52 L. Ed. 370; Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S. 468, 32 Sup. Ct. 734, 56 L. Ed. 1167; Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S. 272, 33 Sup. Ct. 31, 57 L. Ed. —), or if the facts found do not, as a matter of law, support the order made. * * * Whether the order deprives the carrier of a constitutional or statutory right, whether the hearing was adequate and fair, or whether for any reason the order is contrary to law—are all matters within the scope of judicial power. Under the statute the carrier retains the primary right to make rates, but if, after hearing, they are shown to be unreasonable, the Commission may set them aside and require the substitution of just for unjust charges. The Commission's right to act depends upon the existence of this fact, and if there was no evidence to show that the rates were unreasonable there was no jurisdiction to make the order. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 216 U. S. 544, 30 Sup. Ct. 417, 54 L. Ed. 609. In a case like the present the courts will not review the Commission's conclusions of fact (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 220 U. S. 251, 31 Sup. Ct. 392, 55 L. Ed. 456) by passing upon the credibility of witnesses or conflicts in the testimony. But the legal effect of evidence is a question of law. A finding without evidence is beyond the power of the Commission."

See, also, the rules for reviewing the Commission's orders laid down in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 222 U. S. 541, 547, 32 Sup. Ct. 108, 56 L. Ed. 308 (1912). For the practical application of these rules see the discussion in the same case on the merits, and in Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 433, 31 Sup. Ct. 288, 55 L. Ed. 283 (1911) [compare Southern Pac. Co. v. United States (Com. C.) 197 Fed. 167 (1912)]; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. Ry. Co., above; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission (Com. C.) 190 Fed. 591 (1911) [compare Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. United States (Com. C.) 203 Fed. 56 (1913)].

SEPARATION OF DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT.—Due process of law does not necessarily require a separation of departments in the administration of government. Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 519, 17 Sup. Ct. 665, 41 L. Ed. 1095 (1897); Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 83, 84, 23 Sup. Ct. 28, 47 L. Ed. 79 (1902); Michigan Cent. Ry. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 294, 26 Sup. Ct. 459, 50 L. Ed. 744 (1906); Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 225, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150 (1908); Winchester, etc., Ry. v. Com., supra, p. 95, note.

CRIMINAL PUNISHMENT BY ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL.—An administrative tribunal cannot "under our system of government and consistently with due process of law be invested with authority to compel obedience to its orders by a judgment of fine or imprisonment. * * * [This] can only be exerted, under the law of the land, by a competent judicial tribunal having jurisdiction in the premises."—Harlan, J., in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 485, 155 U. S. 3, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 15 Sup. Ct. 19, 38 L. Ed. 1017, 39 L. Ed. 49 (1894), ante, at p. 74. See, also, Wong Wing v. United States, post, p. 981, note, 16 Sup. Ct. 977, 41 L. Ed. 140. Compare Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 338-340, 29 Sup. Ct. 671, 53 L. Ed. 1013 (1909), permitting the infliction of a quasi-criminal pecuniary penalty by administrative coercion. See the reasoning of the extract from this case printed post, p. 238.

FALLBROOK IRRIGATION DIST. v. BRADLEY (1896) 164 U. S. 112, 167-170, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369, Mr. Justice PECKHAM (reversing the judgment of the federal Circuit Court for the Southern District of California, and upholding the creation of an irrigation taxing district under a state statute authorizing a county board of supervisors, upon certain proceedings being taken, to include in said district all lands that would be benefited by a common system of irrigation. It was alleged that certain lands not benefited had been improperly included by said board):

"Assuming for the purpose of this objection that the owner of these lands had, by the provisions of the act, and before the lands were finally included in the district, an opportunity to be heard before a proper tribunal upon the question of benefits, we are of opinion that the decision of such a tribunal, in the absence of actual fraud and bad faith, would be, so far as this court is concerned, conclusive upon that question. It cannot be that upon a question of fact, of such a nature, this court has the power to review the decision of the state tribunal which has been pronounced under a statute providing for a hearing upon notice. The erroneous decision of such a question of fact violates no constitutional provision. The circuit court in this case has not assumed to undertake any such review of a question of fact. * * *

"In view of the finding of the board of supervisors on this question of benefits, assuming that there has been one, this court cannot say, as a matter of law, that the lands of the plaintiff in this case have not been, or cannot be, benefited by this proposed irrigation. There can be no doubt that the board of supervisors (if it have power to hear the question of benefits, as to which something will be said under another head of this discussion) would be a proper and sufficient tribunal to satisfy the constitutional requirement in such case. In speaking of a board of supervisors, Mr. Chief Justice Waite, in Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 354, 4 Sup. Ct. 48, 52, 28 L. Ed. 173, said: 'Like every other tribunal established by the legislature for such a purpose, their duties are judicial in their nature, and they are bound, in morals and in law, to exercise an honest judgment as to all matters submitted for their official determination. It is not to be presumed that they will act otherwise than according to this rule.' In that case the board was to fix the price of water, while in this it is to determine the fact of benefits to lands. The principle is the same in each case.

"It may be that the action of the board upon any question of fact as to contents or sufficiency of the petition, or upon any other fact of a jurisdictional nature, is open to review in the state courts. It would seem to be so held in the Tregea Case, decided in 1891. 88 Cal. 334, 26 Pac. 237.

"If the state courts would have had the right to review these findings of fact, jurisdictional in their nature, the United States circuit court had the same right in this case; but it has not done so, its judgment being based upon the sole ground that the act was a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution. Upon the question of fact as to benefits, decided by the board, it is held in the Tregga Case that its decision is conclusive. 88 Cal. 334, and 26 Pac. 237, supra. Whether a review is or is not given upon any of these questions of fact (if the tribunal created by the state had power to decide them, and if an opportunity for a hearing were given by the act) is a mere question of legislative discretion. It is not constitutionally necessary in such cases to give a rehearing or an appeal. Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989; Pearson v. Yewdall, 95 U. S. 294, 24 L. Ed. 436.

"Very possibly a decision by the statutory tribunal which included tracts of land within the district that plainly could not, by any fair or proper view of the facts, be benefited by irrigation, would be the subject of a review in some form, and of a reversal by the courts, on the ground that the decision was based not alone upon no evidence in its favor, but that it was actually opposed to all the evidence, and to the plain and uncontradicted facts of common knowledge, and was given in bad faith. In such case the decision would not have been the result of fair or honest, although grossly mistaken, judgment, but would be one based upon bad faith and fraud, and so could not be conclusive, in the nature of things."

[FULLER, C. J., and FIELD, J., dissented.]

ERRONEOUS DECISIONS.—Mere error in a decision, whether of law or of fact, of a board or of a court, or in a civil or a criminal case, is not a denial of due process of law. In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 11 Sup. Ct. 191, 34 L. Ed. 796 (1890) (crime); Abbott v. National Bank of Commerce, 175 U. S. 409, 20 Sup. Ct. 153, 44 L. Ed. 217 (1899) (tort); Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Babcock, 204 U. S. 585, 27 Sup. Ct. 326, 51 L. Ed. 636 (1907) (taxation); Tracy v. Ginzberg, 205 U. S. 170, 27 Sup. Ct. 461, 51 L. Ed. 755 (1907) (title of property); Thompson v. Kentucky, 209 U. S. 340, 346, 28 Sup. Ct. 533, 536 (52 L. Ed. 822 [1908]), in which McKenna, J., said: "Due process of law does not assure to a taxpayer the interpretation of laws by the executive officers of a state as against their interpretation by the courts of the state, or relief from the consequences of a misinterpretation by either. * * * At any rate, it is the province of the courts to interpret the laws of the state, and he who acts under them must take his chance of being in accord with the final decision. And this is a hazard under every law, and from which or the consequences of which we know of no security."

In Patterson v. Colorado ex rel. Attorney General, 205 U. S. 454, 460, 461, 27 Sup. Ct. 556, 557, 51 L. Ed. 879, 10 Ann. Cas. 689 (1907), Holmes, J., said: "It is argued that the decisions criticised, and in some degree that in the present case, were contrary to well-settled previous adjudications of the same court, and this allegation is regarded as giving some sort of constitutional right to the plaintiff in error. But while it is true that the United States courts do not always hold themselves bound by state decisions in cases arising before them, that principle has but a limited application to cases brought from the state courts here on writs of error. Except in exceptional cases the grounds on which the circuit courts are held authorized to follow an earlier state decision rather than a later one, or to apply the rules of commercial law as understood by this court rather than those laid down by the local tribunals, are not grounds of constitutional right, but considerations of justice or expediency. There is no constitutional right to have all general propositions of law once adopted remain unchanged. Even if it be true, as the plaintiff in error says, that the supreme court at Colorado departed from earlier and well-established precedents to meet the exigencies of this case, whatever might be thought of the justice or wisdom of such a step, the Constitution of the United States is not infringed. It is unnecessary to lay down an absolute rule beyond the possibility of exception. Exceptions have been held to exist. But, in general, the decision of a court upon a question of law, however wrong and however contrary to previous decisions, is not an infraction of the fourteenth amendment merely because it is wrong or because earlier decisions are reversed."

So, also, Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 112, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91 (1895).

May an error in the administration of state law be so gross, even though not fraudulent, as to constitute a denial of due process? See Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 331, 11 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419 (1891); Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 232-235, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979 (1897); San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 750, 19 Sup. Ct. 804, 43 L. Ed. 1154 (1899); Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278, 281, 29 Sup. Ct. 533, 53 L. Ed. 512 (1909); McGovern v. New York, 229 U. S. 363, 370, 371, 33 Sup. Ct. 876, 57 L. Ed. — (1913); H. Schofield in 3 Ill. L. Rev. 195. As to the propriety of reviewing the mental operations of a tribunal in reaching a particular decision, see Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Babcock, 204 U. S. 585, 593-598, 27 Sup. Ct. 326, 51 L. Ed. 636 (1907).

FRAUDULENT DECISIONS.—As stated in the principal case, such decisions deny due process. Dicta to this effect occur in Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission, 134 U. S. 418, 466, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970 (1890); in Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 515, 516, 22 Sup. Ct. 95, 46 L. Ed. 298 (1902); and in Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Babcock, 204 U. S. 585, 27 Sup. Ct. 326, 51 L. Ed. 636 (1907). As to what the fraud must consist of, in administrative cases, see Ross v. Stewart, 227 U. S. 530, 539, 33 Sup. Ct. 345, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

PARTIALITY OR INCOMPETENCE OF TRIBUNAL.—In Jordan v. Massachusetts, 225 U. S. 167, 176, 32 Sup. Ct. 651, 652, 56 L. Ed. 1038 (1912), Lurton, J., said: "Due process implies a tribunal both impartial and mentally competent to afford a hearing." As to what will satisfy these requirements, see Jordan v. Massachusetts, above; Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 323 ff., 21 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195 (1903); Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 279, 280, 29 Sup. Ct. 50, 53 L. Ed. 176 (1908). For the common-law disqualification of a judge for interest, see Matter of Ryers, 72 N. Y. 1, 10-15, 28 Am. Rep. 88 (1878); and as to special political tribunals, see State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 961 (1901). Due process is not afforded by a hearing before a judge who has in advance decided the case and written his opinion. Ex parte Nelson (Mo.) 157 S. W. 794, 806-808 (1913).

LAWTON v. STEELE.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1894. 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of New York. Steele, an officer of New York, acting under the authority of the statute quoted in the opinion below, seized and destroyed fifteen nets owned by Lawton, found to be worth $216. Lawton was a fisherman, and at the time most of the nets were being used in fishing in New York waters in Jefferson county, and the rest were lying on the shore, having been recently used for the same purpose. Lawton sued Steele for the value of the destroyed nets, and a judgment for plaintiff was reversed by the state Court of Appeals, and judgment for defendant ordered to be entered in the state Supreme Court.]

Mr. Justice BROWN. This case involves the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature of the state of New York [printed in the note below.¹] * * * This last section was alleged to be unconstitutional and void for three reasons: (1) As depriving the citizen of his property without due process of law. * * *

The main, and only real difficulty connected with the act in question is in its declaration that any net, etc., maintained in violation of any law for the protection of fisheries, is to be treated as a public nuisance, "and may be abated and summarily destroyed by any person, and it shall be the duty of each and every protector aforesaid and ever game constable to seize, remove, and forthwith destroy the same." The legislature, however, undoubtedly possessed the power not only to prohibit fishing by nets in these waters, but to make it a criminal offence, and to take such measures as were reasonable and necessary to prevent such offences in the future. It certainly could not do this more effectually than by destroying the means of the offence. If the nets were being used in a manner detrimental to the interests of the public, we think it was within the power of the legislature to declare them to be nuisances, and to authorize the officers of the state to abate them. Hart v. The Mayor, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 571, 24 Am. Dec. 165; Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397.

An act of the Legislature which has for its object the preservation of the public interests against the illegal depredations of private individuals ought to be sustained, unless it is plainly violative of the Constitution, or subversive of private rights. In this case there can be no doubt of the right of the legislature to authorize judicial proceedings to be taken for the condemnation of the nets in question, and their sale or destruction by process of law. Congress has assumed this power in a large number of cases, by authorizing the condemnation of property which has been made use of for the purpose of defrauding the revenue. Examples of this are vessels illegally registered or owned, or employed in smuggling or other illegal traffic; distilleries or breweries illegally carried on or operated, and buildings standing upon or near the boundary line between the United States and another country, and used as depots for smuggling goods. In all these cases, however, the forfeiture was decreed by judicial proceeding. But where the property is of little value, and its use for the illegal purpose is clear, the legislature may declare it to be a nuisance, and subject to summary abatement. Instances of this are the power to kill diseased cattle; to pull down houses in the path of conflagrations; the destruction of decayed fruit or fish or unwholesome meats, or infected clothing, obscene books or pictures, or instruments which can only be used for illegal purposes. While the legislature has no right arbitrarily to declare that to be a nuisance which is clearly not so, a good deal must be left to its discretion in that regard, and if the object to be accomplished is conducive to the public interests, it may exercise a large liberty of choice in the means employed. Newark, etc., Ry. Co. v. Hunt, 50 N. J. Law, 308, 12 Atl. 697; Blazier v. Miller, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 435; Mouse's Case, 12 Coke, 62; Stone v. The Mayor, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 157, 173; Am. Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. Law, 248; Same v. Same, 23 N. J. Law, 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420.

¹ By the act of 1880 (Laws 1880, c. 591) as amended by the act of 1883 (Laws 1883, c. 317):

"Sec. 2. Any net, pound, or other means or device for taking or capturing fish, or whereby they may be taken or captured, set, put, floated, had, found, or maintained, in or upon any of the waters of this state, or upon the shores of or islands in any of the waters of this state, in violation of any existing or hereafter enacted statutes or laws for the protection of fish, is hereby declared to be, and is, a public nuisance, and may be abated and summarily destroyed by any person, and it shall be the duty of each and every protector aforesaid and of every game constable to seize and remove and forthwith destroy the same * * * and no action for damages shall lie or be maintained against any person for or on account of any such seizure and destruction."

It is not easy to draw the line between cases where property illegally used may be destroyed summarily and where judicial proceedings are necessary for its condemnation. If the property were of great value, as, for instance, if it were a vessel employed for smuggling or other illegal purposes, it would be putting a dangerous power in the hands of a custom officer to permit him to sell or destroy it as a public nuisance, and the owner would have good reason to complain of such act as depriving him of his property without due process of law. But where the property is of trifling value, and its destruction is necessary to effect the object of a certain statute, we think it is within the power of the legislature to order its summary abatement. For instance, if the legislature should prohibit the killing of fish by explosive shells, and should order the cartridges so used to be destroyed, it would seem like belittling the dignity of the judiciary to require such destruction to be preceded by a solemn condemnation in a court of justice. The same remark might be made of the cards, chips, and dice of a gambling-room.

The value of the nets in question was but $15 apiece. The cost of condemning one (and the use of one is as illegal as the use of a dozen), by judicial proceedings, would largely exceed the value of the net, and doubtless the state would, in many cases, be deterred from executing the law by the expense. They could only be removed from the water with difficulty, and were liable to injury in the process of removal. The object of the law is undoubtedly a beneficent one, and the state ought not to be hampered in its enforcement by the application of constitutional provisions which are intended for the protection of substantial rights of property. It is evident that the efficacy of this statute would be very seriously impaired by requiring every net illegally used to be carefully taken from the water, carried before a court or magistrate, notice of the seizure to be given by publication, and regular judicial proceedings to be instituted for its condemnation.

There is not a state in the Union which has not a constitutional provision entitling persons charged with crime to a trial by jury, and yet from time immemorial the practice has been to try persons charged with petty offences before a police magistrate, who not only passes upon the question of guilt, but metes out the proper punishment. This has never been treated as an infraction of the Constitution, though technically a person may in this way be deprived of his liberty without the intervention of a jury. Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 32 L. Ed. 223, and cases cited. So the summary abatement of nuisances without judicial process or proceeding was well known to the common law long prior to the adoption of the Constitution, and it has never been supposed that the constitutional provision in question in this case was intended to interfere with the established principles in that regard.

Nor is a person whose property is seized under the act in question without his legal remedy. If in fact his property has been used in violation of the act, he has no just reason to complain; if not, he may replevy his nets from the officer seizing them, or, if they have been destroyed, may have his action for their value.² In such cases the burden would be upon the defendant to prove a justification under the statute. As was said by the Supreme Court of New Jersey in a similar case (Am. Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. Law, 248, 259): "The party is not, in point of fact, deprived of a trial by jury. The evidence necessary to sustain the defence is changed. Even if the party were deprived of a trial by jury, the statute is not, therefore, necessarily unconstitutional." Indeed, it is scarcely possible that any actual injustice could be done in the practical administration of the act.

² This is essential in cases of this character. See North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 306, 318, 319, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276 (1908) (cases), in which Peckham, J., quoted with approval the following extract from Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 543, 544, 26 N. E. 100, 101 (10 L. R. A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850) (1891): "Of course there cannot be a trial by jury before killing an animal supposed to have a contagious disease, and we assume that the legislature may authorize its destruction in such emergencies without a hearing beforehand. But it does not follow that it can throw the loss on the owner without a hearing. If he cannot be heard beforehand he may be heard afterwards. The statute may provide for paying him in case it should appear that his property was not what the legislature has declared to be a nuisance, and may give him his hearing in that way. If it does not do so the statute may leave those who act under it to proceed at their peril, and the owner gets his hearing in an action against them."

See Adams v. Milwaukee, 228 U. S. 572, 584, 585, 33 Sup. Ct. 610, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (summary destruction of impure milk). But compare Raymond v. Fish, 51 Conn. 80, 50 Am. Rep. 3 (1883) (destruction of oyster bed, thought to contain disease germs).

It is said, however, that the nets are not in themselves a nuisance, but are perfectly lawful acts of manufacture, and are ordinarily used for a lawful purpose. This is, however, by no means a conclusive answer. Many articles, such, for instance, as cards, dice, and other articles used for gambling purposes, are perfectly harmless in themselves, but may become nuisances by being put to an illegal use, and in such cases fall within the ban of the law and may be summarily destroyed. It is true that this rule does not always follow from the illegal use of a harmless article. A house may not be torn down because it is put to an illegal use, since it may be as readily used for a lawful purpose (Ely v. Supervisors, 36 N. Y. 297), but where minor articles of personal property are devoted to such use the fact that they may be used for a lawful purpose would not deprive the legislature of the power to destroy them. The power of the legislature to declare that which is perfectly innocent in itself to be unlawful is beyond question (People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 12 N. E. 610, 60 Am. Rep. 452), and in such case the legislature may annex to the prohibited act all the incidents of a criminal offence, including the destruction of property denounced by it as a public nuisance.

In Weller v. Snover, 42 N. J. Law, 341, it was held that a fish warden for a county, appointed by the Governor, had the right, under an act of the Legislature, to enter upon land and destroy a fish basket constructed in violation of the statute, together with the materials of which it was composed, so that it might not again be used. It was stated in that case that "after a statute has declared an invasion of a public right to be a nuisance it may be abated by the destruction of the object used to effect it. The person who, with actual or constructive notice of the law, sets up such nuisance cannot sue the officer whose duty it has been made by the statute to execute its provisions." So in Williams v. Blackwall, 2 H. & C. 33, the right to take possession of or destroy any engine placed or used for catching salmon in contravention of law was held to extend to all persons, and was not limited to conservators or officers appointed under the act.

It is true there are several cases of a contrary purport. Some of these cases, however, may be explained upon the ground that the property seized was of considerable value (Leck v. Anderson, 57 Cal. 251, 40 Am. Rep. 115, boats as well as nets; Dunn v. Burleigh, 62 Me. 24, teams and supplies in lumbering; King v. Hayes, 80 Me. 206, 13 Atl. 882, a horse)—in others the court seems to have taken a more technical view of the law than the necessities of the case or an adequate protection of the owner required. Lowry v. Rainwater, 70

Mo. 152, 35 Am. Rep. 420; State v. Robbins, 124 Ind. 308, 24 N. E. 978, 8 L. R. A. 438; Ridgeway v. West, 60 Ind. 371. * * *

Judgment affirmed.³

[FULLER, C. J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which concurred FIELD and BREWER, JJ.]

OCEANIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. STRANAHAN (1909) 214 U. S. 320, 340-343, 29 Sup. Ct. 671, 53 L. Ed. 1013, Mr. Justice WHITE (affirming a judgment of the federal Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, upholding a federal statute forbidding any person to bring into the United States any alien afflicted with certain diseases, and providing [section 9] that, if it should appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that the existence of such disease might have been detected by a competent medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation, then the transportation company bringing in such alien should be liable to the port collector for $100 for each such case, and that none of its vessels should be granted clearance papers while said fine was unpaid. Plaintiff company sued to recover from the New York collector such a fine, payment of which was coerced by the certainty of great pecuniary loss if its vessels were not allowed to leave the port; other facts appearing in the opinion):

"It is urged that the fines which constituted the exactions were repugnant to the fifth amendment, because amounting to a taking of property without due process of law, since, as asserted, the fines were imposed, in some cases, without any previous notice, and in all cases without any adequate notice or opportunity to defend. Stated in the briefest form, the findings below show that on the arrival of a vessel, if the examining medical officers discovered that an immigrant was afflicted with one of the prohibited diseases, the owner of the vessel was notified of the fact. * * * The findings also established that, where a fine was imposed under section 9 by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, it was only done after the transmission to that official of the certificate of the examining medical officer that a particular alien immigrant had been found to be afflicted with one of the prohibited diseases, and that the state of the disease established in the opinion of the medical officer that it existed at the time of embarkation, and could then have been detected by a competent medical examination. * * * It is evident that the statute unambiguously excludes the conception that the steamship company was entitled to be heard, in the sense of raising an issue and tendering evidence concerning the condition of the alien immigrant upon arrival at the point of disembarkation, as the plain purpose of the statute was to exclusively commit that subject to the medical officers for which the statute provided. We shall, therefore, test the soundness of the proposition we are considering upon that assumption.

³ Accord: See cases in note to Cal. Reduc. Co. v. Sanitary Co., post, p. 451.

Contra: Wagner v. Upshur, 95 Md. 519, 52 Atl. 509, 93 Am. St. Rep. 412 (1902) (judicial proceeding must precede seizure of slot machine susceptible of innocent use).

"In view of the absolute power of Congress over the right to bring aliens into the United States we think it may not be doubted that the act would be beyond all question constitutional if it forbade the introduction of aliens afflicted with contagious diseases, and, as a condition to the right to bring in aliens, imposed upon every vessel bringing them in, as a condition of the right to do so, a penalty for every alien brought to the United States afflicted with the prohibited disease, wholly without reference to when and where the disease originated. It must then follow that the provision contained in the statute is of course valid, since it only subjects the vessel to the exaction when, as the result of the medical examination for which the statute provides, it appears that the alien immigrant afflicted with the prohibited malady is in such a stage of the disease that it must, in the opinion of the medical officer, have existed and been susceptible of discovery at the point of embarkation. Indeed, it is not denied that there was full power in Congress to provide for the examination of the alien by medical officers, and to attach conclusive effect to the result of that examination for the purposes of exclusion or deportation. But it is said the power to do so does not include the right to make the medical examination conclusive for the purpose of imposing a penalty upon the vessel for the negligent bringing in of an alien. We think the argument rests upon a distinction without a difference. It disregards the purpose which, as we have already pointed out, congress had in view in the enactment of the provision; that is, the guarding against the danger to arise from the wrongful taking on board of an alien afflicted with a contagious malady, not only to other immigrant passengers, but ultimately, it might be, to the entire people of the United States,—a danger arising from the possible admission of aliens who might contract the contagion during the voyage, and yet be entitled to admission because apparently not afflicted with the prohibited disease, owing to the fact that the time had not elapsed for the manifestation of its presence. In effect, all the contentions pressed in argument concerning the repugnancy of the statute to the due process clause really disregarded the complete and absolute power of Congress over the subject with which the statute deals. They mistakenly assume that mere form, and not substance, may be made by the courts the conclusive test as to the constitutional power of Congress to enact a statute. These conclusions are apparent, we think, since the plenary power of Congress as to the admission of aliens leaves no room for doubt as to its authority to impose the penalty, and its complete administrative control over the granting or refusal of a clearance also leaves no doubt of the right to endow administrative officers with discretion to refuse to perform the administrative act of granting a clearance, as a means of enforcing the penalty which there was lawful authority to impose."¹

CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. RY. CO. v. MINNESOTA ex rel. RAILROAD & WAREHOUSE COMMISSION.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1890. 134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Minnesota. By statute a state railroad and warehouse commission was created, empowered, among other things, to alter railroad rates within the state wherever they were found by the commission to be unequal or unreasonable. If a railroad did not adopt the rate prescribed by the commission, within ten days after notice of the commission's action, the commission was to publish said rate as the lawful one thereafter, and might compel the railroad to carry out its order by a mandamus to be issued by a state court on the application of the commission. Acting under this statute the commission reduced the rate on milk over a certain part of defendants' line, and applied for a mandamus to compel obedience to its order. The defendant's answer alleged its old rate to be reasonable and the new one unreasonable and a taking of its property without due process of law. The state Supreme Court refused to allow defendant to take testimony as to the reasonableness of the new rate and issued the mandamus. This writ of error was then taken.]

Mr. Justice BLATCHFORD. The opinion of the Supreme Court of Minnesota is reported in 38 Minn. 281, 37 N. W. 782. In it the court in the first place construed the statute on the question as to whether the court itself had jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, and held that it had. Of course, we cannot review this decision.

It next proceeded to consider the question as to the nature and extent of the powers granted to the commission by the statute in the matter of fixing the rates of charges. On that subject it said: "It seems to us that, if language means anything, it is perfectly evident that the expressed intention of the legislature is that the rates recommended and published by the commission (assuming that they have proceeded in the manner pointed out by the act) should be not simply advisory, nor merely prima facie equal and reasonable but final and conclusive as to what are lawful or equal and reasonable charges; that, in proceedings to compel compliance with the rates thus published, the law neither contemplates nor allows any issue to be made or inquiry had as to their equality and reasonableness in fact. Under the provisions of the act, the rates thus published are the only ones that are lawful, and therefore, in contemplation of law, the only ones that are equal and reasonable; and, hence, in proceedings like the present, there is, as said before, no fact to traverse, except the violation of the law in refusing compliance with the recommendations of the commission. Indeed, the language of the act is so plain on that point that argument can add nothing to its force."

¹ Accord (no hearing permitted): Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 Sup. Ct. 349, 48 L. Ed. 525 (1904) (inspection of imported tea); Wilson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 169 U. S. 586, 18 Sup. Ct. 435, 42 L. Ed. 865 (1898) (suspension of state officer by governor). Compare Murray v. Hoboken Land Co., ante, p. 262; and see, also, Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 236, 11 L. Ed. 576 (1845) (limitation of importer's right to recover illegal duties paid under protest) [but see Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436 (1912)].

In Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86, 100, 101, 23 Sup. Ct. 611, 47 L. Ed. 721 (1903), it was said that an alien could not be deported by administrative officers without a hearing, inasmuch as liberty of the person was involved; and in Chin Yow v. United States, 208 U. S. 8, 28 Sup. Ct. 201, 52 L. Ed. 369 (1908) it was decided that a Chinese person could not be excluded from the country without a hearing on the question of his alleged citizenship, though an erroneous administrative decision thereof could not be corrected by the courts.

It then proceeded to examine the question of the validity of the act under the Constitution of Minnesota, as to whether the legislature was authorized to confer upon the commission the powers given to the latter by the statute. It held that, as the legislature had the power itself to regulate charges by railroads, it could delegate to a commission the power of fixing such charges, and could make the judgment or determination of the commission as to what were reasonable charges final and conclusive. * * * In other words, although the railroad company is forbidden to establish rates that are not equal and reasonable, there is no power in the courts to stay the hands of the commission, if it chooses to establish rates that are unequal and unreasonable.

This being the construction of the statute by which we are bound in considering the present case, we are of opinion that, so construed, it conflicts with the Constitution of the United States in the particulars complained of by the railroad company. It deprives the company of its right to a judicial investigation, by due process of law, under the forms and with the machinery provided by the wisdom of successive ages for the investigation judicially of the truth of a matter in controversy, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a railroad commission which, in view of the powers conceded to it by the state court, cannot be regarded as clothed with judicial functions or possessing the machinery of a court of justice.

Under section 8 of the statute, which the Supreme Court of Minnesota says is the only one which relates to the matter of the fixing by the commission of general schedules of rates, and which section, it says, fully and exclusively provides for that subject, and is complete in itself, all that the commission is required to do is, on the filing with it by a railroad company of copies of its schedules of charges, to "find" that any part thereof is in any respect unequal or unreasonable, and then it is authorized and directed to compel the company to change the same and adopt such charge as the commission "shall declare to be equal and reasonable," and, to that end, it is required to inform the company in writing in what respect its charges are unequal and unreasonable. No hearing is provided for, no summons or notice to the company before the commission has found what it is to find and declared what it is to declare, no opportunity provided for the company to introduce witnesses before the commission, in fact, nothing which has the semblance of due process of law; and although, in the present case, it appears that, prior to the decision of the commission, the company appeared before it by its agent, and the commission investigated the rates charged by the company for transporting milk, yet it does not appear what the character of the investigation was or how the result was arrived at.

By the second section of the statute in question, it is provided that all charges made by a common carrier for the transportation of passengers or property shall be equal and reasonable. Under this provision, the carrier has a right to make equal and reasonable charges for such transportation. In the present case, the return alleged that the rate of charge fixed by the commission was not equal or reasonable, and the Supreme Court held that the statute deprived the company of the right to show that judicially. The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination. If the company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and such deprivation takes place in the absence of an investigation by judicial machinery, it is deprived of the lawful use of its property, and thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself, without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and in so far as it is thus deprived, while other persons are permitted to receive reasonable profits upon their invested capital, the company is deprived of the equal protection of the laws. * * *

Judgment reversed.

[MILLER, J., concurred on the ground that a railroad could not be deprived of the right judicially to attack rates prescribed for it that were unreasonably low. He thought, however, that the legislature could delegate to a commission the power to establish rates in the first instance without a hearing to the railroads.]

Mr. Justice BRADLEY [with whom concurred GRAY and LAMAR, JJ.], dissenting. * * * I think it is perfectly clear, and well settled by the decisions of this court, that the legislature might have fixed the rates in question. If it had done so, it would have done it through the aid of committees appointed to investigate the subject, to acquire information, to cite parties, to get all the facts before them, and finally to decide and report. No one could have said that this was not due process of law. And if the legislature itself could do this, acting by its committees, and proceeding according to the usual forms adopted by such bodies, I can see no good reason why it might not delegate the duty to a board of commissioners, charged, as the board in this case was, to regulate and fix the charges so as to be equal and reasonable. Such a board would have at its command all the means of getting at the truth and ascertaining the reasonableness of fares and freights, which a legislative committee has. It might, or it might not, swear witnesses and examine parties. Its duties being of an administrative character, it would have the widest scope for examination and inquiry. All means of knowledge and information would be at its command,—just as they would be at the command of the legislature which created it. Such a body, though not a court, is a proper tribunal for the duties imposed upon it. * * * Due process of law does not always require a court. It merely requires such tribunals and proceedings as are proper to the subject in hand. * * *

It is complained that the decisions of the board are final and without appeal. So are the decisions of the courts in matters within their jurisdiction. There must be a final tribunal somewhere for deciding every question in the world. Injustice may take place in all tribunals. All human institutions are imperfect—courts as well as commissions and legislatures. Whatever tribunal has jurisdiction, its decisions are final and conclusive unless an appeal is given therefrom. The important question always is, what is the lawful tribunal for the particular case? In my judgment, in the present case, the proper tribunal was the legislature, or the board of commissioners which it created for the purpose. * * * It was alleged in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 106, 24 L. Ed. 616, that the property assessed was not benefited by the improvement; but we held that that was a matter with which we would not interfere; the question was, whether there was due process of law. If a state court renders an unjust judgment, we cannot remedy it.

I do not mean to say that the legislature, or its constituted board of commissioners, or other legislative agency, may not so act as to deprive parties of their property without due process of law. The Constitution contemplates the possibility of such an invasion of rights. But, acting within their jurisdiction (as in these cases they have done), the invasion should be clear and unmistakable to bring the case within that category. Nothing of the kind exists in the cases before us. The legislature, in establishing the commission, did not exceed its power; and the commission, in acting upon the cases, did not exceed its jurisdiction, and was not chargeable with fraudulent behavior. There was merely a difference of judgment as to amount, between the commission and the companies, without any indication of intent on the part of the former to do injustice. The board may have erred; but if they did, as the matter was within their rightful jurisdiction, their decision was final and conclusive unless their proceedings could be impeached for fraud. Deprivation of property by mere arbitrary power on the part of the legislature, or fraud on the part of the commission, are the only grounds on which judicial relief may be sought against their action. There was, in truth, no deprivation of property in these cases at all. There was merely a regulation as to the enjoyment of property, made by a strictly competent authority, in a matter entirely within its jurisdiction. * * *

¹ In Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 12 Sup. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247 (1892), it was held that the legislature might directly prescribe the rates to be charged by grain elevators, without a previous hearing to the elevator owners; it not appearing that the charges fixed were actually unreasonably low.

In Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 146-148, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764 (1908), the Minnesota legislature fixed certain railway rates, alleged by the railroads to be unreasonably low, and imposed, for each violation thereof, fines of $5,000 to $10,000 upon the railroad companies, and upon individual railroad agents fines not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment for not over five years. Various railroads obtained in the Minnesota federal courts a temporary injunction against the enforcement of this law until the validity of the rates established by it could be judicially ascertained, and one of the grounds urged for this was that the character of the penalties themselves operated in effect to deny the railroads a hearing. In contempt proceedings consequent upon a violation of this injunction by the state attorney general, this ground was discussed as follows by Peckham, J.:

"The necessary effect and result of such legislation must be to preclude a resort to the courts (either state or federal) for the purpose of testing its validity. The officers and employees could not be expected to disobey any of the provisions of the acts or orders at the risk of such fines and penalties being imposed upon them, in case the court should decide that the law was valid. The result would be a denial of any hearing to the company. * * *

[Here follow quotations to this effect from Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards, 183 U. S. 79, 99-102, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92.]

"If the law be such as to make the decision of the legislature or of a commission conclusive as to the sufficiency of the rates, this court has held such a law to be unconstitutional. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, supra [134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970]. A law which indirectly accomplishes a like result by imposing such conditions upon the right to appeal for judicial relief as work an abandonment of the right rather than face the conditions upon which it is offered or may be obtained is also unconstitutional. It may therefore be said that when the penalties for disobedience are by fines so enormous and imprisonment so severe as to intimidate the company and its officers from resorting to the courts to test the validity of the legislation, the result is the same as if the law in terms prohibited the company from seeking judicial construction of laws which deeply affect its rights.

"It is urged that there is no principle upon which to base the claim that a person is entitled to disobey a statute at least once, for the purpose of testing its validity, without subjecting himself to the penalties for disobedience provided by the statute in case it is valid. This is not an accurate statement of the case. Ordinarily a law creating offenses in the nature of misdemeanors or felonies relates to a subject over which the jurisdiction of the legislature is complete in any event. In the case, however, of the establishment of certain rates without any hearing, the validity of such rates necessarily depends upon whether they are high enough to permit at least some return upon the investment (how much it is not now necessary to state), and an inquiry as to that fact is a proper subject of judicial investigation. If it turns out that the rates are too low for that purpose, then they are illegal. Now, to impose upon a party interested the burden of obtaining a judicial decision of such a question (no prior hearing having ever been given) only upon the condition that, if unsuccessful, he must suffer imprisonment and pay fines, as provided in these acts, is, in effect, to close up all approaches to the courts, and thus prevent any hearing upon the question whether the rates as provided by the acts are not too low, and therefore invalid. The distinction

COMMONWEALTH v. SISSON.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1905. 189 Mass. 217, 75 N. E. 619, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 752, 109 Am. St. Rep. 630.)

[Appeal upon exceptions taken to rulings at the trial in the Superior Court. Acting under a Massachusetts statute, the fish and game commission of the state had ordered Sisson to cease to discharge sawdust from his sawmill into the Konkapot river upon which the mill was located. Complaint was made against him for violating this order. At the trial Sisson offered to show, inter alia, that in making the order the commission did not act upon sworn evidence or personal knowledge, and that it refused to give him a hearing. There were admitted to be edible fish in the river. Exceptions were taken to the exclusion of this evidence, and Sisson was found guilty.]

LORING, J. * * * The defendants' grievance is that by an order of the board of fish and game commissioners they have been deprived, without compensation being made therefor, of the right to conduct the business of sawing wood as they and their predecessors in title have conducted it for 30 years last past, that from this decision there is no appeal, and that not only was the order made without a hearing, but, when a hearing was asked for by the defendants, it was denied. * * *

In support of their contention they argue that the board, in determining (1) that the fish in Konkapot river are of sufficient value to is obvious between a case where the validity of the act depends upon the existence of a fact which can be determined only after investigation of a very complicated and technical character, and the ordinary case of a statute upon a subject requiring no such investigation; and over which the jurisdiction of the legislature is complete in any event.

"We hold, therefore, that the provisions of the acts relating to the enforcement of the rates, either for freight or passengers, by imposing such enormous fines and possible imprisonment as a result of an unsuccessful effort to test the validity of the laws themselves, are unconstitutional on their face, without regard to the question of the insufficiency of those rates."

And so Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 33 Sup. Ct. 961, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) ($500 liquidated damages to shipper for each violation of doubtful rate law).

See, also, Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Nebraska, 217 U. S. 196, 207, 208, 30 Sup. Ct. 461, 54 L. Ed. 727, 18 Ann. Cas. 989 (1910) (railway not liable to $500 fine for failing to build siding demanded by shipper in advance of hearing as to reasonableness of request); Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436 (1912) (right of party to pay doubtful tax under protest to escape penalties, and then to test tax in suit to recover payment); St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 32 Sup. Ct. 493, 56 L. Ed. 799 (1912) (railway cannot be penalized by double actual damages for failure to pay excessive claim) [but see Mobile & O. Ry. v. Brandon, 98 Miss. 461, 53 South. 957, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106 (1910) ($25 penalty for failure to tender within 60 days actual amount of shipper's damage, despite latter's excessive claim)]. Compare Sherlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minn., post, p. 508, note (indefiniteness of description of statutory crime).

warrant the prohibition or regulation of the discharge of sawdust therein, and (2) that the discharge of sawdust from the defendants' mill materially injured such fish, was [acting judicially]; and, in connection with this argument, they rely on the distinction pointed out in Salem v. Eastern Railroad Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650, between the action of a local board of health in making general regulations respecting articles capable of conveying infection or creating sickness and the authority of such a board to examine into the existence of any specific case of nuisance, filth, or cause of sickness dangerous to the public health and to make an order for the removal of it. The former, being a rule for all, is legislative in character; the latter, being a determination as to a particular thing, resulting in an order to the owner of it to do a specified act, is judicial in character. For a later case, where it is pointed out that similar legislative and judicial powers are given to the state board of health in connection with the pollution of a body of water used as a supply of a city or town, see Nelson v. State Board of Health, 186 Mass. 330, 71 N. E. 693.

We agree with the defendant's counsel as to what the order here in question is not. We agree that it is not a general regulation. What is determined by it is that the discharge of sawdust from the defendants' mill materially injures the fish in Konkapot river, and it orders the defendants to erect a blower, and forbids the defendants making a pile of sawdust in connection with the mill; and it resulted in an order served on these defendants to do these acts. This is not a general regulation. But we do not agree that, because it is not a general regulation, it is a judicial action. The question to be decided here does not depend upon a choice between the two classes dealt with in Salem v. Eastern Railroad, 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650, and in Nelson v. State Board of Health, 186 Mass. 330, 71 N. E. 693, and for these reasons:

We are of opinion, in the first place, that it is within the power of the Legislature to protect and preserve edible fish in the rivers and brooks of the commonwealth, and for that purpose, if they think proper, to forbid any sawdust being discharged into any brook containing such fish. * * *

We are of opinion, in the second place, that in case the Legislature thought that in regulating the conflicting rights of individuals to run sawmills on the banks of a river on the one hand, and of the public, on the other hand, to have fish live and increase in the same stream, it was not worth while to forbid sawdust being discharged into every stream in which there were edible fish, they could leave to a board having peculiar knowledge on the subject the selection of the brooks and rivers in which the fish were of sufficient value to warrant the prohibition or regulation of the discharge of sawdust. The right of the Legislature to delegate some legislative functions to state boards was considered by this court in Brodline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607. And, further, in case the Legislature thought that an act which forbade any sawdust to be discharged into any of the streams selected by the board was an unnecessarily stringent one, they could, in our opinion, leave it to the board to settle in each particular case the practical details required to harmonize best these two conflicting rights.

The power thus delegated to the board of fitting the details of regulation to the particular circumstances of each case is of the same character as that long exercised by the fish and game commissioners and their predecessors, the board of inland fisheries, in prescribing the details of the construction of the fishways to be constructed in dams where by law fishways have to be maintained. See St. 1866, pp. 231, 232, c. 238, §§ 2, 6; St. 1867, p. 741, c. 344; Pub. St. 1882, c. 91, § 4. See, also, 3 Province Laws, 1745-46 (State Ed.) c. 20, p. 267. These acts provide that the board, after examination of dams upon rivers where the law requires fishways, is to determine whether the fishways in existence are sufficient, and to prescribe by an order in writing what changes or repairs, if any, shall be made, and at what times the fishways are to be kept open, and to give notice thereof to the owners of such dams. The action of the fish commissioners under these acts is unquestionably legislative in character, and we cannot doubt that their action under them, exercised and acquiesced in by the public for this length of time, is valid.

The result is that in our opinion the action of the board in the case at bar was the working out of details under a legislative act. The board is no more required to act on sworn evidence than is the Legislature itself, and no more than in case of the Legislature itself is it bound to act only after a hearing, or to give a hearing to the plaintiff when he asks for one; and its action is final, as is the action of the Legislature in enacting a statute, and, being legislative, it is plain that the questions of fact passed upon by the commissioners in adopting the provisions enacted by them cannot be tried over by the court. This court has been recently asked to try over the expediency of compulsory vaccination in an action under a statute requiring it. Com. v. Jacobson, 183 Mass. 242, 66 N. E. 719, 67 L. R. A. 935. On its declining to do so an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and its refusal to do so was held to be correct. Jacobson v. Mass., 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765. See particularly page 30 of 197 U. S., page 363 of 25 Sup. Ct., 49 L. Ed. 643. See, also, Devens, J., in Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 531, 11 N. E. 929, 59 Am. Rep. 113.

The practical result is that the defendants are forbidden to conduct their sawmill as they had conducted it for 30 years by a board who have not heard evidence and have refused the defendants a hearing, that the action of the board is final, and that no compensation is due to them. This result may seem strange. But it is no less strange than the practical results in cases which are decided law. Take the case before the court in Nelson v. State Board of Health, 186 Mass. 330, 71 N. E. 693, namely, a farm on the banks of a pond used as the water supply of a town. The state board of health can pass a general regulation under section 113, c. 75, Rev. Laws, forbidding privies within a specified distance from its shore; and, if the defendant had had a privy there for 30 years, his right to maintain it would cease, although the order was made without hearing; and the action of the board is final. On the other hand, if the board had proceeded, under section 118, to investigate this particular privy, the defendant would have been entitled to a hearing and on appeal to a jury, as provided by section 119. Again, take, for example, the regulation of a local board of health in question in Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 11 N. E. 929, 59 Am. Rep. 113, requiring all rags arriving at the port of Boston from any foreign port to be disinfected at the expense of the owner before being discharged. The power of the local board of health to declare these rags a nuisance per se, so as to impose upon the owner without trial the expense of disinfecting them, was established by this court in that case. Had the local board undertaken to investigate the particular rags in question in Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., under their jurisdiction to inquire into sources of filth, and they had been authorized under that act to abate the nuisance if they found the rags to be a nuisance, by ordering them to be disinfected at the expense of the defendant, they would have had to give the defendant a hearing on notice, and from their decision the defendant would have had a right to a trial by jury. That is what was decided in Salem v. Eastern Railroad, 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650.

That is to say, on the one hand, where the law is general and the question is whether under it the defendants are committing a nuisance, the facts are determined by judicial action; on the other hand, the determination of the same facts is legislative in case the Legislature decides to make the thing a nuisance per se. And where it is legislative it is final, and no hearing is necessary; and where, as is the case here, it is made in the exercise of the police power, no compensation is due. The delegation of such legislative powers to a board is going a great way. But the remedy is by application to the Legislature, if a remedy should be given. In our opinion it is within its constitutional power, and the court can give no remedy.

For similar cases, where the use which can be made of property has been left to the final determination of boards, see Newton v. Joyce, 166 Mass. 83, 41 N. E. 116, 55 Am. St. Rep. 385; Com. v. Roberts, 155 Mass. 281, 29 N. E. 522, 16 L. R. A. 400. See, also, in this connection, In re Wares, Petitioners, 161 Mass. 70, 36 N. E. 586. The difference between the majority and the minority of the court in Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 26 N. E. 100, 10 L. R. A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850, was on the construction of the act there in question.

Exceptions overruled.¹

PRENTIS v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1908. 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150.)

[Appeals from the federal Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. The Virginia Constitution of 1902 established a state corporation commission empowered, among other things, to regulate transportation rates within the state. Before fixing any rate it was required to give notice and a hearing to parties affected thereby, and any party aggrieved by its orders was given an appeal to the highest state court, which was empowered, if it reversed the commission's orders, to substitute therefor such orders as in its opinion should have been made. No other state court was given jurisdiction over the action of the commission. After a rate was fixed, the commission was empowered, by its own process, to enforce against offenders the penalties established by law for disobedience to its orders. In this proceeding also a hearing was required, the validity and reasonableness of orders might be attacked again, and all defenses were open to alleged offend-

¹As due process in the exercise of legislative power depends upon the validity of the resulting enactment and not upon the mode in which the legislative determination was reached (notice and hearing being therefore unnecessary), it would seem that where legislative power may be delegated at all to an administrative tribunal (see Chapter II, section 2, supra) it may be delegated as in the principal case, to be exercised without notice and hearing, provided that the legislature's intention to do this clearly appears. The federal authorities, chiefly dicta, are not harmonious, however. See, as to creation of municipal taxing districts, Spencer v. Merchant, post, at p. 644, and note 1; rate regulation, Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Minn., ante, p. 303, opinion of Bradley, J.; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 545-548, 12 Sup. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247 (1892); Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 278, 29 Sup. Ct. 50, 53 L. Ed. 176 (1908); extent and expediency of taking in eminent domain, People v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 595 (1860); Lynch v. Forbes, 161 Mass. 302, 308, 309, 37 N. E. 437, 42 Am. St. Rep. 402 (1894); United States v. Gettysburg Electric Ry. Co., 160 U. S. 668, 685, 16 Sup. Ct. 427, 40 L. Ed. 576 (1898).

DUE PROCESS IN EXECUTIVE ACTION.—Notice and hearing are not essential to due process in any purely executive determination. Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 235, 53 L. Ed. 410 (1909) (right of state executive to kill or imprison persons in bona fide efforts to suppress insurrection, even assuming such acts to be actually unnecessary); Marbles v. Creecy, 215 U. S. 63, 30 Sup. Ct. 32, 54 L. Ed. 92 (1909) (issuance of extradition warrant upon requisition papers) [see, also, Pettibone v. Nichols, 203 U. S. 192, 203-206, 27 Sup. Ct. 111, 51 L. Ed. 148, 7 Ann. Cas. 1017 (1906)]. So of removals from office by executive authority, In re Hennen, 13 Pet. 230, 10 L. Ed. 138 (1839); Blake v. United States, 103 U. S. 227, 26 L. Ed. 462 (1881); Traylor v. Board of Auditors, 89 Mich. 162, 50 N. W. 809, 15 L. R. A. 95 (1891); except where the removal must be for cause, when the power exercised is judicial in its nature and requires a hearing, Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 19 N. W. 112, 51 Am. Rep. 128 (1884). See, also, Caldwell v. Willson, 121 N. C. 425, 28 S. E. 554 (1897), affirmed in Willson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 169 U. S. 586, 18 Sup. Ct. 435, 42 L. Ed. 865 (1898).

ers. In 1906, upon notice, a hearing was given to complainant railroads upon the question of passenger rates, and in April, 1907, an order was made fixing various such rates for different roads. Complainants then filed bills in equity in the above-mentioned court to enjoin the commission from enforcing this order as confiscatory under the fourteenth amendment. The defendants alleged by demurrer and plea that the proceedings before the commission were proceedings in a court of the state, which the courts of the United States were forbidden to enjoin (Rev. St. § 720, U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 581), and that the decision of the commission made the legality of the rates res judicata. From a decree for complainants on these pleadings, the defendants appealed.]

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES. * * * We shall assume that when, as here, a state Constitution sees fit to unite legislative and judicial powers in a single hand, there is nothing to hinder, so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned. Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 83, 84, 23 Sup. Ct. 28, 47 L. Ed. 79, 85; Winchester & S. R. Co. v. Com., 106 Va. 264, 268, 55 S. E. 692. We shall assume, as we have said, that some of the powers of the commission are judicial, and we shall assume, without deciding, that, if it was proceeding against the appellees to enforce this order and to punish them for a breach, it then would be sitting as a court and would be protected from interference on the part of courts of the United States.

But we think it equally plain that the proceedings drawn in question here are legislative in their nature, and none the less so that they have taken place with a body which, at another moment, or in its principal or dominant aspect, is a court such as is meant by section 720. A judicial inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. That is its purpose and end. Legislation, on the other hand, looks to the future and changes existing conditions by making a new rule, to be applied thereafter to all or some part of those subject to its power. The establishment of a rate is the making of a rule for the future, and therefore is an act legislative, not judicial, in kind, as seems to be fully recognized by the supreme court of appeals (Com. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 106 Va. 61, 64, 55 S. E. 572, 7 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1086, 117 Am. St. Rep. 983), and especially by its learned president in his pointed remarks in Winchester & S. R. Co. v. Com., 106 Va. 264, 281, 55 S. E. 692. See, further, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 167 U. S. 479, 499, 500, 505, 17 Sup. Ct. 896, 42 L. Ed. 243, 253, 255; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 440, 23 Sup. Ct. 571, 47 L. Ed. 892, 893.

Proceedings legislative in nature are not proceedings in a court, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 720, no matter what may be the general or dominant character of the body in which they may take place. Southern R. Co. v. Greensboro Ice & Coal Co. (C. C.) 134 Fed. 82, 94, affirmed sub nom. McNeill v. Southern Ry. Co., 202 U. S. 543, 26 Sup. Ct. 722, 50 L. Ed. 1142. That question depends not upon the character of the body, but upon the character of the proceedings. In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 348, 25 L. Ed. 676, 680. They are not a suit in which a writ of error would lie under Rev. St. § 709, and Act Feb. 18, 1875, c. 80, 18 Stat. 318 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 575). See Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, 10 Sup. Ct. 651, 34 L. Ed. 196; Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415, 423, 27 Sup. Ct. 363, 51 L. Ed. 547, 551. The decision upon them cannot be res judicata when a suit is brought. See Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co., 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560. And it does not matter what inquiries may have been made as a preliminary to the legislative act. Most legislation is preceded by hearings and investigations. But the effect of the inquiry, and of the decision upon it, is determined by the nature of the act to which the inquiry and decision lead up.

A judge sitting with a jury is not competent to decide issues of fact; but matters of fact that are merely premises to a rule of law he may decide. He may find out for himself, in whatever way seems best, whether a supposed statute ever really was passed. In Pickering v. Barkley, Style, 132, merchants were asked by the court to state their understanding as an aid to the decision of a demurrer. The nature of the final act determines the nature of the previous inquiry. As the judge is bound to declare the law, he must know or discover the facts that establish the law. So, when the final act is legislative, the decision which induces it cannot be judicial in the practical sense, although the questions considered might be the same that would arise in the trial of a case.¹ If a state Constitution should provide for a hearing before any law should be passed, and should declare that it should be a judicial proceeding in rem and the decision binding upon all the world, it hardly is to be supposed that the simple device could make the constitutionality of the law res judicata, if it subsequently should be drawn in question before a court of the United States. And all that we have said would be equally true if an appeal had been taken to the supreme court of appeals and it had confirmed the rate. Its action in doing so would not have been judicial, although the questions debated by it might have been the same that might come before it as a court, and would have been discussed and passed upon by it in the same way that it would deal with them if they arose afterwards in a case properly so called. We gather that these are the views of the supreme court of appeals itself. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Com., 102 Va. 599, 621, 46 S. E. 911. They are implied in many cases in this and other United States courts in which the enforcement of rates has been enjoined, notwithstanding notice and hearing, and what counsel in this case call "litigation" in advance. Legislation cannot bolster itself up in that way. Litigation cannot arise until the moment of legislation is past. See Southern R. Co. v. Com., 107 Va. 771, 772, 60 S. E. 70, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364. * * *

¹ Accord: Bradley v. City of Richmond, 227 U. S. 477, 33 Sup. Ct. 318, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (classification of occupations for graded license tax is legislative act, though accompanied by notice and hearing).

Our hesitation has been on the narrower question whether the railroads, before they resorted to the circuit court, should not have taken the appeal allowed to them by the Virginia Constitution at the legislative stage, so as to make it absolutely certain that the officials of the state would try to establish and enforce an unconstitutional rule. Considerations of comity and convenience have led this court ordinarily to decline to interfere by habeas corpus where the petitioner had open to him a writ of error to a higher court of a state, in cases where there was no merely logical reason for refusing the writ. The question is whether somewhat similar considerations ought not to have some weight here.

We admit at once that they have not the same weight in this case. The question to be decided, we repeat, is legislative, whether a certain rule shall be made. Although the appeal is given as a right, it is not a remedy, properly so called. At that time no case exists. We should hesitate to say, as a general rule, that a right to resort to the courts could be made always to depend upon keeping a previous watch upon the bodies that make laws, and using every effort and all the machinery available to prevent unconstitutional laws from being passed. It might be said that a citizen has a right to assume that the Constitution will be respected, and that the very meaning of our system in giving the last word upon constitutional questions to the courts is that he may rest upon that assumption, and is not bound to be continually on the alert against covert or open attacks upon his rights in bodies that cannot finally take them away. It is a novel ground for denying a man a resort to the courts that he has not used due diligence to prevent a law from being passed.

But this case hardly can be disposed of on purely general principles. The question that we are considering may be termed a question of equitable fitness or propriety, and must be answered on the particular facts. The establishment of railroad rates is not like a law that affects private persons, who may never have heard of it till it was passed. It is a matter of great interest, both to the railroads and to the public, and is watched by both with scrutinizing care. The railroads went into evidence before the commission. They very well might have taken the matter before the supreme court of appeals. No new evidence and no great additional expense would have been involved.

The state of Virginia has endeavored to impose the highest safeguards possible upon the exercise of the great power given to the state corporation commission, not only by the character of the members of that commission, but by making its decisions dependent upon the assent of the same historic body that is intrusted with the preservation of the most valued constitutional rights, if the railroads see fit to appeal. It seems to us only a just recognition of the solicitude with which their rights have been guarded, that they should make sure that the state, in its final legislative action, would not respect what they think their rights to be, before resorting to the courts of the United States.

If the rate should be affirmed by the supreme court of appeals and the railroads still should regard it as confiscatory, it will be understood from what we have said that they will be at liberty then to renew their application to the circuit court, without fear of being met by a plea of res judicata. It will not be necessary to wait for a prosecution by the commission. * * *

Decrees reversed.²

[BREWER, J., dissented. FULLER, C. J., and HARLAN, J., concurred in the result, but gave opinions dissenting from the reasoning of the majority and holding the action of the Virginia commission to be judicial and that of a court, and hence protected by Rev. St. § 720 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 581). FULLER, C. J., said (211 U. S. 237, 29 Sup. Ct. 74, 53 L. Ed. 150): "I cannot see why the reasonableness and justness of a rate may not be judicially inquired into and judicially determined at the time of the fixing of the rate, as well as afterwards."]

² In Winchester, etc., Ry. v. Commonwealth, 106 Va. 264, 281, 55 S. E. 692, 698 (1906), referring to the Virginia corporation commission, Keith, P., said: "I do not doubt that it was competent for the state to create a commission and confer upon it executive, legislative, and judicial functions without trenching upon any provision of the Constitution of the United States; but the commission, in the exercise of those powers, must acquire jurisdiction over the parties to be affected by its action by due process of law, and conform its proceedings to the law of the land. When, in the exercise of its legislative functions, it has in obedience to the law of the state summoned persons, natural or artificial, before it to protect their rights, it has done what is not required to be done by the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, and what it might have omitted to do, so far as that instrument is concerned; but when it comes to enforce its rules and regulations and to adjudicate the penalties for their violation, a stage has been reached at which the fourteenth amendment throws its ægis over the litigant, who must be summoned to appear and permitted to defend in accordance with the law of the land, and this right to be summoned to answer is not satisfied by the antecedent summons and appearance before the commission at a time when the adoption of the rule or regulation was under consideration. The commission may exercise legislative and judicial functions, but cannot confuse and blend them in one procedure, but when considering the adoption of a regulation is in the exercise of one department or head of its authority, and, when passing upon the violation of such regulation, is exercising a wholly separate function, and is to be controlled by wholly different considerations in order to meet the requirements of due process of law and to adjudicate rights in accordance with the law of the land."

Compare People v. Wilcox, ante, p. 100, note.

A party entitled to offer all competent evidence at a legislative hearing before a commission may, at least in the absence of surprise, mistake, or other extraordinary circumstance, be confined to the evidence offered before the commission, when the order of the latter is judicially reviewed. State of Washington v. Fairchild, 224 U. S. 510, 524-528, 32 Sup. Ct. 535, 56 L. Ed. 863 (1912). And if he refuses to appear at such legislative hearing, he is not entitled to a judicial review to correct errors in the legislative determination. Bradley v. City of Richmond, 227 U. S. 477, 485, 33 Sup. Ct. 318, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

SECTION 2.—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW

STRAUDER v. WEST VIRGINIA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1880. 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664.)

[Writ of error to the Supreme Court of West Virginia. Strauder was indicted for murder in West Virginia, was tried, convicted and sentenced; the judgment being affirmed by the state Supreme Court. At the time the laws of the state confined the right to serve upon grand and petit juries to white male citizens of the state over twenty-one years old. Strauder was a negro, and appropriate exceptions to his trial by such juries were made on his behalf and overruled.]

Mr. Justice STRONG. * * * In this court, several errors have been assigned, and the controlling questions underlying them all are, first, whether, by the Constitution and laws of the United States, every citizen of the United States has a right to a trial of an indictment against him by a jury selected and impanelled without discrimination against his race or color, because of race or color. * * *

It is to be observed that the first of these questions is not whether a colored man, when an indictment has been preferred against him, has a right to a grand or a petit jury composed in whole or in part of persons of his own race or color,¹ but it is whether, in the composition or selection of jurors by whom he is to be indicted or tried, all persons of his race or color may be excluded by law, solely because of their race or color, so that by no possibility can any colored man sit upon the jury. * * *

[After quoting section 1 of the fourteenth amendment:] This is one of a series of constitutional provisions having a common purpose, namely, securing to a race recently emancipated, a race that through many generations had been held in slavery, all the civil rights that the superior race enjoy. The true spirit and meaning of the amendments, as we said in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394, cannot be understood without keeping in view the history of the times when they were adopted, and the general objects they plainly sought to accomplish. At the time when they were incorporated into the Constitution, it required little knowledge of human nature to anticipate that those who had long been regarded as an inferior and subject race would, when suddenly raised to the rank of citizenship, be looked upon with jealousy and positive dislike, and that state laws might be enacted or enforced to perpetuate the distinctions that had before existed. Discriminations against them had been habitual. It was well known that in some states laws making such discriminations then existed, and others might well be expected. The colored race, as a race, was abject and ignorant, and in that condition was unfitted to command the respect of those who had superior intelligence. Their training had left them mere children, and as such they needed the protection which a wise government extends to those who are unable to protect themselves. They especially needed protection against unfriendly action in the states where they were resident. It was in view of these considerations the fourteenth amendment was framed and adopted. It was designed to assure to the colored race the enjoyment of all the civil rights that under the law are enjoyed by white persons, and to give to that race the protection of the general government, in that enjoyment, whenever it should be denied by the states. It not only gave citizenship and the privileges of citizenship to persons of color, but it denied to any state the power to withhold from them the equal protection of the laws, and authorized Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. * * *

¹ The equal protection of the laws does not require that any part of a jury trying a negro shall necessarily be composed of negroes. In re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, 11 Sup. Ct. 738, 35 L. Ed. 505 (1891); In re Jugiro, 140 U. S. 686, 11 Sup. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 749 (1891) (Japanese). Nor is a white male defendant entitled to an opportunity to have women or negroes drawn upon his jury. McKinney v. Wyoming, 3 Wyo. 719, 30 Pac. 293, 16 L. R. A. 710 (1892) (cases).

If this is the spirit and meaning of the amendment, whether it means more or not, it is to be construed liberally, to carry out the purposes of its framers. It ordains that no state shall make or enforce any laws which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States (evidently referring to the newly made citizens, who, being citizens of the United States, are declared to be also citizens of the state in which they reside). It ordains that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. What is this but declaring that the law in the states shall be the same for the black as for the white; that all persons, whether colored or white, shall stand equal before the laws of the states, and, in regard to the colored race, for whose protection the amendment was primarily designed, that no discrimination shall be made against them by law because of their color? The words of the amendment, it is true, are prohibitory, but they contain a necessary implication of a positive immunity, or right, most valuable to the colored race,—the right to exemption from unfriendly legislation against them distinctively as colored,—exemption from legal discriminations, implying inferiority in civil society, lessening the security of their enjoyment of the rights which others enjoy, and discriminations which are steps towards reducing them to the condition of a subject race.

That the West Virginia statute respecting juries—the statute that controlled the selection of the grand and petit jury in the case of the plaintiff in error—is such a discrimination ought not to be doubted. Nor would it be if the persons excluded by it were white men. 11 in those states where the colored people constitute a majority of the entire population a law should be enacted excluding all white men from jury service, thus denying to them the privilege of participating equally with the blacks in the administration of justice, we apprehend no one would be heard to claim that it would not be a denial to white men of the equal protection of the laws. Nor if a law should be passed excluding all naturalized Celtic Irishmen, would there be any doubt of its inconsistency with the spirit of the amendment. The very fact that colored people are singled out and expressly denied by a statute all right to participate in the administration of the law, as jurors, because of their color, though they are citizens, and may be in other respects fully qualified, is practically a brand upon them, affixed by the law, an assertion of their inferiority, and a stimulant to that race prejudice which is an impediment to securing to individuals of the race that equal justice which the law aims to secure to all others.

The right to a trial by jury is guaranteed to every citizen of West Virginia by the Constitution of that state, and the constitution of juries is a very essential part of the protection such a mode of trial is intended to secure. The very idea of a jury is a body of men composed of the peers or equals of the person whose rights it is selected or summoned to determine; that is, of his neighbors, fellows, associates, persons having the same legal status in society as that which he holds. Blackstone, in his Commentaries, says, "The right of trial by jury, or the country, is a trial by the peers of every Englishman, and is the grand bulwark of his liberties, and is secured to him by the Great Charter." It is also guarded by statutory enactments intended to make impossible what Mr. Bentham called "packing juries." It is well known that prejudices often exist against particular classes in the community, which sway the judgment of jurors, and which, therefore, operate in some cases to deny to persons of those classes the full enjoyment of that protection which others enjoy. Prejudice in a local community is held to be a reason for a change of venue. The framers of the constitutional amendment must have known full well the existence of such prejudice and its likelihood to continue against the manumitted slaves and their race, and that knowledge was doubtless a motive that led to the amendment. By their manumission and citizenship the colored race became entitled to the equal protection of the laws of the states in which they resided; and the apprehension that through prejudice they might be denied that equal protection, that is, that there might be discrimination against them, was the inducement to bestow upon the national government the power to enforce the provision that no state shall deny to them the equal protection of the laws. Without the apprehended existence of prejudice that portion of the amendment would have been unnecessary, and it might have been left to the states to extend equality of protection. * * *

We do not say that within the limits from which it is not excluded by the amendment, a state may not prescribe the qualifications of its jurors, and in so doing make discriminations. It may confine the selection to males, to freeholders, to citizens, to persons within certain ages, or to persons having educational qualifications.² We do not believe the fourteenth amendment was ever intended to prohibit this. Looking at its history, it is clear it had no such purpose. Its aim was against discrimination because of race or color. As we have said more than once, its design was to protect an emancipated race, and to strike down all possible legal discriminations against those who belong to it. To quote further from 16 Wall., supra: "In giving construction to any of these articles [amendments], it is necessary to keep the main purpose steadily in view." "It is so clearly a provision for that race and that emergency, that a strong case would be necessary for its application to any other." We are not now called upon to affirm or deny that it had other purposes.

The fourteenth amendment makes no attempt to enumerate the rights it designed to protect. It speaks in general terms, and those are as comprehensive as possible. Its language is prohibitory; but every prohibition implies the existence of rights and immunities, prominent among which is an immunity from inequality of legal protection, either for life, liberty, or property. Any state action that denies this immunity to a colored man is in conflict with the Constitution. * * *

Judgment reversed.³

[FIELD, J., dissented on grounds stated in In re Virginia, note 3, below. CLIFFORD, J., concurred with him.]

² Lawyers, ministers, doctors, teachers, railroad engineers and firemen, and similar classes of persons may be excluded from jury duty so as not to interrupt their regular work for the community. Rawlins v. Georgia, 201 U. S. 638, 26 Sup. Ct. 560, 50 L. Ed. 899, 5 Ann. Cas. 783 (1906).

³ Accord: Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 20 Sup. Ct. 687, 44 L. Ed. 839 (1900) (grand jury); Martin v. Texas, 200 U. S. 316, 26 Sup. Ct. 338, 50 L. Ed. 497 (1906) (collecting cases—complainant must offer evidence to support contention, where based upon alleged unequal administration of law).

In In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 367, 368, 25 L. Ed. 676 (1880), Field, J., dissenting, said:

"The fourth clause in the first section of the amendment declares that no state shall 'deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.' Upon this clause the counsel of the district judge chiefly rely to sustain the validity of the legislation in question. But the universality of the protection secured necessarily renders their position untenable. All persons within the jurisdiction of the state, whether permanent residents or temporary sojourners, whether old or young, male or female, are to be equally protected. Yet no one will contend that equal protection to women, to children, to the aged, to aliens, can only be secured by allowing persons of the class to which they belong to act as jurors in cases affecting their interests. The equality of protection intended does not require that all persons shall be permitted to participate in the government of the state and the administration of its laws, to hold its offices, or be clothed with any public trusts. As already said, the universality of the protection assured repels any such conclusion.

"The equality of the protection secured extends only to civil rights as dis-

CHAPTER X

DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW: PROTECTIVE AND REGULATIVE POWER (POLICE POWER)

SECTION 1.—IN GENERAL

COMMONWEALTH v. ALGER.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1851. 7 Cush. 53.)

[Alger was convicted in the Boston municipal court of erecting a wharf from his riparian land into Boston harbor beyond the established harbor lines, in violation of a statute. The wharf was not below low-water mark and did not actually impede navigation. The case was reported to the state Supreme Judicial Court for the decision of doubtful legal questions involved.]

SHAW, C. J. * * * The manifest object of these statutes is to prevent injurious obstructions in the harbor of Boston, and to secure the free, common, and unobstructed use thereof, for the citizens of the tinguished from those which are political, or arise from the form of the government and its mode of administration. * * * It has no more reference to them than it has to social rights and duties, which do not rest upon any positive law, though they are more potential in controlling the intercourse of individuals. In the consideration of questions growing out of these amendments much confusion has arisen from a failure to distinguish between the civil and the political rights of citizens. Civil rights are absolute and personal. Political rights, on the other hand, are conditioned and dependent upon the discretion of the elective or appointing power, whether that be the people acting through the ballot, or one of the departments of their government. The civil rights of the individual are never to be withheld, and may be always judicially enforced. The political rights which he may enjoy, such as holding office and discharging a public trust, are qualified because their possession depends on his fitness, to be adjudged by those whom society has clothed with the elective authority. The thirteenth and fourteenth amendments were designed to secure the civil rights of all persons, of every race, color, and condition; but they left to the states to determine to whom the possession of political powers should be intrusted. This is manifest from the fact that when it was desired to confer political power upon the newly made citizens of the states, as was done by inhibiting the denial to them of the suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, a new amendment was required."

CLASSIFICATION OF PARTIES FOR PURPOSE OF DIFFERENCES IN PROCEDURE.—Any reasonable differences between parties to litigation or their situations with regard thereto affords a valid basis for the application to them of appropriately differing rules of procedure. See District of Columbia v. Brooke, post, p. 380, note; Ballard v. Hunter, 204 U. S. 241, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 51 L. Ed. 461 (1907) (constructive service of process on non-resident taxpayers only); Central Loan & T. Co. v. Campbell Commission Co., 173 U. S. 84, 19 Sup. Ct. 346, 43 L. Ed. 623 (1899) (same, as to attachment bond); St. Mary's commonwealth, and all other persons, for navigation with ships, boats, and vessels of all kinds, as a common and public right. If this can be done, without an unwarrantable encroachment on the rights of private property, it is an object of great importance, and one in which the holders of riparian rights, as well as all other holders of real estate, and the whole community, have a deep and abiding interest.

We think it is a settled principle, growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it may be so regulated, that it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others, having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property in this commonwealth, as well that in the interior as that bordering on tide-waters, is derived directly or indirectly from the government, and held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment, as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law, as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient.

This is very different from the right of eminent domain, the right of a government to take and appropriate private property to public use.

Franco-American Petroleum Co. v. West Virginia, 203 U. S. 183, 27 Sup. Ct. 132, 51 L. Ed. 144 (1906) (different mode of service on non-resident corporations); Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658 (1908) (corporations alone required to produce papers); United States v. Heinze, 218 U. S. 532, 31 Sup. Ct. 98, 54 L. Ed. 1139, 21 Ann. Cas. 884 (1910) (interlocutory appeal to government only —semble); Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky v. Tennessee ex rel. Cates, 217 U. S. 413, 30 Sup. Ct. 543, 54 L. Ed. 817 (1910) (enforcement of anti-trust laws against corporations in equity instead of by indictment).

As to territorial differences in procedure, see Missouri v. Lewis, post, p. 329.

In Cincinnati St. Ry. Co. v. Sneff, 193 U. S. 30, 36, 37, 24 Sup. Ct. 319, 321, 48 L. Ed. 604 (1904), an Ohio statute was upheld permitting to opponents of corporations having over 50 stockholders, but not to such corporations themselves, a change of venue for local prejudice; Mr. Justice White, saying: "The proposition to which the case reduces itself is therefore this: That although the protection of equal laws equally administered has been enjoyed, nevertheless there has been a denial of the equal protection of the law within the purview of the fourteenth amendment, only because the state has allowed one person to seek one forum and has not allowed another person, asserted to be in the same class, to seek the same forum, although as to both persons the law has afforded a forum in which the same and equal laws are applicable and administered. But it is fundamental rights which the fourteenth amendment safeguards, and not the mere forum which a state may see proper to designate for the enforcement and protection of such rights. Given, therefore, a condition where fundamental rights are equally protected and preserved, it is impossible to say that the rights which are thus protected and preserved have been denied because the state has deemed best to provide for a trial in one forum or another. It is not, under any view, the mere tribunal into which a person is authorized to proceed by a state which determines whether the equal protection of the law has been afforded, but whether in the tribunals which the state has provided equal laws prevail."

whenever the public exigency requires it; which can be done only on condition of providing a reasonable compensation therefor. The power we allude to is rather the police power, the power vested in the legislature by the Constitution, to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth and of the subjects of the same.

It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power, than to mark its boundaries, or prescribe limits to its exercise. There are many cases in which such a power is exercised by all well-ordered governments, and where its fitness is so obvious, that all well-regulated minds will regard it as reasonable. Such are the laws to prohibit the use of warehouses for the storage of gunpowder near habitations or highways; to restrain the height to which wooden buildings may be erected in populous neighborhoods, and require them to be covered with slate or other incombustible material; to prohibit buildings from being used for hospitals for contagious diseases, or for the carrying on of noxious or offensive trades; to prohibit the raising of a dam, and causing stagnant water to spread over meadows, near inhabited villages, thereby raising noxious exhalations, injurious to health and dangerous to life.

Nor does the prohibition of such noxious use of property, a prohibition imposed because such use would be injurious to the public, although it may diminish the profits of the owner, make it an appropriation to a public use, so as to entitle the owner to compensation. If the owner of a vacant lot in the midst of a city could erect thereon a great wooden building, and cover it with shingles, he might obtain a larger profit of his land, than if obliged to build of stone or brick, with a slated roof. If the owner of a warehouse in a cluster of other buildings could store quantities of gunpowder in it for himself and others, he might be saved the great expense of transportation. If a landlord could let his building for a small-pox hospital, or a slaughter-house, he might obtain an increased rent. But he is restrained; not because the public have occasion to make the like use, or to make any use of the property, or to take any benefit or profit to themselves from it; but because it would be a noxious use, contrary to the maxim, "Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lædas." It is not an appropriation of the property to a public use, but the restraint of an injurious private use by the owner, and is therefore not within the principle of property taken under the right of eminent domain. The distinction, we think, is manifest in principle, although the facts and circumstances of different cases are so various, that it is often difficult to decide whether a particular exercise of legislation is properly attributable to the one or the other of these two acknowledged powers. * * *

¹ See Beidler v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 211 Ill. 628, 638, 71 N. E. 1118, 67 L. R. A. 820 (1904).

Wherever there is a general right on the part of the public, and a general duty on the part of a land-owner, or any other person, to respect such right, we think it is competent for the legislature, by a specific enactment, to prescribe a precise, practical rule for declaring, establishing, and securing such right, and enforcing respect for it. It may be said in general terms, independently of any positive enactment, that it is the right of society, in the midst of a populous settlement, to be exempt from the proximity of dangerous and noxious trades; and that it is the duty of the owner of real estate, in the midst of many habitations, to abstain from erecting buildings thereon, or otherwise using it, for carrying on a trade dangerous to the lives, health, or comfort of the inhabitants of such dwellings; although a trade in itself useful and beneficial to the public. But such general duty and obligation not being fixed by a rule precise enough for practical purposes, we think it is competent for the legislature to interpose, and by a specific enactment to declare what shall be deemed a dangerous or noxious trade, under what circumstances and within what distance of habitations it may or shall not be set up, how the use of it shall be regulated, and to prohibit any other than such regulated use, by specific penalties.

This principle of legislation is of great importance and extensive use, and lies at the foundation of most enactments of positive law, which define and punish mala prohibita. Things done may or may not be wrong in themselves, or necessarily injurious and punishable as such at common law; but laws are passed declaring them offences, and making them punishable, because they tend to injurious consequences; but more especially for the sake of having a definite, known, and authoritative rule which all can understand and obey. In the case already put, of erecting a powder magazine or slaughter-house, it would be indictable at common law, and punishable as a nuisance, if in fact erected so near an inhabited village as to be actually dangerous or noxious to life or health. Without a positive law, everybody might agree that two hundred feet would be too near, and that two thousand feet would not be too near; but within this wide margin, who shall say, who can know, what distance shall be too near or otherwise? An authoritative rule, carrying with it the character of certainty and precision, is needed. The tradesman needs to know, before incurring expense, how near he may build his works without violating the law or committing a nuisance; builders of houses need to know, to what distance they must keep from the obnoxious works already erected, in order to be sure of the protection of the law for their habitations. This requisite certainty and precision can only be obtained by a positive enactment, fixing the distance, within which the use shall be prohibited as noxious, and beyond which it will be allowed, and enforcing the rule thus fixed, by penalties. * * *

The reason why it is necessary to have a certain and authoritative law, is shown by the difficulty, not to say impracticability, of inquiring and deciding as a fact, in each particular case, whether a certain erection in tide-water is a nuisance at common law or not; and when ascertained and adjudged, it affords no rule for any other case, and can have little effect in maintaining and protecting the acknowledged public right. It is this consideration (the expediency and necessity of defining and securing the rights of the public), which creates the exigency, and furnishes the legislature with the authority to make a general and precise law; but when made, because it was just and expedient, and because it is law, it becomes the duty of every person to obey it and comply with it. The question under the statute therefore is, not whether any wharf, built after the statute was made and promulgated, was an actual obstruction to navigation, but whether it was within the prohibited limit. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

MUTUAL LOAN CO. v. MARTELL (1911) 222 U. S. 225, 232, 233, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 56 L. Ed. 175, Mr. Justice McKENNA (affirming a Massachusetts judgment which upheld a statute invalidating the assignment of future wages without the consent of the wage-earner's wife and employer):

"The contention of plaintiff is (1) that the provisions of section 7 and 8 deprive it of due process of law. * * *

"(1) To sustain this contention it is urged that the statute being an exercise of the police power of the state, its purpose must have 'some clear, real, and substantial connection' with the preservation of the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare; and it is insisted that the statute of Massachusetts has not such connection and is therefore invalid.

"This court has had many occasions to define, in general terms, the police power, and to give particularity to the definitions by special applications. In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 592, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 50 L. Ed. 596, 609, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175, it was said that 'the police power of a state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, the public morals, or the public safety,' and that the validity of a police regulation 'must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the character of the regulation, whether arbitrary or reasonable, and whether really designed to accomplish a legitimate public purpose.'

"In Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 318, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499, 502, it was decided that the police power is not confined 'to the suppression of what is offensive, disorderly, or unsanitary,' but 'extends to so dealing with the conditions which exist in the state as to bring out of them the greatest welfare of its people.'

"In a sense, the police power is but another name for the power of government;¹ and a contention that a particular exercise of it offends the due process clause of the Constitution is apt to be very intangible to a precise consideration and answer. Certain general principles, however, must be taken for granted. It is certainly the province of the state, by its legislature, to adopt such policy as to it seems best. There are constitutional limitations, of course, but these allow a very comprehensive range of judgment. And within that range the Massachusetts statute can be justified. Legislation cannot be judged by theoretical standards. It must be tested by the concrete conditions which induced it; and this test was applied by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in passing on the validity of the statute under review."

LICENSE CASES (1847) 5 How. 504, 582, 583, 12 L. Ed. 256, Mr. Chief Justice TANEY (affirming a New Hampshire judgment which upheld a state statute regulating the sale of liquor):

"It has been said, indeed, that quarantine and health laws are passed by the states, not by virtue of a power to regulate commerce, but by virtue of their police powers, and in order to guard the lives and health of their citizens. This, however, cannot be said of the pilot laws, which are yet admitted to be equally valid. But what are the police powers of a state? They are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty to the extent of its dominions. And whether a state passes a quarantine law, or a law to punish offences, or to establish courts of justice, or requiring certain instruments to be recorded, or to regulate commerce within its own limits, in every case it exercises the same power; that is to say, the power of sovereignty, the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion. It is by virtue of this power that it legislates; and its authority to make regulations of commerce is as absolute as its power to pass health laws, except in so far as it has been restricted by the Constitution of the United States. And when the validity of a state law making regulations of commerce is drawn into question in a judicial tribunal, the authority to pass it cannot be made to depend upon the motives that may be supposed to have influenced the legislature, nor can the court inquire whether it

¹ "In its broadest sense, as sometimes defined, it [the police power] includes all legislation and almost every function of government."—New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing Co., 115 U. S. 650, 661, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 258, 29 L. Ed. 516 (1885), by Harlan, J.

"It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. 864, 42 L. Ed. 260. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare."—Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 111, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 188, 55 L. Ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487 (1911), by Holmes, J.

was intended to guard the citizens of the state from pestilence and disease, or to make regulations of commerce for the interests and convenience of trade.

"Upon this question, the object and motive of the state are of no importance, and cannot influence the decision. It is a question of power. Are the states absolutely prohibited by the Constitution from making any regulations of foreign commerce? If they are, then such regulations are null and void, whatever may have been the motive of the state, or whatever the real object of the law; and it requires no law of Congress to control or annul them."

LAKE SHORE & M. S. RY. CO. v. OHIO ex rel. LAWRENCE (1899) 173 U. S. 285, 289, 290-292, 296-298, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702, Mr. Justice HARLAN (upholding a state statute requiring railways to stop certain trains at places of 3,000 inhabitants):

"In the argument at the bar, as well as in the printed brief of counsel, reference was made to the numerous cases in this court adjudging that what are called the police powers of the states were not surrendered to the general government when the Constitution was ordained, but remained with the several states of the Union. And it was asserted with much confidence that, while regulations adopted by competent local authority in order to protect or promote the public health, the public morals, or the public safety have been sustained where such regulations only incidentally affected commerce among the states, the principles announced in former adjudications condemn, as repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, all local regulations that affect interstate commerce in any degree if established merely to subserve the public convenience.

"One of the cases cited in support of this position is Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 303, 308, 317, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, which involved the validity of a statute of Georgia [forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday save in certain cases of necessity]. * * *

"After observing that the argument in behalf of the defendant rested upon the erroneous assumption that the statute of Georgia was such a regulation of interstate commerce as was forbidden by the Constitution without reference to affirmative action by Congress, and not merely a statute enacted by the state under its police power, and which, although in some degree affecting interstate commerce, did not go beyond the necessities of the case, and therefore was valid, at least until Congress intervened, this court, upon a review of the adjudged cases, said: 'These authorities make it clear that the legislative enactments of the states, passed under their admitted police powers, and having a real relation to the domestic peace, order, health, and safety of their people, but which, by their necessary operation, affect to some extent or for a limited time the conduct of commerce among the states, are yet not invalid by force alone of the grant of power to Congress to regulate such commerce, and, if not obnoxious to some other constitutional provision or destructive of some right secured by the fundamental law, are to be respected in the courts of the Union until they are superseded and displaced by some act of Congress passed in execution of the power granted to it by the Constitution. Local laws of the character mentioned have their source in the powers which the states reserved, and never surrendered to Congress, of providing for the public health, the public morals, and the public safety; and are not, within the meaning of the Constitution, and considered in their own nature, regulations of interstate commerce simply because, for a limited time or to a limited extent, they cover the field occupied by those engaged in such commerce.' * * *

"It is insisted by counsel that these and observations to the same effect in different cases show that the police powers of the states, when exerted with reference to matters more or less connected with interstate commerce, are restricted in their exercise, so far as the national Constitution is concerned, to regulations pertaining to the health, morals, or safety of the public, and do not embrace regulations designed merely to promote the public convenience.

"This is an erroneous view of the adjudications of this court. While cases to which counsel refer involved the validity of state laws having reference directly to the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, in no one of them was there any occasion to determine whether the police powers of the states extended to regulations incidentally affecting interstate commerce, but which were designed only to promote the public convenience or the general welfare. There are, however, numerous decisions by this court to the effect that the states may legislate with reference simply to the public convenience, subject, of course, to the condition that such legislation be not inconsistent with the national Constitution, nor with any act of Congress passed in pursuance of that instrument, nor in derogation of any right granted or secured by it. As the question now presented is one of great importance, it will be well to refer to some cases of the latter class. [Here are discussed various cases upholding state laws regulating the use of bridges and rivers and the obligations of carriers.] * * *

"Now, it is evident that these cases had no reference to the health, morals, or safety of the people of the state, but only to the public convenience. They recognized the fundamental principle that, outside of the field directly occupied by the general government under the powers granted to it by the Constitution, all questions arising within a state that relate to its internal order, or that involve the public convenience or the general good, are primarily for the determination of the state, and that its legislative enactments relating to those subjects, and which are not inconsistent with the state Constitution, are to be respected and enforced in the courts of the Union if they do not by their operation directly entrench upon the authority of the United States, or violate some right protected by the national Constitution. * * *

"It may be that such legislation is not within the 'police power' of a state, as those words have been sometimes, although inaccurately, used. But, in our opinion, the power, whether called 'police,' 'governmental,' or 'legislative,' exists in each state, by appropriate enactments not forbidden by its own Constitution or by the Constitution of the United States, to regulate the relative rights and duties of all persons and corporations within its jurisdiction, and therefore to provide for the public convenience and the public good. This power in the states is entirely distinct from any power granted to the general government, although, when exercised, it may sometimes reach subjects over which national legislation can be constitutionally extended. When Congress acts with reference to a matter confided to it by the Constitution, then its statutes displace all conflicting local regulations touching that matter, although such regulations may have been established in pursuance of a power not surrendered by the states to the general government. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 210, 6 L. Ed. 23; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 243, 16 L. Ed. 243; Railway Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 626, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878. * * *"

[SHIRAS, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which BREWER, WHITE, and PECKHAM, JJ., concurred, on the ground that the Ohio statute improperly burdened interstate commerce. WHITE, J., also gave a dissenting opinion.]

HENDERSON v. MAYOR OF NEW YORK (1875) 92 U. S. 259, 271, 272, 23 L. Ed. 543, Mr. Justice MILLER (discussing a state statute regulating the landing of immigrants at the port of New York):

"Assuming that, in the formation of our government, certain powers necessary to the administration of their internal affairs are reserved to the states, and that among these powers are those for the preservation of good order, of the health and comfort of the citizens, and their protection against pauperism and against contagious and infectious diseases, and other matters of legislation of like character, [it is insisted] that the power here exercised falls within this class, and belongs rightfully to the states.

"This power, frequently referred to in the decisions of this court, has been, in general terms, somewhat loosely called the police power. It is not necessary for the course of this discussion to attempt to define it more accurately than it has been defined already. It is not necessary, because whatever may be the nature and extent of that power, where not otherwise restricted, no definition of it, and no urgency for its use, can authorize a state to exercise it in regard to a subject-matter which has been confided exclusively to the discretion of Congress by the Constitution.

"Nothing is gained in the argument by calling it the police power. Very many statutes, when the authority on which their enactments rest is examined, may be referred to different sources of power, and supported equally well under any of them. A statute may at the same time be an exercise of the taxing power and of the power of eminent domain. A statute punishing counterfeiting may be for the protection of the private citizen against fraud, and a measure for the protection of the currency and for the safety of the government which issues it. It must occur very often that the shading which marks the line between one class of legislation and another is very nice, and not easily distinguishable.

"But, however difficult this may be, it is clear, from the nature of our complex form of government, that, whenever the statute of a state invades the domain of legislation which belongs exclusively to the Congress of the United States, it is void, no matter under what class of powers it may fall, or how closely allied to powers conceded to belong to the states."¹

In re RAPIER (1892) 143 U. S. 110, 134, 12 Sup. Ct. 374, 36 L. Ed. 93, Mr. Chief Justice FULLER (upholding the power of the United States to exclude lottery matter from the mails):

"The states, before the Union was formed, could establish post-offices and post-roads, and in doing so could bring into play the police power in the protection of their citizens from the use of the means

¹ "Definitions of the police power must, however, be taken subject to the condition that the state cannot in its exercise for any purpose whatever, encroach upon the powers of the general government, or rights granted or secured by the supreme law of the land."—New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing & Mfg. Co., 115 U. S. 650, 661, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 258, 29 L. Ed. 516 (1885), by Harlan, J.

"It is true that the police power of a state is the least limitable of its powers, but even it may not transcend the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States."—Shevlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minnesota, 218 U. S. 57, 69, 70, 30 Sup. Ct. 663, 666, 54 L. Ed. 930 (1910), by McKenna, J.

"The phrase 'police power' has been sometimes used by writers upon legal subjects as if it denoted some peculiar and transcendent form of legislative authority. The word 'police' does not naturally carry any such meaning. Its use in this connection came into our law early in the nineteenth century. Russ. Police Power of State, 231. * * * As applied to the state, police laws are laws of general administration and government. Its power to enact such laws extends over all subjects within its territorial limits. Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539, 625, 10 L. Ed. 1060. The police powers of a state. In the apt words of Chief Justice Taney, 'are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty to the extent of its dominions.' The License Cases, 5 How. 504, 583, 12 L. Ed. 256. If they are exercised by legislation which violates any right guaranteed by the national or state Constitution, they are so far forth invalid. Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 108, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 33 Atl. 519, 31 L. R. A. 55, 48 Am. St. Rep. 227."—McKeon v. N. Y. & N. H. R. Co., 75 Conn. 343, 347, 53 Atl. 656, 61 L. R. A. 736 (1902), by Baldwin, J.

so provided for purposes supposed to exert a demoralizing influence upon the people. When the power to establish post-offices and post-roads was surrendered to the Congress, it was as a complete power; and the grant carried with it the right to exercise all the powers which made that power effective. It is not necessary that Congress should have the power to deal with crime or immorality within the states in order to maintain that it possesses the power to forbid the use of the mails in aid of the perpetration of crime or immorality."

SECOND EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY CASES (1912) 223 U. S. 1, 54, 55, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44, Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER (upholding the federal act regulating the liability of interstate railway carriers to their employees):

"True, prior to the present act, the laws of the several states were regarded as determinative of the liability of employers engaged in interstate commerce for injuries received by their employees while engaged in such commerce. But that was because Congress, although empowered to regulate that subject, had not acted thereon, and because the subject is one which falls within the police power of the states in the absence of action by Congress. * * * The inaction of Congress, however, in no wise affected its power over the subject. * * * And now that Congress has acted, the laws of the states, in so far as they cover the same field, are superseded, for necessarily that which is not supreme must yield to that which is."¹

¹ Regarding the subjects over which Congress has exercised a "police power" incidental to the powers specifically conferred upon the United States by the Constitution, it has been said (upholding the federal pure food and drugs act): "Congress has enacted a safety appliance law for the preservation of life and limb. Congress has enacted the anti-trust statute to prevent immorality in contracts and business affairs. Congress has enacted the live stock sanitation act to prevent cruelty to animals. Congress has enacted the cattle contagious disease act to more effectively suppress and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases of live stock. Congress has enacted a statute to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts. Congress has enacted the meat inspection act. Congress has enacted a second employer's liability act. Congress has enacted the obscene literature act. Congress has enacted the lottery statute above referred to. Congress has enacted (but a year ago) statutes prohibiting the sending of liquors by interstate shipment with the privilege of the vendor to have the liquors delivered c. o. d. and to prohibit shipments of liquors except when the name and address of the consignee and the quantity and kind of liquor is plainly labeled on the package. These statutes, police regulations in many respects, are alike in principle to the act of June 30, 1906, under consideration. Can it be possible they are all void?"—Shawnee Milling Co. v. Temple (C. C.) 179 Fed. 517, 524 (1910), by McPherson, J.

REGULATION BY TAXATION.—The regulative powers of both the states and the United States may be exercised through appropriate forms of taxation (not otherwise incompetent), as well as by direct legislative mandate. See Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, 594-596, 5 Sup. Ct. 247, 28 L. Ed. 798 (1884); Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 198 U. S. 17, 25 Sup. Ct. 552, 49 L. Ed. 925 (1905); Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 104, 27 Sup. Ct. 447, 51 L. Ed. 724, 10 Ann. Cas. 733 (1907); De Bary & Co. v. Louisiana, 227 U. S. 108, 33 Sup. Ct. 239, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

SECTION 2.—CLASSIFICATION (EQUALITY)

SLAUGHTER HOUSE CASES.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1873. 16 Wall. 36, 81, 21 L. Ed. 394.)

See ante, p. 223, for that part of the opinion of Mr. Justice MILLER beginning, "Nor shall any state deny to any person within its jurisdiction," and ending, "as it may have relation to this particular clause of the amendment."

MISSOURI v. LEWIS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1880. 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Missouri. The law of Missouri permitted an appeal to the state Supreme Court from all of the circuit courts of the state, except those of St. Charles, Lincoln, Warren, and St. Louis counties, and of the city of St. Louis. From the circuit courts of the latter places an appeal was allowed only to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, save in certain enumerated classes of cases. A judgment of disbarment having been affirmed by the latter court against one Bowman, the Supreme Court of Missouri refused to mandamus the St. Louis Court of Appeals to grant an appeal from this affirmance. From a similar judgment of disbarment in other counties of the state an appeal would have lain to the state Supreme Court.]

Mr. Justice BRADLEY. * * * The plaintiff in error contends that this feature of the judicial system of Missouri is in conflict with the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to suitors in the courts of St. Louis and the counties named the equal protection of the laws, in that it denies to them the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Missouri in cases where it gives that right to suitors in the courts of the other counties of the state.

If this position is correct, the fourteenth amendment has a much more far-reaching effect than has been supposed. It would render invalid all limitations of jurisdiction based on the amount or character of the demand. A party having a claim for only five dollars could with equal propriety complain that he is deprived of a right enjoyed by other citizens, because he cannot prosecute it in the superior courts; and another might equally complain that he cannot bring a suit for real estate in a justice's court, where the expense is small and the proceedings are expeditious. There is no difference in principle between such discriminations as these in the jurisdictions of courts and that which the plaintiff in error complains of in the present case.

If, however, we take into view the general objects and purposes of the fourteenth amendment, we shall find no reasonable ground for giving it any such application. These are to extend United States citizenship to all natives and naturalized persons, and to prohibit the states from abridging their privileges or immunities, and from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and from denying to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. It contemplates persons and classes of persons. It has not respect to local and municipal regulations that do not injuriously affect or discriminate between persons or classes of persons within the places or municipalities for which such regulations are made. The amendment could never have been intended to prevent a state from arranging and parceling out the jurisdiction of its several courts at its discretion. No such restriction as this could have been in view, or could have been included, in the prohibition that "no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is the right of every state to establish such courts as it sees fit, and to prescribe their several jurisdictions as to territorial extent, subject-matter, and amount, and the finality and effect of their decisions, provided it does not encroach upon the proper jurisdiction of the United States, and does not abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, and does not deprive any person of his rights without due process of law, nor deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, including the equal right to resort to the appropriate courts for redress. The last restriction, as to the equal protection of the laws, is not violated by any diversity in the jurisdiction of the several courts as to subject-matter, amount, or finality of decision, if all persons within the territorial limits of their respective jurisdictions have an equal right, in like cases and under like circumstances, to resort to them for redress. Each state has the right to make political subdivisions of its territory for municipal purposes, and to regulate their local government. As respects the administration of justice, it may establish one system of courts for cities and another for rural districts, one system for one portion of its territory and another system for another portion. Convenience, if not necessity, often requires this to be done, and it would seriously interfere with the power of a state to regulate its internal affairs to deny to it this right. We think it is not denied or taken away by anything in the Constitution of the United States, including the amendments thereto.

We might go still further, and say, with undoubted truth, that there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any state from adopting any system of laws or judicature it sees fit for all or any part of its territory. If the state of New York, for example, should see fit to adopt the civil law and its method of procedure for New York City and the surrounding counties, and the common law and its method of procedure for the rest of the state, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent its doing so. This would not, of itself, within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, be a denial to any person of the equal protection of the laws. If every person residing or being in either portion of the state should be accorded the equal protection of the laws prevailing there, he could not justly complain of a violation of the clause referred to. For as before said it has respect to persons and classes of persons. It means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and under like circumstances.

The fourteenth amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two states separated only by an imaginary line. On one side of this line there may be a right of trial by jury, and on the other side no such right. Each state prescribes its own modes of judicial proceeding. If diversities of laws and judicial proceedings may exist in the several states without violating the equality clause in the fourteenth amendment, there is no solid reason why there may not be such diversities in different parts of the same state. A uniformity which is not essential as regards different states cannot be essential as regards different parts of a state, provided that in each and all there is no infraction of the constitutional provision. Diversities which are allowable in different states are allowable in different parts of the same state. Where part of a state is thickly settled, and another part has but few inhabitants, it may be desirable to have different systems of judicature for the two portions—trial by jury in one, for example, and not in the other. Large cities may require a multiplication of courts and a peculiar arrangement of jurisdictions. It would be an unfortunate restriction of the powers of the state government if it could not, in its discretion, provide for these various exigencies.

If a Mexican state should be acquired by treaty and added to an adjoining state, or part of a state, in the United States, and the two should be erected into a new state, it cannot be doubted that such new state might allow the Mexican laws and judicature to continue unchanged in the one portion, and the common law and its corresponding judicature in the other portion. Such arrangement would not be prohibited by any fair construction of the fourteenth amendment. It would not be based on any respect of persons or classes, but on municipal considerations alone, and a regard to the welfare of all classes within the particular territory or jurisdiction.

It is not impossible that a distinct territorial establishment and jurisdiction might be intended as, or might have the effect of, a discrimination against a particular race or class, where such race or class should happen to be the principal occupants of the disfavored district

Should such a case ever arise, it will be time enough then to consider it. No such case is pretended to exist in the present instance. * * * Judgment affirmed.¹

BARBIER v. CONNOLLY (1885) 113 U. S. 27, 30-32, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923, Mr. Justice FIELD (upholding an ordinance of San Francisco, the contested part of which appears in the quotation below):

"That fourth section, so far as it is involved in the case before the police judge, was simply a prohibition to carry on the washing and ironing of clothes in public laundries and wash-houses, within certain prescribed limits of the city and county, from ten o'clock at night until six o'clock of the morning of the following day. The prohibition against labor on Sunday is not involved. The provision is purely a police regulation within the competency of any municipality possessed of the ordinary powers belonging to such bodies. And it would be an extraordinary usurpation of the authority of a municipality, if a federal tribunal should undertake to supervise such regulations. It may be a necessary measure of precaution in a city composed largely of wooden buildings like San Francisco, that occupations in which fires are constantly required, should cease after certain hours at night until the following morning; and of the necessity of such regulations the municipal bodies are the exclusive judges; at least any correction of their action in such matters can come only from state legislation or state tribunals. The same municipal authority which directs the cessation of labor must necessarily prescribe the limits within which it shall be enforced, as it does the limits in a city within which wooden buildings cannot be constructed. There is no invidious discrimination against any one within the prescribed limits by such regulations. There is none in the regulation under consideration. The specification of the limits within which the business cannot be carried on without the certificates of the health officer and board of fire wardens is merely a designation of the portion of the city in which the precautionary measures against fire and to secure proper drainage must be taken for the public health and safety. It is not legislation discriminating against any one. All persons engaged in the same business within it are treated alike; are subject to the same restrictions and are entitled to the same privileges under similar conditions.

¹ Accord: Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 7 Sup. Ct. 350, 30 L. Ed. 578 (1887); Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 598-599, 21 Sup. Ct. 730, 45 L. Ed. 1015 (1901); Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U. S. 325, 26 Sup. Ct. 106, 50 L. Ed. 212 (1905); Guild v. First Nat. Bank, 4 S. D. 566, 581-581, 57 S. W. 499 (1894) (interest rate); United States v. Press Pub. Co., 219 U. S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 212, 55 L. Ed. 65, 21 Ann. Cas. 942 (1911) (federal criminal law); People v. Haynor, 149 N. Y. 195, 43 N. E. 541, 31 L. R. A. 689, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707 (1896) (barber shops on Sunday allowed in two cities only). Contra: State ex rel. Johnson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 195 Mo. 228, 245-248, 93 S. W. 784, 113 Am. St. Rep. 661 (1906). So-called "local option" laws are of course valid under the federal Constitution. Ohio ex rel. Lloyd v. Dollison, 194 U. S. 445, 24 Sup. Ct. 703, 48 L. Ed. 1062 (1904).

As to the effect of local constitutional restrictions upon special and local legislation, see Opinion of Justices, ante, p. 122, note; and Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., post, p. 319, note.

"The fourteenth amendment, in declaring that no state 'shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,' undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition, and that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offences. But neither the amendment—broad and comprehensive as it is—nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity. From the very necessities of society, legislation of a special character, having these objects in view, must often be had in certain districts, such as for draining marshes and irrigating arid plains. Special burdens are often necessary for general benefits—for supplying water, preventing fires, lighting districts, cleaning streets, opening parks, and many other objects. Regulations for these purposes may press with more or less weight upon one than upon another, but they are designed, not to impose unequal or unnecessary restrictions upon any one, but to promote, with as little individual inconvenience as possible, the general good. Though, in many respects, necessarily special in their character, they do not furnish just ground of complaint if they operate alike upon all persons and property under the same circumstances and conditions. Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited, but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment."¹

¹ And so in Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 708, 709, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 733, 28 L. Ed. 1145 (1885), by Field, J., upholding the same ordinance: "There

GULF, C. & S. F. RY. CO. v. ELLIS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1897. 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Texas. A Texas statute provided that when any person, having a valid claim not exceeding $50 against a railway corporation for personal service or labor, or for damages or overcharges on freight, or for injuries to stock by trains, should present such claim to the company under oath, and such claim should remain unpaid more than 30 days thereafter, the claimant might sue; and if he finally obtained judgment for the full amount of said claim he should be entitled in addition to an attorney fee of not over $10. Ellis, after complying with this statute, obtained judgment against the defendant company for $50 for a colt killed by it, and for a $10 attorney fee. The judgment for the attorney fee was appealed by defendant through two intermediate appellate courts to the state Supreme Court and was there affirmed.]

Mr. Justice BREWER. The single question in this case is the constitutionality of the act allowing attorney fees. The contention is that it operates to deprive the railroad companies of property without due process of law, and denies to them the equal protection of the law, in that it singles them out of all citizens and corporations, and requires is no force in the objection that an unwarrantable discrimination is made against persons engaged in the laundry business, because persons in other kinds of business are not required to cease from their labors during the same hours at night. There may be no risks attending the business of others; certainly not as great as where fires are constantly required to carry them on. The specific regulations for one kind of business, which may be necessary for the protection of the public, can never be the just ground of complaint because like restrictions are not imposed upon other business of a different kind. The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons engaged in the same business are subjected to different restrictions, or are held entitled to different privileges under the same conditions. It is only then that the discrimination can be said to impair that equal right which all can claim in the enforcement of the laws."

In New York ex rel. Lieberman v. Van De Carr, 199 U. S. 552, 563, 26 Sup. Ct. 144, 147, 50 L. Ed. 305 (1905), Day, J., said: "Nor do we think there is force in the contention that the plaintiff in error has been denied the equal protection of the laws because of the allegation that the milk business is the only business dealing in foods which is thus regulated by the sanitary code. All milk dealers within the city are equally affected by the regulations of the sanitary code. It is primarily for the state to select the kinds of business which shall be the subjects of regulation, and if the business affected is one which may be properly the subject of such legislation, it is no valid objection that similar regulations are not imposed upon other businesses of a different kind."

See, also, Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018 (1904) (dairies and cow stables within city forbidden without a permit from city council).

Classification is not invalid because it excludes similar objects of regulation that are legally outside the authority of the regulating body. So, e. g., as to state bank regulation not including national banks, Dolley v. Abilene Nat. Bank, 179 Fed. 461, 162 C. C. A. 607, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1065 (1910), affirmed 228 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 409, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

them to pay in certain cases attorney fees to the parties successfully suing them, while it gives to them no like or corresponding benefit. Only against railroad companies is such exaction made, and only in certain cases. * * *

While good faith and a knowledge of existing conditions on the part of a legislature is to be presumed, yet to carry that presumption to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reason for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile and discriminating legislation is to make the protecting clauses of the fourteenth amendment a mere rope of sand, in no manner restraining state action. * * *

But it is said that it is not within the scope of the fourteenth amendment to withhold from states the power of classification, and that, if the law deals alike with all of a certain class, it is not obnoxious to the charge of a denial of equal protection. While, as a general proposition, this is undeniably true, * * * yet it is equally true that such classification cannot be made arbitrarily. The state may not say that all white men shall be subjected to the payment of the attorney's fees of parties successfully suing them, and all black men not. It may not say that all men beyond a certain age shall be alone thus subjected, or all men possessed of a certain wealth. These are distinctions which do not furnish any proper basis for the attempted classification. That must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily, and without any such basis.

As well said by Black, J., in State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 314, 22 S. W. 350, 351, 21 L. R. A. 789, in which a statute making it a misdemeanor for any corporation engaged in manufacturing or mining to issue in payment of the wages of its employes any order, check, etc., payable otherwise than in lawful money of the United States, unless negotiable and redeemable at its face value in cash or in goods and supplies at the option of the holder at the store or other place of business of the corporation, was held class legislation and void: "Classification for legislative purposes must have some reasonable basis upon which to stand. It must be evident that differences which would serve for a classification for some purposes furnish no reason whatever for a classification for legislative purposes. The differences which will support class legislation must be such as, in the nature of things, furnish a reasonable basis for separate laws and regulations. Thus the legislature may fix the age at which persons shall be deemed competent to contract for themselves, but no one will claim that competency to contract can be made to depend upon statute or color of the hair. Such a classification for such a purpose would be arbitrary, and a piece of legislative despotism, and therefore not the law of the land." * * *

In Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 533, 33 L. Ed. 892, the question was presented as to the power of the state to classify for purposes of taxation, and while it was conceded that a large discretion in these respects was vested in the various legislatures, the fact of a limit to such discretion was recognized, the court, by Mr. Justice Bradley, saying, on page 237, 134 U. S., and page 535, 10 Sup. Ct. (33 L. Ed. 892): "All such regulations, and those of like character, so long as they proceed within reasonable limits and general usage, are within the discretion of the state legislature or the people of the state in framing their constitution. But clear and hostile discriminations against particular persons and classes, especially such as are of an unusual character, unknown to the practice of our governments, might be obnoxious to the constitutional prohibition."

It is, of course, proper that every debtor should pay his debts, and there might be no impropriety in giving to every successful suitor attorney's fees. Such a provision would bear a reasonable relation to the delinquency of the debtor, and would certainly create no inequality of right or protection. But before a distinction can be made between debtors, and one be punished for a failure to pay his debts, while another is permitted to become in like manner delinquent without any punishment, there must be some difference in the obligation to pay, some reason why the duty of payment is more imperative in the one instance than in the other.

If it be said that this penalty is cast only upon corporations, that to them special privileges are granted, and therefore upon them special burdens may be imposed, it is a sufficient answer to say that the penalty is not imposed upon all corporations. The burden does not go with the privilege. Only railroads of all corporations are selected to bear this penalty. The rule of equality is ignored.

It may be said that certain corporations are chartered for charitable, educational, or religious purposes, and abundant reason for not visiting them with a penalty for the nonpayment of debts is found in the fact that their chartered privileges are not given for pecuniary profit. But the penalty is not imposed upon all business corporations, all chartered for the purpose of private gain. The banking corporations, the manufacturing corporations, and others like them, are exempt. Further, the penalty is imposed, not upon all corporations charged with the quasi public duty of transportation, but only upon those charged with a particular form of that duty. So the classification is not based on any idea of special privileges by way of incorporation, nor of special privileges given thereby for purposes of private gain, nor even of such privileges granted for the discharge of one general class of public duties.

But, if the classification is not based upon the idea of special privileges, can it be sustained upon the basis of the business in which the corporations to be punished are engaged? That such corporations may be classified for some purposes is unquestioned. The business in which they are engaged is of a peculiarly dangerous nature, and the legislature, in the exercise of its police powers, may justly require many things to be done by them in order to secure life and property. Fencing of railroad tracks, use of safety couplers, and a multitude of other things easily suggest themselves. And any classification for the imposition of such special duties—duties arising out of the peculiar business in which they are engaged—is a just classification, and not one within the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment. Thus it is frequently required that they fence their tracks, and as a penalty for a failure to fence double damages in case of loss are inflicted. Railway Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463. But this and all kindred cases proceed upon the theory of a special duty resting upon railroad corporations by reason of the business in which they are engaged,—a duty not resting upon others; a duty which can be enforced by the legislature in any proper manner; and whether it enforces it by penalties in the way of fines coming to the state, or by double damages to a party injured, is immaterial. It is all done in the exercise of the police power of the state, and with a view to enforce just and reasonable police regulations.

While this action is for stock killed, the recovery of attorneys' fees cannot be sustained upon the theory just suggested. There is no fence law in Texas. The legislature of the state has not deemed it necessary for the protection of life or property to require railroads to fence their tracks, and, as no duty is imposed, there can be no penalty for non-performance. Indeed, the statute does not proceed upon any such theory; it is broader in its scope. Its object is to compel the payment of the several classes of debts named, and was so regarded by the supreme court of the state.

But a mere statute to compel the payment of indebtedness does not come within the scope of police regulations. The hazardous business of railroading carries with it no special necessity for the prompt payment of debts. That is a duty resting upon all debtors, and while, in certain cases, there may be a peculiar obligation which may be enforced by penalties, yet nothing of that kind springs from the mere work of railroad transportation. Statutes have been sustained giving special protection to the claims of laborers and mechanics, but no such idea underlies this legislation. It does not aim to protect the laborer or the mechanic alone, for its benefits are conferred upon every individual in the state, rich or poor, high or low, who has a claim of the character described. It is not a statute for the protection of particular classes of individuals supposed to need protection, but for the punishment of certain corporations on account of their delinquency.

Neither can it be sustained as a proper means of enforcing the payment of small debts, and preventing any unnecessary litigation in respect to them, because it does not impose the penalty in all cases where the amount in controversy is within the limit named in the statute. Indeed, the statute arbitrarily singles out one class of debtors, and punishes it for a failure to perform certain duties,—duties which are equally obligatory upon all debtors; a punishment not visited by reason of the failure to comply with any proper police regulations, or for the protection of the laboring classes, or to prevent litigation about trifling matters, or in consequence of any special corporate privileges bestowed by the state. Unless the legislature may arbitrarily select one corporation or one class of corporations, one individual or one class of individuals, and visit a penalty upon them which is not imposed upon others guilty of like delinquency, this statute cannot be sustained. * * *

Judgment reversed.

Mr. Justice GRAY [with whom concurred FULLER, C. J., and WHITE, J.], dissenting:

* * * The legislature of a state must be presumed to have acted from lawful motives, unless the contrary appears upon the face of the statute. If, for instance, the legislature of Texas was satisfied, from observation and experience, that railroad corporations within the state were accustomed, beyond other corporations or persons, to unconscionably resist the payment of such petty claims, with the object of exhausting the patience and the means of the claimants, by prolonged litigation, and perhaps repeated appeals, railroad corporations alone might well be required, when ultimately defeated in a suit upon such a claim, to pay a moderate attorney's fee, as a just, though often inadequate, contribution to the expenses to which they had put the plaintiff in establishing a rightful demand.¹ Whether such a state of things as above supposed did in fact exist, and whether, for that or other reasons, sound policy required the allowance of such a fee to either party, or to the plaintiff only, were questions to be determined by the legislature, when dealing with the subject of costs, except in so far as it saw fit to commit the matter to the decision of the courts. * * *¹

ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO. v. MATTHEWS (1899) 174 U. S. 96, 98-100, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909, Mr. Justice BREWER (sustaining a Kansas statute allowing a reasonable attorney fee to successful plaintiffs in actions against railroad companies for damage due to the negligent escape of fire):

[Referring to the case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666]. "It was held to be simply a statute imposing a penalty on railroad corporations for failing to pay certain debts, and not one to enforce compliance with any police regulations. * * * And there is no good reason why railroad corporations alone should be punished for not paying their debts. Compelling the payment of debts is not a police regulation. We see no reason to change the views then expressed, and, if the statute before us were the counterpart of that, we should be content to refer to that case as conclusive.

¹ See, also, Chicago v. Netcher, post p. 462, and note.

"But while there is a similarity, yet there are important differences, and differences which, in our judgment, compel an opposite conclusion. The purpose of this statute is not to compel the payment of debts, but to secure the utmost care on the part of railroad companies to prevent the escape of fire from their moving trains. This is obvious from the fact that liability for damages by fire is not cast upon such corporations in all cases, but only in those in which the fire is 'caused by the operating' of the road. It is true that no special act of precaution was required of the railroad companies, failure to do which was to be visited with this penalty, so that it is not precisely like the statutes imposing double damages for stock killed where there has been a failure to fence. Railway Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463. And yet its purpose is not different. Its monition to the railroads is not, 'Pay your debts without suit or you will, in addition, have to pay attorney's fees;' but rather, 'See to it that no fire escapes from your locomotives, for if it does you will be liable, not merely for the damage it causes, but also for the reasonable attorney's fees of the owner of the property injured or destroyed.' It has been frequently before the supreme court of Kansas, has always been so interpreted by that court, and its validity sustained on that ground. In Railway Co. v. Merrill, 40 Kan. 404, 408, 19 Pac. 795, it was said: 'The objection that this legislation is special and unequal cannot be sustained. The dangerous element employed, and the hazards to persons and property arising from the running of trains and the operation of railroads, justifies such a law; and the fact that all persons and corporations brought under its influence are subjected to the same duties and liabilities, under similar circumstances, disposes of the objections raised.'

"And in the opinion filed in the present case that court (58 Kan. 447, 450, 49 Pac. 602) observed: 'Our statute is somewhat in the nature of a police regulation, designed to enforce care on the part of railroad companies to prevent the communication of fire and the destruction of property along railroad lines. It is not intended merely to impose a burden on railroad corporations that private persons are not required to bear, and the remedy offered is one the legislature has the right to give in such cases. This is the view heretofore held by this court, which we see no reason for changing. Railway Co. v. Snaveley, 47 Kan. 637, 28 Pac. 615; Same v. Curtis, 48 Kan. 179, 29 Pac. 146; Same v. McMullen, 48 Kan. 281, 29 Pac. 147; Railroad Co. v. Henning, 48 Kan. 465, 29 Pac. 597.'

"It is true that the Ellis Case was one to recover damages for the killing of a colt by a passing train. And so it might be argued that the protection of the track from straying stock and the protection of stock from moving trains would, within the foregoing principles, uphold legislation imposing an attorney's fee in actions against railroad corporations. We were not insensible to this argument when that case was considered, but we accepted the interpretation of the statute and its purpose given by the supreme court of Texas. * * * Indeed, the limit in amount ($50), found in that statute, made it clear that no police regulation was intended; for, if it were, the more stock found on the track the greater would be the danger and the more imperative the need of regulation and penalty.

"So that, according to the interpretation placed upon the Texas statute by its supreme court, its purpose was generally to compel the payment of small debts, and the fact that among the debts so provided for was the liability for stock killed was not sufficient to justify us in separating the statute into fragments, and upholding one part on a theory inconsistent with the policy of the state, while, on the other hand, the purpose of this statute is, as declared by the supreme court of Kansas, protection against fire,—a matter in the nature of a police regulation."

[HARLAN, BROWN, PECKHAM, and McKENNA, JJ., dissented in an opinion by HARLAN, J.]¹

¹ In Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 326, 22 Sup. Ct. 662, 669, 46 L. Ed. 922 (1902), in sustaining a Texas statute imposing a penalty of 12 per cent. damages and an attorney fee upon life and health insurance companies that unsuccessfully defended suits against them, Fuller, C. J., said: "The reasoning in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909, applies rather than that in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis. The ground for placing life and health insurance companies in a different class from fire, marine, and inland insurance companies is obvious, and we think that putting them in a different class from mutual benefit and relief associations doing business through lodges, and benevolent associations of the character mentioned in the Texas statutes, is not an arbitrary classification, but rests on sufficient reason. The legislature evidently intended to distinguish between life and health insurance companies engaged in business for profit (and we are not called on to refine as to the distribution of such profits) and lodges and associations of a mutual benefit or benevolent character, having in mind also the necessity of the prompt payment of the insurance money in very many cases, in order to provide the means of living of which the beneficiaries had been deprived by the death of the insured." [Harlan and Brown, JJ., dissented.]

In Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 305, 306, 23 Sup. Ct. 565, 567, 47 L. Ed. 82 (1903), in sustaining a Nebraska statute allowing an attorney fee to a successful plaintiff in a suit upon a fire insurance policy for a total loss of real property insured, White, J., said: "As the rule settled by the previous cases is that contracts of insurance from their very nature are susceptible of classification, not only apart from other contracts, but from each other, it must follow, as the lesser is included in the greater, that the character of the property insured and the extent of the loss afford reasons for subclassification. It is, however, argued that no reason could have existed for classifying losses on real estate separately from losses on other property. And by what process of reasoning, it is asked, could the legislative mind have discovered the foundation for allowing the recovery of a reasonable attorney's fee in case of a total loss of real estate insured, and not permit recovery of such fee when the property insured has been only partially destroyed? The distinction between real and personal property has in all systems of law constantly given rise to different regulations concerning such property. The differences of relation which may arise between the insurer and the insured, depending upon whether the property insured has been only partially damaged or has been totally destroyed, needs but to be suggested. In the one case, the amount of the damage affords possibilities for a reasonable difference of opinion between the parties in adjusting the payment under the policy. In the other, the amount being determined under the statute by the value

SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. v. SEEGER (1907) 207 U. S. 73, 77-79, 28 Sup. Ct. 28, 52 L. Ed. 108, Mr. Justice DAY (sustaining a South Carolina statute imposing a penalty of $50 in favor of plaintiffs, recovering their full claims in suits against common carriers for damage to property while in their possession, provided the claim was not settled within 40 days after presentment to the defendant):

"We are of the opinion that this case comes within the limits of constitutionality. It is not an act imposing a penalty for the non-payment of debts. As the supreme court of South Carolina said in Best v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 72 S. C. 479, 484, 52 S. E. 223, 225: 'The object of the statute was not to penalize the carrier for merely refusing to pay a claim within the time required, whether just or unjust, but the design was to bring about a reasonably prompt settlement of all proper claims, the penalty, in case of a recovery in court, operating as a deterrent of the carrier in refusing to settle just claims, and as compensation of the claimant for the trouble and expense of the suit which the carrier's unreasonable delay and refusal made necessary.'

"This ruling of the supreme court finds support, if any be needed, in the preamble of the statute, which reads: 'An act to regulate the manner in which common carriers doing business in this state shall adjust freight charges and claims for loss of or damage to freight.' It is not an act leveled against corporations alone, but includes all common carriers. The classification is based solely upon the nature of the business, that being of a public character. It is true that no penalty is cast upon the shipper, yet there is some guaranty against excessive claims in that, as held by the supreme court of the state in Best v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. supra, there can be no award of a penalty unless there be a recovery of the full amount claimed.

"Further, the matter to be adjusted is one peculiarly within the knowledge of the carrier. It receives the goods and has them in its custody until the carriage is completed. It knows what it received and what it delivered. It knows what injury was done during the shipment, and how it was done. The consignee may not know what was in fact delivered at the time of the shipment, and the shipper may not know what was delivered to the consignee at the close of the transportation. The carrier can determine the amount of the loss more accurately and promptly and with less delay and expense than anyone else, and for the adjustment of loss or damage to shipments fixed by both parties in the policy, the question of legal liability under the policy would be, as a general rule, the only matter to be considered in determining whether payment under the contract will be made. Besides, it is obvious that the total destruction of real estate covered by insurance necessarily concerns the homes of many of the people of the state. If, in regulating and classifying insurance contracts, the legislature took the foregoing considerations into view and provided for them, we cannot say that in doing so it acted arbitrarily and wholly without reason." [Harlan, Brewer, and Brown, JJ. dissented.] within the state forty days cannot be said to be an unreasonably short length of time. It may be stated as a general rule that an act which puts in one class all engaged in business of a special and public character, requires of them the performance of a duty which they can do better and more quickly than others, and imposes a not exorbitant penalty for a failure to perform that duty within a reasonable time, cannot be adjudged unconstitutional as a purely arbitrary classification.

"While in this case the penalty may be large as compared with the value of the shipment, yet it must be remembered that small shipments are the ones which especially need the protection of penal statutes like this. If a large amount is in controversy, the claimant can afford to litigate. But he cannot well do so when there is but the trifle of a dollar or two in dispute, and yet justice requires that his claim be adjusted and paid with reasonable promptness. Further, it must be remembered that the purpose of this legislation is not primarily to enforce the collection of debts, but to compel the performance of duties which the carrier assumes when it enters upon the discharge of its public functions. We know there are limits beyond which penalties may not go even in cases where classification is legitimate; but we are not prepared to hold that the amount of penalty imposed is so great, or the length of time within which the adjustment and payment are to be made is so short, that the act imposing the penalty and fixing the time is beyond the power of the state."¹

[PECKHAM, J., dissented.]

CHARLOTTE, C. & A. R. CO. v. GIBBES (1892) 142 U. S. 386, 391, 393-395, 12 Sup. Ct. 255, 35 L. Ed. 1051, Mr. Justice FIELD (upholding a South Carolina statute imposing upon railroad corporations alone the expenses of the state railroad commission):

"If the tax were levied to pay for services in no way connected with the railroads, as, for instance, to pay the salary of the executive or judicial officers of the state, whilst railroad corporations were at the same time subjected to taxation upon their property equally with other corporations for such expenses, and other corporations were not taxed for the salaries mentioned, there would be just ground of complaint of unlawful discrimination against the railroad corporations, and of their not receiving the equal protection of the laws. But there is nothing of this nature in the tax in question. The railroad commissioners are charged with a variety of duties in connection with railroads, the performance of which is of great importance in the regulation of those instruments of transportation. * * * That regulation may extend to all measures deemed essential not merely to secure the safety of passengers and freight, but to promote the convenience of the public in the transaction of business with them, and to prevent abuses by extortionate charges and unjust discrimination. It may embrace a general supervision of the operation of their roads, which may be exercised by direct legislation commanding or forbidding, under severe penalties, the doing or omission of particular acts, or it may be exercised through commissioners specially appointed for that purpose. The mode or manner of regulation is a matter of legislative discretion. When exercised through commissioners, their services are for the benefit of the railroad corporations as well as of the public. Both are served by the required supervision over the roads and means of transportation, and there would seem to be no sound reason why the compensation of the commissioners in such case should not be met by the corporations, the operation of whose roads and the exercise of whose franchises are supervised. In exacting this there is no encroachment upon the fourteenth amendment.

¹ Compare St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 32 Sup. Ct. 493, 56 L. Ed. 799 (1912) and Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Brandon, 98 Miss. 461, 53 South. 957, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106 (1910).

"Requiring that the burden of a service deemed essential to the public, in consequence of the existence of the corporations and the exercise of privileges obtained at their request, should be borne by the corporations in relation to whom the service is rendered, and to whom it is useful, is neither denying to the corporations the equal protection of the laws or making any unjust discrimination against them. All railroad corporations in the state are treated alike in this respect. The necessity of supervision extends to them all, and for that supervision the like proportional charge is made against all. There is no occasion for similar regulations for the government of other than railroad corporations, and therefore no charge is made against them for the expenses and salaries of the commissioners. The rule of equality is not invaded where all corporations of the same kind are subjected to like charges for similar services, though no charge at all is made against other corporations. There is no charge where there is no service rendered. The legislative and constitutional provision of the state, that taxation of property shall be equal and uniform and in proportion to its value, is not violated by exacting a contribution according to their gross income in proportion to the number of miles of railroad operated in the state to meet the special service required. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145; Missouri Pacific Railway v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463.

"There are many instances where parties are compelled to perform certain acts and to bear certain expenses when the public is interested in the acts which are performed as much as the parties themselves. Thus in opening, widening, or improving streets the owners of adjoining property are often compelled to bear the expenses, or at least a portion of them, notwithstanding the work done is chiefly for the benefit of the public. So, also, in the draining of marsh lands, the public is directly interested in removing the causes of malaria, and yet the expense of such labor is usually thrown upon the owners of the property. Quarantine regulations are adopted for the protection of the public against the spread of disease, yet the requirement that the vessel examined shall pay for the examination is a part of all quarantine systems. Morgan v. Louisiana, 118 U. S. 455, 466, 6 Sup. Ct. 1114, 30 L. Ed. 237. So, the expense of a compulsory examination of a railroad engineer, to ascertain whether he is free from color blindness, has been held to be properly chargeable against the railroad company. Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 101, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352. So, where work is done in a particular county for the benefit of the public, the cost is oftentimes cast upon the county itself instead of upon the whole state. Thus, in County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238, it was held that a provision for the issuing of bonds by a county in Alabama could not be declared invalid, although it imposed upon one county the expense of an improvement in which the whole state was interested. In such instances, where the interests of the public and of individuals are blended in any work or service imposed by law, whether the cost shall be thrown entirely upon the individuals, or upon the state, or be apportioned between them, is matter of legislative direction." * * *

[Messrs. Justices BRADLEY and GRAY did not sit.]

FINLEY v. CALIFORNIA (1911) 222 U. S. 28, 32 Sup. Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 75, Mr. Justice McKENNA (affirming a California judgment which upheld a statute punishing life convicts alone with death, for an assault with a deadly weapon):

"It is elementary that the contention [denial of the equal protection of the laws] is to be tested by considering whether there is a basis for

¹ Accord: New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269 (1894) (expense of abolishing grade crossings); St. Louis Consolidated Coal Co. v. Illinois, 185 U. S. 203, 22 Sup. Ct. 616, 46 L. Ed. 872 (1902) (cost of inspecting mines); Atlantic & P. Telegraph Co. v. Philadelphia, 190 U. S. 160, 23 Sup. Ct. 817, 47 L. Ed. 995 (1903) (cost of governmental supervision); Comm. v. Carter, 132 Mass. 12 (1882) (samples of milk for inspection).

The imposition is invalid if unreasonably excessive for its purpose, Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Taylor, 192 U. S. 64, 24 Sup. Ct. 208, 48 L. Ed. 342 (1904); or if the expenditure to be defrayed has not been made specially necessary by the object of taxation, In re Gardner, 84 Kan. 264, 113 Pac. 1054, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956 (1911); Etna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 78 S. C. 445, 59 S. E. 148 (1907), annotated in 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 1148, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818. But compare State v. Sutton (N. J.) 84 Atl. 1057 (1912), and the doctrine of cases like Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 54, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034 (1909); Com. v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 212 Mass. 62, 98 N. E. 1075 (1912). See Chicago v. Pennsylvania Co., 252 Ill. 185, 96 N. E. 833, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1081, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 400 (1911) (railroad cannot be required to light highway under its crossing above grade).

the classification made by the statute. Applying that test, we see no error in the ruling. As said by Mr. Justice Henshaw, delivering the opinion of the court, 'The classification of the statute in question is not arbitrary, but is based upon valid reasons and distinctions.' And pointing out the distinction between life prisoners and other convicts, he said that 'the "life termers," as has been said, while within the prison walls, constitute a class by themselves,—a class recognized as such by penologists the world over. Their situation is legally different. Their civic death is perpetual.' [153 Cal. 62, 94 Pac. 248.] Manifestly there could be no extension of the term of imprisonment as a punishment for crimes they might commit, and whatever other punishment should be imposed was for the legislature to determine. The power of classification which the lawmaking power possesses has been illustrated by many cases which need not be cited. They demonstrate that the legislature of California did not transcend its power in the enactment of section 246."¹

¹ So McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 21 Sup. Ct. 389, 45 L. Ed. 542 (1901) (heavier penalty for habitual criminals). Compare State v. Lewin, 53 Kan. 679, 37 Pac. 168 (1894) (escaped convicts cannot be required to reserve original term).

In State v. Hogan, 63 Ohio St. 202, 58 N. E. 572, 52 L. R. A. 863, 81 Am. St. Rep. 626 (1900), an Ohio statute defined a "tramp" as any person, not a female or blind, who was found begging elsewhere than in the county of his residence, and various offences and threats by such persons were criminally punished much more severely than when not committed by "tramps." This was upheld, Spear, J., saying (63 Ohio St. 210, 211, 217, 218, 58 N. E. 573, 575, 52 L. R. A. 863, 81 Am. St. Rep. 626):

"Nor is it an objection to a penal statute that it does not apply to all persons who might by any possibility commit the act interdicted. It is for the legislature to determine how far to go in order to afford the desired protection to society. The exemption of some, where it does not interfere with the rights of others, is not open to objection on constitutional grounds. The principle is illustrated in the statute under review. Females and blind persons are not included within its terms. This, presumably, from considerations of humanity, but principally because but little, if any, danger is threatened from such; and this exemption has not met with objection in this case. The act in question undertakes to define a tramp or vagrant, by stating what acts shall constitute such character. It is, in the main, the old method of describing a vagrant, and vagrancy, time out of mind, has been deemed a condition calling for special statutory provisions; i. e. such as may tend to suppress the mischief and protect society. • • •

"Is there not sufficient difference between the condition and opportunity of a pauper in his own county, and the same character abroad, and between the situation of the people of the county where the pauper resides and those of distant neighborhoods, to warrant a legal distinction? In the county of his residence the pauper, when in necessitous circumstances, and unable to supply his own physical needs,—and he is often in that condition,—has the legal right to call upon the poor authorities for support, and those authorities have the right and the power to use the proper public funds for that purpose. Ordinarily such persons become quite well known, and the people are less apt to be terrified by them and induced through fear to yield to their demands, than where they are strangers; and the paupers themselves are much less likely to become ruffians when at home and comparatively isolated than when they have burned their bridges, so to speak, and started on a tramp in pastures new, and joined their fortunes with others of like ilk. In short, tramping makes a different character of the same person. And why may they not, when thus grouped, be regarded as a class?"

COTTING v. KANSAS CITY STOCK YARDS CO. (1901) 183 U. S. 79, 103-105, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92 (holding invalid a Kansas statute regulating the rates of stock yards within the state doing more than a certain volume of business, an amount actually exceeded only by the yards at Kansas City), Mr. Justice BREWER:

"It appears that a classification is attempted between stock yards doing a large and those doing a small business. The express and only basis of classification is in the amount of business done by the two classes. As evidence that we are right in our construction, we may refer to the brief of the learned attorney general, in which he says: 'The legislature has by this act classified the stock yards of the state into two classes, and has adopted the most natural and reasonable basis for such purposes that could be used, namely, the volume of business done. The reason for this is obvious; the stock yards doing a large volume of business are necessarily more of monopolies than those doing a smaller business. The public has greater interest in the business of large stock yards than it has in the business of smaller ones. * * * Another reason why the classification should be based upon the volume of business done is that rates which are reasonable and proper and furnish a sufficient return upon the capital invested can very properly be made lower and different in a plant where the volume of business is large, while in a smaller plant doing a smaller volume of business higher rates may be necessary in order to afford adequate returns.'

"If the average daily receipts of a stock yard are more than 100 head of cattle, or more than 300 head of hogs, or more than 300 head of sheep, it comes within the purview of this statute. If less than that amount it is free from legislative restriction. No matter what yards it may touch to-day or in the near or far future, the express declaration of the statute is that stock yards doing a business in excess of a certain amount of stock shall be subjected to this regulation, and that all others doing less business shall be free from its provisions. Clearly the classification is based solely on the amount of business done, and without any reference to the character or value of the services rendered. Kindred legislation would be found in a statute like this: requiring a railroad company hauling ten tons or over of freight a day to charge only a certain sum per ton, leaving to other railroad companies hauling a less amount of freight the right to make any reasonable charge; or, one requiring a railroad company hauling 100 or more passengers a day to charge only a specified amount per mile for each, leaving those hauling 99 or less to make any charge which would be reasonable for the service; or if we may indulge in the supposition that the legislature has a right to interfere with the freedom of private contracts, one which would forbid a dealer in shoes and selling more than ten pairs a day from charging more than a certain price per pair, leaving the others selling a less number to charge that which they deemed reasonable; or forbidding farmers selling more than ten bushels of wheat to charge above a specified sum per bushel, leaving to those selling a less amount the privilege of charging and collecting whatever they and the buyers may see fit to agree upon. In short, we come back to the thought that the classification is one not based upon the character or value of the services rendered, but simply on the amount of the business which the party does, and upon the theory that although he makes a charge which everybody else in the same business makes, and which is perfectly reasonable so far as the value of the services rendered to the individuals seeking them is concerned, yet if by the aggregation of business he is enabled to make large profits his charges may be cut down.

"The question thus presented is of profoundest significance. Is it true in this country that one who by his attention to business, by his efforts to satisfy customers, by his sagacity in discerning the probable courses of trade, and by contributing of his means to bring trade into those lines, succeeds in building up a large and profitable business, becomes thereby a legitimate object of the legislative scalping knife? Having created the facilities which the many enjoy, can the many turn around and say, you are making too much out of those facilities, and you must divide with us your profits? We cannot shut our eyes to well-known facts. Kansas is an agricultural state. Its extensive and fertile prairies produce each year enormous crops of corn and other grains. While portions of these crops are shipped to mills to be manufactured into meal and flour, it is found by many that there is a profit in feeding them to stock, so that the amount of stock which is raised and fattened in Kansas is large, and makes one of the great industries of the state. Now, shall they whose interests are all along the line of production, having by virtue of their numerical majority the control of legislation, be permitted to say to one who acts as an intermediary between transportation and sale, that while we permit no interference with the prices which we put upon our products, nevertheless we cut down your charges for intermediate services; and this, not because any particular charge is unreasonable, but because you are making by the aggregate of those charges too large a sum, and ought therefore to divide with us. * * *

"It has been more than once said judicially that one of the principles upon which this government was founded is that of equality of right. It is emphasized in that clause of the fourteenth amendment which prohibits any state to deny to any individual the equal protection of the laws. That constitutional provision does not, it is true, invalidate legislation on the mere ground of inequality in actual result. Tax laws, for instance, in their nature are and must be general in scope, and it may often happen that in their practical application they touch one person unequally from another. But that inequality is something which it is impossible to foresee and guard against, and therefore such resultant inequality in the operation of a law does not defeat its validity. * * *

"So, again, exercising the undoubted right of classification it may often happen that some classes are subjected to regulations, and some individuals are burdened with obligations which do not rest upon other classes or other individuals not similarly situated. License taxes are imposed on certain classes of business while others are exempt. It would practically defeat legislation if it was laid down as a rule that a statute was necessarily adjudged invalid if it did not bring all within its scope, or subject all to the same burdens. It would strip the legislature of its inherent power to determine generally what is for the general interests, which interests may often be promoted by certain regulations affecting one class which do not affect another, certain burdens imposed on one which do not rest upon another.

"But while recognizing to the full extent the impossibility of an imposition of duties and obligations mathematically equal upon all, and also recognizing the right of classification of industries and occupations, we must nevertheless always remember that the equal protection of the laws is guaranteed, and that such equal protection is denied when upon one of two parties engaged in the same kind of business and under the same conditions burdens are cast which are not cast upon the other. There can be no pretense that a stock yard which receives 99 head of cattle per day a year is not doing precisely the same business as one receiving 101 head of cattle per day each year. It is the same business in all its essential elements, and the only difference is that one does more business than the other. But the receipt of an extra 2 head of cattle per day does not change the character of the business. If once the door is opened to the affirmance of the proposition that a state may regulate one who does much business, while not regulating another who does the same but less business, then all significance in the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws is lost, and the door is opened to that inequality of legislation which Mr. Justice Catron referred to in the quotation above made. This statute is not simply legislation which in its indirect results affects different individuals or corporations differently, nor with those in which a classification is based upon inherent differences in the character of the business, but is a positive and direct discrimination between persons engaged in the same class of business, and based simply upon the quantity of business which each may do. If such legislation does not deny the equal protection of the laws, we are unable to perceive what legislation would.¹ * * *

¹ In St. Louis Consolidated Coal Co. v. Illinois, 185 U. S. 203, 207-208, 22 Sup. Ct. 616, 618, 46 L. Ed. 872 (1902), a coal mine inspection law was upheld; Brown, J., saying: "It is true that the act of 1897 amended the former law of 1895, by limiting its application to coal mines 'where more than five men are employed at any one time.' This is a species of classification which the legislature is at liberty to adopt, provided it be not wholly arbitrary or unreasonable, as it was in Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, sub nom. Cotting v. Godard, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92, in which an act defining what should constitute public stock yards, and regulating all charges connected therewith, was held to be unconstitutional, because it applied only

CONNOLLY v. UNION SEWER PIPE CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1902. 184 U. S. 540, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679.)

[Error to the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois. Plaintiff, an Ohio corporation doing business in Illinois, sued Connolly in this court upon two notes given in purchase to one particular company, and not to other companies or corporations engaged in a like business in Kansas, and thereby denied to that company the equal protection of the laws. In the case under consideration there is no attempt arbitrarily to select one mine for inspection, but only to assume that mines which are worked upon so small a scale as to require only five operatives would not be likely to need the careful inspection provided for the larger mines, where the workings were carried on upon a larger scale or at a greater depth from the surface, and where a much larger force would be necessary for their successful operation. It is quite evident that a mine which is operated by only five men could scarcely have passed the experimental stage, or that precautions necessary in the operation of coal mines of ordinary magnitude would be required in such cases. There was clearly reasonable foundation for a discrimination here."

So, McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 29 Sup. Ct. 206, 53 L. Ed. 315 (1909) (mines employing at least 10 men required to pay miners on basis of weight of coal dug before screenings).

In Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 327, 355-356, 133 N. W. 209, 218; 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489 (1911), a workmen's compensation act restricted to employers of more than three men was upheld; Winslow, C. J., saying: "Of course, there will be cases on the border line, where the difference in situation will be very slight, or perhaps entirely nonexistent. There will probably be no practical difference between the situation of the man who is one of four or five employees in a given employment and the situation of the man who is one of three; but this does not militate against the legitimacy of the classification. This is a necessary defect in all cases of classification based upon numbers. The question is not whether there may be some on one side of the line whose situation is practically the same as that of some on the other side but whether there is a distinction between the classes as classes, whether there are characteristics which, in a greater degree, persist through the one class than in the other which justify legal discrimination between them." State v. Evans, 130 Wis. 381, 110 N. W. 241."

A classification of cities according to population is ordinarily valid. Mason v. Missouri ex rel. McCaffery, 179 U. S. 328, 21 Sup. Ct. 125, 45 L. Ed. 214 (1900). But see Sutton v. State, 96 Tenn. 606, 36 S. W. 697, 33 L. R. A. 589 (1896) (classification bad if inflexibly based on population at a past census). Under the doctrine of Missouri v. Lewis, ante, p. 329, such objections must ordinarily be based upon local constitutional restrictions upon special and local legislation. As to this, see Gray v. Taylor, 227 U. S. 51, 33 Sup. Ct. 199, 57 L. Ed. — (1913). As to the classification of cities by various minute local details, see Matter of Hennelberger, 25 App. Div. 164, 49 N. Y. Supp. 230 (1898), aff'd in 155 N. Y. 420, 50 N. E. 61, 42 L. R. A. 132; Sutton v. State, above (even when details concern population).

Railroads under 50 miles in length may be excepted from various safety requirements. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 17 Sup. Ct. 418, 41 L. Ed. 853 (1897) (forbidding heating cars by stoves). Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 153, 31 Sup. Ct. 275, 55 L. Ed. 290 (1911) (number of brakemen on freight trains). Individuals or partnerships may be forbidden to receive money for deposit without a state license, unless the average amount received for deposit is at least $500. Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 31 Sup. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128 (1911). See King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 404, 18 Sup. Ct. 925, 43 L. Ed. 214 (1898) (forfeiting tracts over 1,000 acres for non-payment of taxes).

of sewer pipe from plaintiff. One of the defences alleged that plaintiff was a member of a trust prohibited by the Illinois statute of June 20, 1893, section 10 of which disabled such members from collecting the purchase price of goods sold by them. This statute forbade any persons or corporations to combine for the restriction of competition in commodities as set forth in the opinion below, but section 9 excepted from its operation agricultural products or live stock in the hands of producer or raiser. The Circuit Court held this statute invalid, and defendant took this writ of error.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * The vital question, however, is whether the statute of Illinois of 1893 is not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, by reason of the fact that by the ninth section it declares that "the provisions of this act shall not apply to agricultural products or live stock while in the hands of producer or raiser." The Circuit Court held this section to be repugnant to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and to be so connected and interwoven with other sections that its invalidity affected the entire act.

Looking specially at its provisions, it will be seen that, so far as the statute is concerned, two or more agriculturalists or two or more live-stock raisers may, in respect of their products or live stock in hand, combine their capital, skill, or acts for the purpose of creating or carrying out restrictions in the sale of such products or live stock; or limiting, increasing, or reducing their price; or preventing competition in their sale or purchase; or fixing a standard or figure whereby the price thereof to the public may be controlled; or making contracts whereby they would become bound not to sell or dispose of such agricultural products or live stock below a common standard figure or card or list price; or establishing the price of such products or stock in hand, so as to preclude free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others; or by agreeing to pool, combine, or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or transportation of their products or live stock that the price might be affected. All this, so far as the statute is concerned, may be done by agriculturalists or live-stock raisers in Illinois without subjecting them to the fine imposed by the statute. But exactly the same things, if done by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons who shall have combined their capital, skill, or acts, in respect of their property, merchandise, or commodities held for sale or exchange, is made by the statute a public offense, and every principal, manager, director, agent, servant, or employee knowingly carrying out the purposes, stipulations, and orders of such combination is punishable by a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000. Is not this such discrimination against those engaged in business (other than the sale of agricultural products and live stock in the hands of producers and raisers) as is forbidden by that clause of the fourteenth amendment which declares that "no state shall * * * deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws?" * * *

What may be regarded as a denial of the equal protection of the laws is a question not always easily determined, as the decisions of this court and of the highest courts of the states will show. It is sometimes difficult to show that a state enactment, having its source in a power not controverted, infringes rights protected by the national Constitution. No rule can be formulated that will cover every case. But upon this general question we have said that the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws means "that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and in like circumstances." Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 31, 25 L. Ed. 989. * * * [Here follow a quotation from Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923, ante, page 332, and references to Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220, post, page 383, Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 71, 7 Sup. Ct. 350, 30 L. Ed. 578, and Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 382, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485.]

These principles, applied to the case before us, condemn the statute of Illinois. We have seen that under that statute all except producers of agricultural commodities and raisers of live stock, who combine their capital, skill, or acts for any of the purposes named in the act, may be punished as criminals, while agriculturalists and live-stock raisers, in respect of their products or live stock in hand, are exempted from the operation of the statute, and may combine and do that which, if done by others, would be a crime against the state. The statute so provides notwithstanding persons engaged in trade or in the sale of merchandise and commodities, within the limits of a state, and agriculturalists and raisers of live stock, are all in the same general class, that is, they are all alike engaged in domestic trade, which is, of right open to all, subject to such regulations, applicable alike to all in like conditions, as the state may legally prescribe.

The difficulty is not met by saying that, generally speaking, the state when enacting laws may, in its discretion, make a classification of persons, firms, corporations, and associations, in order to subserve public objects. For this court has held that classification "must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily and without any such basis."

* * * [Here follows a further quotation from Gulf, etc., Ry. v. Ellis, ante, p. 334, and references to Cotting v. K. C. Stock Yards Co., ante, p. 346, and to Magoun v. Ill. T. & S. Bank, post, p. 629.

In American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana [179 U. S. 89, 21 Sup. Ct. 43, 45 L. Ed. 102] we held that a statute of Louisiana exempting from its operation planters and farmers grinding and refining their own sugar and molasses, but which imposed a license tax upon persons and corporations carrying on the business of refining sugar and molasses, did not deny the equal protection of the laws to such persons and corporations as were thus taxed. It was as if the statute had imposed a tax upon the business of refining sugar and molasses, and had declared, as reasonably it might have done, that those who only refined their own sugar and molasses should not be regarded as belonging to that class. * * *

The decision now rendered is not at all in conflict with the views expressed in the two cases just cited. It is sufficient to say that those cases had reference to the taxing power of the state, and involved considerations that could not, in the nature of things, apply to a state enactment like the one involved in the present case. The power to tax persons and property is an incident of sovereignty, and the extent to which it may be exerted has been indicated in numerous cases. Taxing laws, it has been well said, furnish the measure of every man's duty in support of the public burdens and the means of enforcing it. A tax may be imposed only upon certain callings and trades, for when the state exerts its power to tax, it is not bound to tax all pursuits or all property that may be legitimately taxed for governmental purposes. It would be an intolerable burden if a state could not tax any property or calling unless, at the same time, it taxed all property or all callings. Its discretion in such matters is very great, and should be exercised solely with reference to the general welfare as involved in the necessity of taxation for the support of the state. A state may, in its wisdom, classify property for purposes of taxation, and the exercise of its discretion is not to be questioned in a court of the United States, so long as the classification does not invade rights secured by the Constitution of the United States. But different considerations control when the state, by legislation, seeks to regulate the enjoyment of rights and the pursuit of callings connected with domestic trade. In prescribing regulations for the conduct of trade, it cannot divide those engaged in trade into classes and make criminals of one class if they do certain forbidden things, while allowing another and favored class engaged in the same domestic trade to do the same things with impunity. It is one thing to exert the power of taxation so as to meet the expenses of government, and at the same time, indirectly, to build up or protect particular interests or industries. It is quite a different thing for the state, under its general police power, to enter the domain of trade or commerce, and discriminate against some by declaring that particular classes within its jurisdiction shall be exempt from the operation of a general statute making it criminal to do certain things connected with domestic trade or commerce. Such a statute is not a legitimate exertion of the power of classification, rests upon no reasonable basis, is purely arbitrary, and plainly denies the equal protection of the laws to those against whom it discriminates. * * *

Returning to the particular case before us, and repeating or summarizing some thoughts already expressed, it may be observed that if combinations of capital, skill, or acts, in respect of the sale or purchase of goods, merchandise, or commodities, whereby such combinations may, for their benefit exclusively, control or establish prices, are hurtful to the public interests and should be suppressed, it is impossible to perceive why like combinations in respect of agricultural products and live stock are not also hurtful. Two or more engaged in selling dry goods, or groceries, or meats, or fuel, or clothing, or medicines, are under the statute, criminals, and subject to a fine, if they combine their capital, skill, or acts for the purpose of establishing, controlling, increasing, or reducing prices, or of preventing free and unrestrained competition amongst themselves or others in the sale of their goods or merchandise; but their neighbors, who happen to be agriculturalists and live-stock raisers, may make combinations of that character in reference to their grain or live stock without incurring the prescribed penalty. Under what rule of permissible classification can such legislation be sustained as consistent with the equal protection of the laws? It cannot be said that the exemption made by the ninth section of the statute was of slight consequence, as affecting the general public interested in domestic trade and entitled to be protected against combinations formed to control prices for their own benefit; for it cannot be disputed that agricultural products and live stock in Illinois constitute a very large part of the wealth and property of that state. * * *

We therefore hold that the act of 1893 is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, unless its ninth section can be eliminated, leaving the rest of the act in operation. * * *

[It was held that the elimination of this section alone, making the act apply as well to the excepted classes, would not have been accepted by the legislature, and so the whole act failed.]

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice McKENNA, dissenting. * * * It seems like a contradiction to say that a law having inequality of operation may yet give equality of protection. Viewed rightly, however, the contradiction disappears; indeed, need not even be expressed. There are very few exertions of government which can be made applicable to all persons as such. Government is not a simple thing. It encounters and must deal with the problems which come from persons in an infinite variety of relations. Classification is the recognition of those relations, and in making it a legislature must be allowed a wide latitude of discretion and judgment. This has been decided many times against contentions based on a variety of facts. I will content myself by citing the later cases and commenting upon them very briefly. The cases are Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1037; Clark v. Kansas City, 176 U. S.

114, 20 Sup. Ct. 284, 44 L. Ed. 392; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725; Petit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S. 164, 20 Sup. Ct. 666, 44 L. Ed. 716; Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 21 Sup. Ct. 128, 45 L. Ed. 186; American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 21 Sup. Ct. 43, 45 L. Ed. 102.

In these cases and the cases cited in them classifications were sustained which depended upon differences in the amounts of legacies; on differences between corporations; on differences between land dependent on its use for agriculture and other purposes in regard to the power of a city to annex it; on differences between fire insurance and other insurance; on the right of a legislature to declare, as a matter of law, that the work of a barber was not a work of necessity, while as to all other kinds of labor the fact was to be determined by a jury; on the difference between hiring persons to labor in the state and hiring persons to labor out of the state; on differences between sugar refiners based entirely and only on the fact of the production or purchase of the sugar refined.

In American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana a license tax was imposed on those engaged in carrying on the business of refining sugar and molasses. It was provided, however, that the law should not apply to "planters and farmers grinding and refining their own sugar."

Wherein did the Louisiana statute, which was held constitutional, differ from the Illinois statute, which is held to be unconstitutional? In the former case the distinction (in the opinion in the case it is called "discrimination") was between manufacturers of sugar and growers of it. In the case at bar the distinction is between traders in products and growers of them. Is not a parallel obvious? Can the cases be distinguished because in one a tax was imposed and in the other conduct is regulated or penalized? Indeed, is not the distinction verbal, each being means to an end? Besides, what justification for the distinction is there under the Constitution? None, I submit, can be found in the words of that instrument. Any state legislation which denies the equal protection of the laws is prohibited. The prohibition is independent of form or means. It would be strange, indeed, if the power of a state is limited and confined by the Constitution of the United States, when the state attempts by law to regulate conduct, and is unbounded in its discretion when it imposes taxes; that in one case it may see a difference between manufacturers and planters, and in the other case may not see a difference between traders in commodities acquired for the purposes of sale and such property when held by farmers by whose labor they were produced.

* * * What ingenuity can find a difference in the act and process of sugar refining when done by a purchaser of raw sugar and a raiser (planter) of it; what difference in the product after it shall be refined, or in any element, thing, or circumstance, which can affect its use or sale. The whole and only distinction in the classes which the statute made was between the grower of sugar and the buyer of it—the exact and only distinction of the Illinois law now held to be void, and yet the Louisiana law was sustained as constitutional. * * *

What was the purpose of the Illinois statute, and what were the relations of its classes to that purpose? The statute was the expression of the purpose of the state to suppress combinations to control the prices of commodities, not, however, in the hands of the producers, but in the hands of traders, persons, or corporations. Shall we say that such suppression must be universal or not at all? How can we? What knowledge have we of the condition in Illinois which invoked the legislation, or in what form and extent the evil of combinations to control prices appeared in that state? Indeed, whether such combinations are evils or blessings, or to what extent either, is not a judicial inquiry. If we can assume them to be evil because the statute does so, can we go beyond the statute and determine for ourselves the local conditions and condemn the legislation dependent thereon? But are there not, between the classes which the statute makes, distinctions which the legislature had a right to consider? Of whom are the classes composed? The excluded class is composed of farmers and stockraisers while holding the products or live stock produced or raised by them. The included class is composed of merchants, traders, manufacturers, all engaged in commercial transactions. That is, one class is composed of persons who are scattered on farms; the other class is composed of persons congregated in cities and towns, not only of natural persons, but of corporate organizations. In the difference of these situations, and in other differences which will occur to any reflection, might not the legislature see difference in opportunities and power between the classes in regard to the prohibited acts? That differences exist cannot be denied. To describe and contrast them might be invidious. To consider their effect would take us from legal problems to economic ones, and this demonstrates to my mind how essentially any judgment or action based upon those differences is legislative and cannot be reviewed by the judiciary. * * *

[GRAY, J., did not sit.]¹

¹ Compare Holmes, J., in Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 199 U. S. 401, 410, 411, 26 Sup. Ct. 66, 67 (50 L. Ed. 216) (1905) (upholding an Iowa statute forbidding fire insurance companies to combine in regard to rates): "At the argument before us more special reasons were assigned. It was pressed that there is no justification for the particular selection of fire insurance companies for the prohibitions discussed. With regard to this it should be observed, as is noticed by the appellees, that a general statute of Iowa prohibits all contracts or combinations to fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or to limit the quantity of the same produced or sold in the state (Code of 1897 § 5060), and that this section covers fire insurance. Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa, 602, 70 N. W. 107, 71 N. W. 128, 63 Am. St. Rep. 179. Therefore the act in question does little if anything more than apply and work out the policy of the general law in a particular case. Again, if an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business, the Constitution embodies no prohibition of laws confined to the evil, or doctrinaire requirement that they should be couched in all embracing terms. It does not for-

WILLIAMS v. ARKANSAS (1910) 217 U. S. 79, 89-90, 30 Sup. Ct. 493, 54 L. Ed. 673, 18 Ann. Cas. 865, Mr. Chief Justice FULLER (sustaining an Arkansas statute forbidding soliciting for certain kinds of business upon trains in the state):

"In the present case, the supreme court of Arkansas (85 Ark. 470, 108 S. W. 838, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 482, 122 Am. St. Rep. 47), said:

"The legislature clearly has the power to make regulations for the convenience and comfort of travelers on railroads, and this appears to be a reasonable regulation for their benefit. It prevents annoyance from the importunities of drummers. It is suggested in argument that the statute was especially aimed at the protection of travelers to the city of Hot Springs. If this be so, we can readily see additional reason why the regulation is a wholesome one. A large percentage of those travelers are persons from distant states, who are mostly complete strangers here, and many are sick. Drummers who swarm through the trains soliciting for physicians, bath houses, hotels, etc., make existence a burden to those who are subjected to their repeated solicitations. It is true that the traveler may turn a deaf ear to these importunities, but this does not render it any the less unpleasant and bid the cautious advance, step by step, and the distrust of generalities which sometimes have been the weakness, but often the strength, of English legislation. Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 610, 611, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 47 L. Ed. 323, 328. And if this is true, then, in view of the possible teachings to be drawn from a practical knowledge of the business concerned, it is proper that courts should be very cautious in condemning what legislatures have approved. If the legislature of the state of Iowa deems it desirable artificially to prevent, so far as it can, the substitution of combination for competition, this court cannot say that fire insurance may not present so conspicuous an example of what that legislature thinks an evil as to justify special treatment."

In Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 252, 258-262, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136 (1902), it was held that the prohibition of combinations between persons engaged in the manufacture, sale, or transportation of goods need not include persons, such as laborers or laundresses, who merely bestowed labor or skill upon goods. In W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission, 180 U. S. 452, 21 Sup. Ct. 423, 45 L. Ed. 619 (1901), it was held the state might regulate the business and rates of elevators and warehouses, excluding those not located on railway rights of way.

See, also, German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Hale, 219 U. S. 307, 31 Sup. Ct. 246, 55 L. Ed. 229 (1911); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Commercial Mill Co., 218 U. S. 406, 31 Sup. Ct. 59, 54 L. Ed. 1088, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 21 Ann. Cas. 815 (1910) (telegraph companies alone forbidden to limit liability for negligence). In Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 618, 98 N. E. 337 (1912), it was denied that trades unions or associations of employers could alone be exempted from suit for tortious acts committed on their behalf. Compare Stat. 6 Edw. VII (1906) c. 47.

As to the validity of classifications requiring wages to be paid at certain intervals in certain enumerated employments, see Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206 (1893); State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 22 S. W. 350, 21 L. R. A. 789 (1893) (majority and dissenting opinions); Opinion of Justices, 163 Mass. 589, 40 N. E. 713, 28 L. R. A. 344 (1895); Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co., 80 Vt. 370, 354-386, 67 Atl. 1091, 13 Ann. Cas. 475 (1907), annotated in 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350-352.

A ten-hour law for working women may be confined to those who work in annoying. The drummer may keep within the law against disorderly conduct, and still render himself a source of annoyance to travelers by his much beseeching to be allowed to lead the way to a doctor or a hotel.

"It is also argued that the act, literally construed, would prevent any person of the classes named from carrying on a private conversation on a train concerning his business. This is quite an extreme construction to place upon the statute, and one which the legislature manifestly did not intend. We have no such question, however, before us on the facts presented in the record.

"This statute is not an unreasonable restriction upon the privilege one should enjoy to solicit for his lawful business, which, it is rightly urged, is an incident to any business. It does not prevent anyone from advertising his business, or from soliciting patronage, except upon trains, etc. This privilege is denied him for the public good. It is a principle which underlies every reasonable exercise of the police power, that private rights must yield to the common welfare."

"As to the objection that the act discriminated against plaintiff in error and denied him the equal protection of the law, because forbid-mechanical establishments, factories, and laundries, Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 91 N. E. 695, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994 (1910); or a general law of this character may validly except women employed in preserving perishable products in canning establishments, Withey v. Bloem, 163 Mich. 419, 429-433, 128 N. W. 913, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628 (1910). As to exemptions from the general operation of Sunday laws, see Carr v. State, 175 Ind. 241, 93 N. E. 1071, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190 (1911) (exemption of professional ball players valid).

In Josma v. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co., 249 Ill. 508, 94 N. E. 915 (1911), a statute imposed criminal and civil liability (with an attorney fee for the latter) upon persons who persuaded workmen to change from one place to another by false representations concerning certain matters. In a suit for civil damages by a workman thus misled, the statute was held invalid for the imposition of criminal liability and an attorney's fee for this kind of deceit only. Dunn, J., said (249 Ill. 516, 94 N. E. 917): "The class to whom this act applies is workmen changing from one place to another. The representations aimed at are those which concern the kind and character of the work, of the compensation, the sanitary and other conditions of the employment and the existence of a strike or other labor trouble. These conditions or some of them are as important to the stenographers in an office, the clerks in a store or a bank, the teachers in a school, or any of the professional or semiprofessional people who are employed by others, as to the workmen mentioned in the act. They are as important to the workman who does not leave his home for employment as to him who does. If persons entering into contracts of employment may be placed upon a different footing from persons entering into other contracts in the manner provided in this act, it can be only by an act sufficiently comprehensive to include all persons subject to the evil aimed at—the deception of employes as to the terms, character, and conditions of their employment."

So Spokane v. Macho, 51 Wash. 322, 98 Pac. 755, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 265, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1100 (1900), where a city ordinance punishing wilful misrepresentations by keepers of employment agencies to persons seeking employment was held invalid because not including such conduct in all other businesses. "The crime defined is not common to the business of employment agencies, but common to all, and to be sustained must include within its terms all who may be likewise guilty." 51 Wash. 325, 98 Pac. 756 ding the drumming or soliciting business or patronage on the trains for any 'hotel, lodging house, eating house, bath house, physician, masseur, surgeon, or other medical practitioner,' which, it was contended, was an unreasonable classification, the state supreme court said:

"The legislature, in framing this statute, met a condition which existed, and not an imaginary or improbable one. The class of drummers or solicitors mentioned in the act are doubtless the only ones who ply their vocation to any extent on railroad trains. It is rare that the commercial drummer finds opportunity to meet customers and solicit trade on trains, therefore the lawmakers deemed it unnecessary to legislate against an occasional act of that kind.'"¹

¹ In Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 610, 611, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 170, 47 L. Ed. 323 (1903), a California statute avoiding all contracts for the sale of shares of corporate stock on margin was upheld, Holmes, J., saying: "With regard to the objection that this provision strikes at only some, not all, of the objects of possible speculation, it is enough to say that probably in California the evil sought to be stopped was confined in the main to stocks in corporations. California is a mining state, and mines offer the most striking temptations to people in a hurry to get rich. Mines generally are represented by stocks. Stock is convenient for purposes of speculation, because of the ease with which it is transferred from hand to hand, as well as for other reasons. If stopping the purchase and sale of stocks on margin would stop the gambling which it was desired to prevent, it was proper for the people of California to go no farther in what they forbade. The circumstances disclose a reasonable ground for the classification, and thus distinguish the case from Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679. We cannot say that treating stocks of corporations as a class subject to special restrictions was unjust discrimination or the denial of the equal protection of the laws." [Brewer and Peckham, JJ., dissented.]

In Petit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S. 164, 168, 20 Sup. Ct. 666, 667, 44 L. Ed. 716 (1900), Fuller, C. J., said (quoting with approval from the opinion of the state court below): "Courts will take judicial notice of the fact that, in view of the custom to keep barber shops open in the evening as well as in the day, the employees in them work more, and during later, hours than those engaged in most other occupations, and that this is especially true on Saturday afternoons and evenings; also that, owing to the habit of so many men to postpone getting shaved until Sunday, if such shops were to be permitted to be kept open on Sunday, the employees would ordinarily be deprived of rest during half of that day. In view of all these facts we cannot say that the legislature has exceeded the limits of its legislative police power in declaring that, as a matter of law, keeping barber shops open on Sunday is not a work of necessity or charity, while as to all other kinds of labor they have left that question to be determined as one of fact."

Compare Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 43 N. E. 1108, 32 L. R. A. 659, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365 (1896) (prohibition of Sunday work for barbers alone invalid).

In Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 521, 24 L. Ed. 734 (1878), a city ordinance was upheld forbidding a single named railroad from using locomotives on part of a certain street, no other railroad having or being able to acquire this privilege without the city's consent.

MISSOURI, K. & T. R. CO. OF TEXAS v. MAY.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1904. 194 U. S. 267, 24 Sup. Ct. 638, 45 L. Ed. 971.)

[Error to the county court of Bell county, Texas, to review a judgment against defendant railroad company under the statute set forth in the opinion below.]

Mr. Justice HOLMES. This is an action to recover a penalty of $25, brought by the owner of a farm contiguous to the railroad of the plaintiff in error, on the ground that the latter has allowed Johnson grass to mature and go to seed upon its road. The penalty is given to contiguous owners by a Texas statute of 1901 (chapter 117) directed solely against railroad companies for permitting such grass or Russian thistle to go to seed upon their right of way, subject, however, to the condition that the plaintiff has not done the same thing. The case is brought here on the ground that the statute is contrary to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

It is admitted that Johnson grass is a menace to crops, that it is propagated only by seed, and that a general regulation of it for the protection of farming would be valid. It is admitted also that legislation may be directed against a class when any fair ground for the discrimination exists. But it is said that this particular subjection of railroad companies to a liability not imposed on other owners of land on which Johnson grass may grow is so arbitrary as to amount to a denial of the equal protection of the laws. There is no dispute about general principles. The question is whether this case lies on one side or the other of a line which has to be worked out between cases differing only in degree.

With regard to the manner in which such a question should be approached, it is obvious that the legislature is the only judge of the policy of a proposed discrimination. The principle is similar to that which is established with regard to a decision of Congress that certain means are necessary and proper to carry out one of its express powers. M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. Ed. 579. When a state legislature has declared that, in its opinion, policy requires a certain measure, its action should not be disturbed by the courts under the fourteenth amendment, unless they can see clearly that there is no fair reason for the law that would not require with equal force its extension to others whom it leaves untouched.

Approaching the question in this way we feel unable to say that the law before us may not have been justified by local conditions. It would have been more obviously fair to extend the regulation at least to highways. But it may have been found, for all that we know, that the seed of Johnson grass is dropped from the cars in such quantities as to cause special trouble. It may be that the neglected strips occupied by railroads afford a ground where noxious weeds especially flourish, and that whereas self-interest leads the owners of farms to keep down pests, the railroad companies have done nothing in a matter which concerns their neighbors only. Other reasons may be imagined. Great constitutional provisions must be administered with caution. Some play must be allowed for the joints of the machine, and it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.

Judgment affirmed.¹

[BROWN, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which WHITE and McKENNA, JJ., concurred.]

¹ The disposing of liquor in a public saloon may be treated differently from similar acts done in a drug store, a brewery, a private dwelling, or a dining car. Ohio ex rel. Lloyd v. Dollison, 191 U. S. 445, 24 Sup. Ct. 703, 48 L. Ed. 1062 (1904); Reymann Brewing Co. v. Brister, 179 U. S. 445, 21 Sup. Ct. 201, 45 L. Ed. 269 (1900).

A license from a board of medical examiners may be required from all medical practitioners except those who have practiced at least four years in the state, resident physicians or students in hospitals, students in physician's offices, midwives, and masseurs. Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 30 Sup. Ct. 644, 54 L. Ed. 987 (1910). Those who administer free treatment may also be excepted. Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. 286, 56 L. Ed. 439 (1912).

In Chicago Dock Co. v. Fraley, 228 U. S. 680, 686-687, 33 Sup. Ct. 715, 716, 717 (57 L. Ed. —) (1913), in upholding an Illinois statute requiring the protection of openings used for hoisting materials in buildings in course of construction, McKenna, J., said: "That danger is the test may be conceded, but there may be degrees of it, and a difference in degree may justify classification. Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 236, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 56 L. Ed. 175, 180, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 529. Who is to judge of the danger, whether absolutely considered or comparatively considered? Is it a matter of belief or proof? If of belief, we should be very reluctant to oppose ours to that of the legislature of the state, informed, no doubt, by experience, of conditions, and fortified by presumptions of legality, and confirmed, besides, by the opinion of the supreme court of the state. Laurel Hill Cemetery v. San Francisco, 216 U. S. 358, 365, 30 Sup. Ct. 301, 54 L. Ed. 515, 518; Adams v. Milwaukee, 228 U. S. 572, 33 Sup. Ct. 610, 57 L. Ed. —. If of proof, there is none in the record. There are assertions by counsel, and considering alone the openings necessary for hoisting machinery and the openings for stairs and other openings, an employee or materials can be imagined as falling through one of them with the same ease as he or the materials can through the others. But other things must be taken into account. The setting of the openings must be considered, the varying relations of the employees to them, and other circumstances. The legislation cannot be judged by abstract or theoretical comparisons. It must be presumed that it was induced by actual experience, and New York, it is said, has been induced by a like experience to enact like legislation. If it be granted that the legislative judgment be disputable or crude, it is, notwithstanding, not subject to judicial review. We have said many times that the crudities or even the injustice of state laws are not redressed by the fourteenth amendment. The law may not be the best that can be drawn, nor accurately adapted to all of the conditions to which it was addressed. It may be that it would have been more complete if it had gone farther and recognized and provided against the danger that all uninclosed openings in a building might cause, and should not have distinguished between holsts inside of a building and those outside; but we do not see how plaintiff in error is concerned with the omissions. It is not discriminated against. All in its situation are treated alike."

In Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 269, 271, 33 Sup. Ct. 27, 30, 57 L. Ed. — (1912), a similar objection to a New York statute, requiring all junk dealers who bought various metal articles used by railroad, telephone, tele-

OZAN LUMBER CO. v. UNION COUNTY NAT. BANK.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1907. 207 U. S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 89, 52 L. Ed. 195.)

[Certiorari to United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. An Arkansas statute made void all negotiable instruments given in payment for patented articles which did not show this fact upon their face, but by section 4 excepted from its operation "merchants and dealers who sell patented things in the usual course of business." Plaintiff bank demurred to a defence under this statute set up by defendant in a suit on certain notes. The federal Circuit Court for the Western District of Arkansas sustained the demurrer, and this judgment was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * We are of opinion that the exception contained in section 4 does not render the statute invalid. The plain purpose of the whole statute is to create and enforce a proper police regulation. Its passage showed that the legislature was of opinion that fraud and imposition were frequent in the sale of property of this nature, except in the cases mentioned in section 4, and that temptations to false representations in regard to the virtues and value of the article sold were also frequently yielded to. When the sale of the article was effected by such representations, and a note given for the amount of the sale, a transfer of the note to a bona fide purchaser for value before its maturity prevented the vendee from showing the fraud by which the sale had been accomplished. In order to reach such a transaction and to permit the vendee to show the fraud, the statute was passed. It was doubtless thought that merchants and dealers, as mentioned in the statute, while dealing with the patented things in the manner stated, would not be so likely to make representations or to engage in a fraud to effect a sale, as those covered by the statute. The various itinerant venders of patented articles, whose fluency of speech and carelessness regarding the truth of their representations might almost be said to have become proverbial, were, of course, in the mind of the legislature, and were included in this legislation. Indeed, they are the principal people to be affected by it.

The manufacturer of a patented article, who also sells it in the usual course of business in his store or factory, would probably come within the exception of section 4. He may be none the less a dealer, selling in the usual course of his business, because he is also a manufacturer of the article dealt in. Exceptional and rare cases, not arising out of the graph, gas, or electric light companies to make diligent inquiry as to the title of the vendors thereof, was answered by Pitney, J., saying: "The argument under this head concedes, and must concede, that the act is beneficial as far as it goes, the complaint being that it does not go far enough. But the federal Constitution does not require that all state laws shall be perfect, nor that the entire field of proper legislation shall be covered by a single enactment."

sale of patented things in the ordinary way, may be imagined where this general classification separating the merchants and dealers from the rest of the people might be regarded as not sufficiently comprehensive, because in such unforeseen, unusual, and exceptional cases the people affected by the statute ought, in strictness, to have been included in the exception. See opinion of Circuit Court herein, 127 Fed. 206. But we do not think the statute should be condemned on that account. It is because such imaginary and unforeseen cases are so rare and exceptional as to have been overlooked that the general classification ought not to be rendered invalid. In such case there is really no substantial denial of the equal protection of the laws within the meaning of the amendment.¹

It is almost impossible, in some matters, to foresee and provide for every imaginable and exceptional case, and a legislature ought not to be required to do so at the risk of having its legislation declared void, although appropriate and proper upon the general subject upon which such legislation is to act, so long as there is no substantial and fair ground to say that the statute makes an unreasonable and unfounded general classification, and thereby denies to any person the equal protection of the laws. In a classification for governmental purposes there cannot be an exact exclusion or inclusion of persons and things. See Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666, and cases cited; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 24 Sup. Ct. 638, 48 L. Ed. 971. We can see reasons for excepting merchants and dealers who sell patented things, in the usual course of business, from the provisions of the statute, and we think the failure to exempt some few others, as above suggested, ought not to render the whole statute void as resulting in an unjust and unreasonable discrimination. * * *

Judgment reversed.²

¹ "If the legislature thinks that a year is long enough to allow a party to recover his property from a third hand, and establishes that time in cases where he has not been heard of for fourteen years, and presumably is dead, it acts within its constitutional discretion. Now and then an extraordinary case may turn up, but constitutional law, like other mortal contrivances, has to take some chances, and in the great majority of instances, no doubt, justice will be done."—Holmes, J., in Blinn v. Nelson, 222 U. S. 1, 7, 32 Sup. Ct. 1, 2, 56 L. Ed. 65 (1911).

See Provident Institution for Savings in Town of Boston v. Malone, 221 U. S. 660, 31 Sup. Ct. 661, 55 L. Ed. 899, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129 (1911) (forfeiting to the state savings bank deposits unclaimed for 30 years).

² In Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 235-236, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 75, 56 L. Ed. 175 (1911), a Massachusetts statute was upheld which restricted assignments of future wages unless made to national banks and certain other financial institutions under public supervision; McKenna, J., saying: "We have declared so often the wide range of discretion which the legislature possesses in classifying the objects of its legislation that we may be excused from a citation of the cases. We shall only repeat that the classification need not be scientific nor logically appropriate, and if not palpably arbitrary, and is uniform within the class, it is within such discretion. The legislation under review was directed at certain evils which had arisen, and the legis-

BORGNIS v. FALK CO. (1911) 147 Wis. 327, 353-355, 133 N. W. 209, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489, WINSLOW, C. J. (upholding a workmen's compensation act taking away the defences of fellow service and assumed risk from employers electing not to accept the act, but retaining them for those who accepted the act, when sued by non-accepting employes):

"The rules governing classification are familiar and are in brief as follows: It must be based on substantial distinctions which make real differences; it must be germane to the purposes of the law; it must not be limited to existing conditions only and must apply equally to each member of the class. It seems to us that this classification fully meets these requirements; certainly there will be very real differences between the situation of the employer who elects to come under the law and the employer who does not. If the consenting employer only employs workmen who also elect to come under the law, he can never be mulcted in heavy damages, and will know whenever an employé is injured practically just what must be paid for the injury. Surely this is a different situation from the situation of the man who is liable to be brought into court by an injured employé at any time and obliged to defend common-law actions upon heavy claims unliquidated in their character, the outcome of which actions none can foretell. On the other hand, if, as seems quite likely, the greater part of the consenting employer's workmen consent, but some do not, and these latter are still retained in the employment, the same considerations will apply with somewhat less force.

"On the one hand, there is a class of consenting employers employing wholly or largely consenting workmen, and having definite and fixed obligations to their workmen in case of injury; on the other hand is a class of nonconsenting employers who have no such fixed obligations in case of injury to their workmen, but choose to meet every such workman in court and fight out the question of liability. There seems lature, considering them and from whence they arose, might have thought or discerned that they could not or would not arise from a greater freedom to the institutions mentioned than to individuals. * * * But even if some degree of evil which the statute was intended to prevent could be ascribed to loans made by the exempted institutions, their exception would not make the law unconstitutional. Legislation may recognize degrees of evil without being arbitrary, unreasonable, or in conflict with the equal-protection provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 89, 52 L. Ed. 195; Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 28 Sup. Ct. 111, 52 L. Ed. 236."

So, Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, 31 Sup. Ct. 132, 54 L. Ed. 1151 (1910) (banks and mortgagees exempted from usury laws); Lemleux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 29 Sup. Ct. 174, 53 L. Ed. 295 (1909) (retail dealers alone forbidden to sell bulk of stock at once without notice to creditors); Murphy v. California, 225 U. S. 623, 32 Sup. Ct. 697, 56 L. Ed. 1229, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153 (1912) (keeping billiard tables for hire forbidden except by hotels for registered guests).

a very robust difference between these two classes. But after all there is another distinction which seems perhaps more satisfactory. The consenting employer has done his share, and it must be considered a considerable share, in rendering successful the legislative attempt to meet and solve a difficult social and economic problem. Even if it be true (which, as before stated, is not decided) that he may not be compelled under our Constitutions, state and national, to assist in the solution of this problem, still does not his voluntary act in giving that assistance constitute a substantial distinction, making a real difference of situation between him and the employer who refuses his aid—a difference which justifies a difference in treatment?"

COMMONWEALTH v. HANA (1907) 195 Mass. 262, 264-267, 81 N. E. 149, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 799, 122 Am. St. Rep. 251, 11 Ann. Cas. 514, KNOWLTON, C. J. (discussing the validity of a Massachusetts statute requiring peddlers to procure licenses):

"Under section 19, no one can obtain a license unless he is, or has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States. It is contended that this provision is in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States which provides that no state shall 'deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction, the equal protection of the laws.' It is decided that this provision applies to aliens as well as to citizens of the United States, and it is clear that a statute, arbitrarily forbidding aliens to engage in ordinary kinds of business to earn their living, would be unconstitutional and void. Yick Wo Lee v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; In re Ah Chong (C. C.) 2 Fed. 733; In re Lee Sing (C. C.) 43 Fed. 359; Pearson v. Portland, 69 Me. 278, 31 Am. Rep. 276. Accordingly, it was held in an elaborate opinion in State v. Montgomery, 94 Me. 192, 47 Atl. 165, 80 Am. St. Rep. 386, that a statute for the licensing of hawkers and peddlers in that state was unconstitutional and wholly void, because of a discrimination between aliens and citizens like that in our statute. See, also, State v. Mitchell, 97 Me. 66, 53 Atl. 887, 94 Am. St. Rep. 481. There is, however, an important question which was not much discussed in that case, whether the Legislature, in the exercise of the police power, could discover a reason for withholding peddlers' licenses from aliens. The business of peddling furnishes such opportunities for the practice of fraud that it is a proper subject for legislative regulation. That such regulation has been practiced from early times, both in Europe and America, is shown at length by Mr. Justice Gray in Emert v. State of Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 39 L. Ed. 430. The requirement of Rev. Laws, c. 65, § 19, that before receiving a license the applicant shall file a certificate from the mayor of a city or the majority of the selectmen of a town that to the best of his or their knowledge and belief he is of good repute for morals and integrity, is a reasonable regulation for the protection of the public. If, in the same interest, the Legislature deems it important that licenses shall be granted only to citizens of the United States, or to those who have declared their intention to become citizens, it can hardly be said that they have exceeded their constitutional right in passing a law to that effect.

"Upon a similar question in reference to the granting of licenses to sell intoxicating liquors, decided in Trageser v. Gray, 73 Md. 250, 254, 255, 257, 20 Atl. 905, 906 (9 L. R. A. 780, 25 Am. St. Rep. 587), the court used this language: 'It is thought proper to confine the license to citizens of the United States, of temperate habits and good moral character. The privilege is very liable to be abused, and abuses would produce great public detriment. It therefore seemed wise to the Legislature to confer it only on those who, being natives of the country, might reasonably be supposed to have a regard for its welfare, or who, not being natives, had, as required by the naturalization law, proven by credible testimony before a court of justice that they were attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and were well disposed to their good order and happiness. It was certainly the function of the lawmaking department to exercise its judgment on this question, and this court has no right to criticise its conclusion.' The opinion then goes on to say that the right so to legislate is within the police power reserved to the states, and after a full discussion, to declare that it is not at variance with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The same reasoning is equally applicable to the granting of licenses to hawkers and peddlers. Indeed, the nature of their business is such that their possession of a domicile and citizenship in this country might be important to those seeking remedies for wrongs done in their business. Notwithstanding the decision in State v. Montgomery, ubi supra, we are of opinion that the Legislature, in the exercise of the police power, might make this requirement as to the qualifications of applicants for a peddler's license.¹

"The defendant also contends that the statute is unconstitutional in making a discrimination in section 19 by which a resident, in a city or town in which he pays taxes upon his stock in trade and is qualified to vote, shall not be required to pay any fee for his license for said city or town. There is also a provision in section 21, which has not been referred to in the argument, by which licenses may be granted without charge to a person seventy years of age or upwards, or to any soldier or sailor resident in this commonwealth who served in the army or navy during the War of the Rebellion or the War against Spain, and who has an honorable discharge from such service. Even before the adoption of the fourteenth amendment it was a settled principle of constitutional law that statutes in regard to the transaction of business must operate equally upon all citizens who desire to engage in the business, and that there shall be no arbitrary discrimination between different classes of citizens. Under the fourteenth amendment, all persons are entitled to the equal protection of the laws. In several states such a discrimination in the granting of licenses in favor of soldiers and sailors has come before the courts, and in all of them, so far as we are aware, the provision has been held unconstitutional. State v. Shedroi, 75 Vt. 277, 54 Atl. 1081, 63 L. R. A. 179, 98 Am. St. Rep. 825; State v. Garbroski, 111 Iowa, 496, 82 N. W. 959, 56 L. R. A. 570, 82 Am. St. Rep. 524; State v. Whitcom, 122 Wis. 110, 99 N. W. 468. See, also, In re Keymer, 148 N. Y. 219, 42 N. E. 667, 35 L. R. A. 447; Brown v. Russell, 166 Mass. 14, 43 N. E. 1005, 32 L. R. A. 253, 55 Am. St. Rep. 357.

¹ Accord: Bloomfield v. State, 86 Ohio St. 253, 99 N. E. 309, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726 (1912) (license to sell liquor) (cases), Johnson, J., saying with regard to statutes barring aliens from the retail liquor traffic (86 Ohio St. 266, 99 N. E. 312, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726): "They are based on the belief that an alien cannot be sufficiently acquainted with our institutions and our life to enable him to appreciate the relation of this particular business to our entire social fabric."

Contra: Templar v. State Board of Examiners of Barbers, 131 Mich. 254, 90 N. W. 1058, 100 Am. St. Rep. 610 (1902) (barber's license) (cases). See, also, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 799, 800, note (collecting all cases on question).

"These cases and others show that a discrimination, founded on the residence of the applicant for a license or the amount of tax paid by him, cannot be sustained under the Constitution. State v. Mitchell, 97 Me. 66, 53 Atl. 887, 94 Am. St. Rep. 481; State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599, 51 N. E. 136, 41 L. R. A. 689, 65 Am. St. Rep. 785; Com. v. Snyder, 182 Pa. 630, 38 Atl. 356; State v. Hoyt, 71 Vt. 59, 42 Atl. 973; In re Ah Chong (C. C.) 2 Fed. 733; In re Lee Sing (C. C.) 43 Fed. 359; Ex parte Jones, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 482, 43 S. W. 513. We see no justifiable ground, under the Constitution, for a discrimination in favor of residents of a city or town who pay taxes there on their stock in trade, and who are qualified to vote there, nor of those who are 70 years of age or upwards. As the discrimination in favor of former soldiers and sailors was not referred to in argument, it is unnecessary to pass upon it; but as we have already seen, a similar discrimination has been held unconstitutional in other states."²

[The act was held invalid on other grounds.]

² As to the validity of legal discriminations in favor of Civil War veterans for appointment to public offices in the state civil service, see Brown v. Russell, 166 Mass. 14, 43 N. E. 1005, 32 L. R. A. 253, 55 Am. St. Rep. 357 (1896); Opinion of Justices, 166 Mass. 589, 44 N. E. 625, 34 L. R. A. 58 (1896).

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NON-RESIDENTS.—Discrimination by a state in favor of its own citizens against those of other states is governed by Const. art. 4, § 2, discussed in Chapter VII, ante. Doubtless any discrimination valid under this clause against citizens of other states as such does not violate the fourteenth amendment. Discrimination against non-residents (not citizens of other states) does not violate the "equal protection of the laws" guaranteed by this amendment, for this applies only in favor of "persons within the jurisdiction." Blake v. McClung, ante, p. 253, Chapter VIII. Such discrimination (giving resident creditors a preference in the distribution of the PLESSY v. FERGUSON.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1896, 163 U. S. 537, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Louisiana. A Louisiana statute required railway companies to provide equal, but separate, accommodations for white and colored passengers, and made it a misdemeanor for any passenger to insist upon going into a coach reserved for persons of the other race. Plessy, a person of one-eighth African blood, was prosecuted for a violation of this statute before Ferguson, judge of the criminal court in the parish of Orleans. Plessy petitioned the state Supreme Court for writs of prohibition and certiorari to enjoin said judge from punishing him under said statute. From a denial of this petition this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Justice BROWN. * * * The object of the [fourteenth] amendment was undoubtedly to enforce the absolute equality of the two races before the law, but, in the nature of things, it could not have been intended to abolish distinctions based upon color, or to enforce social, as distinguished from political, equality, or a commingling of the two races upon terms unsatisfactory to either. Laws permitting, and even requiring, their separation, in places where they are liable to be brought into contact, do not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other, and have been generally, if not universally, recognized as within the competency of the state legislatures in the exercise of their police power. The most common instance of this is connected with the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children, which has been held to be a valid exercise of the legislative power even by courts of states where the political rights of the colored race have been longest and most earnestly enforced.

One of the earliest of these cases is that of Roberts v. City of Boston, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 198, in which the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts held that the general school committee of Boston had power to make provision for the instruction of colored children in separate schools established exclusively for them, and to prohibit their attendance upon the other schools. * * * Similar laws have been enacted by congress under its general power of legislation over the District of Columbia (sections 281-283, 310, 319, Rev. St. D. C.), as well as by the legislatures of many of the states, and have been generally, if not uniformly, sustained by the courts. State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St. 210; Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo. 540, 15 S. W. 705.

assets of a bankrupt corporation) was said to be no taking of a non-resident's property without due process in Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 259, 260, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432 (1898), and in Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 302, 303, 20 Sup. Ct. 935, 44 L. Ed. 1072 (1900).

See Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., 191 U. S. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. 92, 48 L. Ed. 225 (1903).

11 L. R. A. 828, 23 Am. St. Rep. 895; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36; Bertonneau v. Directors of City Schools, 3 Woods, 177, Fed. Cas. No. 1,361; People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 438, 45 Am. Rep. 232; Cory v. Carter, 48 Ind. 337, 17 Am. Rep. 738; Dawson v. Lee, 83 Ky. 49.

Laws forbidding the intermarriage of the two races may be said in a technical sense to interfere with the freedom of contract, and yet have been universally recognized as within the police power of the state. State v. Gibson, 36 Ind. 389, 10 Am. Rep. 42. * * *

In this connection, it is also suggested by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that the same argument that will justify the state legislature in requiring railways to provide separate accommodations for the two races will also authorize them to require separate cars to be provided for people whose hair is of a certain color, or who are aliens, or who belong to certain nationalities, or to enact laws requiring colored people to walk upon one side of the street, and white people upon the other, or requiring white men's houses to be painted white, and colored men's black, or their vehicles or business signs to be of different colors, upon the theory that one side of the street is as good as the other, or that a house or vehicle of one color is as good as one of another color. The reply to all this is that every exercise of the police power must be reasonable, and extend only to such laws as are enacted in good faith for the promotion of the public good, and not for the annoyance or oppression of a particular class. * * *

So far, then, as a conflict with the fourteenth amendment is concerned, the case reduces itself to the question whether the statute of Louisiana is a reasonable regulation, and with respect to this there must necessarily be a large discretion on the part of the legislature. In determining the question of reasonableness, it is at liberty to act with reference to the established usages, customs, and traditions of the people, and with a view to the promotion of their comfort, and the preservation of the public peace and good order. Gauged by this standard, we cannot say that a law which authorizes or even requires the separation of the two races in public conveyances is unreasonable, or more obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment than the acts of congress requiring separate schools for colored children in the District of Columbia, the constitutionality of which does not seem to have been questioned, or the corresponding acts of state legislatures.

We consider the underlying fallacy of the plaintiff's argument to consist in the assumption that the enforced separation of the two races stamps the colored race with a badge of inferiority. If this be so, it is not by reason of anything found in the act, but solely because the colored race chooses to put that construction upon it. * * * The argument also assumes that social prejudices may be overcome by legislation, and that equal rights cannot be secured to the negro except by an enforced commingling of the two races. We cannot accept this proposition. If the two races are to meet upon terms of social equality, it must be the result of natural affinities, a mutual appreciation of each other's merits, and a voluntary consent of individuals. * * * Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts, or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences, and the attempt to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation. If the civil and political rights of both races be equal, one cannot be inferior to the other civilly or politically. If one race be inferior to the other socially, the Constitution of the United States cannot put them upon the same plane. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[HARLAN, J., gave a dissenting opinion. BREWER, J., did not sit.]

¹ See Berea College v. Commonwealth, 123 Ky. 269, 94 S. W. 623, 124 Am. St. Rep. 341, 13 Ann. Cas. 337 (1906) holding a state may prohibit private educational institutions from teaching the two races at the same time and place. The cases on all phases of statutory race segregation are collected. The decision was affirmed in 211 U. S. 45, 29 Sup. Ct. 33, 53 L. Ed. 81 (1908), on another ground. For the validity of attempts at residential segregation of races, see In re Lee Sing (C. C.) 43 Fed. 359 (1890) (Chinese); 11 Cal. Law Rev. 24 (negroes), article by W. B. Huntington; Boyd v. Board of Council of City of Frankfort, 117 Ky. 190, 77 S. W. 669, 111 Am. St. Rep. 240 (1905) (negro church building).

"Equality and not identity of privileges and rights is what is guaranteed to the citizen."—People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 438, 455, 45 Am. Rep. 232 (1883) by Ruger, C. J.

A carrier may be authorized by statute to furnish separate dining and sleeping cars for either race only, as it sees fit. McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 186 Fed. 966, 109 C. C. A. 110 (1911). Compare the Tennessee statute abrogating altogether the common-law duty of carriers and innkeepers to serve all applicants. State v. Lasater, 68 Tenn. (9 Baxt.) 581 (1877); Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 191 U. S. 171, 182, 183, 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 48 L. Ed. 134, (1903). Without statutory authority a carrier may lawfully separate the races. Chiles v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 218 U. S. 71, 30 Sup. Ct. 667, 54 L. Ed. 936 (1910).

A school district may use public money for a white high school only, where so few colored children would attend a colored high school that the cost of maintaining it would cripple the colored elementary schools. Cumming v. County Board of Education, 175 U. S. 528, 20 Sup. Ct. 197, 44 L. Ed. 262 (1899) (semble); but it is unconstitutional to require the people of each race to support their own schools. Claybrook v. City of Owensboro (D. C.) 16 Fed. 297 (1883); Pulitt v. Commissioners, 94 N. C. 709 (1886).

In Opinion of Justices to House of Representatives, 207 Mass. 601, 604, 605, 94 N. E. 558, 560, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604 (1911), validity was denied to proposed legislation excluding young women from hotels or restaurants conducted by Chinese, the judges saying: "This legislation does not refer to the character or condition of the hotel or restaurant that a young woman may not enter, but refers only to the nationality of the person who conducts it. * * *

* * * It forbids the entry of a young woman into the hotel or restaurant of a Chinese proprietor, even if it is a model of orderly and moral management, and it permits the entry of young women into a hotel or restaurant kept by an American, when it is known to be maintained in part for the promotion of immoral or criminal practices. The classification of hotels and restaurants into those that are open to young women and those that are closed to young women is not founded upon a difference that has any just or proper relation to the professed purpose of the classification. * * * The fact that a man is white, or black, or yellow is not a just and constitutional

MULLER v. OREGON.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1908. 208 U. S. 412, 28 Sup. Ct. 324, 52 L. Ed. 551, 13 Ann. Cas. 957.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Oregon. An Oregon statute (Laws 1903, p. 148) forbade the employment of any female in any mechanical establishment, factory, or laundry in the state for more than ten hours during any one day. Muller was convicted and fined for violating this statute in the conduct of his laundry. This judgment of the circuit court of Multnomah county was affirmed by the state Supreme Court.]

Mr. Justice BREWER. * * * The single question is the constitutionality of the statute under which the defendant was convicted, so far as it affects the work of a female in a laundry. * * *

It is the law of Oregon that women, whether married or single, have equal contractual and personal rights with men. * * *

It thus appears that, putting to one side the elective franchise, in the matter of personal and contractual rights they stand on the same plane as the other sex. Their rights in these respects can no more be infringed than the equal rights of their brothers. We held in Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133, that a law providing that no laborer shall be required or permitted to work in a bakery more than sixty hours in a week or ten hours in a day was not as to men a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state, but an unreasonable, unnecessary, and arbitrary interference with the right and liberty of the individual to contract in relation to his labor, and as such was in conflict with, and void under, the federal Constitution. That decision is invoked by plaintiff in error as decisive of the question before us. But this assumes that the difference between the sexes does not justify a different rule respecting a restriction of the hours of labor.

In patent cases counsel are apt to open the argument with a discussion of the state of the art. It may not be amiss, in the present case, before examining the constitutional question, to notice the course of legislation, as well as expressions of opinion from other than judicial sources. In the brief filed by Mr. Louis D. Brandeis for the defendant in error is a very copious collection of all these matters, an epitome of which is found in the margin.¹

While there have been but few decisions bearing directly upon the question, the following sustain the constitutionality of such legislation:

ground for making certain conduct a crime in him, when it is treated as permissible and innocent in a person of a different color."

As to discrimination against Chinese witnesses, see Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905 (1893); Li Sing v. United States, 180 U. S. 486, 21 Sup. Ct. 449, 45 L. Ed. 634 (1901).

¹ Here are collected references to all American and European legislation restricting the hours of labor of women, and a summary of extracts from over 90 official reports to the effect that long hours of labor are dangerous to women.

Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; Wenham v. State, 65 Neb. 394, 400, 406, 91 N. W. 421, 58 L. R. A. 825; State v. Buchanan, 29 Wash. 602, 70 Pac. 52, 59 L. R. A. 342, 92 Am. St. Rep. 930; Com. v. Beatty, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 5, 17. Against them is the case of Kutche v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 40 N. E. 454, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315.

The legislation and opinions referred to in the margin may not be, technically speaking, authorities, and in them is little or no discussion of the constitutional question presented to us for determination, yet they are significant of a widespread belief that woman's physical structure, and the functions she performs in consequence thereof, justify special legislation restricting or qualifying the conditions under which she should be permitted to toil. Constitutional questions, it is true, are not settled by even a consensus of present public opinion, for it is the peculiar value of a written constitution that it places in unchanging form limitations upon legislative action, and thus gives a permanence and stability to popular government which otherwise would be lacking. At the same time, when a question of fact is debated and debatable, and the extent to which a special constitutional limitation goes is affected by the truth in respect to that fact, a widespread and long-continued belief concerning it is worthy of consideration. We take judicial cognizance of all matters of general knowledge. * * *

That woman's physical structure and the performance of maternal functions place her at a disadvantage in the struggle for subsistence is obvious. This is especially true when the burdens of motherhood are upon her. Even when they are not, by abundant testimony of the medical fraternity continuance for a long time on her feet at work, repeating this from day to day, tends to injurious effects upon the body, and, as healthy mothers are essential to vigorous offspring, the physical well-being of woman becomes an object of public interest and care in order to preserve the strength and vigor of the race.

Still again, history discloses the fact that woman has always been dependent upon man. He established his control at the outset by superior physical strength, and this control in various forms, with diminishing intensity, has continued to the present. As [a] minor, though not to the same extent, she has been looked upon in the courts as needing especial care that her rights may be preserved. Education was long denied her, and while now the doors of the schoolroom are opened and her opportunities for acquiring knowledge are great, yet even with that and the consequent increase of capacity for business affairs it is still true that in the struggle for subsistence she is not an equal competitor with her brother. Though limitations upon personal and contractual rights may be removed by legislation, there is that in her disposition and habits of life which will operate against a full assertion of those rights. She will still be where some legislation to protect her seems necessary to secure a real equality of right. Doubtless there are individual exceptions, and there are many respects in which she has an advantage over him; but looking at it from the viewpoint of the effort to maintain an independent position in life, she is not upon an equality.

Differentiated by these matters from the other sex, she is properly placed in a class by herself, and legislation designed for her protection may be sustained, even when like legislation is not necessary for men, and could not be sustained. It is impossible to close one's eyes to the fact that she still looks to her brother and depends upon him. Even though all restrictions on political, personal, and contractual rights were taken away, and she stood, so far as statutes are concerned, upon an absolutely equal plane with him, it would still be true that she is so constituted that she will rest upon and look to him for protection; that her physical structure and a proper discharge of her maternal functions—having in view not merely her own health, but the well-being of the race—justify legislation to protect her from the greed as well as the passion of man. The limitations which this statute places upon her contractual powers, upon her right to agree with her employer as to the time she shall labor, are not imposed solely for her benefit, but also largely for the benefit of all. Many words cannot make this plainer. The two sexes differ in structure of body, in the functions to be performed by each, in the amount of physical strength, in the capacity for long continued labor, particularly when done standing, the influence of vigorous health upon the future well-being of the race, the self-reliance which enables one to assert full rights, and in the capacity to maintain the struggle for subsistence. This difference justifies a difference in legislation, and upholds that which is designed to compensate for some of the burdens which rest upon her. * * *

For these reasons, and without questioning in any respect the decision in Lochner v. New York, we are of the opinion that it cannot be adjudged that the act in question is in conflict with the federal Constitution, so far as it respects the work of a female in a laundry, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Oregon is affirmed.²

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. MELTON.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1910. 218 U. S. 36, 30 Sup. Ct. 676, 54 L. Ed. 921.)

[Error to the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. An Indiana statute made railroad companies liable for injuries to any employé resulting from the negligence of any fellow employé under whose direction the injured employ   was hurt. Melton, a bridge carpenter, was one of a crew of six men and a foreman engaged in constructing in defendant's service a heavy timbered frame for the foundations of a coal t  ple alongside defendant's track in Indiana. In lifting part of the frame to its place by a block and tackle, it fell upon Melton through the negligence of the foreman, inflicting serious injuries. Melton sued in Kentucky, where he lived, and a circuit court decision in his favor was affirmed by the Court of Appeals.]

² Accord: Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 91 N. E. 695, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994 (1910), perhaps overruling Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 40 N. E. 454, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315 (1895), which, however, required an eight-hour day; Commonwealth v. Riley, 210 Mass. 387, 97 N. E. 367, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 388 (1912) (cases). See People v. Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 81 N. E. 778, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 12 Ann. Cas. 798 (1907), holding invalid a prohibition against women working in factories between 9 p. m. and 6 a. m. Compare Bradwell v. Illinois, 16

Mr. Justice WHITE. * * * The equal protection of the law clause. That the fourteenth amendment was not intended to and does not strip the states of the power to exert their lawful police authority is settled, and requires no reference to authorities. And it is equally settled—as we shall hereafter take occasion to show—as the essential result of the elementary doctrine that the equal protection of the law clause does not restrain the normal exercise of governmental power, but only abuse in the exertion of such authority, therefore that clause is not offended against simply because, as the result of the exercise of the power to classify, some inequality may be occasioned. That is to say, as the power to classify is not taken away by the operation of the equal protection of the law clause, a wide scope of legislative discretion may be exerted in classifying without conflicting with the constitutional prohibition.

It is beyond doubt foreclosed that the Indiana statute does not offend against the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, because it subjects railroad employees to a different rule as to the doctrine of fellow servant from that which prevails as to other employments in that state. Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 175 U. S. 348, 20 Sup. Ct. 136, 44 L. Ed. 192; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ross, 212 U. S. 560, 29 Sup. Ct. 688, 53 L. Ed. 652. But while conceding this, the argument is that classification of railroad employees for the purpose of the doctrine of fellow servant can only, consistently with equality and uniformity, embrace such employees when exposed to dangers peculiarly resulting from the operation of a railroad, thus affording ground for distinguishing them for the purpose of classification from coemployees not subject to like hazards or employees engaged in other occupations. The argument is thus stated: "Plaintiff in error does not question the right of the legislature of Indiana to classify railroads in order to impose liability upon them for injuries to their employees incident to railroad hazards, but it does insist that, to make this a constitutional exercise of legislative power, the liability of the railroads must be made to depend upon the character of the employment, and not upon the character of the employer."

Wall, 130, 21 L. Ed. 442 (1873) (denying women admission to the bar); Cronin v. Adams, 192 U. S. 108, 24 Sup. Ct. 219, 48 L. Ed. 365 (1904) (forbidding women in wine rooms); Blair v. Kilpatrick, 40 Ind. 312 (1872) (restricting liquor licenses to men); People ex rel. Barone v. Fox, 141 App. Div. 611, 129 N. Y. Supp. 616 (1911) (examination and medical treatment of diseased prostitutes), reversed in 202 N. Y. 616, 96 N. E. 1126, on other grounds; Oldknow v. City of Atlanta, 9 Ga. App. 594, 597, 71 S. E. 1015, 1016 (1911) (requiring removal of women's hats at theaters), in which Russell, J., said: "The ordinance is not discriminatory because it does not include men within its operation. Men do not need any regulation on this subject. Public opinion, which demands that a man shall take off his hat in the presence of ladies, is sufficient, and does not need the aid of any police regulation."

See Quong Wong v. Kirkendall, post, p. 617, note. As to sex discrimination generally, see Freund, Police Power,    701-703.

Thus stated, the argument tends to confuse the question for decision, since there is no contention that the statute as construed bases any classification upon some supposed distinction in the person of the employer. The idea evidently intended to be expressed by the argument is, that although, speaking in a general sense, it be true that the hazards arising from the operation of railroads are such that a classification of railroad employees is justified, yet, as in operating railroads some employees are subject to risks peculiar to such operation, and others to risks which, however serious they may be, are not, in the proper sense, risks arising from the fact that the employees are engaged in railroad work, the legislative authority in classifying may not confound the two by considering in a generic sense the nature and character of the work performed by railroad employees collectively considered, but must consider and separately provide for the distinctions occasioned by the varying nature and character of the duties which railroad operatives may be called upon to discharge.

In other words, reduced to its ultimate analysis the contention comes to this: That by the operation of the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, the states are prohibited from exerting their legitimate police powers upon grounds of the generic distinction obtaining between persons and things, however apparent such distinction may be; but, on the contrary, must legislate upon the basis of a minute consideration of the distinctions which may arise from accidental circumstances as to the persons and things coming within the general class provided for. When the proposition is thus accurately fixed, it necessarily results that in effect it denies the existence of the power to classify, and hence must rest upon the assumption that the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment has a scope and effect upon the lawful authority of the states contrary to the doctrine maintained by this court without deviation. This follows, since the necessary consequence of the argument is to virtually challenge the legislative power to classify, and the numerous decisions upholding that authority. To this destructive end it is apparent the argument must come, since it assumes that however completely a classification may be justified by general considerations, such classification may not be made if inequalities be detected as to some persons embraced within the general class by a critical analysis of the relation of the persons or things otherwise embraced within the general class. A brief reference to some of the cases dealing with the power of a state to classify will make the error of the contention apparent.

In Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 294, 18 Sup.

Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1043, while declaring that the power of a state to distinguish, select, and classify objects of legislation was, of course, not without limitation, it was said, "necessarily this power must have a wide range of discretion." After referring to various decisions of this court, it was observed: "There is therefore no precise application of the rule of reasonableness of classification, and the rule of equality permits many practical inequalities. And necessarily so. In a classification for governmental purposes there cannot be an exact exclusion or inclusion of persons and things."

Again considering the subject in Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552, it was reiterated that the legislature of a state has necessarily a wide range of discretion in distinguishing, selecting, and classifying, and it was declared that it was sufficient to satisfy the demand of the Constitution if a classification was practical, and not palpably arbitrary.

In Minnesota Iron Co. v. Kline, 199 U. S. 593, 26 Sup. Ct. 159, 50 L. Ed. 322, a statute of Minnesota, providing that the liability of railroad companies for damages to employees should not be diminished by reason of accident occurring through the negligence of fellow servants, was held not to discriminate against any class of railroads, or to deny the equal protection of the laws because of a proviso which excepted employees engaged in construction of new and unopened railroads. In the course of the opinion the court said (199 U. S. 598, 26 Sup. Ct. 161 [50 L. Ed. 322]): "The whole case is put on the proviso, and the argument with regard to that is merely one of the many attempts to impart an overmathematical nicety to the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment." These principles were again applied in Martin v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co., 203 U. S. 284, 27 Sup. Ct. 100, 51 L. Ed. 184, 8 Ann. Cas. 87, and the doctrines were also fully considered and reiterated at this term in Southwestern Oil Co. v. Texas, 217 U. S. 114, 54 L. Ed. 688, 30 Sup. Ct. 496.

And coming to consider the concrete application made of these general principles in the decisions of this court which have construed the statute here in question, and statutes of the same general character enacted in states other than Indiana, we think, when rightly analyzed, it will appear that they are decisive against the contention now made. It is true that in the Tullis Case, which came here on certificate, the nature and character of the work of the railroad employee who was injured was not stated, and that reference in the course of the opinion was made to some state cases, limiting the right to classify to employees engaged in the movement of trains. But that it was not the intention of the court to thereby intimate that a classification, if not so restricted, would be repugnant to the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, will be made clear by observing that the previous case of Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Pontius, 157 U. S. 200, 15 Sup. Ct. 585, 39 L. Ed. 675, was cited approvingly, in which, under a statute of Kansas classifying railroad employees, recovery was allowed to a bridge carpenter employed by the railroad company, who was injured while attempting to load timber on a car. And in the opinion in the Pontius Case there was approvingly cited a decision of the court of appeals of the eighth circuit (Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Stahley, 11 C. C. A. 88, 27 U. S. App. 157, 62 Fed. 362), wherein it was held that, under the same statute, an employee injured in a round-house while engaged in lifting a driving rod for attachment to a new engine could recover by virtue of the statute. All this is made plainer by the ruling in St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co. v. Callahan, 194 U. S. 628, 24 Sup. Ct. 857, 48 L. Ed. 1157, where, upon the authority of the Tullis Case, the court affirmed a judgment of the supreme court of Missouri, which held that recovery might be had by a section hand upon a railroad, who, while engaged in warning passers-by in a street beneath an overhead bridge, was struck by a tie thrown from the structure.

While, as we have previously said, it is true there are state decisions dealing with statutes classifying railroad employees sustaining the restricted power to classify which is here insisted upon, we do not think it is necessary to review them or to notice those tending to the contrary. They are referred to in the opinions rendered in the court below. Nor do we think our duty in this respect is enlarged because, since the judgment below was rendered, the court of last resort in Indiana (Indianapolis Traction Co. v. Kinney, 171 Ind. 612, 85 N. E. 954, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711, and Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Foland, 174 Ind. 411, 91 N. E. 594, 92 N. E. 165) has, upon the theory that it was necessary to save the statute in question from being declared repugnant to the equality clause of the state Constitution and the fourteenth amendment, unequivocally held that the statute must be construed as restricted to employees engaged in train service.

Judgment affirmed.¹

LINDSLEY v. NATURAL CARBONIC GAS CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1911. 220 U. S. 61, 31 Sup. Ct. 337, 55 L. Ed. 369.)

[Appeal from United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York. A New York statute, as interpreted by the local courts, forbade the wasteful or unreasonable pumping from wells bored into the rock of a certain class of mineral waters having an excess of carbonic acid gas, for the purpose of extracting or vending such gas as a commodity separate from the water in which it occurred, provided that said mineral water was drawn from a source of supply common to other surface owners and that such pumping was injurious to such other owners. Plaintiff company was engaged at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in the occupation thus forbidden, and sought an injunction in the Circuit Court against the enforcement of the statute. Upon demurrer plaintiff's bill was dismissed, and plaintiff appealed.]

¹ Would an act like that in the principal case be valid if alone applicable to all railway employees, regardless of the branch of service in which employed? See Chicago H. L. Ry. Co. v. Hackett, 228 U. S. 559, 33 Sup. Ct. 581, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER. * * * Because the statute is directed against pumping from wells bored or drilled into the rock, but not against pumping from wells not penetrating the rock, and because it is directed against pumping for the purpose of collecting the gas and vending it apart from the waters, but not against pumping for other purposes, the contention is made that it is arbitrary in its classification, and consequently denies the equal protection of the laws to those whom it affects.

The rules by which this contention must be tested, as is shown by repeated decisions of this court, are these: 1. The equal-protection clause of the fourteenth amendment does not take from the state the power to classify in the adoption of police laws, but admits of the exercise of a wide scope of discretion in that regard, and avoids what is done only when it is without any reasonable basis, and therefore is purely arbitrary. 2. A classification having some reasonable basis does not offend against that clause merely because it is not made with mathematical nicety, or because in practice it results in some inequality. 3. When the classification in such a law is called in question, if any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, the existence of that state of facts at the time the law was enacted must be assumed. 4. One who assails the classification in such a law must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis, but is essentially arbitrary. Bachtel v. Wilson, 204 U. S. 36, 41, 27 Sup. Ct. 243, 51 L. Ed. 357, 359; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 30 Sup. Ct. 676, 54 L. Ed. 921; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 251, 256, 28 Sup. Ct. 89, 52 L. Ed. 195, 197; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 132, 24 L. Ed. 77, 86; Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 592, 615, 19 Sup. Ct. 553, 43 L. Ed. 823, 831.

Unfortunately, the allegations of the bill shed but little light upon the classification in question. They do not indicate that pumping from wells not penetrating the rock appreciably affects the common supply therein, or is calculated to result in injury to the rights of others, and neither do they indicate that such pumping as is done for purposes other than collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters is excessive or wasteful, or otherwise operates to impair the rights of others. In other words, for aught that appears in the bill, the classification may rest upon some substantial difference between pumping from wells penetrating the rock and pumping from those not penetrating it, and between pumping for the purpose of collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters and pumping for other purposes, and this difference may afford a reasonable basis for the classification.

In thus criticising the bill, we do not mean that its allegations are alone to be considered, for due regard also must be had for what is within the range of common knowledge and what is otherwise plainly subject to judicial notice. Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 43, 23 L. Ed. 200, 202; Brown v. Spilman, 155 U. S. 665, 670, 15 Sup. Ct. 245, 39 L. Ed. 304, 305; New Mexico ex rel. McLean v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 203 U. S. 38, 51, 27 Sup. Ct. 1, 51 L. Ed. 78, 86; Illinois ex rel. McNichols v. Pease, 207 U. S. 100, 111, 28 Sup. Ct. 58, 52 L. Ed. 121, 126. But we rest our criticism upon the fact that the bill is silent in respect of some matters which, although essential to the success of the present contention, are neither within the range of common knowledge nor otherwise plainly subject to judicial notice. So, applying the rule that one who assails the classification in such a law must carry the burden of showing that it is arbitrary, we properly might dismiss the contention without saying more. But it may be well to mention other considerations which make for the same result.

From statements made in the briefs of counsel and in oral argument, we infer that wells not penetrating the rock reach such waters only as escape naturally therefrom through breaks or fissures; and if this be so, it well may be doubted that pumping from such wells has anything like the same effect—if, indeed, it has any—upon the common supply or upon the rights of others, as does pumping from wells which take the waters from within the rock, where they exist under great hydrostatic pressure.

As respects the discrimination made between pumping for the purpose of collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters, and pumping for other purposes, this is to be said: The greater demand for the gas alone, and the value which attaches to it in consequence of this demand, furnish a greater incentive for exercising the common right excessively and wastefully when the pumping is for the purpose prescribed than when it is for other purposes; and this suggestion becomes stronger when it is reflected that the proportion of gas in the commingled fluids as they exist in the rock is so small that to obtain a given quantity of gas involves the taking of an enormously greater quantity of water, and to satisfy appreciably the demand for the gas alone involves a great waste of the water from which it is collected. Thus, it well may be that in actual practice the pumping is not excessive or wasteful save when it is done for the purpose prescribed.

These considerations point with more or less persuasive force to a substantial difference, in point of harmful results, between pumping from wells penetrating the rock, and pumping from those not penetrating it, and between pumping for the purpose of collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters, and pumping for other purposes. If there be such a difference, it justifies the classification, for plainly a police law may be confined to the occasion for its existence. As is said in Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 199 U. S. 401, 411, 26 Sup. Ct. 66, 50 L. Ed. 246, 250: "If an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business, the Constitution embodies no prohibition of laws confined to the evil, or doctrinaire requirement that they should be couched in all-embracing terms." * * *

Decree affirmed.

SECTION 3.—ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS AND DISCRETION

ST. JOHN v. NEW YORK (1906) 201 U. S. 633, 636-638, 26 Sup. Ct. 554, 50 L. Ed. 896, 5 Ann. Cas. 909, Mr. Justice McKENNA (upholding a New York statute absolutely penalizing nonproducing vendors for selling milk below a certain test, while producing vendors might exempt themselves as indicated below):

"The contention of plaintiff in error is that nonproducing vendors are discriminated against, and hence denied the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that they may not, as producing vendors may, exempt themselves from actions or penalties for violations of subdivisions 1, 2, 3, 7, and 8 of section 20 by showing that the milk sold or offered for sale by them is in the same condition as when it left the herd of the producer.

"It has been decided many times that a state may classify persons and objects for the purpose of legislation. We will assume the cases are known and proceed immediately to consider whether the classification of the law is based on proper and justifiable distinctions, considering the purpose of the law and the means to be observed to effect that purpose. * * * The purpose of the law is to secure to the population, adult and infant, milk attaining a certain standard of purity and strength. * * *

"It is not contended that such purpose is not within the power of the state, but it is contended that the power is not exercised on all alike who stand in the same relation to the purpose, and quite dramatic illustrations are used to show discrimination. A picture is exhibited of producing and nonproducing vendors selling milk side by side; the latter, it may be, a purchaser from the former; the act of one permitted, the act of the other prohibited or penalized. If we could look no farther than the mere act of selling, the injustice of the law might be demonstrated; but something more must be considered. Not only the final purpose of the law must be considered, but the means of its administration,—the ways it may be defeated. Legislation, to be practical and efficient, must regard this special pur pose as well as the ultimate purpose. The ultimate purpose is that wholesome milk shall reach the consumer, and it is the conception of the law that milk below a certain strength is not wholesome, but a difference is made between milk naturally deficient and milk made so by dilution. It is not for us to say that this is not a proper difference, and regarding it the law fixes its standard by milk in the condition that it comes from the herd. It is certain that if milk starts pure from the producer it will reach the consumer pure, if not tampered with on the way. To prevent such tampering the law is framed and its penalties adjusted. As the standard established can be proved in the hands of a producing vender, he is exempt from the penalty; as it cannot certainly be proved in the hands of other venders so as to prevent evasions of the law, such venders are not exempt. In the one case the source of milk can be known and the tests of the statute applied; in the other case this would be impossible, except in few instances. We cannot see that any particular hardship results. The nonproducing vender must exercise care in his purchases, and good all around may be accomplished. Through penalty on the nonproducing vender the producer is ultimately reached, though he may seem to be indulged. He will have to raise the standard of the milk of his herd if he would keep or extend his trade as anything but a mere retailer of his product."¹

¹ Accord: Adams v. Milwaukee, 228 U. S. 572, 33 Sup. Ct. 610, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (different regulations for milk producers within and without city).

In District of Columbia v. Brooke, 214 U. S. 138, 150, 151, 29 Sup. Ct. 560, 563, 53 L. Ed. 941 (1909), a statute was upheld that provided different remedies against resident and non-resident house owners who failed to make sewer connections; McKenna, J., saying: "Classification need not be either logically appropriate or scientifically accurate. The problems which are met in the government of human beings are different from those involved in the examination of the objects of the physical world, and assigning them to their proper associates. * * * The act in controversy makes a distinction in its provision between resident and nonresident lot owners, but this is a proper basis for classification. Regarded abstractly as human beings, regarded abstractly as lot owners, no legal difference may be observed between residents and nonresidents; but, regarded in their relation to their respective lots under regulating laws, the limitations upon jurisdiction, and the power to reach one and not the other, important differences immediately appear. We said in St. John v. New York, 201 U. S. at page 637, 26 Sup. Ct. 554, 50 L. Ed. 898, 5 Ann. Cas. 909, not only the purpose of a law must be considered, but the means of its administration,—the ways it may be defeated. Legislation, to be practical and efficient, must regard this special purpose as well as the ultimate purpose. This was in effect repeated in Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 194 U. S. 618, 24 Sup. Ct. 784, 48 L. Ed. 1142, where a privilege to protest against a street improvement, given by the statute assailed to resident property owners and denied to nonresident property owners, was sustained, and the statute held not to violate the equality clause of the fourteenth amendment. See Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Connecticut, 185 U. S. 364, 22 Sup. Ct. 673, 46 L. Ed. 949. * * * Against resident owners the coercion of the law is by criminal punishment, while against nonresident owners the remedy is by civil proceedings,—the District does the work that the nonresident owners neglect, and charges the expense thereof on their property. This is a distinction, a discrimination, it may be called, but it has even more justification than that sustained in Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., supra. The statute under consideration in the case at bar en-

MOBILE, J. & K. C. R. CO. v. TURNIPSEED (1910) 219 U. S. 35, 42-44, 31 Sup. Ct. 136, 55 L. Ed. 78, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 463, Mr. Justice LUTON (sustaining a Mississippi statute making injuries inflicted by the running of locomotives or cars prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of railroads):

"The law of evidence is full of presumptions either of fact or law. The former are, of course, disputable, and the strength of any inference of one fact from proof of another depends upon the generality of the experience upon which it is founded. For a discussion of some joins a duty on both resident and nonresident lot owners,—a duty necessary to be followed to preserve the health of the city. There is a difference only in the manner of enforcing it,—a difference arising from the different situation of the lot owners, and therefore competent for Congress to regard in its legislation. In other words, under the circumstances presented by this record, the distinction between residents and nonresidents is a proper basis for classification. It might not be under other circumstances. Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432; Blake v. McClung 176 U. S. 59, 20 Sup. Ct. 307, 44 L. Ed. 371; Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 20 Sup. Ct. 935, 44 L. Ed. 1072."

As to the validity of various procedural distinctions between different classes of parties to litigation, see note to Strauder v. W. Va., ante, p. 318.

More effectively to enforce its laws against the sale of wild game killed within the state during the closed season, a state may also forbid the sale of all imported game of a similar species, even though the latter in particular cases may have readily distinguishable physical characteristics. New York ex rel. Silz v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75 (1908); as well as game artificially propagated in confinement by private owners. Commonwealth v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 35 N. E. 454, 22 L. R. A. 439 (1893). See Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223 (1894) (sale of all colored oleomargarine forbidden). Compare Ah Sin v. Wittman, 198 U. S. 500, 506, 25 Sup. Ct. 756, 49 L. Ed. 1142 (1905) (can innocent visit to gaming house be penalized?).

In Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 201, 204, 33 Sup. Ct. 44, 46, 47, 57 L. Ed. — (1912), Hughes, J., said (upholding the prohibition of the sale of a harmless beverage containing a low percentage of malt): "When a state exerting its recognized authority, undertakes to suppress what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures having reasonable relation to that end as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective. It does not follow that because a transaction, separately considered, is innocuous, it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which is regarded as essential in the legislative judgment to accomplish a purpose within the admitted power of the government. * * * It was competent for the legislature of Mississippi to recognize the difficulties besetting the administration of laws aimed at the prevention of traffic in intoxicants. It prohibited, among other things, the sale of 'malt liquors.' In thus dealing with a class of beverages which, in general, are regarded as intoxicating, it was not bound to resort to a discrimination with respect to ingredients and processes of manufacture which, in the endeavor to eliminate noxious beverages from the condemnation, would facilitate subterfuges and frauds and fetter the enforcement of the law. * * * The existence of this power, as the authorities we have cited abundantly demonstrate, is not to be denied simply because some innocent articles or transactions may be found within the proscribed class. The inquiry must be whether, considering the end in view, the statute passes the bounds of reason and assumes the character of a merely arbitrary fiat."

See, also, Commonwealth v. Alger, ante, p. 321, and Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 33 Sup. Ct. 182, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (fixing standard weights for loaves of bread and forbidding sale of other sizes).

common-law aspects of the subject, see Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. South Fork Coal Co., 71 C. C. A. 316, 139 Fed. 528 et seq., 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533.

"Legislation providing that proof of one fact shall constitute prima facie evidence of the main fact in issue is but to enact a rule of evidence, and quite within the general power of government. Statutes, national and state, dealing with such methods of proof in both civil and criminal cases, abound, and the decisions upholding them are numerous. A few of the leading ones are Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575; People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668; Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co., 1 Cold. (Tenn.) 72; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 45 N. E. 991, 35 L. R. A. 176, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447; Com. v. Williams, 6 Gray (Mass.) 1; State v. Thomas, 144 Ala. 77, 40 South. 271, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011, 113 Am. St. Rep. 17, 6 Ann. Cas. 744.

"We are not impressed with the argument that the supreme court of Mississippi, in construing the act, has declared that the effect of the statute is to create a presumption of liability, giving to it, thereby, an effect in excess of a mere temporary inference of fact. The statutory effect of the rule is to provide that evidence of an injury arising from the actual operation of trains shall create an inference of negligence, which is the main fact in issue. The only legal effect of this inference is to cast upon the railroad company the duty of producing some evidence to the contrary. When that is done the inference is at an end, and the question of negligence is one for the jury, upon all of the evidence. In default of such evidence, the defendant, in a civil case, must lose, for the prima facie case is enough as matter of law.

"The statute does not, therefore, deny the equal protection of the law, or otherwise fail in due process of law, because it creates a presumption of liability, since its operation is only to supply an inference of liability in the absence of other evidence contradicting such inference.

"That a legislative presumption of one fact from evidence of another may not constitute a denial of due process of law or a denial of the equal protection of the law, it is only essential that there shall be some rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed, and that the inference of one fact from proof of another shall not be so unreasonable as to be a purely arbitrary mandate. So, also, it must not, under guise of regulating the presentation of evidence, operate to preclude the party from the right to present his defense to the main fact thus presumed.

"If a legislative provision not unreasonable in itself, prescribing a rule of evidence, in either criminal or civil cases, does not shut out from the party affected a reasonable opportunity to submit to the jury in his defense all of the facts bearing upon the issue, there is no ground for holding that due process of law has been denied him.

"Tested by these principles, the statute as construed and applied by the Mississippi court in this case is unobjectionable. It is not an unreasonable inference that a derailment of railway cars is due to some negligence, either in construction or maintenance of the track or trains, or some carelessness in operation.

"From the foregoing considerations it must be obvious that the application of the act to injuries resulting from 'the running of locomotives and cars' is not an arbitrary classification, but one resting upon considerations of public policy, arising out of the character of the business."¹

YICK WO v. HOPKINS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1886. 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of California. An ordinance of San Francisco forbade any person to carry on a laundry within the city without the consent of the board of supervisors, except in buildings of brick or stone. Yick Wo, a native of China, who had conducted a laundry in a certain wooden building in that city for 22 years, and who had there complied with all existing regulations for the prevention of fire and the protection of health, was refused such consent by said board, upon his application; and he was later convicted and imprisoned by order of the local police court for conducting his laundry without such consent. The state Supreme Court denied his petition for a writ of habeas corpus. One Wo Lee, in a similar situation, was denied a writ of habeas corpus by the United States Circuit Court, in California. Yick Wo took a writ of error, and Wo Lee an appeal. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice MATTHEWS. * * * In the case of the petitioner, brought here by writ of error to the Supreme Court of California, our jurisdiction is limited to the question, whether the plaintiff in error has been denied a right in violation of the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. The question whether his imprisonment is illegal, under the Constitution and laws of the state, is not open to us. And although that question might have been considered in the Circuit Court in the application made to it, and by this court on appeal from its order, yet judicial propriety is best consulted by accepting the judgment of the state court upon the points involved in that inquiry.

That, however, does not preclude this court from putting upon the ordinances of the supervisors of the county and city of San Francisco

¹ Accord: Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S. 61, 81-83, 31 Sup. Ct. 337, 55 L. Ed. 369, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160 (1911). See particularly Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 598, 599, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575 (1904); People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668 (1893), and the cases there cited and discussed; Opinion of Justices, 208 Mass. 619, 623, 624, 94 N. E. 1044, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 771 (1911). Compare Bailey v. Ala., ante, p. 158 (statutory presumptions regarding a constitutionally protected subject-matter).

an independent construction; for the determination of the question whether the proceedings under these ordinances and in enforcement of them are in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, necessarily involves the meaning of the ordinances, which, for that purpose, we are required to ascertain and adjudge.¹

We are consequently constrained, at the outset, to differ from the Supreme Court of California upon the real meaning of the ordinances in question. That court considered these ordinances as vesting in the board of supervisors a not unusual discretion in granting or withholding their assent to the use of wooden buildings as laundries, to be exercised in reference to the circumstances of each case, with a view to the protection of the public against the dangers of fire. We are not able to concur in that interpretation of the power conferred upon the supervisors. There is nothing in the ordinances which points to such a regulation of the business of keeping and conducting laundries. They seem intended to confer, and actually do confer, not a discretion to be exercised upon a consideration of the circumstances of each case, but a naked and arbitrary power to give or withhold consent, not only as to places, but as to persons. So that, if an applicant for such consent, being in every way a competent and qualified person, and having complied with every reasonable condition demanded by any public interest, should, failing to obtain the requisite consent of the supervisors to the prosecution of his business, apply for redress by the judicial process of mandamus, to require the supervisors to consider and act upon his case, it would be a sufficient answer for them to say that the law had conferred upon them authority to withhold their assent, without reason and without responsibility. The power given to them is not confided to their discretion in the legal sense of that term, but is granted to their mere will. It is purely arbitrary, and acknowledges neither guidance nor restraint.

This erroneous view of the ordinances in question led the Supreme Court of California into the further error of holding that they were justified by the decisions of this court in the cases of Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923, and Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145. * * *

¹ It is now well settled that, on writ of error to a state court under the fourteenth amendment, the state court's construction of its own statutes is conclusive. Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. Ry. Co., 175 U. S. 348, 20 Sup. Ct. 136, 44 L. Ed. 192 (1899); W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission, 180 U. S. 452, 21 Sup. Ct. 423, 45 L. Ed. 619 (1901); Missouri ex rel. Hill v. Dockery, 191 U. S. 165, 24 Sup. Ct. 53, 48 L. Ed. 133 (1903); National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 115, 25 Sup. Ct. 379, 49 L. Ed. 689 (1905); Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S. 61, 31 Sup. Ct. 337, 55 L. Ed. 369, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160 (1911). See, also, Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 332, 342, 25 Sup. Ct. 52, 49 L. Ed. 224 (1904) (under the commerce clause). For perhaps a certain confusion of thought between a statute's meaning and the power of which it may be thought to be an exercise, see Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 100, 101, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909 (1899); Hodge v. Muscatine County, 196 U. S. 276, 25 Sup. Ct. 237, 49 L. Ed. 477 (1905).

The ordinance drawn in question in the present case is of a very different character. It does not prescribe a rule and conditions for the regulation of the use of property for laundry purposes, to which all similarly situated may conform. It allows without restriction the use for such purposes of buildings of brick or stone; but, as to wooden buildings, constituting nearly all those in previous use, it divides the owners or occupiers into two classes, not having respect to their personal character and qualifications for the business, nor the situation and nature and adaptation of the buildings themselves, but merely by an arbitrary line, on one side of which are those who are permitted to pursue their industry by the mere will and consent of the supervisors, and on the other those from whom that consent is withheld, at their mere will and pleasure. And both classes are alike only in this, that they are tenants at will, under the supervisors, of their means of living. The ordinance, therefore, also differs from the not unusual case, where discretion is lodged by law in public officers or bodies to grant or withhold licenses to keep taverns, or places for the sale of spirituous liquors, and the like, when one of the conditions is that the applicant shall be a fit person for the exercise of the privilege, because in such cases the fact of fitness is submitted to the judgment of the officer, and calls for the exercise of a discretion of a judicial nature. * * *

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution is not confined to the protection of citizens. It says: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." These provisions are universal in their application, to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any differences of race, of color, or of nationality; and the equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws. * * *

It is contended on the part of the petitioners, that the ordinances for violations of which they are severally sentenced to imprisonment, are void on their face, as being within the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment; and, in the alternative, if not so, that they are void by reason of their administration, operating unequally, so as to punish in the present petitioners what is permitted to others as lawful, without any distinction of circumstances—an unjust and illegal discrimination, it is claimed, which, though not made expressly by the ordinances, is made possible by them.

When we consider the nature and the theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest, and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power. Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law; but in our system, while sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, sovereignty itself remains with the people, by whom and for whom all government exists and acts. And the law is the definition and limitation of power. It is, indeed, quite true, that there must always be lodged somewhere, and in some person or body, the authority of final decision; and in many cases of mere administration the responsibility is purely political, no appeal lying except to the ultimate tribunal of the public judgment, exercised either in the pressure of opinion or by means of the suffrage. But the fundamental rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, considered as individual possessions, are secured by those maxims of constitutional law which are the monuments showing the victorious progress of the race in securing to men the blessings of civilization under the reign of just and equal laws, so that, in the famous language of the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, the government of the commonwealth "may be a government of laws and not of men." For, the very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life, at the mere will of another, seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails, as being the essence of slavery itself. * * *

This conclusion, and the reasoning on which it is based, are deductions from the face of the ordinance, as to its necessary tendency and ultimate actual operation. In the present cases we are not obliged to reason from the probable to the actual, and pass upon the validity of the ordinances complained of, as tried merely by the opportunities which their terms afford, of unequal and unjust discrimination in their administration. For the cases present the ordinances in actual operation, and the facts shown establish an administration directed so exclusively against a particular class of persons as to warrant and require the conclusion, that, whatever may have been the intent of the ordinances as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the state itself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the state of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners, as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet, if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.² This principle of interpretation has been sanctioned by this court in Henderson v. Mayor of New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543, Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 550, In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676, Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567, and Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145.

² See Ex parte Virginia, note 3, ante, p. 259.

The present cases, as shown by the facts disclosed in the record, are within this class. It appears that both petitioners have complied with every requisite, deemed by the law or by the public officers charged with its administration, necessary for the protection of neighboring property from fire, or as a precaution against injury to the public health. No reason whatever, except the will of the supervisors, is assigned why they should not be permitted to carry on, in the accustomed manner, their harmless and useful occupation, on which they depend for a livelihood. And while this consent of the supervisors is withheld from them and from two hundred others who have also petitioned, all of whom happen to be Chinese subjects, eighty others, not Chinese subjects, are permitted to carry on the same business under similar conditions. The fact of this discrimination is admitted. No reason for it is shown, and the conclusion cannot be resisted, that no reason for it exists except hostility to the race and nationality to which the petitioners belong, and which in the eye of the law is not justified. The discrimination is, therefore, illegal, and the public administration which enforces it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws and a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. The imprisonment of the petitioners is, therefore, illegal, and they must be discharged.

Judgment reversed.³

CROWLEY v. CHRISTENSEN (1890) 137 U. S. 86, 91, 92, 94, 95, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620, Mr. Justice FIELD (sustaining Christensen's conviction for violating a San Francisco ordinance forbidding the granting of liquor licenses except to persons who obtained the written consent of a majority of the city board of police commissioners, or of twelve citizens owning real estate in the block where the business was to be carried on):

"There is no inherent right in a citizen to thus sell intoxicating liquors by retail. It is not a privilege of a citizen of the state or of a citizen of the United States. As it is a business attended with danger to the community, it may, as already said, be entirely prohibited, or be permitted under such conditions as will limit to the utmost its evils. The manner and extent of regulation rest in the discretion of the governing authority. That authority may vest in such officers as it may deem proper the power of passing upon applications for permission to carry it on, and to issue licenses for that purpose. It is a matter of legislative will only. As in many other cases, the officers may not always exercise the power conferred upon them with wisdom or justice to the parties affected. But that is a matter which does not affect the authority of the state, or one which can be brought under the cognizance of the courts of the United States.

³ Accord: Raymond v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757 (1907) (state board made unequal assessment in violation of state Constitution). In Ah Sin v. Wittman, 198 U. S. 500, 25 Sup. Ct. 756, 49 L. Ed. 1142 (1905), a San Francisco gambling ordinance was alleged to be enforced only against Chinese, but the case was dismissed for failure to aver that others violated it.

No relief can be granted against a law merely because it confers a discretion readily susceptible of abuse, if no actual discriminatory administration is shown. Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 18 Sup. Ct. 583, 42 L. Ed. 1012 (1898) (registration board passing on ability of electors to interpret state Constitution).

"The Constitution of California vests in the municipality of the city and county of San Francisco the right to make 'all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.' The supreme court of the state has decided that the ordinance in question, under which the petitioner was arrested, and is held in custody, was thus authorized, and is valid. That decision is binding upon us unless some inhibition of the Constitution or of a law of the United States is violated by it. We do not perceive that there is any such violation. The learned circuit judge saw in the provisions of the ordinance empowering the police commissioners to grant or refuse their assent to the application of the petitioner for a license, or, failing to obtain their assent upon application, requiring it to be given upon the recommendation of twelve citizens owning real estate in the block or square in which his business as a retail dealer in liquors was to be carried on, the delegation of arbitrary discretion to the police commissioners, and to real-estate owners of the block, which might be and was exercised to deprive the petitioner of the equal protection of the laws. And he considers that his view in this respect is supported by the decision in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220 [ante, p. 383]. * * *

[After discussing this case:] "It will thus be seen that that case was essentially different from the one now under consideration, the ordinance there held invalid vesting uncontrolled discretion in the board of supervisors with reference to a business harmless in itself and useful to the community, and the discretion appearing to have been exercised for the express purpose of depriving the petitioner of a privilege that was extended to others. In the present case the business is not one that any person is permitted to carry on without a license, but one that may be entirely prohibited or subjected to such restrictions as the governing authority of the city may prescribe. * * *

"If there were no property holders in the block the discretionary authority would be exercised finally by the police commissioners, and their refusal to grant the license is not a matter for review by this court, as it violates no principle of federal law. We, however, find in the return a statement which would fully justify the action of the commissioners. It is averred that, in the conduct of the liquor business, the petitioner was assisted by his wife, and that she was twice arrested for larcenies committed from persons visiting his saloon, and in one case convicted of the offense, and sentenced to be imprisoned, and in the other held to answer. These larcenies alone were a sufficient indication of the character of the place in which the business was conducted for the exercise of the discretion of the police commissioners in refusing a further license to the petitioner." ¹

PEOPLE OF STATE OF NEW YORK ex rel. LIEBERMAN v.
VAN DE CARR.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1905. 199 U. S. 552, 26 Sup. Ct. 144, 50 L. Ed. 305.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of New York. Lieberman was arrested for violating section 66 of the New York City sanitary code. His writ of habeas corpus was dismissed by the state Supreme Court, and this judgment was affirmed by the Appellate Division and by the Court of Appeals, and then brought here. The facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice DAY. * * * The section of the sanitary code complained of is as follows:

"Sec. 66. No milk shall be received, held, kept, either for sale or delivered in the city of New York, without a permit in writing from the board of health, and subject to the conditions thereof."

The violation of the sanitary code is made a misdemeanor. That the board of health had power to pass the sanitary code, which includes this section, is not open to question here, as it has been affirmatively decided in the state court. The objections on federal grounds for our consideration are two-fold: First, that the section under consideration devolves upon the board of health absolute and despotic power to grant or withhold permits to milk dealers, and is, therefore, not due process of law; second, that singling out the milk business for regulation is a denial of the equal protection of the laws to people engaged therein.

The record discloses that the plaintiff in error, engaged in selling milk in the city of New York before his arrest, had a permit, which was revoked by the board of health. He was thereafter found engaged through an agent in selling milk without a permit. In the testimony it appears, in a conversation between the plaintiff in error and an inspector in the department of health, the latter admitted that Lieberman's milk "stood well."

The right of the state to regulate certain occupations which may become unsafe or dangerous when unrestrained, in the exercise of the police power, with a view to protect the public health and welfare, has been so often and so recently before this court that it is only necessary to refer to some of the cases which sustain the proposition that the state has a right, by reasonable regulations, to protect the public health and safety. Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. Ed.

¹ Compare Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 Pac. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218 (1892) (laundries).

989; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 199 U. S. 306, 26 Sup. Ct. 100, 50 L. Ed. 204; Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U. S. 325, 26 Sup. Ct. 106, 50 L. Ed. 212.

The contention of counsel for plaintiff in error is not that a business so directly affecting the health of the inhabitants of the city as the furnishing of milk may not be the subject of regulation under the authority of the state, but that the Court of Appeals of New York has sustained this right of regulation to the extent of authorizing the board of health to exercise arbitrary power in the selection of those it may see fit to permit to sell milk under the section quoted; and, thus construed, it works the deprivation of the plaintiff in error's liberty and property without due process of law. We do not so understand the decision of the highest court of New York. As we read it, the authority sustained is the grant of power to issue or withhold permits in the honest exercise of a reasonable discretion. In the opinion of the Appellate Division, whose judgment was affirmed in the Court of Appeals, it was said: "Such regulations, however, should be uniform, and the board should not act arbitrarily; and if this section of the sanitary code vested in them arbitrary power to license one dealer [in a lawful commodity] and refuse a license to another similarly situated, undoubtedly it would be invalid (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 58 N. E. 616, 52 L. R. A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238; Dunham v. Rochester, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 462; Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591); but such was not its purpose, nor is that its fair construction. It is unnecessary now to determine whether the action of the board in refusing or revoking such a permit would be judicial, and thus reviewable by mandamus or certiorari, or whether, if the authority should be arbitrarily or improperly exercised, the only remedy would be an application for the removal of the officers; for those are questions that may arise in the administration of the law, but do not go to its validity. The section, properly construed, does not permit unjust discrimination, and, therefore, it is valid." People ex rel. Lieberman v. Vandecarr, 81 App. Div. 132, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1108.

The Court of Appeals, affirming the decision of the Appellate Division, did not speak with equal emphasis upon this point, but it leaves no doubt that it sustained the statute as authorizing the exercise of a reasonable discretion. While that court held that the discretion to grant or withhold permits might be vested in a board of health with opportunities to know and investigate local conditions and surroundings, it further said: "In the case before us the requirement of section 66 of the sanitary code, that the relator should not sell milk without a permit, is reasonable, and violates neither federal nor state Constitution, is in accordance with law and long-established precedent. In the argument of this case several questions have been discussed that are not presented by the appeal. It is, for instance, argued that, even conceding a permit to be necessary, the provision that the holder is to be 'subject to the conditions thereof' cannot be sustained for a variety of reasons suggested. It is a complete answer that the form of the permit is not in the record; it does not appear that it has attached to it conditions reasonable or otherwise. We consequently express no opinion on the subject. What we have already said applies with equal force to the argument that the permit might be loaded with conditions, the nature of which is not limited or stated; that it may be used to build up monopoly, to help a favored few as opposed to the many; that there is no other statute which presents such possibilities for blackmail and oppression. These and many other like criticisms are indulged in by appellant. If the question was before us, the well-settled canon of construction permits of no such argument. It is presumed that public officials will discharge their duties honestly and in accordance with the rules of law."

We do not think that this language leaves any question as to the disposition of the highest court of New York to prevent the oppression of the citizen, or the deprivation of his rights, by an arbitrary and oppressive exercise of the power conferred. That this court will not interfere because the states have seen fit to give administrative discretion to local boards to grant or withhold licenses or permits to carry on trades or occupations, or perform acts which are properly the subject of regulation in the exercise of the reserved power of the states to protect the health and safety of its people, there can be no doubt.

In Davis v. Massachusetts, 167 U. S. 43, 17 Sup. Ct. 731, 42 L. Ed. 71, an ordinance of the city of Boston, providing that no person shall make any public address in or upon the public grounds, except in accordance with a permit from the mayor, was held not in conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

In Wilson v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32, 19 Sup. Ct. 317, 43 L. Ed. 603, an ordinance requiring persons to obtain written permission from the mayor or president of the city council, or, in their absence, a councilor, before moving a building upon any of the public streets of the city, was sustained as not violative of the federal Constitution. In the opinion of the court a number of instances were given in which acts were prohibited except with the consent of an administrative board, and which were sustained as proper exercises of the police power.

In Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725, an ordinance was sustained permitting the mayor to license persons to deal in cigarettes when he was satisfied that the person applying for the license was of good character and reputation, and a suitable person to be intrusted with their sale. And in the recent case of Ja- cobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765, this court sustained a compulsory vaccination law which delegated to the boards of health of cities or towns the determination of the necessity of requiring the inhabitants to submit to compulsory vaccination.

And in Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018, an ordinance of the city of St. Louis providing that no dairy or cow stable should thereafter be built or established within the limits of the city, and no such stable not in existence at the time of the passage of the ordinance should be maintained on any premises, unless permission should have been first obtained from the municipal assembly by ordinance, was sustained as a proper exercise of the police power. After sustaining the right to vest in a board of men acquainted with the local conditions of the business to be carried on, power to grant or withhold permits, this court said: "It has been held in some of the state courts to be contrary to the spirit of American institutions to vest this dispensing power in the hands of a single individual (Chicago v. Trotter, 136 Ill. 430, 26 N. E. 359; Re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 30 N. W. 72, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310; State v. Fiske, 9 R. I. 94; Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 60 N. W. 156, 25 L. R. A. 621), and in others that such authority cannot be delegated to the adjoining lot owners (St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 22 S. W. 470, 20 L. R. A. 721; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 Pac. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218). But the authority to delegate that discretion to a board appointed for that purpose is sustained by the great weight of authority (Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 563, 24 N. E. 860; Com. v. Davis, 162 Mass. 510, 39 N. E. 113, 26 L. R. A. 712, 44 Am. St. Rep. 389), and by this court the delegation of such power, even to a single individual, was sustained in Wilson v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32, 19 Sup. Ct. 317, 43 L. Ed. 603, and Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725."

These cases leave in no doubt the proposition that the conferring of discretionary power upon administrative boards to grant or withhold permission to carry on a trade or business which is the proper subject of regulation within the police power of the state is not violative of rights secured by the fourteenth amendment. There is no presumption that the power will be arbitrarily exercised, and when it is shown to be thus exercised against the individual, under sanction of state authority, this court has not hesitated to interfere for his protection, when the case has come before it in such manner as to authorize the interference of a federal court. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220. * * *

There is nothing to show upon what ground the action of the board was taken. For aught that appears, he may have been conducting his business in such wise, or with such surroundings and means, as to render it dangerous to the health of the community; or his manner of selling or delivering the milk may have been objectionable. There is nothing in the record to show that the action against him was arbitrary or oppressive and without a fair and reasonable exercise of that discretion which the law reposed in the board of health. We have, then, an ordinance which, as construed in the highest court of the state, authorizes the exercise of a legal discretion in the granting or withholding of permits to transact a business which, unless controlled, may be highly dangerous to the health of the community, and no affirmative showing that the power has been exerted in so arbitrary and oppressive a manner as to deprive the appellant of his property or liberty without due process of law.

In such cases it is the settled doctrine of this court that no federal right is invaded, and no authority exists for declaring a law unconstitutional, duly passed by the legislative authority, and approved by the highest court of the state. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

SECTION 4.—VALIDITY OF LEGISLATIVE OBJECT

MUGLER v. KANSAS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1887. 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205.)

[Writs of error from Supreme Court of Kansas and an appeal from the United States Circuit Court for Kansas. Mugler was convicted of violating a Kansas statute enacted to carry into effect an amendment of the state Constitution forbidding the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor except for medical, mechanical, and scientific purposes. His offences consisted of selling beer manufactured before the statute went into effect, and of manufacturing beer in a brewery built several years before the adoption of the amendment. Both convictions were upheld by the state Supreme Court. The third case was a proceeding against one Ziebold and his partner to have their brewery closed as a common nuisance under the statute, and to have them enjoined from using the premises for the disposal of liquor. The case was removed to the federal Circuit Court, where the state's suit was dismissed. All cases were then brought here.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * That legislation by a state pro-

¹ The legislative propriety of granting an administrative discretion to make exceptions of a character difficult to define in advance by general rules is approved in Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 371, 372, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018 (1904). In the absence of such general rules to guide the exercise of administrative discretion, it will be assumed that it is to be exercised reasonably and for appropriate cause. Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 137, 31 Sup. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128 (1911). Compare Commonwealth v. Maletsky, 203 Mass. 241, 89 N. E. 245, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168 (1909).

hibiting the manufacture within her limits of intoxicating liquors, to be there sold or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States, is made clear by the decisions of this court, rendered before and since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment; to some of which, in view of questions to be presently considered, it will be well to refer. * * * [Here follow quotations from the License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. Ed. 256, Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. Ed. 929, Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 33, 24 L. Ed. 989, and Foster v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 112 U. S. 206, 5 Sup. Ct. 8, 97, 28 L. Ed. 696.]

It is, however, contended, that, although the state may prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for sale or barter within her limits, for general use as a beverage, "no convention or legislature has the right, under our form of government, to prohibit any citizen from manufacturing for his own use, or for export, or storage, any article of food or drink not endangering or affecting the rights of others." The argument made in support of the first branch of this proposition, briefly stated, is, that in the implied compact between the state and the citizen certain rights are reserved by the latter, which are guaranteed by the constitutional provision protecting persons against being deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, and with which the state cannot interfere; that among those rights is that of manufacturing for one's use either food or drink; and that while, according to the doctrines of the Commune, the state may control the tastes, appetites, habits, dress, food, and drink of the people, our system of government, based upon the individuality and intelligence of the citizen, does not claim to control him, except as to his conduct to others, leaving him the sole judge as to all that only affects himself.

It will be observed that the proposition, and the argument made in support of it, equally concede that the right to manufacture drink for one's personal use is subject to the condition that such manufacture does not endanger or affect the rights of others. If such manufacture does prejudicially affect the rights and interests of the community, it follows, from the very premises stated, that society has the power to protect itself, by legislation, against the injurious consequences of that business. As was said in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 124, 24 L. Ed. 77, while power does not exist with the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require "each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another."

But by whom, or by what authority, is it to be determined whether the manufacture of particular articles of drink, either for general use or for the personal use of the maker, will injuriously affect the public? Power to determine such questions, so as to bind all, must exist somewhere; else society will be at the mercy of the few, who, regarding only their own appetites or passions, may be willing to imperil the peace and security of the many, provided only they are permitted to do as they please. Under our system that power is lodged with the legislative branch of the government. It belongs to that department to exert what are known as the police powers of the state, and to determine, primarily what measures are appropriate or needful for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public safety.

It does not at all follow that every statute enacted ostensibly for the promotion of these ends, is to be accepted as a legitimate exertion of the police powers of the state. There are, of necessity, limits beyond which legislation cannot rightfully go. * * * If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution.

Keeping in view these principles, as governing the relations of the judicial and legislative departments of government with each other, it is difficult to perceive any ground for the judiciary to declare that the prohibition by Kansas of the manufacture or sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for general use there as a beverage, is not fairly adapted to the end of protecting the community against the evils which confessedly result from the excessive use of ardent spirits. There is no justification for holding that the state, under the guise merely of police regulations, is here aiming to deprive the citizen of his constitutional rights; for we cannot shut out of view the fact, within the knowledge of all, that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor the fact, established by statistics accessible to every one, that the idleness, disorder, pauperism, and crime existing in the country are, in some degree at least, traceable to this evil. If, therefore, a state deems the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for other than medical, scientific, and manufacturing purposes, to be necessary to the peace and security of society, the courts cannot, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. They have nothing to do with the mere policy of legislation.

Indeed, it is a fundamental principle in our institutions, indispensable to the preservation of public liberty, that one of the separate departments of government shall not usurp powers committed by the Constitution to another department. And so, if, in the judgment of the legislature, the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for the maker's own use, as a beverage, would tend to cripple, if it did not defeat, the effort to guard the community against the evils attending the excessive use of such liquors, it is not for the courts, upon their views as to what is best and safest for the community, to disregard the legislative determination of that question. So far from such a regulation having no relation to the general end sought to be accomplished, the entire scheme of prohibition, as embodied in the Constitution and laws of Kansas, might fail, if the right of each citizen to manufacture intoxicating liquors for his own use as a beverage were recognized. Such a right does not inhere in citizenship. Nor can it be said that government interferes with or impairs any one's constitutional rights of liberty or of property, when it determines that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, for general or individual use, as a beverage, are, or may become, hurtful to society, and constitute, therefore, a business in which no one may lawfully engage. Those rights are best secured, in our government, by the observance, upon the part of all, of such regulations as are established by competent authority to promote the common good. No one may rightfully do that which the law-making power, upon reasonable grounds, declares to be prejudicial to the general welfare. * * *

It is contended that, as the primary and principal use of beer is as a beverage; as their respective breweries were erected when it was lawful to engage in the manufacture of beer for every purpose; as such establishments will become of no value as property, or, at least, will be materially diminished in value, if not employed in the manufacture of beer for every purpose; the prohibition upon their being so employed is, in effect, a taking of property for public use without compensation, and depriving the citizen of his property without due process of law. In other words, although the state, in the exercise of her police powers, may lawfully prohibit the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, legislation having that object in view cannot be enforced against those who, at the time, happen to own property, the chief value of which consists in its fitness for such manufacturing purposes, unless compensation is first made for the diminution in the value of their property, resulting from such prohibitory enactments.

This interpretation of the fourteenth amendment is inadmissible. It cannot be supposed that the states intended, by adopting that amendment, to impose restraints upon the exercise of their powers for the protection of the safety, health, or morals of the community. * * * [Here follow statements of or quotations from Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., post, p. 863, Stone v. Mississippi, post, p. 860, and New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., post, p. 865, —all to the effect that the state cannot, even by contract, restrict its power to protect the public health, morals, or safety.]

The principle, that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, was embodied, in substance, in the Constitutions of nearly all, if not all, of the states at the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment; and it has never been regarded as incompatible with the principle, equally vital, because essential to the peace and safety of society, that all property in this country is held under the implied obligation that the owner's use of it shall not be injurious to the community. Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 32, 24 L. Ed. 989; Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53. * * *

As already stated, the present case must be governed by principles that do not involve the power of eminent domain, in the exercise of which property may not be taken for public use without compensation. A prohibition simply upon the use of property for purposes that are declared, by valid legislation, to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community, cannot, in any just sense, be deemed a taking or an appropriation of property for the public benefit. Such legislation does not disturb the owner in the control or use of his property for lawful purposes, nor restrict his right to dispose of it, but is only a declaration by the state that its use by any one, for certain forbidden purposes, is prejudicial to the public interests. Nor can legislation of that character come within the fourteenth amendment, in any case, unless it is apparent that its real object is not to protect the community, or to promote the general well-being, but, under the guise of police regulation, to deprive the owner of his liberty and property, without due process of law. The power which the states have of prohibiting such use by individuals of their property as will be prejudicial to the health, the morals, or the safety of the public, is not—and, consistently with the existence and safety of organized society, cannot be—burdened with the condition that the state must compensate such individual owners for pecuniary losses they may sustain, by reason of their not being permitted, by a noxious use of their property, to inflict injury upon the community. The exercise of the police power by the destruction of property which is itself a public nuisance, or the prohibition of its use in a particular way, whereby its value becomes depreciated, is very different from taking property for public use, or from depriving a person of his property without due process of law. In the one case, a nuisance only is abated; in the other, unoffending property is taken away from an innocent owner.

It is true, that, when the defendants in these cases purchased or erected their breweries, the laws of the state did not forbid the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. But the state did not thereby give any assurance, or come under an obligation, that its legislation upon that subject would remain unchanged. Indeed, as was said in Stone v. Mississippi, above cited, the supervision of the public health and the public morals is a governmental power, "continuing in its nature," and "to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require;" and that, "for this purpose, the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself." So in Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 32, 24 L. Ed. 989: "If the public safety or the public morals require the discontinuance of any manufacture or traffic, the hand of the legislature cannot be stayed from providing for its discontinuance by any incidental inconvenience which individuals or corporations may suffer." * * *

Judgments of Kansas Supreme Court affirmed,¹ Decree of Circuit Court reversed.

Ex parte QUONG WO.

(Supreme Court of California, 1911. 161 Cal. 220, 118 Pac. 714.)

[Habeas corpus. A Los Angeles ordinance established seven "industrial districts" in the city and declared the rest of its territory to be a "residence district," with certain exceptions from time to time authorized by the council. In the residence district it was forbidden to maintain any stone-crusher, rolling-mill, carpet-beating establishment, fireworks or soap factory, or any factory using mechanical power, or any hay barn, wood or lumber yard, public laundry or washhouse, or to establish anew any hospital, asylum for feeble-minded, wine or brandy manufactory, or blacksmith shop (existing ones being unaffected). Quong Wo was convicted of violating this ordinance by continuing to conduct a laundry within the residence district at a place where he had done so for some years before this ordinance was passed, and of which he still had an unexpired two-year lease. He applied for release by writ of habeas corpus.]

ANGELOTTI, J. * * * There can be no question that the power to regulate the carrying on of certain lawful occupations in a city includes the power to confine the carrying on of the same to certain limits, whenever such restrictions may reasonably be found necessary to subserve the ends for which the police power exists, viz., to protect the public health, morals, safety, and comfort. It is, of course, primarily for the legislative body clothed with this power to determine when

¹ Accord: Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. Ed. 1036 (1878) (compulsory abandonment of $15,000 rendering plant that had become offensive nuisance by growth of city); Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346 (1888) (manufacture of liquor solely for shipment out of state); Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224 (1900) (sale of cigarettes); Murphy v. California, 225 U. S. 623, 32 Sup. Ct. 697, 56 L. Ed. 1229, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153 (1912) (prohibition of keeping of existing billiard rooms); State v. Allmond, 2 Houst. 612 (Del., 1856) (liquor possessed prior to act); State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185 (1858) (same).

Contra: Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378 (1856) (as to liquor possessed prior to the act); Commonwealth v. Campbell, 133 Ky. 50, 117 S. W. 383, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172, 19 Ann. Cas. 159 (1909) (private keeping or use of liquor). In St. Joseph v. Harris, 59 Mo. App. 122 (1894), it was held invalid to forbid private drunkenness not annoying to others. See, also, State v. Lowry, 166 Ind. 372, 77 N. E. 728, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 9 Ann. Cas. 350 (1906).

A state monopoly of the retail sale of liquor is valid. State ex rel. George v. Aiken, 42 S. Car. 222, 20 S. E. 221, 26 L. R. A. 345 (1894). The cases discussing the validity of prohibition, local option, and "dispensary" legislation are fully collected in 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908-948 (1908).

such regulations are essential, and its determination in this regard, in view of its better knowledge of all the circumstances, and the presumption that it is acting with a due regard for the rights of all parties, will not be disturbed in the courts, unless it can plainly be seen that the regulation has no relation to the ends above stated, but is a clear invasion of personal or property rights under the guise of police regulation. In the case of Grumbach v. Leland, 154 Cal. 679, 98 Pac. 1059, in which this court declared the well-settled rule last stated, it is said: "It is well settled that it is entirely within the police power to limit the conduct of the liquor or other businesses coming within its regulatory scope or to exclude such businesses from specified districts"—citing cases. The limitation in the case last cited was in regard to the business of selling intoxicating liquors, but the power is by no means confined to occupations of that character, and, whatever be the business or occupation to which it is attempted to be applied, the question of the validity of the limitation depends on whether it has some relation to the ends for which the police power is conferred.

The necessity of such regulation in the case of necessary and lawful occupations carried on in cities and towns was recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 90, 11 Sup. Ct. 15, 34 L. Ed. 620, where it is said: "Some occupations by the noise made in their pursuit, some by the odors they engender, and some by the dangers accompanying them require regulation as to the locality in which they shall be conducted." That the power to regulate includes the power to confine certain occupations within prescribed limits in a city has been held in many cases, of which the following are examples: Ex parte Byrd, 84 Ala. 17, 4 South. 397, 5 Am. St. Rep. 328; In re Wilson, 32 Minn. 145, 19 N. W. 723; Shea v. City of Muncie, 148 Ind. 14, 46 N. E. 138; Cronin v. People, 82 N. Y. 318, 37 Am. Rep. 564; City of Newton v. Joyce, 166 Mass. 83, 44 N. E. 116; State v. Beattie, 16 Mo. App. 131; Ex parte Lacey, 108 Cal. 326, 41 Pac. 411, 38 L. R. A. 640, 49 Am. St. Rep. 93. In the last-mentioned case, the limitation was, as we have seen, regarding the operation of a steam shoddy or steam carpet-beating machine; in State v. Beattie, supra, a livery stable; in City of Newton v. Joyce, supra, a livery stable for more than four horses; in Cronin v. People, supra, the slaughtering of cattle; in Ex parte Byrd, supra, the selling of fresh meat; and in the other cases the sale of intoxicating liquor. Warrant for this character of regulation in regard to all these occupations and many others that might be named is to be found in the fact that it may reasonably be determined necessary to the health, morals, safety, or comfort of the people of a city. * * *

The design of the ordinance here involved undoubtedly was to protect such portions of the city of Los Angeles as are devoted principally to residence purposes from the dangers and discomfort attendant upon the operation of certain kinds of business which, while not necessarily nuisances per se, have always been recognized as proper subjects of police regulation. We do not feel warranted in saying that, as to public laundries and washhouses, the conclusion of the city council was clearly unreasonable. * * * Owing to the peculiar conditions existing in cities, courts are not keen to question the wisdom of the legislative exercise of their police power in these respects. * * * The mere fact that "large portions of the residence district are sparsely built up" cannot affect the determination of this proceeding. Doubtless it was assumed by the city council that such portions would not be "sparsely populated" for any great length of time, an assumption probably warranted by the growth and population of the city during the last few years. * * *

Writ discharged.¹

CITY OF PASSAIC v. PATERSON BILL POSTING, ADVERTISING & SIGN PAINTING CO.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey 1905. 72 N. J. Law, 285, 62 Atl. 267, 111 Am. St. Rep. 676, 5 Ann. Cas. 995.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of New Jersey. The facts appear in the opinion below.]

SWAYZE, J. The plaintiff in error was convicted of the violation of an ordinance of the city of Passaic regulating signs or billboards and the conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court. 71 N. J. Law, 75, 58 Atl. 343. The ordinance provides that no sign or billboard shall be at any point more than eight feet above the surface of the ground, and requires that it shall be constructed not less than ten feet from the street line. * * *

It is obvious that the effect of the ordinance is to deprive the landowner of the ordinary use for a lawful business purpose of a portion of his land. Such deprivation is a taking within the meaning of the constitutional provision (Trenton Water Power Co. v. Raff, 36 N. J. Law, 335, approved by this court in Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 7 Atl. 432, 56 Am. Rep. 1); and where no compensation is given to the land owner, the taking can only be justified if it is done in the exercise of the police power of the state. * * *

The Supreme Court held that because the erection of such signs

¹ "Nuisances may thus be classified: First, those which in their nature are nuisances per se or are so denounced by the common law or by statute; second, those which in their nature are not nuisances, but may become so by reason of their locality, surroundings, or the manner in which they may be conducted, managed, etc.; third, those which in their nature may be nuisances, but as to which there may be honest differences of opinion in impartial minds. The power granted by the statute to the governing bodies of municipal corporations to declare what shall be nuisances, and to abate the same, etc., authorizes such bodies to conclusively denounce those things falling within the first and third of these classes to be nuisances, but as to those things falling within the second class the power possessed is only to declare such of them to be nuisances as are in fact so."—Laugel v. City of Bushnell, 197 Ill. 20, 26, 27, 63 N. E. 1086, 1088, 58 L. R. A. 266 (1902), by Boggs, J.

might be attended with danger to the public at times of severe storm or by the decay of their supports, the ordinance was not without legal authority. In our opinion the legality of the ordinance does not depend upon the possibility of danger thus suggested, but upon whether such a regulation is reasonably necessary for the public safety. There must always be a possibility of danger from the erection of any structure, and from its decay; but such a possibility is not sufficient to justify the municipal authorities in depriving a man of the ordinary use of his land. In all our cities and towns, fences and buildings are erected upon the street line, involving the same or even greater possibility of danger from severe storms or natural decay, but it would hardly be maintained that a municipality could be authorized by the Legislature to compel the owners of buildings already erected to take them down or move them back ten feet from the street line. Yet the danger to the public from bricks or slates, ice and snow, falling from a building is much greater than any possible danger from a billboard. In determining whether a regulation is reasonably necessary to secure the public safety, and therefore within the legitimate exercise of the police power, existing habits and customs are of great weight, and the universal custom of building upon the street line is cogent evidence that the public safety does not require that structures like billboards should be set back from the line. The very fact that this ordinance is directed against signs and billboards only, and not against fences, indicates that some consideration other than the public safety led to its passage. It is obvious from the face of the ordinance that the object of the first section was not to secure the public safety; that section contains no reference to a dangerous condition of billboards, while the second section expressly undertakes to deal with those that become dangerous.

We think the control attempted to be exercised is in excess of that essential to effect the security of the public. It is probable that the enactment of section 1 of the ordinance was due rather to æsthetic considerations than to considerations of the public safety. No case has been cited, nor are we aware of any case which holds that a man may be deprived of his property because his tastes are not those of his neighbors. Æsthetic considerations are a matter of luxury and indulgence rather than of necessity, and it is necessity alone which justifies the exercise of the police power to take private property without compensation. In two similar cases, the courts of other states have reached the same result. Crawford v. Topeka, 51 Kan. 756, 33 Pac. 476, 20 L. R. A. 692, 37 Am. St. Rep. 323; Commonwealth v. Boston Advertising Co., 188 Mass. 348, 74 N. E. 601, 69 L. R. A. 817, 108 Am. St. Rep. 494. The view taken by the majority of the Appellate Division in New York is to the same effect. People v. Green, 85 App. Div. 400, 83 N. Y. Supp. 400.

In Missouri it was held that the owners of property along a boulev ward could not be restricted from building within forty feet of the street. St. Louis v. Hill, 116 Mo. 527, 22 S. W. 861, 21 L. R. A. 226.¹ And in Maryland it was held that an ordinance of Baltimore forbidding the grant of a building permit unless in the judgment of the municipal board, the size, general character, and appearance of the building would conform to the general character of the buildings previously erected in the same locality, was invalid. The proposed building in that case was for the purpose of showing wild animals and in reality conducting a continuous circus performance upon one of the most beautiful streets in Baltimore. Bostock v. Sams, 95 Md. 400, 52 Atl. 665, 59 L. R. A. 282, 93 Am. St. Rep. 394.

The case differs from Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560. The statute in that case gave a right of action in tort to an adjoining owner where a fence unnecessarily exceeding six feet in height was maliciously erected and maintained. Two elements were necessary for the right of action; the unnecessary character of the fence, and the malicious motive; and the court held that not only must the motive be malicious but the malevolence must be the dominant motive. Such a statute does not deprive the landowner of any ordinary or beneficial use of his property. It merely prevents him from using it to injure his neighbors without benefit to himself.

In Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 58 N. E. 673, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, the ordinance under consideration went no further than to require the permission of the common council for the erection of a billboard more than 6 feet in height, and that permission could only be given after notice to owners and occupants of land within 200 feet. The ordinance did not authorize the council to regulate the location and position of the billboard, and we must assume that in granting or withholding the permission, the council would act judicially and solely with reference to considerations of the safety, health, or morals of the public. The court said: "We think this statute conferred upon the common council of the city authority to regulate boards erected for the purpose of bill posting, so far, at least, as such regulation was necessary to the safety or welfare of the inhabitants of the city or persons passing along its streets."²

¹ Accord: Eubank v. Richmond, 226 U. S. 137, 33 Sup. Ct. 76, 57 L. Ed. —, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123 (1912) (building line established for each block at will of owners of two-thirds of frontage); Water Power Cases, 148 Wis. 124 (1912) (riparian owners deprived of right to create water power). Similarly a city may not, without compensation, plat streets upon private property and refuse to pay for the destruction of buildings erected across such proposed streets before they are afterwards opened. Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 32 N. E. 976, 18 L. R. A. 543 (1893). See, also, Koch v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 53 N. J. Law, 256, 21 Atl. 284 (1891). Compare Matter of New York, 196 N. Y. 255, 89 N. E. 814, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273, 17 Ann. Cas. 1032 (1909); In re Chestnut St., 118 Pa. 593, 12 Atl. 585 (1888).

² See St. Louis Gunning Advertising Co. v. City of St. Louis, 235 Mo. 99, 137 S. W. 929 (1911), for an elaborate opinion sustaining such legislation upon

The invalidity of the ordinance in the present case, in our opinion, lies in the fact that it exceeds that necessity. Since the effect of the ordinance is to take private property without compensation, and cannot be justified as an exercise of the police power, it is invalid.

Judgment reversed.³

various grounds of public welfare. So of statutes limiting the height of buildings. Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, 79 N. E. 745, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523 (1907), affirmed in 214 U. S. 91, 29 Sup. Ct. 567, 53 L. Ed. 923 (1909).

³ Accord: People ex rel. Wineburgh Advertising Co. v. Murphy, 195 N. Y. 126, 88 N. E. 17 (1909) (signs on tops of private buildings), annotated in 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735-737.

In Commonwealth v. Boston Advertising Co., 188 Mass. 348, 351, 352, 74 N. E. 601, 602, 69 L. R. A. 817, 108 Am. St. Rep. 491 (1905), Barker, J., said (holding invalid a regulation forbidding the display of large advertising signs upon land or buildings near public parks or parkways): "The question here is not of the power of the state to expend money or to lay taxes to promote aesthetic ends, or to regulate the use of property with a view to promote such ends. It is of the right of the state by such regulations to deprive the owner of property of a natural use of that property without giving compensation for the resulting loss to the owner. Probably no one would care at present to deny that without compensation 'the possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to such reasonable conditions as may be deemed by the governing authority of the country essential to the safety, health, peace, good order, and morals of the community.' Field, J., in Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 89, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620. Beyond the purpose named, there are many others of a public nature, the promotion of which may involve the taking or damaging of the property of individuals, and as to which there well may be differences of opinion as to whether the state must afford compensation if such loss or damage is inflicted. One of them is the education of youth. Probably all will agree that, judged by any fair standard, the promotion of education stands upon a higher plane than the promotion of aesthetic culture or enjoyment, and would the better justify the imposition of a burden without compensation. But no one would contend that the state could authorize the taking of land for a schoolhouse without providing compensation for the owner. In a very recent case this court, in dealing with a statute requiring street railway companies to transport school children at reduced rates of fare, has held that, if it appeared that the enforcement of the act would cause expense which the carrier must bear or put upon other patrons, we should be obliged to hold that there was a taking of property without due process of law. Com. v. Interstate Cons. St. Ry. Co., 187 Mass. 436, 73 N. E. 530 [11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 2 Ann. Cas. 419]. If the police power, technically so called, will not justify a taking of property without compensation to promote the education of youth, it cannot justify such a taking for the promotion of merely aesthetic purposes."

Advertising vans may be prohibited in crowded city streets. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. City of New York, 194 N. Y. 19, 86 N. E. 824, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 16 Ann. Cas. 695 (1909), affirmed in 221 U. S. 467, 31 Sup. Ct. 709, 55 L. Ed. 815 (1911).

Compare Questions and Answers, 103 Me. 506, 69 Atl. 627 (1907) (restriction of tree cutting on wild private land); Bigelow v. Whitcomb, 72 N. H. 473, 57 Atl. 680, 65 L. R. A. 676 (1904) (same on highways where public has only an easement).

DOBBINS v. LOS ANGELES (1904) 195 U. S. 223, 238-241, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169, Mr. Justice DAY (holding invalid as against plaintiff an ordinance suddenly changing the limits within which gasworks might be operated in the city):

"We think a case is made which called for the protection of the courts against arbitrary interference with the rights of the plaintiff in error. Complying with the terms of the ordinance which was in force when the plaintiff in error was about to begin the erection of the gasworks in controversy, a tract of land was purchased within the district wherein the erection of such works was permitted, a contract was entered into for the construction of the works, a considerable sum of money was expended. It may be admitted as being a correct statement of the law as held by the California supreme court that, notwithstanding the grant of the permit, and even after the erection of the works, the city might still, for the protection of the public health and safety, prohibit the further maintenance and continuance of such works, and the prosecution of the business, originally harmless, may become by reason of the manner of its prosecution or a changed condition of the community, a menace to the public health and safety. In other words, the right to exercise the police power is a continuing one, and a business lawful to-day may, in the future, because of the changed situation, the growth of population, or other causes, become a menace to the public health and welfare, and be required to yield to the public good. Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. Ed. 1036; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co., 115 U. S. 672, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 524.

"But the exercise of the police power is subject to judicial review, and property rights cannot be wrongfully destroyed by arbitrary enactment. It was averred that the works would be so constructed so as not to interfere with the health or safety of the people. No reasonable explanation for the arbitrary exercise of power in the case is suggested. The narrowing of the limits within which the plaintiff in error, in compliance with the ordinance of the city and the permit of the board of fire commissioners, was proceeding to erect the gasworks, to the smaller and more limited section, was not demanded by the public welfare, and, taking the facts as alleged in the bill, seems rather to have been actuated by the purpose to exclude the plaintiff in error from further prosecution of the enterprise. The limits of the privileged district were fixed late in August. In September the complainant began the construction of the works. In November, without changed conditions or adequate reason, the council, by an amended ordinance, draw a line embracing a part of the district including the complainant's property, and declare that, too, shall be prohibited territory. This action is strongly corroborative of the allegations of the bill that the purpose was not police regulation in the interest of the public, but the destruction of the plaintiff's rights, and the building up of another company still within the privileged district after the passage of the amendment. Being the owner of the land, and having partially erected the works, the plaintiff in error had acquired property rights, and was entitled to protection against unconstitutional encroachments which would have the effect to deprive her of her property without due process of law.

"It is averred in the bill of complaint that the district within which the works were being erected was one given over to manufacturing enterprises, some of which were fully as obnoxious as gasworks possibly could be; that it contained large spaces of unoccupied lands, worthless except for manufacturing purposes, and, by clear inference, that there was nothing in the situation which rendered it necessary, in order to protect the city from a noisome and unhealthy business, to decrease the area within which gasworks could lawfully be erected.

"It is urged that, where the exercise of legislative or municipal power is clearly within constitutional limits, the courts will not inquire into the motives which may have actuated the legislative body in passing the law or ordinance in question. Whether, when it appears that the facts would authorize the exercise of the power, the courts will restrain its exercise because of alleged wrongful motives inducing the passage of an ordinance, is not a question necessary to be determined in this case; but where the facts as to the situation and conditions are such as to establish the exercise of the police power in such manner as to oppress or discriminate against a class or an individual, the courts may consider and give weight to such purpose in considering the validity of the ordinance. This court in the case of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220, held that, although an ordinance might be lawful upon its face, and apparently fair in its terms, yet, if it was enforced in such a manner as to work a discrimination against a part of the community, for no lawful reason, such exercise of power would be invalidated by the courts. * * *

"In this case we think the allegations of the bill disclose such character of territory, such sudden and unexplained change of its limits after the plaintiff in error had purchased the property and gone forward with the erection of the works, as to bring it within that class of cases wherein the court may restrain the arbitrary and discriminatory exercise of the police power which amounts to a taking of property without due process of law and an impairment of property rights protected by the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution."

POWELL v. PENNSYLVANIA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1887. 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. A Pennsylvania statute forbade the manufacture, sale, or the keeping with intent to sell, of any oleaginous article designed to take the place of butter or cheese produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream. Powell was convicted in a county quarter sessions court of violating this statute by selling and keeping for sale packages of oleomargarine plainly labeled and sold as such, which had been lawfully made in the state prior to the passage of the statute. The trial court refused to allow Powell to prove that the articles sold by him were wholesome articles of food, cleanly manufactured, and only differed from dairy butter in composition, in that they contained a slightly smaller percentage of butterine, a substance giving flavor to butter, but adding nothing to its wholesomeness. The conviction was affirmed by the state Supreme Court.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * This case in its important aspects is governed by the principles announced in Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205. * * * The question, therefore, is whether the prohibition of the manufacture out of oleaginous substances, or out of any compound thereof other than that produced from unadulterated milk or cream from unadulterated milk, of an article designed to take the place of butter or cheese produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream from unadulterated milk, or the prohibition upon the manufacture of any imitation or adulterated butter or cheese, or upon the selling or offering for sale, or having in possession with intent to sell, the same, as an article of food, is a lawful exercise by the state of the power to protect, by police regulations, the public health.

The main proposition advanced by the defendant is that his enjoyment upon terms of equality with all others in similar circumstances of the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, and of acquiring, holding, and selling property, is an essential part of his rights of liberty and property, as guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment. The court assents to this general proposition as embodying a sound principle of constitutional law. But it cannot adjudge that the defendant's rights of liberty and property, as thus defined, have been infringed by the statute of Pennsylvania, without holding that, although it may have been enacted in good faith for the objects expressed in its title, namely, to protect the public health and to prevent the adulteration of dairy products and fraud in the sale thereof, it has, in fact, no real or substantial relation to those objects. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205. The court is unable to affirm that this legislation has no real or substantial relation to such objects.

It will be observed that the offer in the court below was to show by proof that the particular articles the defendant sold, and those in his possession for sale, in violation of the statute, were, in fact, wholesome or nutritious articles of food. It is entirely consistent with that offer that many, indeed, that most kinds of oleomargarine butter in the market contain ingredients that are or may become injurious to health. The court cannot say, from anything of which it may take judicial cognizance, that such is not the fact. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record, and in obedience to settled rules of constitutional construction, it must be assumed that such is the fact. "Every possible presumption," Chief Justice Waite said, speaking for the court in Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 718, 25 L. Ed. 496, "is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule." See, also, Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 128, 3 L. Ed. 162; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 625, 4 L. Ed. 629; Livingston v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 407, 25 L. Ed. 1015.

Whether the manufacture of oleomargarine, or imitation butter, of the kind described in the statute, is, or may be, conducted in such a way, or with such skill and secrecy, as to baffle ordinary inspection, or whether it involves such danger to the public health as to require, for the protection of the people, the entire suppression of the business, rather than its regulation in such manner as to permit the manufacture and sale of articles of that class that do not contain noxious ingredients, are questions of fact and of public policy which belong to the legislative department to determine. And as it does not appear upon the face of the statute, or from any facts of which the court must take judicial cognizance, that it infringes rights secured by the fundamental law, the legislative determination of those questions is conclusive upon the courts. It is not a part of their functions to conduct investigations of facts entering into questions of public policy merely, and to sustain or frustrate the legislative will, embodied in statutes, as they may happen to approve or disapprove its determination of such questions. The power which the legislature has to promote the general welfare is very great, and the discretion which that department of the government has, in the employment of means to that end, is very large. While both its power and its discretion must be so exercised as not to impair the fundamental rights of life, liberty, and property; and while, according to the principles upon which our institutions rest, "the very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life, at the mere will of another, seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails, as being the essence of slavery itself;" yet, "in many cases of mere administration, the responsibility is purely political, no appeal lying except to the ultimate tribunal of the public judgment, exercised either in the pressure of public opinion or by means of the suffrage." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 370, 6 Sup. Ct. 1004, 30 L. Ed. 220.

The case before us belongs to the latter class. The Legislature of Pennsylvania, upon the fullest investigation, as we must conclusively presume, and upon reasonable grounds, as must be assumed from the record, has determined that the prohibition of the sale, or offering for sale, or having in possession to sell, for purposes of food, of any article manufactured out of oleaginous substances or compounds other than those produced from unadulterated milk or cream from unadulterated milk, to take the place of butter produced from unadulterated milk or cream from unadulterated milk, will promote the public health, and prevent frauds in the sale of such articles. If all that can be said of this legislation is that it is unwise, or unnecessarily oppressive to those manufacturing or selling wholesome oleomargarine, as an article of food, their appeal must be to the legislature, or to the ballot-box, not to the judiciary. The latter cannot interfere without usurping powers committed to another department of government.

It is argued, in behalf of the defendant, that if the statute in question is sustained as a valid exercise of legislative power, then nothing stands in the way of the destruction by the legislative department of the constitutional guarantees of liberty and property. But the possibility of the abuse of legislative power does not disprove its existence. That possibility exists even in reference to powers that are conceded to exist. Besides, the judiciary department is bound not to give effect to statutory enactments that are plainly forbidden by the Constitution. This duty, the court has said, is always one of extreme delicacy; for, apart from the necessity of avoiding conflicts between co-ordinate branches of the government, whether state or national, it is often difficult to determine whether such enactments are within the powers granted to or possessed by the legislature. Nevertheless, if the incompatibility of the Constitution and the statute is clear or palpable, the courts must give effect to the former. And such would be the duty of the court if the state legislature, under the pretence of guarding the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, should invade the rights of life, liberty, or property, or other rights, secured by the supreme law of the land. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[Mr. Justice FIELD gave a dissenting opinion.]

ALLGEYER v. LOUISIANA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1897. 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832.)

See ante, p. 232, for a report of this case.

¹ Contra: People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34 (1885) (where, however, assumed object of statute was protection of dairy interests from competition). As to power of state over oleomargarine in interstate commerce, see Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223 (1894); Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49 (1898); Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 18 Sup. Ct. 768, 43 L. Ed. 60 (1898).

HOLDEN v. HARDY.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1898. 109 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 353, 42 L. Ed. 780.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Utah. A Utah statute forbade the employment of workmen over eight hours a day in any underground mine, or in any smelter or other institution for reducing or refining ores, except in cases of emergency imminently dangerous to life or property. Holden was convicted in a justice's court in Salt Lake county of violating both prohibitions of this statute, and petitioned the state Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge him from the sheriff's custody upon each conviction. From a denial of this application he took this writ of error.]

Mr. Justice BROWN. * * * [The cases that have arisen under the fourteenth amendment] may be divided, generally, into two classes: First, where a state legislature or a state court is alleged to have unjustly discriminated in favor of or against a particular individual or class of individuals, as distinguished from the rest of the community, or denied them the benefit of due process of law; second, where the legislature has changed its general system of jurisprudence by abolishing what had been previously considered necessary to the proper administration of justice, or the protection of the individual. * * * [Various cases are here mentioned or commented upon.]

An examination of both these classes of cases under the fourteenth amendment will demonstrate that, in passing upon the validity of state legislation under that amendment, this court has not failed to recognize the fact that the law is, to a certain extent, a progressive science; that, in some of the states, methods of procedure which, at the time the constitution was adopted, were deemed essential to the protection and safety of the people, or to the liberty of the citizen, have been found to be no longer necessary; that restrictions which had formerly been laid upon the conduct of individuals, or of classes of individuals, had proved detrimental to their interests, while, upon the other hand, certain other classes of persons (particularly those engaged in dangerous or unhealthful employments) have been found to be in need of additional protection. Even before the adoption of the constitution, much had been done towards mitigating the severity of the common law, particularly in the administration of its criminal branch. The number of capital crimes in this country, at least, had been largely decreased. Trial by ordeal and by battle had never existed here, and had fallen into disuse in England. The earlier practice of the common law, which denied the benefit of witnesses to a person accused of felony, had been abolished by statute, though, so far as it deprived him of the assistance of counsel and compulsory process for the attendance of his witnesses, it had not been changed in England. But, to the credit of her American colonies, let it be said that so oppressive a doctrine had never obtained a foothold there.

The present century has originated legal reforms of no less importance. The whole fabric of special pleading, once thought to be necessary to the elimination of the real issue between the parties, has crumbled to pieces. The ancient tenures of real estate have been largely swept away, and land is now transferred almost as easily and cheaply as personal property. Married women have been emancipated from the control of their husbands, and placed upon a practical equality with them, with respect to the acquisition, possession, and transmission of property. Imprisonment for debt has been abolished. Exemptions from execution have been largely added to, and in most of the states homesteads are rendered incapable of seizure and sale upon forced process. Witnesses are no longer incompetent by reason of interest, even though they be parties to the litigation. Indictments have been simplified, and an indictment for the most serious of crimes is now the simplest of all. In several of the states, grand juries, formerly the only safeguard against a malicious prosecution, have been largely abolished; and in others the rule of unanimity, so far as applied to civil cases, has given way to verdicts rendered by a three-fourths majority.

This case does not call for an expression of opinion as to the wisdom of these changes, or their validity under the fourteenth amendment, although the substitution of prosecution by information in lieu of indictment was recognized as valid in Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232. They are mentioned only for the purpose of calling attention to the probability that other changes of no less importance may be made in the future, and that, while the cardinal principles of justice are immutable, the methods by which justice is administered are subject to constant fluctuation, and that the Constitution of the United States, which is necessarily and to a large extent inflexible, and exceedingly difficult of amendment, should not be so construed as to deprive the states of the power to so amend their laws as to make them conform to the wishes of the citizens, as they may deem best for the public welfare, without bringing them into conflict with the supreme law of the land.

Of course, it is impossible to forecast the character or extent of these changes; but in view of the fact that, from the day Magna Charta was signed to the present moment, amendments to the structure of the law have been made with increasing frequency, it is impossible to suppose that they will not continue, and the law be forced to adapt itself to new conditions of society, and particularly to the new relations between employers and employés, as they arise. * * *

Recognizing the difficulty in defining with exactness the phrase "due process of law," it is certain that these words imply a conformity with natural and inherent principles of justice, and forbid that one man's property, or right to property, shall be taken for the benefit of another, or for the benefit of the state, without compensation, and that no one shall be condemned in his person or property without an opportunity of being heard in his own defense.

As the possession of property, of which a person cannot be deprived, doubtless implies that such property may be acquired, it is safe to say that a state law which undertakes to deprive any class of persons of the general power to acquire property would also be obnoxious to the same provision. Indeed, we may go a step further, and say that as property can only be legally acquired, as between living persons, by contract, a general prohibition against entering into contracts with respect to property, or having as their object the acquisition of property, would be equally invalid. * * * [Here follows a quotation from Allgeyer v. Louisiana, ante, p. 235.]

This right of contract, however, is itself subject to certain limitations which the state may lawfully impose in the exercise of its police powers. While this power is inherent in all governments, it has doubtless been greatly expanded in its application during the past century, owing to an enormous increase in the number of occupations which are dangerous or so far detrimental to the health of employes as to demand special precautions for their well-being and protection, or the safety of adjacent property. While this court has held (notably in the cases of Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, and Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064) that the police power cannot be put forward as an excuse for oppressive and unjust legislation, it may be lawfully resorted to for the purpose of preserving the public health, safety, or morals, or the abatement of public nuisances, and a large discretion "is necessarily vested in the legislature, to determine, not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 136, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385. * * *

While the business of mining coal and manufacturing iron began in Pennsylvania as early as 1716, and in Virginia, North Carolina, and Massachusetts even earlier than this, both mining and manufacturing were carried on in such a limited way, and by such primitive methods, that no special laws were considered necessary, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, for the protection of the operatives; but, in the vast proportions which these industries have since assumed, it has been found that they can no longer be carried on, with due regard to the safety and health of those engaged in them, without special protection against the dangers necessarily incident to these employments. In consequence of this, laws have been enacted in most of the states designed to meet these exigencies, and to secure the safety of persons peculiarly exposed to these dangers. Within this general category are ordinances providing for fire escapes for hotels, theaters, factories, and other large buildings; a municipal inspection of boilers; and appliances designed to secure passengers upon railways and steamboats, against the dangers necessarily incident to these methods of transportation. In states where manufacturing is carried on to a large extent, provision is made for the protection of dangerous machinery against accidental contact; for the cleanliness and ventilation of working rooms; for the guarding of well holes, stairways, elevator shafts; and for the employment of sanitary appliances. In others, where mining is the principal industry, special provision is made for the shoring up of dangerous walls; for ventilation shafts, bore holes, escapement shafts, means of signaling the surface; for the supply of fresh air, and the elimination, as far as possible, of dangerous gases; for safe means of hoisting and lowering cages; for a limitation upon the number of persons permitted to enter a cage; that cages shall be covered; and that there shall be fences and gates around the top of shafts, besides other similar precautions. * * * [Here follow references to various state statutes.]

But, if it be within the power of a legislature to adopt such means for the protection of the lives of its citizens, it is difficult to see why precautions may not also be adopted for the protection of their health and morals. It is as much for the interest of the state that the public health should be preserved as that life should be made secure. With this end in view, quarantine laws have been enacted in most, if not all, of the states; insane asylums, public hospitals, and institutions for the care and education of the blind established; and special measures taken for the exclusion of infected cattle, rags, and decayed fruit. In other states laws have been enacted limiting the hours during which women and children shall be employed in factories; and while their constitutionality, at least as applied to women, has been doubted in some of the states, they have been generally upheld. * * *

Upon the principles above stated, we think the act in question may be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power of the state. The enactment does not profess to limit the hours of all workmen, but merely those who are employed in underground mines, or in the smelting, reduction, or refining of ores or metals. These employments, when too long pursued, the legislature has judged to be detrimental to the health of the employés; and, so long as there are reasonable grounds for believing that this is so, its decision upon this subject cannot be reviewed by the federal courts.

While the general experience of mankind may justify us in believing that men may engage in ordinary employments more than eight hours per day without injury to their health, it does not follow that labor for the same length of time is innocuous when carried on beneath the surface of the earth, where the operative is deprived of fresh air and sunlight, and is frequently subjected to foul atmosphere and a very high temperature, or to the influence of noxious gases generated by the processes of refining or smelting. * * *

The legislature has also recognized the fact, which the experience of legislators in many states has corroborated, that the proprietors of these establishments and their operatives do not stand upon an equality, and that their interests are, to a certain extent, conflicting. The former naturally desire to obtain as much labor as possible from their employés, while the latter are often induced by the fear of discharge to conform to regulations which their judgment, fairly exercised, would pronounce to be detrimental to their health or strength. In other words, the proprietors lay down the rules, and the laborers are practically constrained to obey them. In such cases self-interest is often an unsafe guide, and the legislature may properly interpose its authority.

It may not be improper to suggest in this connection that although the prosecution in this case was against the employer of labor, who apparently, under the statute, is the only one liable, his defense is not so much that his right to contract has been infringed upon, but that the act works a peculiar hardship to his employés, whose right to labor as long as they please is alleged to be thereby violated. The argument would certainly come with better grace and greater cogency from the latter class. But the fact that both parties are of full age, and competent to contract, does not necessarily deprive the state of the power to interfere, where the parties do not stand upon an equality, or where the public health demands that one party to the contract shall be protected against himself. "The state still retains an interest in his welfare, however reckless he may be. The whole is no greater than the sum of all the parts, and when the individual health, safety, and welfare are sacrificed or neglected, the state must suffer."

We have no disposition to criticise the many authorities which hold that state statutes restricting the hours of labor are unconstitutional. Indeed, we are not called upon to express an opinion upon this subject. It is sufficient to say of them that they have no application to cases where the legislature had adjudged that a limitation is necessary for the preservation of the health of employés, and there are reasonable grounds for believing that such determination is supported by the facts. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissented.]

¹ As to how far a person may be compelled to refrain from private acts injurious principally to himself, see Ah Lim v. Territory, 1 Wash. 156, 24 Pac. 588, 9 L. R. A. 395 (1890) (smoking opium); City of St. Joseph v. Harris, 59 Mo. App. 122 (1894) (intoxication); City of Greenville v. Kennels, 58 S. C. 427, 36 S. E. 727, 50 L. R. A. 725 (1900) (gambling); City of St. Louis v. Fitz, 53 Mo. 582 (1873) (association with thieves and prostitutes) [see, also, Ex parte Smith, 135 Mo. 223, 36 S. W. 628, 33 L. R. A. 606, 58 Am. St. Rep. 576]; In re Morgan, 26 Colo. 415, 58 Pac. 1071, 47 L. R. A. 52, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269 (1899) (miners' eight-hour law).

LOCHNER v. NEW YORK.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1905. 198 U. S. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133.)

[Error to the county court of Oneida county, New York. A New York statute forbade any employee in a bakery or confectionery establishment to be permitted to work over 60 hours in any one week, or an average of over 10 hours a day for the number of days such employees should work. Lochner was convicted in said county court of violating this statute in the city of Utica, and the conviction was affirmed on appeal by the Appellate Division and by the Court of Appeals of the state, which remanded the case to the original court for further proceedings.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * The statute necessarily interferes with the right of contract between the employer and employees, concerning the number of hours in which the latter may labor in the bakery of the employer. The general right to make a contract in relation to his business is part of the liberty of the individual protected by the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution. Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832. Under that provision no state can deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The right to purchase or to sell labor is part of the liberty protected by this amendment, unless there are circumstances which exclude the right. There are, however, certain powers, existing in the sovereignty of each state in the Union, somewhat vaguely termed police powers, the exact description and limitation of which have not been attempted by the courts. Those powers, broadly stated, and without, at present, any attempt at a more specific limitation, relate to the safety, health, morals, and general welfare of the public. Both property and liberty are held on such reasonable conditions as may be imposed by the governing power of the state in the exercise of those powers, and with such conditions the fourteenth amendment was not designed to interfere. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620; Re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 11 Sup. Ct. 191, 34 L. Ed. 796.

The state, therefore, has power to prevent the individual from making certain kinds of contracts, and in regard to them the federal Constitution offers no protection. If the contract be one which the state, in the legitimate exercise of its police power, has the right to prohibit, it is not prevented from prohibiting it by the fourteenth amendment. Contracts in violation of a statute, either of the federal or state government, or a contract to let one's property for immoral purposes, or to do any other unlawful act, could obtain no protection from the federal Constitution, as coming under the liberty of person or of free contract. Therefore, when the state, by its legislature, in the assumed exercise of its police powers, has passed an act which seriously limits the right to labor or the right of contract in regard to their means of livelihood between persons who are sui juris (both employer and employee), it becomes of great importance to determine which shall prevail,—the right of the individual to labor for such time as he may choose, or the right of the state to prevent the individual from laboring, or from entering into any contract to labor, beyond a certain time prescribed by the state.

This court has recognized the existence and upheld the exercise of the police powers of the states in many cases which might fairly be considered as border ones, and it has, in the course of its determination of questions regarding the asserted invalidity of such statutes, on the ground of their violation of the rights secured by the federal Constitution, been guided by rules of a very liberal nature, the application of which has resulted, in numerous instances, in upholding the validity of state statutes thus assailed. Among the later cases where the state law has been upheld by this court is that of Holden v. Hardy, * * * [ante, p. 409, which is here stated.]

It will be observed that, even with regard to that class of labor, the Utah statute provided for cases of emergency wherein the provisions of the statute would not apply. The statute now before this court has no emergency clause in it, and, if the statute is valid, there are no circumstances and no emergencies under which the slightest violation of the provisions of the act would be innocent. There is nothing in Holden v. Hardy which covers the case now before us. Nor does Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 24 Sup. Ct. 124, 48 L. Ed. 148, touch the case at bar. The Atkin Case was decided upon the right of the state to control its municipal corporations, and to prescribe the conditions upon which it will permit work of a public character to be done for a municipality. Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13, 22 Sup. Ct. 1, 46 L. Ed. 55, is equally far from an authority for this legislation. The employees in that case were held to be at a disadvantage with the employer in matters of wages, they being miners and coal workers, and the act simply provided for the cashing of coal orders when presented by the miner to the employer. * * * [Jacobson v. Massachusetts, post, p. 444, and Petit v. Minnesota, ante, p. 358, note, are here stated.]

It must, of course, be conceded that there is a limit to the valid exercise of the police power by the state. There is no dispute concerning this general proposition. Otherwise the fourteenth amendment would have no efficacy and the legislatures of the states would have unbounded power, and it would be enough to say that any piece of legislation was enacted to conserve the morals, the health, or the safety of the people; such legislation would be valid, no matter how absolutely without foundation the claim might be. The claim of the police power would be a mere pretext,—become another and delusive name for the supreme sovereignty of the state to be exercised free from constitutional restraint. This is not contended for. In every case that comes before this court, therefore, where legislation of this character is concerned, and where the protection of the federal Constitution is sought, the question necessarily arises: Is this a fair, reasonable, and appropriate exercise of the police power of the state, or is it an unreasonable, unnecessary, and arbitrary interference with the right of the individual to his personal liberty, or to enter into those contracts in relation to labor which may seem to him appropriate or necessary for the support of himself and his family? Of course the liberty of contract relating to labor includes both parties to it. The one has as much right to purchase as the other to sell labor.

This is not a question of substituting the judgment of the court for that of the legislature. If the act be within the power of the state it is valid, although the judgment of the court might be totally opposed to the enactment of such a law. But the question would still remain: Is it within the police power of the state? and that question must be answered by the court.

The question whether this act is valid as a labor law, pure and simple, may be dismissed in a few words. There is no reasonable ground for interfering with the liberty of person or the right of free contract, by determining the hours of labor, in the occupation of a baker. There is no contention that bakers as a class are not equal in intelligence and capacity to men in other trades or manual occupations, or that they are not able to assert their rights and care for themselves without the protecting arm of the state, interfering with their independence of judgment and of action. They are in no sense wards of the state. Viewed in the light of a purely labor law, with no reference whatever to the question of health, we think that a law like the one before us involves neither the safety, the morals, nor the welfare, of the public, and that the interest of the public is not in the slightest degree affected by such an act. The law must be upheld, if at all, as a law pertaining to the health of the individual engaged in the occupation of a baker. It does not affect any other portion of the public than those who are engaged in that occupation. Clean and wholesome bread does not depend upon whether the baker works but ten hours per day or only sixty hours a week. The limitation of the hours of labor does not come within the police power on that ground.

It is a question of which of two powers or rights shall prevail,—the power of the state to legislate or the right of the individual to liberty of person and freedom of contract. The mere assertion that the subject relates, though but in a remote degree, to the public health, does not necessarily render the enactment valid. The act must have a more direct relation, as a means to an end, and the end itself must be appropriate and legitimate, before an act can be held to be valid which interferes with the general right of an individual to be free in his person and in his power to contract in relation to his own labor. * * *

We think the limit of the police power has been reached and passed in this case. There is, in our judgment, no reasonable foundation for holding this to be necessary or appropriate as a health law to safeguard the public health, or the health of the individuals who are following the trade of a baker. If this statute be valid, and if, therefore, a proper case is made out in which to deny the right of an individual, sui juris, as employer or employee, to make contracts for the labor of the latter under the protection of the provisions of the federal Constitution, there would seem to be no length to which legislation of this nature might not go. The case differs widely, as we have already stated, from the expressions of this court in regard to laws of this nature, as stated in Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780, and Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765.

We think that there can be no fair doubt that the trade of a baker, in and of itself, is not an unhealthy one to that degree which would authorize the legislature to interfere with the right to labor, and with the right of free contract on the part of the individual, either as employer or employee. In looking through statistics regarding all trades and occupations, it may be true that the trade of a baker does not appear to be as healthy as some other trades, and is also vastly more healthy than still others. To the common understanding the trade of a baker has never been regarded as an unhealthy one. Very likely physicians would not recommend the exercise of that or of any other trade as a remedy for ill health. Some occupations are more healthy than others, but we think there are none which might not come under the power of the legislature to supervise and control the hours of working therein, if the mere fact that the occupation is not absolutely and perfectly healthy is to confer that right upon the legislative department of the government. It might be safely affirmed that almost all occupations more or less affect the health. There must be more than the mere fact of the possible existence of some small amount of unhealthiness to warrant legislative interference with liberty. It is unfortunately true that labor, even in any department, may possibly carry with it the seeds of unhealthiness. But are we all, on that account, at the mercy of legislative majorities? A printer, a tinsmith, a locksmith, a carpenter, a cabinetmaker, a dry goods clerk, a bank's, a lawyer's, or a physician's clerk, or a clerk in almost any kind of business, would all come under the power of the legislature, on this assumption. No trade, no occupation, no mode of earning one's living, could escape this all-pervading power, and the acts of the legislature in limiting the hours of labor in all employments would be valid, although such limitation might seriously cripple the ability of the laborer to support himself and his family.

In our large cities there are many buildings into which the sun penetrates for but a short time in each day, and these buildings are occupied by people carrying on the business of bankers, brokers, lawyers, real estate, and many other kinds of business, aided by many clerks, messengers, and other employees. Upon the assumption of the validity of this act under review, it is not possible to say that an act, prohibiting lawyers' or bank clerks, or others, from contracting to labor for their employers more than eight hours a day would be invalid. It might be said that it is unhealthy to work more than that number of hours in an apartment lighted by artificial light during the working hours of the day; that the occupation of the bank clerk, the lawyer's clerk, the real-estate clerk, or the broker's clerk, in such offices is therefore unhealthy, and the legislature, in its paternal wisdom, must, therefore, have the right to legislate on the subject of, and to limit, the hours for such labor; and, if it exercises that power, and its validity be questioned, it is sufficient to say, it has reference to the public health; it has reference to the health of the employees condemned to labor day after day in buildings where the sun never shines; it is a health law, and therefore it is valid, and cannot be questioned by the courts.

It is also urged, pursuing the same line of argument, that it is to the interest of the state that its population should be strong and robust, and therefore any legislation which may be said to tend to make people healthy must be valid as health laws, enacted under the police power. If this be a valid argument and a justification for this kind of legislation, it follows that the protection of the federal Constitution from undue interference with liberty of person and freedom of contract is visionary, wherever the law is sought to be justified as a valid exercise of the police power. Scarcely any law but might find shelter under such assumptions, and conduct, properly so called, as well as contract, would come under the restrictive sway of the legislature. Not only the hours of employees, but the hours of employers, could be regulated, and doctors, lawyers, scientists, all professional men, as well as athletes and artisans, could be forbidden to fatigue their brains and bodies by prolonged hours of exercise, lest the fighting strength of the state be impaired. We mention these extreme cases because the contention is extreme.

We do not believe in the soundness of the views which uphold this law. On the contrary, we think that such a law as this, although passed in the assumed exercise of the police power, and as relating to the public health, or the health of the employees named, is not within that power, and is invalid. The act is not, within any fair meaning of the term, a health law, but is an illegal interference with the rights of individuals, both employers and employees, to make contracts regarding labor upon such terms as they may think best, or which they may agree upon with the other parties to such contracts. Statutes of the nature of that under review, limiting the hours in which grown and intelligent men may labor to earn their living, are mere meddlesome interferences with the rights of the individual, and they are not saved from condemnation by the claim that they are passed in the exercise of the police power and upon the subject of the health of the individual whose rights are interfered with, unless there be some fair ground, reasonable in and of itself, to say that there is material danger to the public health, or to the health of the employees, if the hours of labor are not curtailed. * * *

It was further urged on the argument that restricting the hours of labor in the case of bakers was valid because it tended to cleanliness on the part of the workers, as a man was more apt to be cleanly when not overworked, and if cleanly then his "output" was also more likely to be so. * * * The connection, if any exist, is too shadowy and thin to build any argument for the interference of the legislature. If the man works ten hours a day it is all right, but if ten and a half or eleven his health is in danger and his bread may be unhealthful, and, therefore, he shall not be permitted to do it. This, we think, is unreasonable and entirely arbitrary. * * * It seems to us that the real object and purpose were simply to regulate the hours of labor between the master and his employees (all being men, sui juris), in a private business, not dangerous in any degree to morals, or in any real and substantial degree to the health of the employees. Under such circumstances the freedom of master and employee to contract with each other in relation to their employment, and in defining the same, cannot be prohibited or interfered with, without violating the federal Constitution. * * *

Judgment reversed.

Mr. Justice HARLAN [with whom concurred WHITE and DAY, JJ.] dissenting: * * * I find it impossible, in view of common experience, to say that there is here no real or substantial relation between the means employed by the state and the end sought to be accomplished by its legislation. * * *

We judicially know that the question of the number of hours during which a workman should continuously labor has been, for a long period, and is yet, a subject of serious consideration among civilized peoples, and by those having special knowledge of the laws of health. Suppose the statute prohibited labor in bakery and confectionery establishments in excess of eighteen hours each day. No one, I take it, could dispute the power of the state to enact such a statute. But the statute before us does not embrace extreme or exceptional cases. It may be said to occupy a middle ground in respect of the hours of labor. What is the true ground for the state to take between legitimate protection, by legislation, of the public health and liberty of contract is not a question easily solved, nor one in respect of which there is or can be absolute certainty. There are very few, if any, questions in political economy about which entire certainty may be predicated. * * *

¹ In Low v. Rees Printing Co., 41 Neb. 127, 59 N. W. 362, 24 L. R. A. 702, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670 (1894), a general eight-hour law, applicable to most employments without regard to considerations of health was held invalid. So Opinion of Justices, 208 Mass. 619, 91 N. E. 1044, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 771 (1911) (semble).

Laws forbidding labor on Sunday, save in emergencies, are everywhere upheld. Hemmington v. Georgia, 163 F. S. 239, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, 41 L. Ed. 193 (1896); Pettit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S. 161, 20 Sup. Ct. 666, 44 L. Ed. 716 (1900).

I do not stop to consider whether any particular view of this economic question presents the sounder theory. What the precise facts are it may be difficult to say. It is enough for the determination of this case, and it is enough for this court to know, that the question is one about which there is room for debate and for an honest difference of opinion. There are many reasons of a weighty, substantial character, based upon the experience of mankind, in support of the theory that, all things considered, more than ten hours' steady work each day, from week to week, in a bakery or confectionery establishment, may endanger the health and shorten the lives of the workmen, thereby diminishing their physical and mental capacity to serve the state and to provide for those dependent upon them.

If such reasons exist that ought to be the end of this case, for the state is not amenable to the judiciary, in respect of its legislative enactments, unless such enactments are plainly, palpably, beyond all question, inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States. * * *

Mr. Justice HOLMES dissenting: I regret sincerely that I am unable to agree with the judgment in this case, and that I think it my duty to express my dissent.

This case is decided upon an economic theory which a large part of the country does not entertain. If it were a question whether I agreed with that theory, I should desire to study it further and long before making up my mind. But I do not conceive that to be my duty, because I strongly believe that my agreement or disagreement has nothing to do with the right of a majority to embody their opinions in law. It is settled by various decisions of this court that state Constitutions and state laws may regulate life in many ways which we as legislators might think as injudicious, or if you like as tyrannical, as this, and which, equally with this, interfere with the liberty to contract. Sunday laws and usury laws are ancient examples. A more modern one is the prohibition of lotteries. The liberty of the citizen to do as he likes so long as he does not interfere with the liberty of others to do the same, which has been a shibboleth for some well-known writers, is interfered with by school laws, by the post-office, by every state or municipal institution which takes his money for purposes thought desirable, whether he likes it or not.

The fourteenth amendment does not enact Mr. Herbert Spencer's Social Statics. The other day we sustained the Massachusetts vaccination law. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765. United States and state statutes and decisions cutting down the liberty to contract by way of combination are familiar to this court. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679. Two years ago we upheld the prohibition of sales of stock on margins, or for future delivery, in the Constitution of California. Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 47 L. Ed. 323. The decision sustaining an eight-hour law for miners is still recent. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780. Some of these laws embody convictions or prejudices which judges are likely to share. Some may not. But a Constitution is not intended to embody a particular economic theory, whether of paternalism and the organic relation of the citizen to the state or of laissez faire. It is made for people of fundamentally differing views, and the accident of our finding certain opinions natural and familiar, or novel, and even shocking, ought not to conclude our judgment upon the question whether statutes embodying them conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

General propositions do not decide concrete cases. The decision will depend on a judgment or intuition more subtle than any articulate major premise. But I think that the proposition just stated, if it is accepted, will carry us far toward the end. Every opinion tends to become a law. I think that the word "liberty," in the fourteenth amendment, is perverted when it is held to prevent the natural outcome of a dominant opinion, unless it can be said that a rational and fair man necessarily would admit that the statute proposed would infringe fundamental principles as they have been understood by the traditions of our people and our law. It does not need research to show that no such sweeping condemnation can be passed upon the statute before us. A reasonable man might think it a proper measure on the score of health. Men whom I certainly could not pronounce unreasonable would uphold it as a first instalment of a general regulation of the hours of work. Whether in the latter aspect it would be open to the charge of inequality I think it unnecessary to discuss.²

² In Matter of Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 103, 112-114, 50 Am. Rep. 636 (1885), the court held invalid a New York statute entitled "An act to improve the public health," etc., the material parts of which were:

"Section 1. The manufacture of cigars or preparation of tobacco in any form on any floor, or in any part of any floor, in any tenement-house is hereby prohibited, if such floor or any part of such floor is by any person occupied as a home or residence for the purpose of living, sleeping, cooking, or doing any household work therein.

"Sec. 2. Any house, building, or portion thereof occupied as the home or residence of more than three families living independently of one another, and doing their cooking upon the premises, is a tenement-house within the meaning of this act.

"Sec. 3. The first floor of said tenement-house on which there is a store for the sale of cigars and tobacco shall be exempt from the prohibition provided in section one of this act."

The act was applicable only to cities of over 500,000 inhabitants, and its violation was made a misdemeanor. Earl, J., said:

"The facts as they appeared before the police justice were as follows: The relator at the time of his arrest lived with his wife and two children in a tenement-house in the city of New York in which three other families also lived. There were four floors in the house, and seven rooms on each floor, and each floor was occupied by one family living independently of the others and doing their cooking in one of the rooms so occupied. The relator at the

ATKIN v. KANSAS (1903) 191 U. S. 207, 220, 221-223, 24 Sup. Ct. 124, 48 L. Ed. 148, Mr. Justice HARLAN (upholding a Kansas statute punishing any contractor employed upon public work who permitted his employees to labor more than eight hours a day upon such work, except where necessary to protect life or property in emergencies):

"Such corporations are the creatures—mere political subdivisions—of the state, for the purpose of exercising a part of its powers. They may exert only such powers as are expressly granted to them, or such as may be necessarily implied from those granted. What they law-time of his arrest was engaged in one of his rooms in preparing tobacco and making cigars, but there was no smell of tobacco in any part of the house except the room where he was thus engaged. * * *

"A law enacted in the exercise of the police power must in fact be a police law. If it be a law for the promotion of the public health, it must be a health law, having some relation to the public health. * * * We must take judicial notice of the nature and qualities of tobacco. * * * It has never been said, so far as we can learn, and it was not affirmed even on the argument before us, that its preparation and manufacture into cigars were dangerous to the public health. We are not aware and are not able to learn, that tobacco is even injurious to the health of those who deal in it, or are engaged in its production or manufacture. We certainly know enough about it to be sure that its manipulation in one room can produce no harm to the health of the occupants of other rooms in the same house. It was proved in this case that the odor of the tobacco did not extend to any of the other rooms of the tenement-house. * * *

"To justify this law it would not be sufficient that the use of tobacco may be injurious to some persons, or that its manipulation may be injurious to those who are engaged in its preparation and manufacture; but it would have to be injurious to the public health. This law was not intended to protect the health of those engaged in cigarmaking, as they are allowed to manufacture cigars everywhere except in the forbidden tenement-houses. It cannot be perceived how the cigarmaker is to be improved in his health or his morals by forcing him from his home and its hallowed associations and beneficent influences, to ply his trade elsewhere. It was not intended to protect the health of that portion of the public not residing in the forbidden tenement-houses, as cigars are allowed to be manufactured in private houses, in large factories and shops in the two crowded cities, and in all other parts of the state. What possible relation can cigarmaking in any building have to the health of the general public? Nor was it intended to improve or protect the health of the occupants of tenement-houses. If there are but three families in the tenement-house, however numerous and gregarious their members may be, the manufacture is not forbidden; and it matters not how large the number of the occupants may be if they are not divided into more than three families living and cooking independently. If a store is kept for the sale of cigars on the first floor of one of these houses, and thus more tobacco is kept there than would otherwise be, and the baneful influence of tobacco, if any, is thus increased, that floor, however numerous its occupants, or the occupants of the house, is exempt from the operation of the act. What possible relation to the health of the occupants of a large tenement-house could cigarmaking in one of its remote rooms have? If the legislature had in mind the protection of the occupants of tenement-houses, why was the act confined in its operation to the two cities only? It is plain that this is not a health law, and that it has no relation whatever to the public health."

For the limitations upon legislative power to regulate tenement and boarding houses, see Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 116 N. W. 885, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1061 (1908).

fully do of a public character is done under the sanction of the state. They are, in every essential sense, only auxiliaries of the state for the purposes of local government. * * *

"The improvement of the boulevard in question was a work of which the state, if it had deemed it proper to do so, could have taken immediate charge by its own agents; for it is one of the functions of government to provide public highways for the convenience and comfort of the people. Instead of undertaking that work directly, the state invested one of its governmental agencies with power to care for it. Whether done by the state directly or by one of its instrumentalities, the work was of a public, not private character.

"If then, the work upon which the defendant employed Reese was of a public character, it necessarily follows that the statute in question, in its application to those undertaking work for or on behalf of a municipal corporation of the state, does not infringe the personal liberty of any one. It may be that the state, in enacting the statute, intended to give its sanction to the view held by many, that, all things considered, the general welfare of employees, mechanics, and workmen, upon whom rest a portion of the burdens of government, will be subserved if labor performed for eight continuous hours was taken to be a full day's work; that the restriction of a day's work to that number of hours would promote morality, improve the physical and intellectual condition of laborers and workmen, and enable them, the better to discharge the duties appertaining to citizenship.

"We have no occasion here to consider these questions, or to determine upon which side is the sounder reason; for whatever may have been the motives controlling the enactment of the statute in question, we can imagine no possible ground to dispute the power of the state to declare that no one undertaking work for it or for one of its municipal agencies should permit or require an employee on such work to labor in excess of eight hours each day, and to inflict punishment upon those who are embraced by such regulations and yet disregard them. It cannot be deemed a part of the liberty of any contractor that he be allowed to do public work in any mode he may choose to adopt, without regard to the wishes of the state. On the contrary, it belongs to the state, as the guardian and trustee for its people, and having control of its affairs, to prescribe the conditions upon which it will permit public work to be done on its behalf, or on behalf of its municipalities. No court has authority to review its action in that respect. Regulations on this subject suggest only considerations of public policy. And with such considerations the courts have no concern.

"If it be contended to be the right of every one to dispose of his labor upon such terms as he deems best,—as undoubtedly it is,—and that to make it a criminal offense for a contractor for public work to permit or require his employee to perform labor upon that work in excess of eight hours each day is in derogation of the liberty both of employees and employer, it is sufficient to answer that no employee is entitled, of absolute right and as a part of his liberty, to perform labor for the state; and no contractor for public work can excuse a violation of his agreement with the state by doing that which the statute under which he proceeds distinctly and lawfully forbids him to do. * * *

"Some stress is laid on the fact stipulated by the parties for the purposes of this case, that the work performed by defendant's employee is not dangerous to life, limb, or health, and that daily labor on it for ten hours would not be injurious to him in any way. In the view we take of this case, such considerations are not controlling. We rest our decision upon the broad ground that the work being of a public character, absolutely under the control of the state and its municipal agents acting by its authority, it is for the state to prescribe the conditions under which it will permit work of that kind to be done. Its action touching such a matter is final so long as it does not, by its regulations, infringe the personal rights of others; and that has not been done."¹

[FULLER, C. J., and BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissented.]

McLEAN v. ARKANSAS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1909. 211 U. S. 539, 29 Sup. Ct. 206, 53 L. Ed. 315.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Arkansas. A statute criminally forbade the operator of any coal mine employing at least ten men underground, whose miners were paid at quantity rates, from using screens or other devices to reduce the amount of wages that would be due on the basis of the weight of coal actually mined and accepted by the operator. A state Circuit Court convicted McLean, an agent of such a coal company, for violating this statute, and the state Supreme Court affirmed this.]

Mr. Justice DAY. * * * That the Constitution of the United States, in the fourteenth amendment thereof, protects the right to make contracts for the sale of labor, and the right to carry on trade or business, against hostile state legislation, has been affirmed in decisions of this court, and we have no disposition to question those cases in which the right has been upheld and maintained against such legislation. Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764. But, in many cases in this court, the right of freedom of contract has been held not to be unlimited in its nature, and when the right to contract or carry on business conflicts with laws declaring the public policy of the state, enacted for the protection of the public health, safety, or welfare, the same may be valid, notwithstanding they have the effect to curtail or limit the freedom of contract. * * *

¹ Contra: See People v. Orange County Road Const. Co., 175 N. Y. 84, 67 N. E. 129, 65 L. R. A. 33 (1903); People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 59 N. E. 716, 52 L. R. A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605 (1901) (rate of wages)—both overruled by constitutional amendment; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 85 N. E. 1070, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201 (1908). The cases accord and contra are collected in 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 131-134. See the argument of Cullen, C. J., in People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 425-428, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39 (1904). See, also, Adams v. Brennan, post, p. 411.

Atkin v. Kansas was followed in Ellis v. United States, 206 U. S. 246, 27 Sup. Ct. 600, 51 L. Ed. 1047, 11 Ann. Cas. 589 (1907), as to the exercise of a similar power by the United States. See note, p. 963, post.

In Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13, 22 Sup. Ct. 1, 46 L. Ed. 55, it was held that an act of the legislature of Tennessee, requiring the redemption in cash of store orders or other evidences of indebtedness issued by employers in payment of wages due to employees, did not conflict with any provisions of the Constitution of the United States, protecting the right of contract.¹ In Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. Ed. 657, the act of Congress prohibiting attorneys from contracting for a larger fee than $10 for prosecuting pension claims was held to be a valid exercise of police power. * * * In Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 23 Sup. Ct. 821, 47 L. Ed. 1002, this court held that an act of Congress making it a misdemeanor for a shipmaster to pay a sailor any part of his wages in advance was valid. * * *

The legislature, being familiar with local conditions, is, primarily, the judge of the necessity of such enactments. The mere fact that a court may differ with the legislature in its views of public policy, or that judges may hold views inconsistent with the propriety of the legislation in question, affords no ground for judicial interference, unless the act in question is unmistakably and palpably in excess of legislative power. * * * This law does not prevent the operator from screening the coal before it is sent to market; it does not prevent a contract for mining coal by the day, week, or month; it does not prevent the operator from rejecting coal improperly or negligently mined, and shown to be unduly mingled with dirt or refuse. The objection upon the ground of interference with the right of contract rests upon the inhibition of contracts which prevent the miner employed at quantity rates from contracting for wages upon the basis of screened coal instead of the weight of the coal as originally produced in the mine.

If there existed a condition of affairs concerning which the legislature of the state, exercising its conceded right to enact laws for the protection of the health, safety, or welfare of the people, might pass the law, it must be sustained; if such action was arbitrary interference with the right to contract or carry on business, and having no just relation to the protection of the public within the scope of legislative power, the act must fail. * * * [Here are mentioned Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 32 N. E. 364, 17 L. R. A. 853, and In re House Bill No. 203, 21 Colo. 27, 39 Pac. 431, holding such legislation invalid, and State v. Peel Splint Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385, maintaining it by a divided court.]

¹ Compare Jordan v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 531, 103 S. W. 633, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603, 14 Ann. Cas. 616 (1907) (penal prohibition of issue of store orders even at employee's option, invalid—collecting cases).

Conditions which may have led to such legislation were the subject of very full investigation by the industrial commission authorized by Congress by the act of June 18, 1898. * * * A number of the witnesses expressed opinions, based upon their experience in the mining industry, that disputes concerning the introduction and use of screens had led to frequent and sometimes heated controversies between the operators and the miners. This condition was testified to have been the result, not only of the introduction of screens as a basis of paying the miners for screened coal only, but, after the screens had been introduced, differences had arisen because of the disarrangement of the parts of the screen, resulting in weakening it, or in increasing the size of the meshes through which the coal passed, thereby preventing a correct measurement of the coal as the basis of paying the miner's wages.

We are unable to say, in the light of the conditions shown in the public inquiry referred to, and in the necessity for such laws, evinced in the enactments of the legislatures of various states, that this law had no reasonable relation to the protection of a large class of laborers in the receipt of their just dues and in the promotion of the harmonious relations of capital and labor engaged in a great industry in the state.

Laws tending to prevent fraud and to require honest weights and measures in the transaction of business have frequently been sustained in the courts, although, in compelling certain modes of dealing, they interfere with the freedom of contract. Many cases are collected in Mr. Freund's book on "Police Power" (section 274), wherein that author refers to laws which have been sustained, regulating the size of loaves of bread when sold in the market;² requiring the sale of coal in quantities of 500 pounds or more, by weight; that milk shall be sold in wine measure, and kindred enactments.

Upon this branch of the case it is argued for the validity of this law that its tendency is to require the miner to be honestly paid for the coal actually mined and sold. It is insisted that the miner is deprived of a portion of his just due when paid upon the basis of screened coal, because, while the price may be higher, and theoretically he may be compensated for all the coal mined in the price paid him for screened coal, that practically, owing to the manner of the operation of the screen itself, and its different operation when differently adjusted, or when out of order, the miner is deprived of payment for the coal which he has actually mined. It is not denied that the coal which passes through the screen is sold in the market. It is not for us to say whether these are actual conditions. It is sufficient to say that it was a situation brought to the attention of the legislature, concerning which it was entitled to judge and act for itself in the exercise of its lawful power to pass remedial legislation. * * *

² Accord: City of Chicago v. Schmidinger, 243 Ill. 167, 90 N. E. 369, 17 Ann. Cas. 614 (1909), affirmed Schmidinger v. City of Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 33 Sup. Ct. 182, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

Judgment affirmed.³

[BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissented.]

FROST v. CHICAGO (1899) 178 Ill. 250, 251-253, 52 N. E. 869, 49 L. R. A. 657, 69 Am. St. Rep. 301, Mr. Chief Justice CARTER:

"Plaintiff in error was found guilty in the court below of violating an ordinance of the city of Chicago, and fined $15 and costs. The ordinance provided:

"Sec. 1000. Colored Netting for Covering.—It shall be and is hereby made unlawful to cover any box, basket, or any other package or parcel of fruit, berries or vegetables of any kind, with any colored netting, or any other material which has a tendency to conceal the true color or quality of any such goods which may be sold, offered for sale or had in possession for the purpose of being sold or offered for sale. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $10 or more than $25 for each offense."

"The testimony tended to show that the defendant below sold peaches in baskets covered with red tarlatan,—a perforated cloth,—and that these baskets of peaches had been shipped to him from the state of Michigan, put up in the same manner in which he sold them. There was some evidence to the effect that this colored netting tended to conceal the 'true color or quality' of the fruit, and some to the con-

³ As to validity of statutes requiring weekly or biweekly payment of wages, see Opinion of Justices, 163 Mass. 589, 40 N. E. 713, 28 L. R. A. 344 (1895); New York Cent. & H. R. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 199 N. Y. 108, 92 N. E. 404, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, note, 139 Am. St. Rep. 850 (1910).

In State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 329, 330, 22 S. W. 350, 356, 21 L. R. A. 780 (1893), Barclay, J., dissenting, said (discussing a Missouri statute forbidding persons engaged in manufacturing or mining to issue any "store orders" in payment of wages unless redeemable in cash at the option of the holder): "[The] decisions show that the right of self-preservation, which exists in the commonwealth no less than in the individual, may, in some circumstances, justify limitations upon freedom of contract; and that when, for any reason (for instance, the existence of a monopoly), real liberty of action is wanting on the side of one of the parties, in dealings forming part of the activities of civilized society, a reasonable check may justly be placed by law upon the power of the other to oppress his fellow-citizen. Such checks upon liberty of contract have been sustained by the highest courts. * * * As the employer fixes the price of the goods, he is not prejudiced by such a regulation. Its effect is to establish a just standard of value for every dollar due for wages. It does not differ in principle from governmental regulations in the form of laws by which a person who has contracted to receive a yard of cloth or a bushel of corn is protected against the necessity of accepting such a short yard or light bushel as the seller may choose to impose upon him. Statutes designed to prevent that sort of overreaching have been universally regarded as proper exertions of the police power."

trary. It appears from the record that large quantities of fruit put up in this manner are shipped and sold; that a covering of some kind is necessary to prevent loss of the fruit by pilfering and other means, and to protect it from insects; that such fruit requires ventilation; and that experience has demonstrated that a covering of netting is better than one of wood, paper, or other material, because it allows free access of air, does not bruise the fruit, and affords better means of inspection. * * *

"We have reached the conclusion that the ordinance is a vexatious and unreasonable interference with and restriction upon the rights of dealers in certain articles of trade and commerce. The only valid basis upon which such a regulation can rest is that its purpose is to prevent deception, and imposition upon buyers of such articles as are named in the ordinance. The evidence shows, as common observation would teach, that such packages must have some covering, and shows, also, that tarlatan has been found the best and most suitable covering for the preservation of fruit so packed and sold; and the validity of the ordinance is made to depend, and indeed its validity is defended only, upon the question of the color of the material. It is not pretended that there is anything in red tarlatan which is deleterious to health, or which imparts to the fruit any noxious material or quality, but only that it tends to impart to the fruit beneath a more wholesome tint or appearance than it would otherwise have.

"It is natural, and not unlawful, for the packer and dealer to put up and offer for sale his goods in an attractive form; and a regulation would not seem to be reasonable which would prevent the dealer in certain commodities from offering for sale his goods in packages tinted so as to correspond in some degree with the color of the goods themselves. No buyer who is ordinarily careful and intelligent is deceived by such devices of tradesmen. He may examine what he buys, and no law can protect him from the consequences arising only from his own folly. At most, the colored netting would tend to conceal the true color or quality of only the top layer of the fruit in the package, leaving the same latitude for deception as in cases where no covering is used. It will be noticed that the provision in question of the ordinance does not make it unlawful to sell decayed or unwholesome fruit, or to practice deception on the public by methods employed in packing or displaying it. * * * It was shown, and is a matter of common knowledge, that much fruit is shipped and sold wrapped up in tissue paper and in tinfoil, and in packages and baskets covered with wood, all of which material effectually conceals the 'true color and quality' of the fruit, until removed. It would be as reasonable to prohibit the one as the other."

Judgment reversed.¹

¹ In People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 9, 51 N. E. 257, 259, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736 (1898), holding invalid a law requiring the labeling of all convict-made goods, O'Brien, J., said (in an individual opinion): "It would

STATE v. SHOREY (1906) 48 Or. 396, 398-400, 86 Pac. 881, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1121, BEAN, J. (upholding a statute forbidding the employment of children under 16 years of age for more than 10 hours a day or 6 days a week. This was claimed to violate the fourteenth amendment and the state Constitution):

"These constitutional provisions do not limit the power of the state to interfere with the parental control of minors, or to regulate the right of a minor to contract, or of others to contract with him. 2 Tiedeman on State & Fed. Const. § 195. It is competent for the state to forbid the employment of children in certain callings merely because it believes such prohibition to be for their best interest, although the prohibited employment does not involve a direct danger to morals, decency, or of life or limb. Such legislation is not an unlawful interference with the parents' control over the child or right to its labor, nor with the liberty of the child. People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 36 N. E. 4, 25 L. R. A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 788, affirming In re Ewer, 70 Hun. 239, 24 N. Y. Supp. 500. Laws prohibiting the employment of adult males for more than a stated number of hours per day or week are not valid unless reasonably necessary to protect the public be trifling with the constitution to attempt to uphold this law on the ground that all producers or vendors of goods may be required to tell the truth concerning them, both as to their quality and the means by which or the place where they were manufactured. A knowledge of the truth concerning the origin of every article of property which is the subject of sale, trade, or commerce cannot be essential to the public welfare; and, even if it was, the law could be effective only when applied to all property alike, and not limited to articles made in certain places, and by a certain class of workmen. Any attempt to carry the police power to such an extent as to require the owner of an article of property kept for sale, such as a scrubbing brush, to label it with the history of its origin, and to indicate the place where it was made, and the class of workmen that produced it, and to enforce such regulations by the aid of the criminal law must be regarded as an inexcusable and intolerable invasion of the rights and liberty of the citizen." [A majority of the court concurred upon the ground of the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. See, also, Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 605, 98 N. E. 334, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 815 (1912).]

Parker, C. J. (with whom concurred Bartlett and Haight, JJ.) dissenting (157 N. Y. 28, 29, 51 N. E. 266 [42 L. R. A. 499, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736]): "The people of the state have forbidden the selling of articles manufactured in our prisons, for the reason that they deemed it to be against a sound public policy to permit some of the citizens of the state skilled in certain kinds of labor to be subjected to competition with the unpaid labor of convicts. * * * This statute neither prohibits nor attempts to prohibit other states, or the citizens of other states, from putting prison-made goods upon our markets; nor does it prohibit our own citizens from buying or selling them. If it did, then, concededly, the statute would be in violation of the commerce clause of the federal constitution, and void. It simply requires that prison-made merchandise shall be so branded that our citizens shall know where the goods they are buying were made. This they have a right to know, for they voted to burden themselves with additional taxation rather than longer to permit a competition which they regarded as a public wrong, and they are, therefore, entitled to such legislation as will permit them to know the truth in regard to articles offered them for sale, in order that they may not, through lack of information, have forced upon them that which they would not buy advisedly."

health, safety, morals or general welfare, because the right to labor or employ labor on such terms as may be agreed upon is a liberty or property right guaranteed to such persons by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and with which the state cannot interfere. Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133. But laws regulating the right of minors to contract do not come within this principle. They are not sui juris, and can only contract to a limited extent. They are wards of the state and subject to its control. As to them the state stands in the position of parens patriæ and may exercise unlimited supervision and control over their contracts, occupation, and conduct, and the liberty and right of those who assume to deal with them. This is a power which inheres in the government for its own preservation and for the protection of the life, person, health, and morals of its future citizens. 'It has been well remarked,' says Mr. Justice Gray in People v. Ewer, supra, 'that the better organized and trained the race, the better it is prepared for holding its own. Hence it is that laws are enacted looking to the compulsory education by parents of their children, and to their punishment for cruel treatment; and which limit and regulate the employment of children in the factory and the workshop to prevent injury from excessive labor. It is not, and cannot be disputed, that the interest which the state has in the physical, moral, and intellectual well-being of its members warrants the implication, and the exercise, of every just power, which will result in preparing the child, in future life, to support itself, to serve the state and in all the relations and duties of adult life to perform well and capably its part.'

"The supervision and control of minors is a subject which has always been regarded as within the province of legislative authority. How far it shall be exercised is a question of expediency and propriety which it is the sole province of the Legislature to determine. The judiciary has no authority to interfere with the Legislature's judgment on that subject, unless, perhaps, its enactments are so manifestly unreasonable and arbitrary as to be invalid on that account. * * * Mr. Freund, in his work on Police Power, says: 'The constitutionality of legislation for the protection of children or minors is rarely questioned; and the Legislature is conceded a wide discretion in creating restraints.' And: 'Even the courts which take a very liberal view of individual liberty and are inclined to condemn paternal legislation would concede that such paternal control may be exercised over children, so especially in the choice of occupations, hours of labor, payment of wages, and everything pertaining to education, and in these matters a wide and constantly expanding legislative activity is exercised.' Freund, Police Power, § 259."¹

¹ Accord: People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 36 N. E. 4, 25 L. R. A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 788 (1894) (employment of children under 14 in theatrical exhibitions, etc.).

In re SHARP.

(Supreme Court of Idaho, 1905. 15 Idaho, 120, 96 Pac. 563, 18 L. R. A. [N. S.] 884.)

[Habeas corpus. An Idaho statute (Laws 1905, p. 106) provided for the detention and care of delinquent children at a state industrial training school. Hazel Sharp, a girl 14 years old, was committed to this institution by a county probate judge under this act, no irregularity being alleged in the proceedings. Her father applied for a writ of habeas corpus for her discharge, alleging the act to be unconstitutional upon the grounds, among others, stated in the opinion.]

AILSHIE, C. J. * * * The first contention made by petitioner's counsel is that the act of March 2, 1905, entitled "An act to provide for the care of delinquent children" (Sess. Laws 1905, p. 106), is in conflict with and in violation of sections 6, 7, 13, and 18, of article 1 of the Constitution, for the reason that it denies the right of trial by jury, speedy and public hearing, process for attendance of witnesses, the right to appear and defend in person and by counsel, and the right of bail, and that the proceeding is without due process of law. We shall not go into a discussion of this question, or into any extended consideration of the distinction between this act and its purposes and provisions and that of the general spirit of the criminal law. These questions have all been so extensively, exhaustively, and lucidly considered and discussed by so many courts within recent years that we shall content ourselves with a citation of some of the authorities. We may premise our citation of authorities, however, by a general statement that this statute is clearly not a criminal or penal statute in its nature. Its purpose is rather to prevent minors under the age of 16 from prosecution and conviction on charges of misdemeanors, and in that respect to relieve them from the odium of criminal prosecutions and punishments. Its object is to confer a benefit both upon the child and the community in the way of surrounding the child with better and more elevating influences, and of educating and training him in the direction of good citizenship and thereby saving him to society and adding a good and useful citizen to the community. This, too, is done for the minor at a time when he is not entitled, either by natural law or the laws of the land, to his absolute freedom, but rather at a time when he is subject to the restraint and custody of either a natural guardian or a legally constituted and appointed guardian to whom he owes obedience and subjection. Under this law the state, for the time being, assumes to discharge the parental duty and to direct his custody and assume his restraint.

As late as 1905, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth v. Fisher, 213 Pa. 48, 62 Atl. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 92, had under consideration these same constitutional objections to a legislative act providing for the care and custody of delinquent children, and, in the course of its opinion, the court said: "In pressing the objection that the appellant was not taken into custody by due process of law, the assumption, running through the entire argument of the appellant, is contended that the proceedings of the act of 1903 are of a criminal nature for the punishment of offenders for crimes committed, and that the appellant was so punished. But he was not, and he could not have been without due process of law; for the constitutional guaranty is that no one charged with a criminal offense shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. To save a child from becoming a criminal, or from continuing in a career of crime, to end in maturer years in public punishment and disgrace, the Legislature surely may provide for the salvation of such a child, if its parents or guardian be unable or unwilling to do so, by bringing it into one of the courts of the state without any process at all, for the purpose of subjecting it to the state's guardianship and protection. The natural parent needs no process to temporarily deprive his child of its liberty by confining it in his own home, to save it and to shield it from the consequences of persistence in a career of waywardness; nor is the state, when compelled, as parens patriæ, to take the place of the father for the same purpose, required to adopt any process as a means of placing its hands upon the child to lead it into one of its courts. When the child gets there, and the court, with the power to save it, determines on its salvation, and not its punishment, it is immaterial how it got there. The act simply provides how children who ought to be saved may reach the court to be saved. If experience should show that there ought to be other ways for it to get there, the Legislature can, and undoubtedly will, adopt them, and they will never be regarded as undue processes for depriving a child of its liberty or property as a penalty for crime committed. The last reason to be noticed why the act should be declared unconstitutional is that it denies the appellant a trial by jury. Here again, is the fallacy that he was tried by the court for any offense. 'The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate' are the words of the Bill of Rights, and no act of the Legislature can deny this right to any citizen, young or old, minor or adult, if he is to be tried for a crime against the commonwealth. But there was no trial for any crime here, and the act is operative only when there is to be no trial." ¹ * * *

[Here follow the citation of numerous cases and this quotation from Milwaukee Industrial School v. Supervisors, 40 Wis. 328, 22 Am. Rep. 702:] "When the state, as parens patriæ, is compelled by the misfortune of a child to assume for it parental duty, and to charge itself with its nurture, it is compelled also to assume parental authority over it. This authority must necessarily be delegated to those to whom the state delegates the nurture and education of the child. The state does not, indeed, we might say, could not, intrude this assumption of authority between parent and child standing in no need of it. It assumes it only upon the destitution and necessity of the child, arising from want or default of parents. And, in exercising a wholesome parental restraint over the child, it can be properly said to imprison the child no more than the tenderest parent exercising like power of restraint over children. This seems too plain to need authority; but the cases cited for the respondent, and others, amply sustain our view. * * * It goes on the total failure of the parent to provide for the child. And it is difficult to comprehend the right of a parent to complain that the discharge by the state of his own duty to his child, which he has wholly failed to perform, is an imprisonment of the child as against his parental right in it."

¹ If the act purports to authorize the criminal punishment of the child, as by imposing a fine, it must conform to the appropriate constitutional provisions regarding criminal trials. Robison v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 151 Mich. 315, 115 N. W. 682 (1908).

Although a child is in the care and custody of its parents, still the state assumes direction and control of its education to the extent of making its attendance upon the public schools compulsory, and that power is now recognized in almost every state in the Union. In the exercise of this supervision and control on the part of the state, the child is not deprived of any constitutional or inalienable right, nor is the parent deprived of any right. On the contrary, the state is only demanding and enforcing obedience to both the natural duties and obligations of the parent or guardian as well as the legal duties and obligations demanded by society and the public welfare. It would be carrying the protection of "inalienable rights," guaranteed by the Constitution, a long way to say that that guaranty extends to a free and unlimited exercise of the whims, caprices, or proclivities of either a child or its parents or guardians for idleness, ignorance, crime, indigence, or any kindred dispositions or inclinations. * * *

Writ denied.²

² "All the decisions rest upon the proposition that the state in its sovereign power has the right, when necessary, to substitute itself as guardian of the person of the child for that of the parent or other legal guardian, and thus to educate and save the child from a criminal career; that it is the welfare of the child that moves the state to act, and not to inflict punishment or to mete out retributive justice for any offense committed or threatened. In other words, to do that which it is the duty of the father or guardian to do, and which the law assumes he will do by reason of the love and affection he holds for his offspring and out of regard for the child's future welfare. The duty thus rests upon the father first. As the duty is imposed by the moral as well as the laws of society upon the father first, so it must likewise logically follow that he must be given the first right to discharge that duty. Indeed, the common law based the right of the father to have custody and dominion over the person of his child upon the ground that he might better discharge the duty he owed the child and the state in respect to the care, nurture, and education of the child. The right and duty are therefore, reciprocal, and may be termed natural, as well as legal and moral. Before the state can be substituted to the right of the parent it must affirmatively be made to appear

MAYNARD v. HILL.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1888. 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654.)

[Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Washington. The case involved the validity of a legislative divorce granted by special act of the legislature of the territory of Oregon in 1852, which was upheld in the courts below. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice FIELD. * * * Marriage, as creating the most important relation in life, as having more to do with the morals and civilization of a people than any other institution, has always been subject to the control of the legislature. That body prescribes the age at which parties may contract to marry, the procedure or form essential to constitute marriage, the duties and obligations it creates, its effect upon the property rights of both, present and prospective, and the acts which may constitute grounds for its dissolution.

It is conceded that to determine the propriety of dissolving the marriage relation may involve investigations of a judicial nature, which can properly be conducted by the judicial tribunals. Yet, such investigations are no more than those usually made when a change of the law is designed. They do not render the enactment, which follows the information obtained, void as a judicial act because it may recite the cause of its passage. Many causes may arise, physical, moral, and intellectual, such as the contracting by one of the parties of an incurable disease like leprosy, or confirmed insanity, or hopeless idiocy, that the parent has forfeited his natural and legal right to the custody and control of the child by reason of his failure, inability, neglect, or incompetency to discharge the duty and thus to enjoy the right. Section 6 of the act defines the acts which constitute a child a delinquent and thus a fit subject to be brought before the juvenile court for examination. * * * When a complaint is filed and one or more of the acts constituting delinquency are set forth the court only acquires jurisdiction of the child for the purpose of investigating into its condition or conduct. * * * But when the court has investigated the matters set forth in the complaint and finds some or all of the charges to be true, it does not follow, from that fact alone, that the state should forthwith be substituted in place of the parent or legal guardian and take full control of the person of the child. All that the court has established so far is that the child is a delinquent in view of the provisions of the act. The question as to whether the parent has been derelict in respect to his duty, or whether he is a competent person or not to have charge of the child, and whether he has forfeited his natural and legal right to continue the relation, has not been touched upon, and no finding or adjudication of that fact has been made. There is nothing, therefore, up to this point, in the proceedings upon which a judgment can be based substituting the state as guardian of the person of the child in place of the parent. The whole fabric of the law, as is clearly shown by all the decisions cited, supra, rests upon this theory, and those laws are sustained by virtue of it. Until something is made to appear that the child is not cared and provided for in respect to the matters involved, there exists no reason for the state to take charge of the person of the child, and hence no right exists to do so under the act. True, the parent need not be made a party to, or even have notice of, the proceedings against the child. The parent is not bound by the judgment against the child, and may at any time institute proper proceedings to obtain custody of him. But

or a conviction of a felony, which would render the continuance of the marriage relation intolerable to the other party, and productive of no possible benefit to society. When the object of the relation has been thus defeated, and no jurisdiction is vested in the judicial tribunals to grant a divorce, it is not perceived that any principle should prevent the legislature itself from interfering, and putting an end to the relation in the interest of the parties as well as of society. If the act declaring the divorce should attempt to interfere with the rights of property vested in either party, a different question would be presented.

When this country was settled, the power to grant a divorce from the bonds of matrimony was exercised by the parliament of England. The ecclesiastical courts of that country were limited to the granting of divorces from bed and board. Naturally, the legislative assemblies of the colonies followed the example of parliament and treated the subject as one within their province. And, until a recent period, legislative divorces have been granted with few exceptions, in all the states. * * * [Here follow extracts from Bishop, Cooley, and Kent, and quotations from Cronise v. Cronise, 54 Pa. 255, Crane v. Meginnis, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 463, 19 Am. Dec. 237, and Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 541.]

The same doctrine is declared in numerous other cases, and positions similar to those taken against the validity of the act of the legislative assembly of the territory, that it was beyond the competency of a legislature to dissolve the bonds of matrimony, have been held untenable. These decisions justify the conclusion that the division of government the matter now under consideration lies deeper than this; it is one of power to render judgment placing the child in charge of one guardian, the state, before determining or passing upon the qualifications of the natural guardian to have charge of the child. The court might as well enter up a judgment without any complaint or investigation whatever. The relative rights and duties of the father or mother are so well and thoroughly discussed in the case of Nugent v. Powell, 4 Wyo., at pages 189 to 199, 33 Pac. 23, 20 L. R. A. 199, 62 Am. St. Rep. 17, that we shall do no more than to refer to the discussion there presented. * * * Some of the acts constituting delinquency as defined by section 6 of the act are so trivial in themselves that any thoughtless boy might commit them and thus be adjudged a delinquent and by a careless judge be sent to the industrial school when the parent was not only willing, but most competent, to have control of the child, and would offer it better surroundings and training than the state at best could give or afford. We are constrained to hold, therefore, that before a child can be made a ward of the state, at least two things must be found: (1) That the child is a delinquent within the provisions of chapter 117; and (2) that the parent or legal guardian is incompetent or has neglected and failed to care and provide for the child the training and education contemplated and required by both law and morals.—Mill v. Brown, 31 Utah, 475, 482-485, 88 Pac. 609, 120 Am. St. Rep. 935 (1907), by Frick, J.

See "The Juvenile Court," by Hon. Julian W. Mack, 23 Harv. L. Rev. 101.

The legislature may, either by special or general acts, authorize the sale of property owned by minors or other persons (e. g., insane) under disabilities. Rice v. Parkman, 16 Mass. 326 (1820). Compare Brevoort v. Grace, 55 N. Y. 245 (1873), and the measure of legislative control exercised over the contracts of sailors. Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 23 Sup. Ct. 821, 47 L. Ed. 1002 (1903).

into three departments, and the implied inhibition through that cause upon the legislative department to exercise judicial functions, was neither intended nor understood to exclude legislative control over the marriage relation. In most of the states the same legislative practice on the subject has prevailed since the adoption of their Constitutions as before, which, as Mr. Bishop observes, may be regarded as a contemporaneous construction that the power thus exercised for many years was rightly exercised. The adoption of late years, in many constitutions, of provisions prohibiting legislative divorces would also indicate a general conviction that, without this prohibition, such divorces might be granted, notwithstanding the separation of the powers of government into departments, by which judicial functions are excluded from the legislative department. There are, it is true, decisions of state courts of high character, like the supreme court of Massachusetts and of Missouri, holding differently; some of which were controlled by the peculiar language of their state constitutions. Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 116 Mass. 315; State v. Fry, 4 Mo. 120, 138. The weight of authority, however, is decidedly in favor of the position that, in the absence of direct prohibition, the power over divorces remains with the legislature.

We are therefore justified in holding—more, we are compelled to hold,—that the granting of divorces was a rightful subject of legislation according to the prevailing judicial opinion of the country, and the understanding of the profession at the time the organic act of Oregon was passed by congress, when either of the parties divorced was at the time a resident within the territorial jurisdiction of the legislature. If within the competency of the legislative assembly of the territory, we cannot inquire into its motives in passing the act granting the divorce; its will was a sufficient reason for its action. One of the parties, the husband, was a resident within the territory, and, as he acted soon afterwards upon the dissolution and married again, we may conclude that the act was passed upon his petition. If the assembly possessed the power to grant a divorce in any case, its jurisdiction to legislate upon his status, he being a resident of the territory is undoubted, unless the marriage was a contract within the prohibition of the federal Constitution against its impairment by legislation, or within the terms of the Ordinance of 1787, the privileges of which were secured to the inhabitants of Oregon by their organic act,—questions which we will presently consider.

The facts alleged in the bill of complaint, that no cause existed for the divorce, and that it was obtained without the knowledge of the wife, cannot affect the validity of the act. Knowledge or ignorance of parties of intended legislation does not affect its validity, if within the competency of the legislature. The facts mentioned as to the neglect of the husband to send to his wife, whom he left in Ohio, any means for her support or that of her children, in disregard of his promise, shows conduct meriting the strongest reprobation, and, if the facts stated had been brought to the attention of congress, that body might and probably would have annulled the act. Be that as it may, the loose morals and shameless conduct of the husband can have no bearing upon the question of the existence or absence of power in the assembly to pass the act. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

GOULD v. GOULD (1905) 78 Conn. 242, 243, 245, 265, 266, 267, 61 Atl. 604, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531, BALDWIN, J. (upholding a statute forbidding the intermarriage or cohabitation of a man and woman, either of whom was epileptic, imbecile, or feeble-minded, when the woman was under 45. The precise question was its validity as to epileptics):

"The Constitution of this state (preamble and article 1, § 1) guarantees to its people equality under the law in the rights to 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 489, 491, 33 Atl. 519, 31 L. R. A. 55, 48 Am. St. Rep. 227. One of these is the right to contract marriage, but it is a right that can only be exercised under such reasonable conditions as the Legislature may see fit to impose. It is not possessed by those below a certain age. It is denied to those who stand within certain degrees of kinship. The mode of celebrating it is prescribed in strict and exclusive terms. Gen. St. 1902, § 4538. The universal prohibition in all civilized countries of marriages between near kindred proceeds in part from the established fact that the issue of such marriages are often, though by no means always, of an inferior type of physical or mental development.

"That epilepsy is a disease of a peculiarly serious and revolting character, tending to weaken mental force, and often descending from parent to child, or entailing upon the offspring of the sufferer some other grave form of nervous malady, is a matter of common knowledge, of which courts will take judicial notice. State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 135, 37 Atl. 80, 36 L. R. A. 623, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30. One mode of guarding against the perpetuation of epilepsy obviously is to forbid sexual intercourse with those afflicted by it, and to preclude such opportunities for sexual intercourse as marriage furnishes. To impose such a restriction upon the right to contract marriage, if not intrinsically unreasonable, is no invasion of the equality of all men before the law, if it applies equally to all, under the same circumstances, who belong to a certain class of persons, which class can reasonably be regarded as one requiring special legislation either for their protection or for the protection from them of the community at large. It cannot be pronounced by the judiciary to be intrinsically unreasonable if it should be regarded as a determination by the General Assembly that a law of this kind is necessary for the preservation of public health, and if there are substantial grounds for believing that such determination is supported by the facts upon which it is apparent that it was based. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 398, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 192, 32 Atl. 348, 29 L. R. A. 251.

¹ Legislative divorces are now forbidden by many state constitutions. See Stinson, Fed. and State Consts. bk. 111, §§ 395, 430.

"There can be no doubt as to the opinion of the General Assembly, nor as to its resting on substantial foundations. The class of persons to whom the statute applies is not one arbitrarily formed to suit its purpose. It is certain and definite. It is a class capable of endangering the health of families and adding greatly to the sum of human suffering. Between the members of this class there is no discrimination, and the prohibitions of the statute cease to operate when, by the attainment of a certain age by one of those whom it affects, the occasion for the restriction is deemed to become less imperative. While Connecticut was the pioneer in this country with respect to legislation of this character, it no longer stands alone. Michigan, Minnesota, Kansas, and Ohio have, since 1895, acted in the same direction. 2 Howard on Matrimonial Institutions, 400, 479, 480; Sess. Laws Ohio, 1904, p. 83. Laws of this kind may be regarded as an expression of the conviction of modern society that disease is largely preventable by proper precautions, and that it is not unjust in certain cases to require the observation of these, even at the cost of narrowing what in former days was regarded as the proper domain of individual right. It follows that the statute in question was not invalid, as respects marriages contracted by epileptics, after it took effect."

HAMERSLEY, J. (concurring in the result). * * * "The act done by the parties—that of marrying—is not only a harmless act, but the exercise of a right belonging to every citizen; and the punishment is inflicted for exercising this right in a manner forbidden by law. * * * Because the inmates of a poorhouse, or persons who by reason of sickness, feeble-mindedness, or imbecility are a charge, or liable to become a charge, upon the state, may be punished for marrying each other, it does not follow that every one who is sick or feeble-minded may be prevented from marrying. * * * If the act forbade marriages between persons who are living at the public charge, and unable to support themselves, or between any clearly marked class of such persons, it might be sustained as restraining the dependent wards of the state from unnecessarily imposing burdens upon the public. McCarthy v. Hinman, 35 Conn. 538-540. * * *

"The opinion seems to intimate that such a law would be regarded as expressive of the conviction of modern society that disease is largely preventable by proper precautions, and might therefore be rightly enforced, even at the cost of what in former days was regarded as the proper domain of individual right, namely, the natural right of marriage, the freedom of contract in the exercise of the right, and freedom of conscience in the performance of the personal duties it may involve. This individual right has been and is regarded as protected by the Constitution from arbitrary invasion. These guarantied rights may be restricted by appropriate regulations for the protection of the health, morals, and safety of the public, but no one has yet dreamed that the limits of this field of protective legislation can be extended beyond the citizens of to-day, so as to embrace the citizens of all future generations. It has been held that these guarantied rights of personal freedom cannot be directly destroyed by legislation merely because such destruction may be deemed to be generally useful, or to serve differing views of social and economic problems which are working their own solution independent of legislatures and courts. State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 489, 33 Atl. 519, 31 L. R. A. 55, 48 Am. St. Rep. 227; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133." ¹

¹ The cases discussing the validity of various legislative restrictions upon marriage, including the prohibition of miscegenation, are collected in 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531-536 (1906).

In State v. Feilen, 70 Wash. 65, 126 Pac. 75, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418 (1912) a statute was upheld that, in addition to other punishment, authorized an operation to prevent procreation to be performed upon persons convicted of rape. Crow, J., said (70 Wash. 68, 126 Pac. 76, 77 [41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418]): "On the theory that modern scientific investigation shows that idioecy, insanity, imbecility, and criminality are congenital and hereditary, the Legislatures of California [St. Cal. 1909, p. 1093, c. 720], Connecticut [Pub. Laws Conn. 1909, c. 209], Indiana [Laws Ind. 1907, c. 215], Iowa [Laws Iowa 1911 c. 129], New Jersey [Laws N. J. 1911, c. 190], and perhaps other states, in the exercise of the police power, have enacted laws providing for the sterilization of idiots, insane, imbeciles and habitual criminals. In the enforcement of these statutes vasectomy seems to be a common operation. Dr. Clark Bell, in an article on hereditary criminality and the asexualization of criminals, found at page 134, vol. 27, Medico-Legal Journal, quotes with approval the following language: * * * 'Vasectomy is known to the medical profession as "an office operation," painlessly performed in a few minutes, under an anæsthetic (cocaine), through a skin cut half an inch long, and entailing no wound infection, no confinement to bed.' * * * 'The sterilization of convicts by vasectomy was actually performed for the first time in this country, so far as is known, in October, 1899, by Dr. H. C. Sharp of Indianapolis, then physician to the Indiana State Reformatory, at Jeffersonville, though the value of the operation for healing purposes had long been known. He continued to perform this operation with the consent of the convict (not by legislative authority) for some years. Influential physicians heard of his work, and were so favorably impressed with it that they indorsed the movement, which resulted in the passage of the law now upon the Indiana statute books. Dr. Sharp has this to say of this method of relief to society: "Vasectomy consists of ligating and resecting a small portion of the vas deferens. This operation is, indeed, very simple and easy to perform; I do it without administering an anæsthetic, either general or local. It requires about three minutes' time to perform the operation, and the subject returns to his work immediately, suffers no inconvenience, and is in no way impaired for his pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness, but is effectively sterilized." * * *

L'HOTE v. NEW ORLEANS (1900) 177 U. S. 587, 596-598, 600, 20 Sup. Ct. 788, 44 L. Ed. 899, Mr. Justice BREWER (sustaining an ordinance prescribing limits in that city outside of which no woman of lewd character should dwell, as against objections of property owners within those limits):

"The question * * * is simply whether one who may own or occupy property in or adjacent to the prescribed limits, whether occupied as a residence or for other purposes, can prevent the enforcement of such an ordinance on the ground that by it his rights under the federal Constitution are invaded.

"In this respect we premise by saying that one of the difficult social problems of the day is what shall be done in respect to those vocations which minister to and feed upon human weaknesses, appetites, and passions. The management of these vocations comes directly within the scope of what is known as the police power. They affect directly the public health and morals. Their management becomes a matter of growing importance, especially in our larger cities, where from the very density of population the things which minister to vice tend to increase and multiply. * * *

"Obviously, the regulation of houses of ill fame, legislation in respect to women of loose character, may involve one of three possibilities: First, absolute prohibition; second, full freedom in respect to place, coupled with rules of conduct; or, third, a restriction of the location of such houses to certain defined limits. Whatever course of conduct the legislature may adopt is in a general way conclusive upon all courts, state and Federal. It is no part of the judicial function to determine the wisdom or folly of a regulation by the legislative body in respect to matters of a police nature.

"Now, this ordinance neither prohibits absolutely nor gives entire freedom to the vocation of these women. It attempts to confine their domicile, their lives, to certain territorial limits. Upon what ground shall it be adjudged that such restriction is unjustifiable; that it is an unwarranted exercise of the police power? Is the power to control and regulate limited only as to the matter of territory? May that not be one of the wisest and safest methods of dealing with the problem? At any rate, can the power to so regulate be denied? But given the power to limit the vocation of these persons to certain localities, and no one can question the legality of the location. The power to prescribe a limitation carries with it the power to discriminate against one citizen and in favor of another. Some must suffer by the establishment of any territorial boundaries.

"We do not question what is so earnestly said by counsel for plaintiffs in error in respect to the disagreeable results from the neighborhood of such houses and people; but if the power to prescribe territorial limits exists, the courts cannot say that the limits shall be other than those the legislative body prescribes. If these limits hurt the present plaintiffs in error, other limits would hurt others. But clearly the inquiry as to the reasonableness or propriety of the limits is a matter for legislative consideration, and cannot become the basis of judicial action. The ordinance is an attempt to protect a part of the citizens from the unpleasant consequences of such neighbors. Because the legislative body is unable to protect all, must it be denied the power to protect any?

"It is said that this operates to depreciate the pecuniary value of the property belonging to the plaintiffs in error, but a similar result would follow if other limits were prescribed, and therefore the power to prescribe limits could never be exercised, because, whatever the limits, it might operate to the pecuniary disadvantage of some property holders.

"The truth is, that the exercise of the police power often works pecuniary injury, but the settled rule of this court is that the mere fact of pecuniary injury does not warrant the overthrow of legislation of a police character. * * * Here the ordinance in no manner touched the property of the plaintiffs. It subjected that property to no burden, it cast no duty or restraint upon it, and only in an indirect way can it be said that its pecuniary value was affected by this ordinance. Who can say in advance that in proximity to their property any houses of the character indicated will be established, or that any persons of loose character will find near by a home? They may go to the other end of the named district. All that can be said is that by narrowing the limits within which such houses and people must be, the greater the probability of their near location. Even if any such establishment should be located in proximity, there is nothing in the ordinance to deny the ordinary right of the individual to restrain a private nuisance."¹

LEAVITT v. CITY OF MORRIS.

(Supreme Court of Minnesota, 1908. 105 Minn. 170, 117 N. W. 393, 17 L. R. A. [N. S.] 984, 15 Ann. Cas. 961.)

[Appeal from an order of the Stevens county district court overruling defendant's demurrer to a complaint. A statute gave to the state board of control two per cent. of the liquor license fees of all municipalities to provide a state hospital farm for the compulsory treatment of inebriates. Defendant city resisted the collection of this, alleging the invalidity of this object.]

START, C. J. * * * We * * * only decide the question of the ¹The validity of various kinds of legislation affecting the social evil is also discussed or involved in St. Louis v. Fitz, 53 Mo. 582 (1873); State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, 14 Am. Rep. 471 (1873); Dunn v. Commonwealth, 105 Ky. 834, 49 S. W. 813, 43 L. R. A. 701, 88 Am. St. Rep. 344 (1899); Hechinger v. Maysville, 57 S. W. 619, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 486, 49 L. R. A. 114 (1900); State v. Botkin, 71 Iowa, 57, 32 N. W. 185, 60 Am. Rep. 780 (1887).

validity of the provisions of the act relating to the commitment of inebriates, without their consent, to a public hospital for the treatment of inebriates to be provided and conducted by the state. The provisions of the act relevant to such question are to the effect following: Section 2 declares that the term "inebriate" shall include every species of chronic inebriety, whether caused by the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, morphine, or other narcotics. Section 4 provides that upon the filing with the probate court of a verified petition that any person in the county is an inebriate and in need of care and treatment, or that it is dangerous for him to remain at large, stating therein the petitioner's relationship, if any, to the inebriate, and the indications of his lack of self-control in the use of liquors or narcotics, the court shall issue its warrant to bring the inebriate before it for examination as to his alleged inebriety. Section 5 provides for the appointment of two reputable persons, one of whom, at least, must be a qualified physician, and that such persons, with the judge of the court, shall constitute a board to examine the alleged inebriate and determine his inebriety. Section 21 provides that the county attorney shall be notified, and shall appear and take such action as may be necessary to protect the rights of such inebriate and the interests of the county. Section 6 requires the board to hear all proper testimony, and the court may cause witnesses to be subpoenaed. When the examination is completed the board shall determine whether the person charged is an inebriate, and make and file a report of their proceedings, including their findings. Section 9 provides that if the board determine that such person is an inebriate he shall be committed to the hospital farm for treatment for an indeterminate period, but not for more than two years without being released on parol, and, further, that such person shall have a right to appeal from the decision of the probate court to the district court, and that on such appeal all questions involved in such examination shall be tried de novo. Section 11 requires that whenever a person is discharged from the hospital a certificate of such fact shall be sent to the judge of probate.

The provisions of the act relating to the examination and commitment of an alleged inebriate carefully safeguard his rights, providing, as they do, for full notice and opportunity to be heard,¹ and a trial of all questions by a jury in case he appeals to the district court. They are substantially the same, with the exception of the right of appeal, as those relating to the examination and commitment of insane persons. Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 3852-3861. There is, however, a clear distinction between a person who gets drunk and an insane person, and it may be conceded that one who is simply a drunkard, but is able properly to take care of himself, his family, and his property, and is not menace to the public, cannot be committed to and detained in a hospital for inebriates without his consent, for the personal rights and liberties of such a person are guaranteed by the Constitution. 15 Enc. of Law, 243. But the state, in the exercise of its police power, has the undoubted right to punish drunkenness, and to provide for the detention and treatment in hospitals controlled by it of those who are habitual drunkards, and have so far lost the power of self-control that they are either incapable of properly caring for themselves or are a menace to the public weal. The state has the power to reclaim submerged lands, which are a menace to the public health, and make them fruitful. Has it not, also, the power to reclaim submerged men, overthrown by strong drink, and help them to regain self-control?

¹ This is essential for more than a mere temporary detention. People ex rel. Ordway v. St. Saviour's Sanitarium, 34 App. Div. 363, 56 N. Y. Supp. 431 (1898); People ex rel. Barone v. Fox, 202 N. Y. 616, 96 N. E. 1126 (1911).

The state for many years has punished drunkenness as a crime by a fine or imprisonment, and for the third and all subsequent offenses by imprisonment alone. Laws 1907, p. 235, c. 208. The necessary effect of the enforcement of the statute against drunkenness is to deprive the person guilty of the offense of his property and his liberty for a time; but no question has ever been made in the courts of this state as to the validity of such a statute. The trend, however, of legislation is to treat habitual drunkenness as a disease of mind and body, analogous to insanity, and to put in motion the power of the state, as the guardian of all of its citizens, to save the inebriate, his family, and society from the dire consequences of his pernicious habit. 15 Enc. of Law, 229. The statute here under consideration is of such a character. It is not a penal, but a paternal, statute, seeking, not the punishment of the inebriate, but the safeguarding of his interests and the safety of the public, by treating him as, what he is in fact, a man of unsound mind, and placing him under the guardianship of the state, to the end that he may be healed of his infirmity. The act provides that such guardianship shall be administered by the probate court, and there can be no question of the jurisdiction of such court; for the Constitution (section 7, art. 6) confers upon it jurisdiction over the general subject of guardianship of persons. State v. Wilcox, 24 Minn. 143.

Again, the statute does not seek to place under the guardianship of the state hospital for inebriates persons who are guilty of occasional acts of drunkenness and who are capable of controlling themselves and their property. It is limited to habitual drunkards—that is, to persons who have lost the power or will to control their appetite for intoxicating liquors or narcotics, and have the fixed habit of drunkenness (4 Words and Phrases, 3202), who are in need of care and treatment, and to those it would be dangerous to leave at large. The difference between such persons and insane persons is one of degree only, and they lawfully may be so treated by the state without any impairment of their constitutional rights. * * *

Order affirmed.²

² Accord: People ex rel. Barone v. Fox, 144 App. Div. 611, 129 N. Y. Supp. 646 (1911) (medical treatment of diseased prostitutes).

JACOBSON v. MASSACHUSETTS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1905. 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765.)

[Error to the Superior Court of Middlesex county, Massachusetts. A statute gave local boards of health authority, whenever in their opinion necessary for the public health, to require the vaccination of all inhabitants of their city or town, except children who presented medical certificates that they were unfit subjects for vaccination. Jacobson was convicted in said court of refusing to comply with such an order of the Cambridge board of health. His offer to prove that vaccination was useless to prevent smallpox, and that it was often dangerous was denied by the trial court. The state Supreme Court affirmed the conviction.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * We come, then, to inquire whether any right given or secured by the Constitution is invaded by the statute as interpreted by the state court. The defendant insists that his liberty is invaded when the state subjects him to fine or imprisonment for neglecting or refusing to submit to vaccination; that a compulsory vaccination law is unreasonable, arbitrary, and oppressive, and, therefore, hostile to the inherent right of every freeman to care for his own body and health in such way as to him seems best; and that the execution of such a law against one who objects to vaccination, no matter for what reason, is nothing short of an assault upon his person. But the liberty secured by the Constitution of the United States to every person within its jurisdiction does not import an absolute right in each person to be, at all times and in all circumstances, wholly freed from restraint. There are manifold restraints to which every person is necessarily subject for the common good. On any other basis organized society could not exist with safety to its members. Society based on the rule that each one is a law unto himself would soon be confronted with disorder and anarchy. Real liberty for all could not exist under the operation of a principle which recognizes the right of each individual person to use his own, whether in respect of his person or his property, regardless of the injury that may be done to others. This court has more than once recognized it as a fundamental principle that "persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state; of the perfect right of the legislature to do which no question ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles ever can be, made, so far as natural persons are concerned." Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 471, 24 L. Ed. 527, 530; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 628, 629, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878-883; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co., 27 Vt. 148, 62 Am. Dec. 625. * * *

Applying these principles to the present case, it is to be observed that the legislature of Massachusetts required the inhabitants of a city or town to be vaccinated only when, in the opinion of the board of health, that was necessary for the public health or the public safety. The authority to determine for all what ought to be done in such an emergency must have been lodged somewhere or in some body; and surely it was appropriate for the legislature to refer that question, in the first instance, to a board of health composed of persons residing in the locality affected, and appointed, presumably, because of their fitness to determine such questions. To invest such a body with authority over such matters was not an unusual, nor an unreasonable or arbitrary, requirement. Upon the principle of self-defense, of paramount necessity, a community has the right to protect itself against an epidemic of disease which threatens the safety of its members. It is to be observed that when the regulation in question was adopted smallpox, according to the recitals in the regulation adopted by the board of health, was prevalent to some extent in the city of Cambridge, and the disease was increasing. If such was the situation,—and nothing is asserted or appears in the record to the contrary,—if we are to attach any value whatever to the knowledge which, it is safe to affirm, is common to all civilized peoples touching smallpox and the methods most usually employed to eradicate that disease, it cannot be adjudged that the present regulation of the board of health was not necessary in order to protect the public health and secure the public safety.

Smallpox being prevalent and increasing at Cambridge, the court would usurp the functions of another branch of government if it adjudged, as matter of law, that the mode adopted under the sanction of the state, to protect the people at large was arbitrary, and not justified by the necessities of the case. We say necessities of the case, because it might be that an acknowledged power of a local community to protect itself against an epidemic threatening the safety of all might be exercised in particular circumstances and in reference to particular persons in such an arbitrary, unreasonable manner, or might go so far beyond what was reasonably required for the safety of the public, as to authorize or compel the courts to interfere for the protection of such persons. Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 301, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194, 201; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) §§ 319-325, and authorities in notes; Freund, Police Power, § 63 et seq. * * * If the mode adopted by the commonwealth of Massachusetts for the protection of its local communities against smallpox proved to be distressing, inconvenient, or objectionable to some,—if nothing more could be reasonably affirmed of the statute in question,—the answer is that it was the duty of the constituted authorities primarily to keep in view the welfare, comfort, and safety of the many, and not permit the interests of the many to be subordinated to the wishes or convenience of the few.

There is, of course, a sphere within which the individual may assert the supremacy of his own will, and rightfully dispute the authority of any human government,—especially of any free government existing under a written Constitution, to interfere with the exercise of that will. But it is equally true that in every well-ordered society charged with the duty of conserving the safety of its members the rights of the individual in respect of his liberty may at times, under the pressure of great dangers, be subjected to such restraint, to be enforced by reasonable regulations, as the safety of the general public may demand. An American citizen arriving at an American port on a vessel in which, during the voyage, there had been cases of yellow fever or Asiatic cholera, although apparently free from disease himself, may yet, in some circumstances, be held in quarantine against his will on board of such vessel or in a quarantine station, until it be ascertained by inspection, conducted with due diligence, that the danger of the spread of the disease among the community at large has disappeared. The liberty secured by the fourteenth amendment, this court has said, consists, in part, in the right of a person "to live and work where he will" (Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832); and yet he may be compelled, by force if need be, against his will and without regard to his personal wishes or his pecuniary interests, or even his religious or political convictions, to take his place in the ranks of the army of his country, and risk the chance of being shot down in its defense. It is not, therefore, true that the power of the public to guard itself against imminent danger depends in every case involving the control of one's body upon his willingness to submit to reasonable regulations established by the constituted authorities, under the sanction of the state, for the purpose of protecting the public collectively against such danger. * * *

Looking at the propositions embodied in the defendant's rejected offers of proof, it is clear that they are more formidable by their number than by their inherent value. Those offers in the main seem to have had no purpose except to state the general theory of those of the medical profession who attach little or no value to vaccination as a means of preventing the spread of smallpox, or who think that vaccination causes other diseases of the body. What everybody knows the court must know, and therefore the state court judicially knew, as this court knows, that an opposite theory accords with the common belief, and is maintained by high medical authority. We must assume that, when the statute in question was passed, the legislature of Massachusetts was not unaware of these opposing theories, and was compelled, of necessity, to choose between them. It was not compelled to commit a matter involving the public health and safety to the final decision of a court or jury. It is no part of the function of a court or a jury to determine which one of two modes was likely to be the most effective for the protection of the public against disease. That was for the legislative department to determine in the light of all the information it had or could obtain. It could not properly abdicate its function to guard the public health and safety. The state legislature proceeded upon the theory which recognized vaccination as at least an effective, if not the best-known, way in which to meet and suppress the evils of a smallpox epidemic that imperiled an entire population.

Upon what sound principles as to the relations existing between the different departments of government can the court review this action of the legislature? If there is any such power in the judiciary to review legislative action in respect of a matter affecting the general welfare, it can only be when that which the legislature has done comes within the rule that, if a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is, beyond all question, a plain, palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205, 210; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 320, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455, 458, 3 Interst. Com. R. 185; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 223, 24 Sup. Ct. 124, 48 L. Ed. 148, 158.

Whatever may be thought of the expediency of this statute, it cannot be affirmed to be, beyond question, in palpable conflict with the Constitution. Nor, in view of the methods employed to stamp out the disease of smallpox, can anyone confidently assert that the means prescribed by the state to that end has no real or substantial relation to the protection of the public health and the public safety. Such an assertion would not be consistent with the experience of this and other countries whose authorities have dealt with the disease of smallpox. * * * [Quotations are here given from various sources showing the practice of other countries, and a number of American state cases are cited upholding vaccination as a condition of attending the public schools.]

The latest case upon the subject of which we are aware is Viemeister v. White, decided very recently by the court of appeals of New York. That case involved the validity of a statute excluding from the public schools all children who had not been vaccinated. * * * [The statute was upheld] the court saying among other things: * * * "A common belief, like common knowledge, does not require evidence to establish its existence, but may be acted upon without proof by the legislature and the courts. * * * The fact that the belief is not universal is not controlling, for there is scarcely any belief that is accepted by every one. The possibility that the belief may be wrong, and that science may yet show it to be wrong, is not conclusive; for the legislature has the right to pass laws which, according to the common belief of the people, are adapted to prevent the spread of contagious diseases. In a free country, where the government is by the people, through their chosen representatives, practical legislation admits of no other standard of action, for what the people believe is for the common welfare must be accepted as tending to promote the common welfare, whether it does in fact or not.¹ Any other basis would conflict with the spirit of the Constitution, and would sanction measures opposed to a republican form of government. While we do not decide, and cannot decide, that vaccination is a preventive of small-pox, we take judicial notice of the fact that this is the common belief of the people of the state, and, with this fact as a foundation, we hold that the statute in question is a health law, enacted in a reasonable and proper exercise of the police power." 179 N. Y. 235, 72 N. E. 97, 70 L. R. A. 796, 103 Am. St. Rep. 859, 1 Ann. Cas. 334. * * *

The legislature assumed that some children, by reason of their condition at the time, might not be fit subjects of vaccination; and it is suggested—and we will not say without reason—that such is the case with some adults. But the defendant did not offer to prove that, by reason of his then condition, he was in fact not a fit subject of vaccination at the time he was informed of the requirement of the regulation adopted by the board of health. * * * Until otherwise informed by the highest court of Massachusetts, we are not inclined to hold that the statute establishes the absolute rule that an adult must be vaccinated if it be apparent or can be shown with reasonable certainty that he is not at the time a fit subject of vaccination, or that vaccination, by reason of his then condition, would seriously impair his health, or probably cause his death. No such case is here presented. It is the cause of an adult who, for aught that appears, was himself in perfect health and a fit subject of vaccination, and yet, while remaining in the community, refused to obey the statute and the regulation adopted in execution of its provisions for the protection of the public health and the public safety, confessedly endangered by the presence of a dangerous disease. * * *

Judgment affirmed.²

[BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissent.]

¹ Compare the remark of the same court in holding a workmen's compensation act invalid: "In a government like ours theories of public good or necessity are often so plausible or sound as to command popular approval, but courts are not permitted to forget that law is the only chart by which the ship of state is to be guided."—Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co., 201 N. Y. 271, 294, 295, 94 N. E. 431, 440, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156 (1911), by Werner, J.

² In Laurel Hill Cemetery v. City and County of San Francisco, 216 U. S. 358, 364-366, 30 Sup. Ct. 301, 302, 54 L. Ed. 513 (1910), a city ordinance forbidding the burial of the dead within the city as detrimental to the public health was upheld against the contention of the owners of a large private cemetery in which 40,000 lots had been sold and where over $2,000,000 had been spent in improvements. Holmes, J., saying: "To aid its contention, and in support of the averment that its cemetery, although now bordered by many dwellings, is in no way harmful, the plaintiff refers to opinions of scientific men who have maintained that the popular belief is a superstition. Of these we are asked, by implication, to take judicial notice, to adopt them, and, on the strength of our acceptance, to declare the foundation of the ordinance a mistake and the ordinance void. * * * If every member of this bench clearly agreed that burying grounds were centers of safety, and thought the board of supervisors and the supreme court of California wholly wrong, it would not dispose of the case. There are other things to be considered.

NICKERSON v. BOSTON (1881) 131 Mass. 306, 307-308, MORTON, J. (upholding a statute applicable to a certain district in Boston):

"By the statute, the city council are authorized to order the owners of lands situated in the district described therein 'to raise the grade of their said lands, filling up the same with good materials to such permanent grade as may be deemed necessary by the board of aldermen in order to secure a complete drainage thereof, so as to abate and prevent nuisances, and to preserve the public health of the city,' and, if the owner fails to comply with the order, to fill up the land and assess the necessary expenses, which shall constitute a lien upon the land. The statute itself defines the purpose of its enactment and indicates its character. It is not a statute to levy a tax, but its object is to abate and prevent nuisances, and to preserve the public health. It belongs to that class of police regulations to which private rights are held subject, and is founded upon the right of the public to protect itself from nuisances, and to preserve the general health. The authority of the Legislature to pass laws of this character is too well settled to be questioned. Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 254; Salem v. Eastern Railroad, 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; Wright v. Boston, 9 Cush. 233. The objection of the petitioner that the law is unconstitutional cannot therefore be sustained."¹

Opinion still may be divided, and if, on the hypothesis that the danger is real, the ordinance would be valid, we should not overthrow it merely because of our adherence to the other belief. Similar arguments were pressed upon this court with regard to vaccination, but they did not prevail. On the contrary, evidence that vaccination was deleterious was held properly to have been excluded. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765, s. c. 183 Mass. 242, 66 N. E. 719, 67 L. R. A. 935. See Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 608, 609, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 47 L. Ed. 323, 327, 328. Again, there may have been other grounds fortifying the ordinance besides those recited in the preamble. And yet again, the extent to which legislation may modify and restrict the uses of property consistently with the Constitution is not a question for pure abstract theory alone. Tradition and the habits of the community count for more than logic. Since, as before, the making of Constitutions, regulation of burial and prohibition of it in certain spots, especially in crowded cities, have been familiar to the Western world. This is shown sufficiently by the cases cited by the court below; e. g., Contes v. New York, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 585; Kincaid's Appeal, 66 Pa. 411, 5 Am. Rep. 377; Sohler v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 1, 21; Carpenter v. Yeaton, 86 U. S. 122, 158 Fed. 766. The plaintiff must wait until there is a change of practice, or at least an established consensus of civilized opinion, before it can expect this court to overthrow the rules that the lawmakers and the court of his own state uphold."

¹ See, also, Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. May, ante, p. 359 (noxious weeds), and Ex parte Hodges, 87 Cal. 162, 161-166, 25 Pac. 277, 278 (1890), in which Works, J., said: "The ordinance requires that all occupants of lands, within ninety days, exterminate and destroy the ground squirrels on their respective lands, and thereafter keep said lands free and clear therefrom. This might be successfully done by the free and judicious use of poison, and perhaps by some other means, on very small tracts of land, but on large tracts it would certainly require eternal vigilance, if it could be accomplished at all, and if, after the extermination of the intruders on his own lands, one, only one,

CALIFORNIA REDUCTION CO. v. SANITARY REDUCTION WORKS (1905) 199 U. S. 306, 321-323, 26 Sup. Ct. 100, 50 L. Ed. 204, Mr. Justice HARLAN (upholding a San Francisco ordinance requiring all garbage and refuse to be delivered in closed wagons at the works of the Sanitary Company, there to be cremated at the expense of the person conveying it there. The Sanitary Company sought by injunction against householders and a rival reduction works to compel compliance with this ordinance, it having a 50-year monopoly of said cremation at 20 cents a load):

"The defendants insist that the requirement that the substances mentioned should be delivered at the plaintiff's works for cremation or destruction, at the expense of the person, company, or corporation conveying the same, was a taking of private property for public use without compensation. We cannot assent to this view. It is the duty, primarily, of a person on whose premises are garbage and refuse material, to see to it, by proper diligence, that no nuisance arises therefrom which endangers the public health. The householder may be compelled to submit even to an inspection of his premises, at his own expense, and forbidden to keep them, or allow them to be kept, in such condition as to create disease. He may, therefore, have been required, at his own expense, to make, from time to time, such disposition of obnoxious substances originating on premises occupied by him as would be necessary in order to guard the public health. If the householder himself removed them from his premises, it must have been at his own expense; and the scavenger who took to the crematory the material from the premises of origin, under some arrangement with the householder, was, in effect, the representative, in that matter, of the householder, and was performing a duty resting upon the house-should come over from the land of his neighbor, the ordinance would be violated. The occupant of lands bordering on another county, where no such regulation prevailed, and the pesky squirrel was allowed to propagate and grow unmolested, would be in a most unfortunate condition. Such an ordinance differs materially from laws requiring an occupant of lands to keep them free from noxious weeds, or such as make it the duty of an owner of diseased domestic animals to kill them, in order to prevent the spread of the disease. These are matters over which the property-owner has control, and the requirements are reasonable and just. * * * We know of no law which can be held to authorize a board of supervisors to enact such an ordinance, and we are quite clear that it cannot be enforced, for the reason that it is unreasonable and burdensome in the extreme."

In Commonwealth v. Tewksbury, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 55 (1846), a statute was upheld which, for the protection of Boston harbor by the preservation of its natural embankments, forbade even a riparian owner to remove stones, gravel, or sand from the beaches of Chelsea. Shaw, C. J., said (page 59): "A law prohibiting an owner from removing the soil composing a natural embankment to a valuable, navigable stream, port, or harbor, is not such a taking, such an interference with the right and title of the owner, as to give him a constitutional right to compensation, and to render an act unconstitutional which makes no such provision, but is a just restraint of an injurious use of the property, which the legislature have authority to make."

Compare Dingley v. Boston, post, p. 686, note.

holder. So that if the requirement that the person conveying the material should pay a given price for having it cremated or destroyed, in effect put some expense on the householder, that gave him no ground for complaint; for it was his duty to see to the removal of garbage and house refuse having its origin on his premises. Still less has the licensed scavenger a right to complain; for his right to convey garbage and refuse through the public streets, in covered wagons, was derived from the public, and he was subject to such regulations as the constituted authorities, in their exercise of the police power, might adopt. The whole arrangement may be fairly regarded as one in the interest and for the convenience of the householder. He gets his proportionate benefit of any revenue derived by the city, and at the same time shares the protection given to him by the community. Nor did the destruction of garbage and refuse, at an approved crematory, amount, in itself, and under the circumstances disclosed, to a taking of private property for public use without compensation, even if some of the substances destroyed at the crematory had a value for certain purposes. The authorities were not bound, prior to the removal of such substances from the premises on which they were found, to separate those that were confessedly worthless from those which might be utilized. The garbage and refuse matter were all together, on the same premises, and, as a whole or in the mass, they constituted a nuisance which the public could abate or require to be abated, and to the continuance of which the community was not bound to submit. And when the obnoxious garbage and refuse was removed from the place of their origin, and put in covered wagons to be carried away, the municipal authorities might well have doubted whether the substances that were per se dangerous or worthless would be separated from such as could be utilized, and whether the former would be deposited by the scavenger at some place that would not endanger the public health. They might well have thought that the safety of the community could not be assured unless the entire mass of garbage and refuse constituting the nuisance, from which the danger came, was carried to a crematory, where it could be promptly destroyed by fire, and thus minimize the danger to the public health."¹

¹ Accord: Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394 (1873) (monopoly of keeping slaughter houses in New Orleans); Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U. S. 325, 26 Sup. Ct. 106, 50 L. Ed. 212 (1905) (garbage collection monopoly). See, also, North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 306, 320, 321, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276 (1908) (destruction of unwholesome food having some value for other purposes); Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co., 166 U. S. 698, 17 Sup. Ct. 693, 41 L. Ed. 1169 (1897) (unassessed dogs deprived of protection of law); Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 69, 58 Am. Dec. 385 (1853) (destruction of movables, otherwise rescuable, to check fire); Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 25 L. Ed. 980 (1880) (same).

MILLER v. HORTON.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1891. 152 Mass. 540, 26 N. E. 100, 10 L. R. A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850.)

[Bill of exceptions. A board of cattle commissioners were authorized by statute (section 13) to condemn and kill any animals infected with glanders. Under their authority plaintiff's horse was examined, decided to have glanders, and was killed by defendants, members of the Rehoboth board of health. For this plaintiff sued in tort and established the fact that his horse had neither glanders nor any contagious disease. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff alleged exceptions.]

HOLMES, J. * * * The main ground for reading into the statute an intent to make the commissioners' order an absolute protection is that there is no provision for compensation to the owner in this class of cases, and, therefore, unless the order is a protection, those who carry it out will do so at their peril. Such a construction, when once known, would be apt to destroy the efficiency of the clause, as few people could be found to carry out orders on these terms. * * *

It may be said, suppose that the decision of the board is not conclusive that the plaintiff's horse had the glanders, still the legislature may consider that self-protection requires the immediate killing of all horses which a competent board deem infected, whether they are so or not, and, if so, the innocent horses that are killed are a sacrifice to necessary self-protection, and need not be paid for.

In Train v. Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 11 N. E. 929, 59 Am. Rep. 113 it was held that all imported rags might be required to be put through a disinfecting process at the expense of the owner. Of course, the order did not mean that the legislature or board of health declared all imported rags to be infected, but simply that the danger was too great to risk an attempt at discrimination. If the legislature could throw the burden on owners of innocent rags in that case, why could it not throw the burden on the owners of innocent horses in this? If it could order all rags to be disinfected, why might it not have ordered such rags to be disinfected as a board of three should determine summarily, and without notice or appeal? The latter provision would have been more favorable to owners, as they would have had a chance at least of escaping the burden, and it would stand on the same ground as the severer law.

The answer, or a part of it, is this: Whether the motives of the legislature are the same or not in the two cases supposed, it declares different things to be dangerous and nuisances unless disinfected. In the one, it declares all imported rags to be so; in the other, only all infected rags. Within limits, it may thus enlarge or diminish the number of things to be deemed nuisances by the law, and courts cannot inquire why it includes certain property, and whether the motive was to avoid an investigation. But wherever it draws the line, an owner has a right to a hearing on the question whether his property falls within it, and this right is not destroyed by the fact that the line might have been drawn so differently as unquestionably to include that property. Thus, in the first case, the owner has a right to try the question whether his rags were imported; in the second, whether they were infected. His right is no more met in the second case by the fact that the legislature might have made the inquiry immaterial by requiring all imported rags to be disinfected, than it would be in the first by the suggestion that possibly the legislature might require all rags to be put through the same process whether imported or not. But if the property is admitted to fall within the line, there is nothing to try, provided the line drawn is a valid one under the police power. All that Train v. Disinfecting Co. decided was that the line there considered was a valid one.

Still it may be asked, if self-protection required the act, why should not the owner bear the loss? It may be answered that self-protection does not require all that is believed to be necessary to that end, nor even all that reasonably is believed to be necessary to that end. It only requires what is actually necessary. It would seem doubtful at least whether actual necessity ought not to be the limit when the question arises under the constitution between the public and an individual. Such seems to be the law as between private parties in this commonwealth in the case of fires, as we have seen. It could not be assumed as a general principle without discussion that even necessity would exonerate a party from civil liability for a loss inflicted knowingly upon an innocent person who neither by his person nor by his property threatens any harm to the defendant. It has been thought by great lawyers that a man cannot shift his misfortunes upon his neighbor's shoulders in that way when it is a question of damages, although his act may be one for which he would not be punished. Gilbert v. Stone, Aleyn, 35, S. C. Style, 72; Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892, 896. See Fairbanks v. Snow, 145 Mass. 153, 155, 13 N. E. 596, 1 Am. St. Rep. 446. Upon this we express no opinion. It is enough to say that in this case actual necessity required the destruction only of infected horses, and that was all that the legislature purported to authorize.

Again, there is a pretty important difference of degree, at least. (Ridout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 372, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560) between regulating the precautions to be taken in keeping property, especially property sought to be brought into the state, and ordering its destruction. We cannot admit that the legislature has an unlimited right to destroy property without compensation, on the ground that destruction is not an appropriation to public use within article 10 of the declaration of rights. When a healthy horse is killed by a public officer, acting under a general statute, for fear that it should spread disease, the horse certainly would seem to be taken for public use as truly as if it were seized to drag an artillery wagon. The public equally appropriate it, whatever they do with it afterwards. Certainly the legislature could not declare all cattle to be nuisances, and order them to be killed without compensation. Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 319, 12 Am. Rep. 694; In re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 109, 50 Am. Rep. 636. It does not attempt to do so. As we have said, it only declares certain diseased animals to be nuisances. And even if we assume that it could authorize some trifling amount of innocent property to be destroyed as a necessary means to the abatement of a nuisance, still, if in this section 13 it had added in terms that such healthy animals as should be killed by mistake for diseased ones should not be paid for, we should deem it a serious question whether such a provision could be upheld. See, further, Hutton v. Camden, 39 N. J. Law, 122, 23 Am. Rep. 203; Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. Law, 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190; Grant v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 41; Wiggins v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 412; Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115, 134, 14 L. Ed. 75.

For these reasons, the literal, and, as we think, the true, construction of section 13 seems to us the only safe one to adopt, and accordingly we are of opinion that the authority and jurisdiction of the commissioners to condemn the plaintiff's horse under section 13 was conditional upon its actually having the glanders.¹ If this be so, their order would not protect the defendants in a case where the commissioners acted outside their jurisdiction. * * *

Exceptions sustained.²

[DEVENS, J., gave a dissenting opinion, concurred in by ALLEN and KNOWLTON, JJ.]

DENT v. WEST VIRGINIA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1889. 129 U. S. 114, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 32 L. Ed. 623.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of West Virginia. A statute of 1882 made it a misdemeanor to practice medicine in the state unless the practitioner obtained a certificate from the state board of health that he was a graduate of a reputable medical college, or upon examination by this board was found qualified to practice medicine, or had practiced medicine continuously in the state for ten years prior to March 8, 1881. Dent had practiced in the state continuously from 1876, and did not comply with any of the above alternative qualifications. His conviction in the circuit court for a violation of the statute in 1882 was affirmed by the state Supreme Court. He alleged that the statute violated the fourteenth amendment, in depriving him without due process of law of a vested right to practice his profession.]

¹ See the quotation from Huddart & Co. v. Moorehead, ante, pp. 75, 76, note.

² Accord: Lowe v. Conroy, 120 Wis. 151, 97 N. W. 942, 66 L. R. A. 907, 102 Am. St. Rep. 983, 1 Ann. Cas. 341 (1904) (cases). Compare Raymond v. Fish, 51 Conn. 80, 50 Am. Rep. 3 (1883).

Mr. Justice FIELD. * * * It is undoubtedly the right of every citizen of the United States to follow any lawful calling, business, or profession he may choose, subject only to such restrictions as are imposed upon all persons of like age, sex, and condition. This right may in many respects be considered as a distinguishing feature of our republican institutions. Here all vocations are open to every one on like conditions. All may be pursued as sources of livelihood, some requiring years of study and great learning for their successful prosecution. The interest, or, as it is sometimes termed, the "estate," acquired in them—that is, the right to continue their prosecution—is often of great value to the possessors, and cannot be arbitrarily taken from them, any more than their real or personal property can be thus taken. But there is no arbitrary deprivation of such right where its exercise is not permitted because of a failure to comply with conditions imposed by the state for the protection of society. The power of the state to provide for the general welfare of its people authorizes it to prescribe all such regulations as in its judgment will secure or tend to secure them against the consequences of ignorance and incapacity, as well as of deception and fraud. As one means to this end it has been the practice of different states, from time immemorial, to exact in many pursuits a certain degree of skill and learning upon which the community may confidently rely; their possession being generally ascertained upon an examination of parties by competent persons, or inferred from a certificate to them in the form of a diploma or license from an institution established for instruction on the subjects, scientific and otherwise, with which such pursuits have to deal. The nature and extent of the qualifications required must depend primarily upon the judgment of the state as to their necessity. If they are appropriate to the calling or profession, and attainable by reasonable study or application, no objection to their validity can be raised because of their stringency or difficulty. It is only when they have no relation to such calling or profession, or are unattainable by such reasonable study and application, that they can operate to deprive one of his right to pursue a lawful vocation.

Few professions require more careful preparation by one who seeks to enter it than that of medicine. It has to deal with all those subtle and mysterious influences upon which health and life depend, and requires not only a knowledge of the properties of vegetable and mineral substances, but of the human body in all its complicated parts, and their relation to each other, as well as their influence upon the mind. The physician must be able to detect readily the presence of disease, and prescribe appropriate remedies for its removal. Every one may have occasion to consult him, but comparatively few can judge of the qualifications of learning and skill which he possesses. Reliance must be placed upon the assurance given by his license, issued by an authority competent to judge in that respect, that he possesses the requisite qualifications. Due consideration, therefore, for the protection of society may well induce the state to exclude from practice those who have not such a license, or who are found upon examination not to be fully qualified. The same reasons which control in imposing conditions, upon compliance with which the physician is allowed to practice in the first instance, may call for further conditions as new modes of treating disease are discovered, or a more thorough acquaintance is obtained of the remedial properties of vegetable and mineral substances, or a more accurate knowledge is acquired of the human system and of the agencies by which it is affected. It would not be deemed a matter for serious discussion that a knowledge of the new acquisitions of the profession, as it from time to time advances in its attainments for the relief of the sick and suffering, should be required for continuance in its practice, but for the earnestness with which the plaintiff in error insists that by being compelled to obtain the certificate required, and prevented from continuing in his practice without it, he is deprived of his right and estate in his profession without due process of law. We perceive nothing in the statute which indicates an intention of the legislature to deprive one of any of his rights. No one has a right to practice medicine without having the necessary qualifications of learning and skill; and the statute only requires that whoever assumes, by offering to the community his services as a physician, that he possesses such learning and skill, shall present evidence of it by a certificate or license from a body designated by the state as competent to judge of his qualifications. * * *¹

There is nothing of an arbitrary character in the provisions of the statute in question. It applies to all physicians, except those who may be called for a special case from another state. It imposes no conditions which cannot be readily met; and it is made enforceable in the mode usual in kindred matters,—that is, by regular proceedings adapted to the case. It authorizes an examination of the applicant by the board of health as to his qualifications when he has no evidence of them in the diploma of a reputable medical college in the school of medicine to which he belongs, or has not practiced in the state a designated period before March, 1881. If, in the proceedings under the statute, there should be any unfair or unjust action on the part of the board in refusing him a certificate, we doubt not that a remedy would be found in the courts of the state. But no such imputation can be made, for the plaintiff in error did not submit himself to the examination of the board after it had decided that the diploma he presented was insufficient. * * *

¹ Accord: Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002 (1898) (requirement of good character); Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. 286, 56 L. Ed. 439 (1912) (appropriate scientific training required for osteopaths).

Judgment affirmed.²

WEED v. BERGH.

(Supreme Court of Wisconsin, 1910. 141 Wis. 569, 124 N. W. 604.)

[Appeal from Waupaca county circuit court. A Wisconsin statute forbade any person to conduct a banking business in the state except in corporate form, and gave three months for other existing banks to become incorporated under state or national laws. Plaintiffs, a private banking partnership, sought to enjoin the banking commissioner and district attorney from enforcing this law against them, and a demurrer to their complaint was sustained.]

² "We cannot close our eyes to the fact that legislation of this kind is on the increase. Like begets like, and every legislative session brings forth some new act in the interest of some new trade or occupation. The doctor, the lawyer, the druggist, the dentist, the barber, the horseshoer, and the plumber have already received favorable consideration at the hands of our Legislature, and the end is not yet, for the nurse and the undertaker are knocking at the door. It will not do to say that any occupation which may remotely affect the public health is subject to this kind of legislation and control. Our health, our comfort, and our well-being are materially affected by all of our surroundings—by the houses we live in, the clothes we wear, and the food we eat. The safety of the traveling public depends in no small degree on the skill and capacity of the section crews that build and repair our railroads, yet are we on this account to add the architect, the carpenter, the tailor, the shoemaker, those who produce and prepare our food, and all the rest to the ever-growing list? If so, it will be but a short time before a man cannot engage in honest toil to earn his daily bread without first purchasing a license or permit from some board or commission. The public health is entitled to consideration at the hands of the legislative department of the government, but it must be remembered that liberty does not occupy a secondary place in our fundamental law. Under some of the acts to which we have referred members of the board of health form part of the examining board, but our act has not even this saving grace. By its terms two master plumbers and one journeyman plumber are constituted the guardians of the public health and welfare. We are not permitted to inquire into the motive of the Legislature, and yet, why should a court blindly declare that the public health is involved, when all the rest of mankind know full well that the control of the plumbing business by the board and its licensees is the sole end in view. We are satisfied that the act has no such relation to the public health as will sustain it as a police or sanitary measure, and that its interference with the liberty of the citizen brings it in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States." —Rudkin, J., in State ex rel. Richey v. Smith, 42 Wash. 237, 248, 249, 84 Pac. 851, 854 (5 L. R. A. [N. S.] 674, 114 Am. St. Rep. 114, 7 Ann. Cas. 577) (1906) (collecting cases), holding invalid an act requiring journeyman plumbers to be examined and licensed by a state board.

See, also, Bessette v. People, 193 Ill. 334, 62 N. E. 215, 56 L. R. A. 558 (1901) (horseshoeing); Douglas v. People, 225 Ill. 536, 80 N. E. 341, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1116, 116 Am. St. Rep. 162 (1907) (plumbing); Wyeth v. Board of Health of City of Cambridge, 200 Mass. 474, 86 N. E. 925, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 128 Am. St. Rep. 439 (1909) (undertaking); Moler v. Whisman, 243 Mo. 571, 147 S. W. 985, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 629 (1912) (barbering).

WINSLOW, C. J. * * * The plaintiffs claim that the act of 1909 is unconstitutional on two general grounds: First, because every citizen has a common-law right to transact a banking business, and the law in question amounts to a prohibition of that right; second, because the law in question fixes so short a time within which the plaintiffs must convert their private institution into an incorporated institution that it cannot be obeyed without a ruinous sacrifice of property amounting to practical confiscation.

1. There are some fundamental propositions so well settled that it is only necessary to state them. Among these are the following: First, banking is a common-law right pertaining equally to every member of the community; second, being a common-law right, it cannot be prohibited under a Constitution like ours, which recognizes the right and grants power to the Legislature to regulate and supervise it; third, under such a Constitution as ours, banking may be regulated so far as may be reasonably necessary to secure the public welfare and safety, but it must be true regulation, not prohibition under the guise of regulation. 1 Morse on Banks and Banking (4th Ed.) § 13.

With these principles in mind, it seems evident that the ultimate question under this head is whether the requirement that all who wish to enter into the business should incorporate is in fact regulation or prohibition masquerading as regulation. The question is not whether it be the wisest form of regulation, or whether it be a form which commends itself to the judgment as ideal, but whether it be in fact a bona fide form of regulation with some reasonable adaptation to meet and overcome any evils or dangers to the public which may lurk in unrestrained exercise of banking rights by individuals. We think it is. If it should be granted that individual bankers may be successfully subjected to all the provisions as to visitation, inspection, examination, and the making of reports to the same extent as corporations, it still must be conceded that there are at least two well-defined dangers to the public which are and must be present in private banking which are eliminated in corporate banking. The first of these is the danger that the private banker, by engaging in outside business ventures, may subject his banking assets to the claims of business creditors, and thus greatly prejudice, if not destroy, the remedies of bank depositors, and the second is the danger and inconvenience which is likely to result when a private banker dies and the business has to be temporarily suspended for the purpose of probating the estate, involving perhaps destruction of public confidence and a run on the institution.

Both of these dangers are quite real and serious, and both are quite effectually eliminated in the case of a corporation whose business enterprises are strictly limited to banking, and which does not die. It will not avail to say that possibly remedies might be devised to meet these inherent dangers arising in individual banking by other forms of regulation, though we are inclined to think that this would be very difficult of accomplishment without overstepping some of the constitutional guarantees of rights to the citizens. If, as matter of fact, the requirement of incorporation is a form of regulation reasonably calculated to meet and remedy these difficulties, though not in the wisest way, it must be sustained as an exercise of the police power. We have been referred to but one case which holds the contrary doctrine, viz., State v. Scougal, 3 S. D. 55, 51 N. W. 858, 15 L. R. A. 477, 44 Am. St. Rep. 756; which, indeed, holds that an act requiring incorporation as a condition of doing banking is unconstitutional. The discussion of the question there is long and learned¹ but not convincing to us. It is to be noted, further, that the Constitution of South Dakota contains an unusual provision which figures largely in the result. This provision is to the effect that no law shall grant to any citizen, class of citizens, or corporations, privileges or immunities which on the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens or corporations. The weight of decision as well as text-book authority is the other way, however. 1 Morse on Banks & Banking (4th Ed.) § 13; 5 Cyc. 433; Boone on Banking, § 10; State v. Woodmansee, 1 N. D. 246, 46 N. W. 971, 11 L. R. A. 420; Myers v. Manhattan Bank, 20 Ohio, 283.

The objection that the law absolutely prohibits an individual banker from doing business, and hence cannot be considered as valid regulation, is plausible, but not convincing. Many police regulations have the effect of prohibiting a business unless certain conditions are first complied with. The Legislature says: "If you wish to engage in this quasi public business of banking, you must first secure a corporate charter." It does not say, "You cannot go into it," but, "You must go into it in a certain way which is deemed the safest for the public." The obtaining of a bank charter is made by the act practically a matter of course. Three adult residents of the state may at any time associate together, execute the required articles and file them, and the corporation is formed. The danger that any citizen who wishes to go into the banking business will be unable to find two other adult residents who will be willing to join in executing the written articles of incorporation is so small as to be negligible. People can do banking as before, except that they must do it by means of a corporate organization. This is regulation not prohibition. Commonwealth v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 30 Atl. 217, 25 L. R. A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603; People v. Loew, 19 Misc. Rep. 248, 44 N. Y. Supp. 42. * * *

[The second objection was held to be groundless in fact.]

Order affirmed.²

¹ This opinion is worth reading.

² Accord: Noble State Bank v. Haskell, post, p. 511 (semble); Shallenberger v. First State Bank of Holstein, Neb., 219 U. S. 114, 31 Sup. Ct. 189, 55 L. Ed. 117 (1911); Commonwealth v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 317-320, 30 Atl. 217, 25 L. R. A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603 (1891) (similar arguments as to business of insurance).

The states have exercised a wide discretion in regulating banking, insurance and allied occupations. See Banking: State v. Richbeck, 167 Ind. 217, OTIS AND GASSMAN v. PARKER.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1903. 187 U. S. 606, 23 Sup. Ct. 168, 47 L. Ed. 323.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of California. The state Constitution made void all contracts for the sale of corporate stock on margin or for future delivery, and authorized a recovery of any money paid on such contracts. Parker sued defendants, stockbrokers, for margins paid them on contracts to buy and sell mining stocks. It was assumed that the prohibition included all contracts contemplating a bona fide acquisition of stock, as well as gambling contracts. A judgment in his favor in the superior court was affirmed by the state Supreme Court, and this writ of error was brought.]

Mr. Justice HOLMES. * * * The objection urged against the provision in its literal sense is that this prohibition of all sales on margin bears no reasonable relation to the evil sought to be cured, and therefore falls within the first section of the fourteenth amendment. It is said that it unduly limits the liberty of adult persons in making contracts which concern only themselves, and cuts down the value of a class of property that often must be disposed of under contracts of the prohibited kind if it is to be disposed of to advantage, thus depriving persons of liberty and property without due process of law, and that it unjustifiably discriminates against property of that class, while other familiar objects of speculation, such as cotton or grain, are not touched, thus depriving persons of the equal protection of the laws.

It is true, no doubt, that neither a state legislature nor a state Constitution can interfere arbitrarily with private business or transactions, and that the mere fact that an enactment purports to be for the protection of public safety, health, or morals, is not conclusive upon the courts. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205, 210; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 137, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385, 388. But general propositions do not carry us far. While the courts must exercise a judgment of their own, it by no means is true that every law is void which may seem to the judges who pass upon it excessive, unsuited to its ostensible end, or based upon conceptions of morality with which they disagree. Considerable latitude must be allowed for differences of view, as well as for possible peculiar conditions which this court can know but imperfectly, if at all. Otherwise a Constitution, instead of embodying only relatively fundamental rules of right, as generally understood by all English-speaking communities, would become the partisan of a particular set of ethical or economical opinions, which by no means are held semper ubique et ab omnibus.

77 N. E. 1085, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, 119 Am. St. Rep. 491, 10 Ann. Cas. 899 (1906), and the cases in 219 U. S. 104-139 (1911).

Insurance: State v. Stone, 118 Mo. 388, 24 S. W. 164, 25 L. R. A. 213, 40 Am. St. Rep. 388 (1893); State v. Ackerman, 51 Ohio St. 163, 37 N. E. 828, 24 L. R. A. 298 (1894); Lyons v. Boston & L. R. Co., 181 Mass. 551, 64 N. E. 404 (1902); Head Camp Woodmen of the World v. Sloss, 49 Colo. 177, 112 Pac. 49, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831 (1910).

Even if the provision before us should seem to us not to have been justified by the circumstances locally existing in California at the time when it was passed, it is shown by its adoption to have expressed a deep-seated conviction on the part of the people concerned as to what that policy required. Such a deep-seated conviction is entitled to great respect. If the state thinks that an admitted evil cannot be prevented except by prohibiting a calling or transaction not in itself necessarily objectionable, the courts cannot interfere, unless, in looking at the substance of the matter, they can see that it "is a clear, unmistakable infringement of rights secured by the fundamental law." Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 429, 22 Sup. Ct. 425, 427, 46 L. Ed. 623, 626. No court would declare a usury law unconstitutional, even if every member of it believed that Jeremy Bentham had said the last word on that subject, and had shown for all time that such laws did more harm than good. The Sunday laws, no doubt, would be sustained by a bench of judges, even if every one of them thought it superstitious to make any day holy. Or, to take cases where opinion has moved in the opposite direction, wagers may be declared illegal without the aid of statute, or lotteries forbidden by express enactment, although at an earlier day they were thought pardonable at least. The case would not be decided differently if lotteries had been lawful when the fourteenth amendment became law, as indeed they were in some civilized states. See Ballock v. State, 73 Md. 1, 20 Atl. 184, 8 L. R. A. 671, 25 Am. St. Rep. 559.

We cannot say that there might not be conditions of public delirium in which at least a temporary prohibition of sales on margins would be a salutary thing. Still less can we say that there might not be conditions in which it reasonably might be thought a salutary thing, even if we disagreed with the opinion. Of course, if a man can buy on margin he can launch into a much more extended venture than where he must pay the whole price at once. If he pays the whole price he gets the purchased article, whatever its worth may turn out to be. But if he buys stocks on margin he may put all his property into the venture, and being unable to keep his margins good if the stock market goes down, a slight fall leaves him penniless, with nothing to represent his outlay, except that he has had the chances of a bet. There is no doubt that purchases on margin may be and frequently are used as a means of gambling for a great gain or a loss of all one has. It is said that in California, when the Constitution was adopted, the whole people were buying mining stocks in this way with the result of infinite disaster. Cashman v. Root, 89 Cal. 373, 382, 383, 26 Pac. 883, 12 L. R. A. 511, 23 Am. St. Rep. 482. If at that time the provision of the Constitution, instead of being put there, had been embodied in a temporary act, probably no one would have questioned it, and it would be hard to take a distinction solely on the ground of its more permanent form. Inserting the provision in the Constitution showed, as we have said, the conviction of the people at large that prohibition was a proper means of stopping the evil. And as was said with regard to a prohibition of option contracts in Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 431, 22 Sup. Ct. 425, 46 L. Ed. 623, 627, we are unwilling to declare the judgment to have been wholly without foundation. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[BREWER and PECKHAM, JJ., dissented.]

CITY OF CHICAGO v. NETCHER.

(Supreme Court of Illinois, 1899. 183 Ill. 104, 55 N. E. 707, 48 L. R. A. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 93.)

[Appeal from a judgment of the Cook county criminal court holding invalid certain city regulations of department stores. Chicago ordinances forbade provisions to be exposed for sale where dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and drugs were sold; or for liquor to be sold where dry goods, clothing, jewelry, or hardware were kept for sale. Defendant sold all of these articles at his department store in Chicago (the liquor being sold only in sealed packages and not to be drunk on the premises) and was prosecuted therefor.]

Mr. Chief Justice CARTWRIGHT. * * * The incorporation act relied upon confers upon cities organized under the act the right to regulate the sale of provisions, with the object of promoting or preserving the public health, where the regulation tends to serve that purpose. But this ordinance does not regulate the business of selling provisions, nor prescribe the manner in which the business shall be carried on. It merely prohibits persons engaged in the business of selling dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and drugs from selling in their stores the provisions enumerated in the ordinance. It permits a person to sell in any place or manner, provided, only, that he does not at the same time sell certain other things. A dealer may sell provisions at the same place with hardware, furniture, boots and shoes, hats and caps, millinery, books and stationery, crockery and glassware, carpets, confectionery, wooden ware, wall paper, or any other sort of merchandise except dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and drugs. This is not a regulation,

¹ Accord: Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 22 Sup. Ct. 425, 46 L. Ed. 623 (1902) (criminal prohibition of option contracts upon any commodity).

RESTRICTIONS ON POWER OF ALIENATION.—As to legislative control of this, with respect to various kinds of property, see Lemieux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 29 Sup. Ct. 174, 53 L. Ed. 295 (1909) (stock in trade in bulk); Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 236, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 56 L. Ed. 175 (1911) (assignment of wages); Bushnell v. Loomis, 234 Mo. 371, 137 S. W. 257, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029 (1911) (land, particularly homesteads).

RESTRICTIONS ON CREATION OF FUTURE ESTATES IN PROPERTY.—See Magoun v. Ill. Tr. & Sav. Bank, post, p. 634, note 4.

but a prohibition, and a purely arbitrary one, which attempts to deprive certain persons of exercising a right which has always been lawful, and has been heretofore exercised throughout the state and country without question.

The ordinance is also an attempted interference by the city with rights guaranteed to the defendant by the Constitutions of the United States and of this state. The questions involved are not new. They have been before this and other courts throughout this country in numerous cases, and the rights of the citizen, as against such interference, have been frequently defined, and uniformly upheld. These Constitutions insure to every person liberty, and the protection of his property rights, and provide that he shall not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The liberty of the citizen includes the right to acquire property, to own and use it, to buy and sell it. It is a necessary incident to the ownership of property that the owner shall have a right to sell or barter it, and this right is protected by the constitution as such an incident of ownership. When an owner is deprived of the right to expose for sale and sell his property, he is deprived of property, within the meaning of the constitution, by taking away one of the incidents of ownership. Liberty includes the right to pursue such honest calling or avocation as the citizen may choose, subject only to such restrictions as may be necessary for the protection of the public health, morals, safety, and welfare. * * *

It is not claimed in the argument for the city that the selling of the different kinds of merchandise mentioned in the ordinance in the same building tends in any way to affect the safety, health, morals, comfort, or welfare of the public. No attempt is made to suggest any grounds upon which the ordinance can be justified as an exercise of the police power of the city or the state. It certainly cannot be contended that there is anything in the character of dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and drugs which renders it dangerous to the public, or inimical to the general welfare, that they should be sold in the same building with provisions. General stores have always dealt in all kinds of merchandise, and no one has ever imagined that the comfort, safety, or welfare of the public was in any manner or to any extent injured or prejudiced by them. Public health and public comfort are in no way affected by selling the different kinds of merchandise enumerated in different departments of the same building, and would not be if the same clerk should sell them; nor would the public welfare or comfort be increased by compelling a customer to buy one kind of merchandise in one store and another in some other store. In Meyers v. Baker, 120 Ill. 567, 12 N. E. 79, 60 Am. Rep. 580, the act prohibiting the establishment of any tent, booth, or place of vending provisions or refreshments within a certain distance of a camp meeting was sustained as a police regulation tending to prevent disturbance or disorderly conduct. But this ordinance has no such purpose. It is plain that its object is not to protect the health, morals, or safety of the public, or to accomplish any object falling within the police power. It is a mere attempt to deny a property right to a particular class in the community, where all other members of the community are left to enjoy it. It is immaterial whether such a denial is in a statute or in an ordinance passed by virtue of a statute. It is equally invalid in either case. * * *

[After referring to the power of the state to regulate liquor-selling:] This ordinance, however, is not an exercise of the police power for the protection of the public from the injurious effects of the liquor business. It is not aimed at the suppression of the business, either in certain localities or upon any ground of police regulation, but is directed solely against the sale by certain persons in their places of business; that is, by those who also sell dry goods, clothing, jewelry, or hardware. The city of Chicago has not seen fit to prohibit the sale of liquor, either generally or in the district of the city where defendant's store is kept. It has established its policy with reference to that business, and defendant has complied with its ordinances, so as to be entitled to sell liquor in his store, unless this ordinance constitutes a valid prohibition against his doing so. It is apparent that, if there is any evil in permitting a sealed bottle of liquor to be sold from a store where dry goods, clothing, jewelry, or hardware are sold the same evils would result from the sale from any other kind of a store. The ordinance permits the dealer in all kinds of merchandise, except dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and hardware, to sell liquor from his store, and the city cannot arbitrarily discriminate against the defendant without any basis or ground for the discrimination. Special privileges are not to be granted to favored persons in the liquor business any more than in any other business. Zanone v. Mound City, 103 Ill. 552. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

¹ Accord: Hauser v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 206 N. Y. 455, 100 N. E. 52, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139 (1912) (attempted prohibition of insurance brokerage to all those not principally engaged in that business or in real estate).

For the validity of anti-trading stamp or premium legislation, see State ex rel. Simpson v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 110 Minn. 378, 126 N. W. 120, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966 (1910) (collecting cases); District of Columbia v. Kraft, 35 App. D. C. 253, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 957 (1910); Kanne v. Segerstrom Piano Co., 118 Minn. 483, 137 N. W. 170, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041 (1912).

The sale of other goods may be prohibited in saloons, State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 439, 465, 466, 44 N. E. 469, 33 L. R. A. 313 (1896). As to laws forbidding the use of the national flag for advertising purposes, see Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525 (1907); Ruhrstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 57 N. E. 41, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30 (1900).

In Columbia Trust Co. v. Lincoln Institute of Kentucky, 138 Ky. 801, 129 S. W. 113, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 53 (1910) it was held invalid to prohibit the location of any private industrial school in a voting precinct without the consent of a majority of the voters therein, Barker, C. J., quoting with approval (138 Ky. 811, 129 S. W. 115, 29 L. R. A. [N. S.] 53): "The doctrine of legislative permission, as a condition precedent to the conduct of any useful or harmless business, is grossly repugnant to those obvious principles of human right which lie at the foundation of just government among men."

AIKENS v. WISCONSIN.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1901. 195 U. S. 194, 25 Sup. Ct. 3, 49 L. Ed. 151.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Wisconsin. Defendants were convicted in the Milwaukee municipal court of violating a statute forbidding two or more persons to combine "for the purpose of wilfully or maliciously injuring another in his reputation, trade, business, or profession, by any means whatever." As publishers of newspapers in Milwaukee they had combined to refuse advertisements save at an increased rate from any person who advertised in a competing newspaper at a rate higher than defendants' regular rates. The conviction was affirmed by the state Supreme Court, and this writ taken on the ground that the statute violated the fourteenth amendment.]

Mr. Justice HOLMES. * * * We interpret "maliciously injuring" to import doing a harm malevolently, for the sake of the harm as an end in itself, and not merely as a means to some further end legitimately desired. * * *

We come, then, to the question whether there is any constitutional objection to so much of the act as applies to this case. It has been thought by other courts as well as the supreme court of Wisconsin that such a combination, followed by damage, would be actionable even at common law. It has been considered that, prima facie, the intentional infliction of temporal damage is a cause of action, which, as a matter of substantive law, whatever may be the form of pleading, requires a justification if the defendant is to escape. Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, 613 [1892] A. C. 25, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 295, 66 L. T. N. S. 1, 40 Week. Rep. 337, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 120, 56 J. P. 101. If this is the correct mode of approach, it is obvious that justifications may vary in extent, according to the principle of policy upon which they are founded, and that while some—for instance, at common law, those affecting the use of land—are absolute (Bradford v. Pickens, [1895] A. C. 587), others may depend upon the end for which the act is done. Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 487, 59 N. E. 125, 52 L. R. A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 57 N. E. 1011, 51 L. R. A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 30; Squires v. Wason Mfg. Co., 182 Mass. 137, 140, 141, 65 N. E. 32. See cases cited in 62 L. R. A. 673. It is no sufficient answer to this line of thought that motives are not actionable, and that the standards of the law are external. That is true in determining what a man is bound to foresee, but not necessarily in determining the extent to which he can justify harm which he has foreseen. Quinn v. Leathern, [1901] A. C. 495, 524, 70 L. J. P. C. N. S. 76, 85 L. T. N. S. 289, 50 Week. Rep. 139, 65 J. P. 708.

Whether, at common law, combinations would make conduct actionable which would be lawful in a single person, it is unnecessary to consider. Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, 70 L. J. P. C. N. S. 76, 85 L. T. N. S. 289, 50 Week. Rep. 139, 65 J. P. 708. We are aware, too, that a prevailing opinion in England makes motives immaterial, although it is probable that in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 94, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 119, 77 L. T. N. S. 717, 46 Week. Rep. 258, 62 J. P. 595, the jury were instructed, as in Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715, 719, 62 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 412, 4 Reports, 376, 69 L. T. N. S. 78, 41 Week. Rep. 565, 57 J. P. 676, in such a way that their finding of malice meant no more than that the defendant had acted with foresight of the harm which he would inflict, as a means to an end. Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A. C. 495, 514. However these things may be, we have said enough to show that there is no anomaly in a statute, at least, which punishes a combination such as is charged here. It has been held that even the free use of land by a single owner for purely malevolent purposes may be restricted constitutionally, although the only immediate injury is to a neighboring landowner. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560. Whether this decision was right or not, when it comes to the freedom of the individual, malicious mischief is a familiar and proper subject for legislative repression. Com. v. Walden, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558. Still more are combinations for the purpose of inflicting it. It would be impossible to hold that the liberty to combine to inflict such mischief, even upon such intangibles as business or reputation, was among the rights which the fourteenth amendment was intended to preserve. The statute was assumed to be constitutional in Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310, 325, 326, 11 C. C. A. 209, 25 L. R. A. 414, 4 Interst. Com. R. 744, 24 U. S. App. 239.

But if all these general considerations be admitted, it is urged, nevertheless, that the means intended to be used by this particular combination were simply the abstinence from making contracts; that a man's right so to abstain cannot be infringed on the ground of motives; and further, that it carries with it the right to communicate that intent to abstain to others, and to abstain in common with them. It is said that if the statute extends to such a case it must be unconstitutional. The fallacy of this argument lies in the assumption that the statute stands no better than if directed against the pure nonfeasance of singly omitting to contract. The statute is directed against a series of acts, and acts of several,—the acts of combining, with intent to do other acts. "The very plot is an act in itself." Mulcahy v. Queen, L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 317. But an act which, in itself, is merely a voluntary muscular contraction, derives all its character from the consequences which will follow it under the circumstances in which it was done. When the acts consist of making a combination calculated to cause temporal damage, the power to punish such acts, when done maliciously, cannot be denied because they are to be followed and worked out by conduct which might have been lawful if not preceded by the acts. No conduct has such an absolute privilege as to justify all possible schemes of which it may be a part. The most innocent and constitutionally protected of acts or omissions may be made a step in a criminal plot, and if it is a step in a plot, neither its innocence nor the Constitution is sufficient to prevent the punishment of the plot by law.

It was urged farther that to make a right depend upon motives is to make it depend upon the whim of a jury, and to deny the right. But it must be assumed that the constitutional tribunal does its duty, and finds facts only because they are proved. The power of the legislature to make the fact of malice material we think sufficiently appears from what we already have said. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

[WHITE, J., gave a short dissenting opinion, based upon a wider construction of the statute.]

GRENADA LUMBER CO. v. MISSISSIPPI (1910) 217 U. S. 433, 440, 442, 30 Sup. Ct. 535, 54 L. Ed. 826. Mr. Justice LUTON (upholding a Mississippi statute criminally forbidding a combination of retailers not to buy from wholesalers who sold directly to consumers):

"That any one of the persons engaged in the retail lumber business might have made a fixed rule of conduct not to buy his stock from a producer or wholesaler who should sell to consumers in competition with himself is plain. No law which would infringe his freedom of contract in that particular would stand. But when the plaintiffs in error combine and agree that no one of them will trade with any producer or wholesaler who shall sell to a consumer within the trade range of any of them, quite another case is presented. An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many, acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished, if the result be hurtful to the public, or to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed. Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 555, 556, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 32 L. Ed. 228.

"But the plaintiffs in error say that the action which they have taken is purely defensive, and that they cannot maintain themselves as independent dealers, supplying the consumer, if the producers or wholesalers from whom they buy may not be prevented from competing with them for the direct trade of the consumer.

"For the purpose of suppressing this competition, they have not stopped with an individual obligation to refrain from dealing with one who sells within his own circle, and thereby deprives him of a possible customer, but have agreed not to deal with anyone who makes sales to consumers, which sales might have been made by any one of the seventy-seven independent members of the association. Thus they have stripped themselves of all freedom of contract in order to compel those against whom they have combined to elect between their combined trade and that of consumers. That such an agreement is one in restraint of trade is undeniable, whatever the motive or necessity which has induced the compact. Whether it would be an illegal restraint at common law is not now for our determination. It is an illegal combination and conspiracy under the Mississippi statute. That is enough if the statute does not infringe the fourteenth amendment.

"The argument that the situation is one which justified the defensive measures taken by the plaintiffs in error is one which we need neither refute nor concede. Neither are we required to consider any mere question of the expediency of such a law. It is a regulation of commerce purely intrastate,—a subject as entirely under the control of the state as is the delegated control over interstate commerce exercised by the United States. The power exercised is the police power reserved to the states. The limitation upon its exercise, contained in the federal Constitution, is found in the fourteenth amendment, whereby no state may pass any law by which a citizen is deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. A like limitation upon the legislative power will be found in the Constitution of each state. That legislation might be so arbitrary or so irrational in depriving a citizen of freedom of contract as to come under the condemnation of the amendment may be conceded.

"In dealing with certain Kansas legislation in regulation of state commerce, which was claimed to be so extreme as to be an unwarranted infringement of liberty of contract, this court, in Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U. S. 447, 457, 25 Sup. Ct. 289, 291, 49 L. Ed. 546, 551, said: 'Undoubtedly there is a certain freedom of contract which cannot be destroyed by legislative enactment. In pursuance of that freedom, parties may seek to further their business interests, and it may not be always easy to draw the line between those contracts which are beyond the reach of the police power, and those which are subject to prohibition or restraint. But a secret arrangement, by which, under penalties, an apparently existing competition among all the dealers in a community in one of the necessities of life is substantially destroyed, without any merging of interests through partnership or incorporation, is one to which the police power extends. This is as far as we need go in sustaining the judgment in this case.'"¹

¹ Accord: United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U. S. 505, 571-573, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259 (1898) (reasonable pooling agreement by railroads); Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904) (corporation formed to hold stock of competing railroads); United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663 (1911) (monopolizing tobacco trade by acts unduly restrictive of competition). The United States may forbid a railroad from carrying in interstate commerce commodities produced by it. United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836 (1909).

RIDEOUT v. KNOX (1889) 148 Mass. 368, 372, 373, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560, HOLMES, J. (upholding a Massachusetts statute making the malicious erection of a fence over six feet high, for the purpose of annoying adjoining occupants, a private nuisance):

"It is plain that the right to use one's property for the sole purpose of injuring others is not one of the immediate rights of ownership. It is not a right for the sake of which property is recognized by the law, but is only a more or less necessary incident of rights which are established for very different ends. It has been thought by respectable authorities that even at common law the extent of a man's rights in cases like the present might depend upon the motive with which he acted. Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117, 121, 122. See Carson v. Railroad Co., 8 Gray, 423, 424; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 544, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Swett v. Cutts, 50 N. H. 439, 447, 9 Am. Rep. 276.

"We do not so understand the common law, and we concede further that to a large extent the power to use one's property malevolently in any way which would be lawful for other ends is an incident of property which cannot be taken away even by legislation. It may be assumed that under our constitution the legislature would not have power to prohibit putting up or maintaining stores or houses with malicious intent,¹ and thus to make a large part of the property of the commonwealth dependent upon what a jury might find to have been the past or to be the present motives of the owner.

But it does not follow that the rule is the same for a boundary fence, unnecessarily built more than six feet high. It may be said that the difference is only one of degree. Most differences are, when nicely analyzed. At any rate, difference of degree is one of the distinctions by which the right of the legislature to exercise the police power is determined. Some small limitations of previously existing rights incident to property may be imposed for the sake of preventing a manifest evil; larger ones could not be, except by the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 243, 49 Am. Rep. 27.

The statute is confined to fences and structures in the nature of fences, and to such fences only as unnecessarily exceed six feet in height. It is hard to imagine a more insignificant curtailment of the rights of property. Even the right to build a fence above six feet is not denied when any convenience of the owner would be served by building higher."²

¹ Accord: Karasek v. Peter, 22 Wash. 419, 61 Pac. 33, 50 L. R. A. 345 (1900).

² In Horan v. Byrnes, 72 N. H. 93, 98, 101, 51 Atl. 915, 917, 949 (62 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 670) (1903), in upholding a similar statute. Parsons, C. J., said: "It is true that an act which one has the right to do under all circumstances, like the bringing of a suit upon a valid claim (Truel v. Plumer, 69 N. H. 498, 43 Atl. 618, 76 Am. St. Rep. 190), cannot be made

COMMONWEALTH v. STRAUSS.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1906. 191 Mass. 545, 78 N. E. 136, 11 L. R. A. [N. S.] 968, 6 Ann. Cas. 842.)

[Exceptions to indictment. A Massachusetts statute criminally forbade any person doing business in the state to make it a condition of the sale of goods that the purchaser should not deal in the goods of any other person; with certain exceptions regarding exclusive agents and selling territory. Strauss, agent for the Continental Tobacco Company, sold plug tobacco on condition that if the purchaser dealt in the goods of no other tobacco manufacturer a rebate of six per cent. would be returned. The prices asked for tobacco made the receipt of this rebate practically necessary in order to secure a profit to the retailer. Defendant, being convicted under this statute, alleged exceptions.]

KNOWLTON, C. J. * * * The rights relied upon under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and under the Declaration of Rights in the Constitution of Massachusetts, are substantially the same, namely, the right of every person to his life, liberty and property, including freedom to use his faculties in all lawful ways, "to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling, to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned." See Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 431 (41 L. Ed. 832). * * *

There is no doubt that the statute before us puts a limitation upon the general right to make contracts. The contention of the commonwealth is that this limitation is valid as an exercise of the police power.

actionable by the motive which accompanies it. But as applied to the use of real estate the argument begs the question, which is whether the enjoyment of real estate includes the right to use it solely to injure another. Because when employed for a useful purpose such use may rightfully injure another, it does not follow that the same use for a wrongful purpose may also rightfully injure another, except upon the theory of absolute dominion, because the character of the use is an element of the right. * * * But the landowner's right in the enjoyment of his estate being that of reasonable use merely, there attaches at once to each the correlative right not to be disturbed by the malicious, and hence unreasonable, use made by another. To hold that a right is infringed because, by the noxious use made by another, the air coming upon a landowner's premises is made more or less injurious, and to deny the invasion of a right by an unreasonable use which shuts off air and light entirely, is an attempt to bound a right inherent and essential to the common enjoyment of property by the limitations of an ancient form of action. An unreasonable use of one estate may constitute a nuisance by its diminution of the right of enjoyment of another, without furnishing all the elements necessary to maintain an action quare clausum fregit; though in particular cases it may be said that no right is invaded unless something comes from the one lot to the other."

See Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Rhodes, 220 U. S. 502, 31 Sup. Ct. 490, 55 L. Ed. 561 (1911) (act changing former law so as to forbid unauthorized publication of photograph of living person as an advertisement).

The nature of the police power and its extent, as applied to conceivable cases, cannot easily be stated with exactness. It includes the right to legislate in the interest of the public health, the public safety and the public morals. If the power is to be held within the limits of the field thus defined, the words should be interpreted broadly and liberally. If we are to include in the definition, as many judges have done, the right to legislate for the public welfare, this term should be defined with some strictness, so as not to include everything that might be enacted on grounds of mere expediency. In the very late case of Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 53, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 541, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133, the majority of the court said, "Those powers, broadly stated, and without at present any attempt at a more specific limitation, relate to the safety, health, morals and general welfare of the public." In the opinion in Louisville & Nashville Railroad v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 701, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 723 (40 L. Ed. 849) we find this language: "The general rule holds good, that whatever is contrary to public policy or inimical to the public interests is subject to the police power of the state, and within legislative control, and in the exertion of such power the Legislature is vested with a large discretion, which if exercised for the protection of the public, is beyond the reach of judicial inquiry."

It becomes necessary to look somewhat critically at the statute before us, to discover its effect upon the rights of contracting parties, and the purpose of the Legislature in enacting it. In the sale of goods to be resold it forbids one kind of contract which might be made in competition with other sellers of similar goods. It leaves open every other kind of contract. We may infer that the Legislature was providing for cases in which this particular kind of contract would be unfair competition as against weaker dealers, and would be injurious to the public as tending to crush ordinary competitors, and thus create a monopoly, from which the community as consumers would ultimately suffer. If, at the time of the enactment of this statute, there were dangers of this kind confronting the people of the commonwealth, and if this prohibition is a reasonable way of averting such dangers, we find justification for the legislation, unless it involves a serious injury to those who are restrained by it. It permits every kind of contract of sale but one. It does not prohibit the appointment of agents, or sole agents, for the sale of property. It allows contracts for the exclusive sale of goods, wares or merchandise. The contracts that it forbids are only those which, in ordinary competition among equals, no one would have any interest or desire to make. As a rule, it is only a person or corporation that is intrenched in a position of power that can afford to say to a retailer or jobber, "I will not let you have my goods unless you will agree to sell none furnished by others." One who controls the sources of supply of goods, which are in such demand that a dealer cannot afford to be without them, can safely say to a purchaser "You must give me all your trade if you want to sell any of my goods."

In that way he may be able to obtain a complete monopoly of the trade in goods such as he supplies.

The evidence in this case illustrates some of the tendencies of the times. The defendant's employer, the Continental Tobacco Company, is incorporated with a capital stock of $75,000,000. At the time of the sales for which the defendant is indicted it had absorbed more than 12 establishments used for the manufacture and sale of plug tobaccos, and owned by as many proprietors. Before its incorporation there was free and open competition in the plug tobacco market in Massachusetts. It so consolidated and restricted the trade that, in January, 1904, it produced about 95 per cent. of the plug tobacco, and about 80 per cent. of the cut plug tobacco in Massachusetts. Conditions were about the same in all parts of the state. There were about 210 jobbers in Massachusetts, and practically all stopped buying of independent manufacturers when this corporation made this new proposition, presented by the defendant in making the sales complained of. It had acquired such strength in its own field that, by the use of such means as the statute forbade, it could expect easily to obtain a practical monopoly of the plug tobacco trade in Massachusetts. This evidence furnishes an illustration of what we fairly may assume was being done, or might be expected to be done, in the manufacture and sale of other products, even of some of the necessities of life. Tobacco is not one of the necessities of life, but its use is so common that to many persons it seems almost as necessary as food. The poor much more than the rich would be likely to be affected by the monopoly of the market for plug tobacco, and a rise in the price which might be expected to follow it.

This statute was not enacted for protection in the purchase of any one kind of property. Its object doubtless was to prevent the use of this particular method of crushing competitors in any kind of trade in which the public might be interested. Especially was it important to prevent monopoly in the sale of the necessities of life. In view of this, we deem it not unreasonable that the statute was made to apply to sales of all kinds of goods.

Legislation should be adapted to existing conditions. A few years ago there was no occasion for such an enactment. But lately we see great aggregations of capital formed to obtain command, if possible, of the field of production or distribution into which they enter. Even now, in the transaction of business among equals where there is free competition, the statute is unnecessary, for there is no inducement to do that which it forbids. Its practical effect is to prevent great corporations from making a certain kind of contracts intended to drive ordinary competitors out of business.

The question is whether, at the time of the passage of this statute, there were conditions actually existing or reasonably anticipated which called for such legislative intervention in the interest of the general public. We are of opinion that there were, and that, in a broad and liberal sense of the words, this statute was enacted in the interest of the public health and the public safety, if not of the public morals. Certainly the purpose of the Legislature was to promote the general welfare of the public. We cannot say that this legislative action was not a legitimate exercise of the police power. Its invasion of the general right to make contracts is so slight, and in a field so remote from ordinary mercantile transactions, that there is little ground of objection on that score. The abuse at which the statute is aimed, while not practiced by many persons, is real and widely pervasive. * * *

Exceptions overruled.¹

ADAIR v. UNITED STATES.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1908. 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764.)

[Error to the federal District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky. An act of Congress (Act June 1, 1898, c. 370) provided for the arbitration of disputes between interstate railroad carriers and their employees, and by section 10 made it a misdemeanor for such carriers or their agents to "threaten any employee with loss of employment," or "unjustly [to] discriminate against any employee because of his membership in [any] labor corporation, association, or organization." Adair was indicted for violating this section, in that, as agent for an interstate railroad, he discharged one Coppage because of his membership in a labor union. The trial court overruled a demurrer to the indictment, and this writ of error was taken.]

Mr. Justice HARLAN. * * * The first inquiry is whether the part of the tenth section of the act of 1898 upon which the first count

¹ Accord: Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U. S. 157, 33 Sup. Ct. 66, 57 L. Ed. — (1912) (prohibition of sales at one place lower than at another with intent to destroy competition); Opinion of the Justices, 211 Mass. 620, 99 N. E. 294 (1912) (same, with intent to create a monopoly); State v. Fairmont Creamery Co. of Nebraska, 153 Iowa, 702, 133 N. W. 895, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821 (1912) (similar prohibition against discriminatory purchase of dairy products); State v. Bridgeman & Russell Co., 117 Minn. 186, 134 N. W. 496 (1912) (same).

In Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, above, Holmes, J., said (226 U. S. 161, 33 Sup. Ct. 67, 57 L. Ed. —): "We must assume that the legislature of South Dakota considered that people selling in two places made the prohibited use of their opportunities, and that such use was harmful, although the usual efforts of competitors were desired. It might have been argued to the legislature with more force than it can be to us that recoupment in one place of losses in another is merely an instance of financial ability to compete. If the legislature thought that that particular manifestation of ability usually came from great corporations whose power it deemed excessive and for that reason did more harm than good in their state, and that there was no other case of frequent occurrence where the same could be said, we cannot review their economics or their facts. That the law embodies a widespread conviction appears from the decisions in other states."

of the indictment was based is repugnant to the fifth amendment of the Constitution, declaring that no person shall be deprived of liberty or property without due process of law. In our opinion that section, in the particular mentioned, is an invasion of the personal liberty, as well as of the right of property, guaranteed by that amendment. Such liberty and right embrace the right to make contracts for the purchase of the labor of others, and equally the right to make contracts for the sale of one's own labor; each right, however, being subject to the fundamental condition that no contract, whatever its subject-matter, can be sustained which the law, upon reasonable grounds, forbids as inconsistent with the public interests, or as hurtful to the public order, or as detrimental to the common good. * * *

It was the right of the defendant to prescribe the terms upon which the services of Coppage would be accepted, and it was the right of Coppage to become or not, as he chose, an employee of the railroad company upon the terms offered to him. Mr. Cooley, in his treatise on Torts, p. 278, well says: "It is a part of every man's civil rights that he be left at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason, or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice, or malice. With his reasons neither the public nor third persons have any legal concern. It is also his right to have business relations with anyone with whom he can make contracts, and, if he is wrongfully deprived of this right by others, he is entitled to redress." * * * [Lochner v. New York, ante, p. 414, is here discussed.]

While, as already suggested, the right of liberty and property guaranteed by the Constitution against deprivation without due process of law is subject to such reasonable restraints as the common good or the general welfare may require, it is not within the functions of government—at least, in the absence of contract between the parties—to compel any person, in the course of his business and against his will, to accept or retain the personal services of another, or to compel any person, against his will, to perform personal services for another. The right of a person to sell his labor upon such terms as he deems proper is, in its essence, the same as the right of the purchaser of labor to prescribe the conditions upon which he will accept such labor from the person offering to sell it. So the right of the employee to quit the service of the employer, for whatever reason, is the same as the right of the employer, for whatever reason, to dispense with the services of such employee. It was the legal right of the defendant, Adair,—however unwise such a course might have been,—to discharge Coppage because of his being a member of a labor organization, as it was the legal right of Coppage, if he saw fit to do so,—however unwise such a course on his part might have been,—to quit the service in which he was engaged, because the defendant employed some persons who were not members of a labor organization. In all such particulars the employer and the employee have equality of right, and any legislation that disturbs that equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land.

These views find support in adjudged cases, some of which are cited in the margin. [Citations omitted.] Of course, if the parties by contract fixed the period of service, and prescribed the conditions upon which the contract may be terminated, such contract would control the rights of the parties as between themselves, and for any violation of those provisions the party wronged would have his appropriate civil action. And it may be—but upon that point we express no opinion—that, in the case of a labor contract between an employer engaged in interstate commerce and his employee, Congress could make it a crime for either party, without sufficient or just excuse or notice, to disregard the terms of such contract or to refuse to perform it. In the absence, however, of a valid contract between the parties controlling their conduct towards each other and fixing a period of service, it cannot be, we repeat, that an employer is under any legal obligation, against his will, to retain an employee in his personal service any more than an employee can be compelled, against his will, to remain in the personal service of another. * * *

Judgment reversed.

Mr. Justice McKENNA, dissenting. * * * The provisions of the act are explicit and present a well co-ordinated plan for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees, by bringing the disputes to arbitration and accommodation, and thereby prevent strikes and the public disorder and derangement of business that may be consequent upon them. * * *

We are told that labor associations are to be commended. May not, then, Congress recognize their existence? yes, and recognize their power as conditions to be counted with in framing its legislation? Of what use would it be to attempt to bring bodies of men to agreement and compromise of controversies if you put out of view the influences which move them or the fellowship which binds them,—maybe controls and impels them, whether rightfully or wrongfully, to make the cause of one the cause of all? And this practical wisdom Congress observed,—observed, I may say, not in speculation or uncertain prevision of evils, but in experience of evils,—an experience which approached to the dimensions of a national calamity. The facts of history should not be overlooked nor the course of legislation. The act involved in the present case was preceded by one enacted in 1888 of similar purport. 25 Stat. at Large, 501, c. 1063. That act did not recognize labor associations, or distinguish between the members of such associations and the other employees of carriers. It failed in its purpose, whether from defect in its provisions or other cause we may only conjecture. At any rate, it did not avert the strike at Chicago in 1894. Investigation followed, and, as a result of it, the act of 1898 was finally passed. Presumably its provisions and remedy were addressed to the mischief which the act of 1888 failed to reach or avert.

It was the judgment of Congress that the scheme of arbitration might be helped by engaging in it the labor associations. Those associations unified bodies of employees in every department of the carriers, and this unity could be an obstacle or an aid to arbitration. It was attempted to be made an aid; but how could it be made an aid if, pending the efforts of "mediation and conciliation" of the dispute, as provided in section 2 of the act, other provisions of the act may be arbitrarily disregarded, which are of concern to the members in the dispute? How can it be an aid, how can controversies which may seriously interrupt or threaten to interrupt the business of carriers (I paraphrase the words of the statute) be averted or composed if the carrier can bring on the conflict or prevent its amicable settlement by the exercise of mere whim and caprice? I say mere whim or caprice, for this is the liberty which is attempted to be vindicated as the constitutional right of the carriers. And it may be exercised in mere whim and caprice. If ability, the qualities of efficient and faithful workmanship, can be found outside of labor associations, surely they may be found inside of them. Liberty is an attractive theme, but the liberty which is exercised in sheer antipathy does not plead strongly for recognition. * * *

It also seems to me to be an oversight of the proportions of things to contend that, in order to encourage a policy of arbitration between carriers and their employees which may prevent a disastrous interruption of commerce, the derangement of business, and even greater evils to the public welfare, Congress cannot restrain the discharge of an employee, and yet can, to enforce a policy of unrestrained competition between railroads, prohibit reasonable agreements between them as to the rates at which merchandise shall be carried. And mark the contrast of what is prohibited. In the one case the restraint, it may be, of a whim,—certainly of nothing that affects the ability of an employee to perform his duties; nothing, therefore, which is of any material interest to the carrier,—in the other case, a restraint of a carefully-considered policy which had as its motive great material interests and benefits to the railroads, and, in the opinion of many, to the public. May such action be restricted, must it give way to the public welfare, while the other, moved, it may be, by prejudice and antagonism, is entrenched impregably in the fifth amendment of the Constitution against regulation in the public interest?

I would not be misunderstood. I grant that there are rights which can have no material measure. There are rights which, when exercised in a private business, may not be disturbed or limited. With them we are not concerned. We are dealing with rights exercised in a quasi public business, and therefore subject to control in the interest of the public.

Mr. Justice HOLMES, dissenting. * * * The ground on which this particular law is held bad is not so much that it deals with matters remote from commerce among the states, as that it interferes with the paramount individual rights secured by the fifth amendment. The section is, in substance, a very limited interference with freedom of contract, no more. It does not require the carriers to employ anyone. It does not forbid them to refuse to employ anyone, for any reason they deem good, even where the notion of a choice of persons is a fiction and wholesale employment is necessary upon general principles that it might be proper to control. The section simply prohibits the more powerful party to exact certain undertakings, or to threaten dismissal or unjustly discriminate on certain grounds against those already employed. I hardly can suppose that the grounds on which a contract lawfully may be made to end are less open to regulation than other terms. So I turn to the general question whether the employment can be regulated at all.

I confess that I think that the right to make contracts at will that has been derived from the word "liberty" in the amendments has been stretched to its extreme by the decisions; but they agree that sometimes the right may be restrained. Where there is, or generally is believed to be, an important ground of public policy for restraint, the Constitution does not forbid it, whether this court agrees or disagrees with the policy pursued. It cannot be doubted that to prevent strikes, and, so far as possible, to foster its scheme of arbitration, might be deemed by Congress an important point of policy, and I think it impossible to say that Congress might not reasonably think that the provision in question would help a good deal to carry its policy along. But suppose the only effect really were to tend to bring about the complete unionizing of such railroad laborers as Congress can deal with, I think that object alone would justify the act. I quite agree that the question what and how much good labor unions do, is one on which intelligent people may differ; I think that laboring men sometimes attribute to them advantages, as many attribute to combinations of capital disadvantages, that really are due to economic conditions of a far wider and deeper kind; but I could not pronounce it unwarranted if Congress should decide that to foster a strong union was for the best interest, not only of the men, but of the railroads and the country at large.

[Moody, J., did not sit.]

ADAMS v. BRENNAN (1898) 177 Ill. 194, 199 201, 52 N. E. 314, 42 L. R. A. 718, 69 Am. St. Rep. 222, Mr. Justice CARTWRIGHT (holding invalid a stipulation of the Chicago board of education requiring contractors to employ only union workmen upon school buildings):

"It is plain that the rule adopted by the board and included in this contract is a discrimination between different classes of citizens, and of such a nature as to restrict competition and to increase the cost of work. It is unquestionable that if the legislature should enact a statute containing the same provision as this contract in regard to any work to be done for boards of education, or if they should, by a statute, undertake to require this board, as the agency of the state in the management of school affairs in the city of Chicago, to adopt such a rule or insert such a clause in its contracts, or should undertake to authorize it to do so, the provision would be absolutely null and void, as in conflict with the constitution of the state. If such a restriction were sought to be enforced by any law of the state, it would constitute an infringement upon the constitutional rights of citizens, so that the state, in its sovereign capacity, through its legislature, could not enact such a provision. Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 7 N. E. 631, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 31 N. E. 395, 16 L. R. A. 492; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206; Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 32 N. E. 364, 17 L. R. A. 853; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 40 N. E. 454, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315; People v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 48 N. E. 1062, 39 L. R. A. 373, 62 Am. St. Rep. 404. There is no more reason or justification for such a contract as this than there would be for a provision that no one should be employed except members of some particular party or church. In any such case it might be said that the board entertained a bona fide opinion that the members of some political party were more intelligent and better capable of performing the work, so that better results would be attained; or that the members of a church, on account of their higher standard of morality, would more faithfully and conscientiously carry out the contract. The fact that the board may have been of the opinion that its action was for the benefit of the public cannot afford a justification for limiting competition in bidders, and requiring them to abandon the right to contract with whomsoever they may choose for the performance of the work.

"There seems, however to be a claim that the board of education, although it could not be lawfully required or authorized to make such a contract, may have some sort of discretion to do so; and the only question in the case on the subject of the validity of such contract is whether the board possesses power beyond that of the legislature, in which is vested the entire legislative authority of the state. Upon what theory it could be claimed that this board of education, which exercises merely the function of the state in maintaining public schools within a limited portion of the state, can possess either power or discretion which the state in its sovereign capacity could not confer upon it, we are unable to imagine. No argument is made which would justify such a conclusion. There can be no greater power of the board to act of its own motion than by virtue of positive law. The results in either case are equally in conflict with the organic law, and such legislation, contract, or action, whatever form it may take, is void. Nor can the fact, if it be a fact, that an individual might make such a bargain, authorize these public officers exercising a public trust to do so. The individual may, if he chooses, give away his money; but the public officer, acting as a trustee, has no such liberty, and no right to surrender to a committee or any one else the rights of those for whom he acts."¹

MUNN v. ILLINOIS.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1876. 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Illinois, which had upheld a conviction of Munn and Scott for violating a state statute fixing maximum rates for grain elevator charges. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Chief Justice WAITE. The question to be determined in this case is whether the General Assembly of Illinois can, under the limitations upon the legislative power of the states imposed by the Constitution of the United States, fix by law the maximum of charges for the storage of grain in warehouses at Chicago and other places in the state having not less than one hundred thousand inhabitants, "in which grain is stored in bulk, and in which the grain of different owners is mixed together, or in which grain is stored in such a manner that the identity of different lots or parcels cannot be accurately preserved."

* * *

The Constitution contains no definition of the word "deprive," as used in the fourteenth amendment. To determine its signification, therefore, it is necessary to ascertain the effect which usage has given it, when employed in the same or a like connection.

While this provision of the amendment is new in the Constitution of the United States, as a limitation upon the powers of the states, it is old as a principle of civilized government. It is found in Magna Charta, and, in substance if not in form, in nearly or quite all the constitutions that have been from time to time adopted by the several states of the Union. By the fifth amendment, it was introduced into the Constitution of the United States as a limitation upon the powers of the national government, and by the fourteenth, as a guarantee against any encroachment upon an acknowledged right of citizenship by the legislatures of the states. * * *

When one becomes a member of society, he necessarily parts with some rights or privileges which, as an individual not affected by his relations to others, he might retain. "A body politic," as aptly defined in the preamble of the Constitution of Massachusetts, "is a social compact by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good." This does not confer power upon the whole people to control rights which are purely and exclusively private (Thorpe v. R. & V. Railroad Co., 27 Vt. 143, 62 Am. Dec. 625); but it does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas." From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases, 5 How. 583, 12 L. Ed. 256, "are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty, * * * that is to say, * * * the power to govern men and things." Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, &c., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day, statutes are to be found in many of the states upon some or all these subjects; and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such legislation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property. With the fifth amendment in force Congress, in 1820, conferred power upon the city of Washington "to regulate * * * the rates of wharfage at private wharves, * * * the sweeping of chimneys, and to fix the rates of fees therefor, * * * and the weight and quality of bread," 3 Stat. 587, § 7; and, in 1848, "to make all necessary regulations respecting hackney carriages and the rates of fare of the same, and the rates of hauling by cartmen, wagoners, carmen, and draymen, and the rates of commission of auctioneers," 9 Id. 224, § 2.

¹ Accord: See cases collected in 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 815, 816.

From this it is apparent that, down to the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, it was not supposed that statutes regulating the use, or even the price of the use, of private property necessarily deprived an owner of his property without due process of law. Under some circumstances they may, but not under all. The amendment does not change the law in this particular: it simply prevents the states from doing that which will operate as such a deprivation.

This brings us to inquire as to the principles upon which this power of regulation rests, in order that we may determine what is within and what without its operative effect. Looking, then, to the common law, from whence came the right which the Constitution protects, we find that when private property is "affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati only." This was said by Lord Chief Justice Hale more than two hundred years ago, in his treatise De Portibus Maris, 1 Harg. Law Tracts, 78, and has been accepted without objection as an essential element in the law of property ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but, so long as he maintains the use, he must submit to the control. * * * [Here follow quotations from Lord Hale, regarding ferries and wharves, and from Aldnutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 527, regarding warehouses.]

In later times, the same principle came under consideration in the Supreme Court of Alabama. That court was called upon, in 1841, to decide whether the power granted to the city of Mobile to regulate the weight and price of bread was unconstitutional, and it was contended that "it would interfere with the right of the citizen to pursue his lawful trade or calling in the mode his judgment might dictate"; but the court said, "there is no motive * * * for this interference on the part of the legislature with the lawful actions of individuals, or the mode in which private property shall be enjoyed, unless such calling affects the public interest, or private property is employed in a manner which directly affects the body of the people. Upon this principle, in this state, tavern-keepers are licensed; * * * and the county court is required, at least once a year, to settle the rates of innkeepers. Upon the same principle is founded the control which the legislature has always exercised in the establishment and regulation of mills, ferries, bridges, turnpike roads, and other kindred subjects." Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 140, 36 Am. Dec. 441.¹

From the same source comes the power to regulate the charges of common carriers, which was done in England as long ago as the third year of the reign of William and Mary, and continued until within a comparatively recent period. And in the first statute we find the following suggestive preamble, to wit: "And whereas divers wagners and other carriers, by combination amongst themselves, have raised the prices of carriage of goods in many places to excessive rates, to the great injury of the trade: Be it, therefore, enacted," etc. 3 W. & M. c. 12, § 24; 3 Stat. at Large (Great Britain) 481.

Common carriers exercise a sort of public office, and have duties to perform in which the public is interested. New Jersey Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 382, 12 L. Ed. 465. Their business is, therefore, "affected with a public interest," within the meaning of the doctrine which Lord Hale has so forcibly stated.

¹ See Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 14, 8 Am. Rep. 287 (1870) for a reference to Massachusetts colonial acts regulating the prices of labor and commodities.

But we need not go further. Enough has already been said to show that, when private property is devoted to a public use, it is subject to public regulation. It remains only to ascertain whether the warehouses of these plaintiffs in error, and the business which is carried on there, come within the operation of this principle.

For this purpose we accept as true the statements of fact contained in the elaborate brief of one of the counsel of the plaintiffs in error. From these it appears that "the great producing region of the West and Northwest sends its grain by water and rail to Chicago, where the greater part of it is shipped by vessel for transportation to the seaboard by the Great Lakes, and some of it is forwarded by railway to the Eastern ports. * * * Vessels, to some extent, are loaded in the Chicago harbor, and sailed through the St. Lawrence directly to Europe. * * * The quantity [of grain] received in Chicago has made it the greatest grain market in the world. This business has created a demand for means by which the immense quantity of grain can be handled or stored, and these have been found in grain warehouses, which are commonly called elevators, because the grain is elevated from the boat or car, by machinery operated by steam, into the bins prepared for its reception, and elevated from the bins, by a like process, into the vessel or car which is to carry it on. * * * In this way the largest traffic between the citizens of the country north and west of Chicago and the citizens of the country lying on the Atlantic coast north of Washington is in grain which passes through the elevators of Chicago. In this way the trade in grain is carried on by the inhabitants of seven or eight of the great states of the West with four or five of the states lying on the sea-shore, and forms the largest part of interstate commerce in these states. The grain warehouses or elevators in Chicago are immense structures, holding from 300,000 to 1,000,000 bushels at one time, according to size. They are divided into bins of large capacity and great strength. * * * They are located with the river harbor on one side and the railway tracks on the other; and the grain is run through them from car to vessel, or boat to car, as may be demanded in the course of business. It has been found impossible to preserve each owner's grain separate, and this has given rise to a system of inspection and grading, by which the grain of different owners is mixed, and receipts issued for the number of bushels which are negotiable, and redeemable in like kind, upon demand. This mode of conducting the business was inaugurated more than twenty years ago, and has grown to immense proportions. The railways have found it impracticable to own such elevators, and public policy forbids the transaction of such business by the carrier; the ownership has, therefore, been by private individuals, who have embarked their capital and devoted their industry to such business as a private pursuit."

In this connection it must also be borne in mind that, although in 1874 there were in Chicago fourteen warehouses adapted to this particular business, and owned by about thirty persons, nine business firms controlled them, and that the prices charged and received for storage were such "as have been from year to year agreed upon and established by the different elevators or warehouses in the city of Chicago, and which rates have been annually published in one or more newspapers printed in said city, in the month of January in each year, as the established rates for the year then next ensuing such publication." Thus it is apparent that all the elevating facilities through which these vast productions "of seven or eight great states of the West" must pass on the way "to four or five of the states on the sea-shore" may be a "virtual" monopoly.

Under such circumstances it is difficult to see why, if the common carrier, or the miller, or the ferryman, or the innkeeper, or the wharfinger, or the baker, or the cartman, or the hackney-coachman, pursues a public employment and exercises "a sort of public office," these plaintiffs in error do not. They stand, to use again the language of their counsel, in the very "gateway of commerce," and take toll from all who pass. Their business most certainly "tends to a common charge, and is become a thing of public interest and use." Every bushel of grain for its passage "pays a toll, which is a common charge," and, therefore, according to Lord Hale, every such warehouseman "ought to be under public regulation, viz., that he * * * take but reasonable toll." Certainly, if any business can be clothed "with a public interest and cease to be juris privati only," this has been. It may not be made so by the operation of the Constitution of Illinois or this statute, but it is by the facts. * * *

Neither is it a matter of any moment that no precedent can be found for a statute precisely like this. It is conceded that the business is one of recent origin, that its growth has been rapid, and that it is already of great importance. And it must also be conceded that it is a business in which the whole public has a direct and positive interest. It presents, therefore, a case for the application of a long-known and well-established principle in social science, and this statute simply extends the law so as to meet this new development of commercial progress. There is no attempt to compel these owners to grant the public an interest in their property, but to declare their obligations, if they use it in this particular manner.

It matters not in this case that these plaintiffs in error had built their warehouses and established their business before the regulations complained of were adopted. What they did was from the beginning subject to the power of the body politic to require them to conform to such regulations as might be established by the proper authorities for the common good. They entered upon their business and provided themselves with the means to carry it on subject to this condition. If they did not wish to submit themselves to such interference, they should not have clothed the public with an interest in their concerns. The same principle applies to them that does to the proprietor of a hackney-carriage, and as to him it has never been supposed that he was exempt from regulating statutes or ordinances because he had purchased his horses and carriage and established his business before the statute or the ordinance was adopted.

It is insisted, however, that the owner of property is entitled to a reasonable compensation for its use, even though it be clothed with a public interest, and that what is reasonable is a judicial and not a legislative question.

As has already been shown, the practice has been otherwise. In countries where the common law prevails, it has been customary from time immemorial for the legislature to declare what shall be a reasonable compensation under such circumstances, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable. Undoubtedly, in mere private contracts, relating to matters in which the public has no interest, what is reasonable must be ascertained judicially. But this is because the legislature has no control over such a contract. So, too, in matters which do affect the public interest, and as to which legislative control may be exercised, if there are no statutory regulations upon the subject, the courts must determine what is reasonable. The controlling fact is the power to regulate at all. If that exists, the right to establish the maximum of charge, as one of the means of regulation, is implied. In fact, the common-law rule, which requires the charge to be reasonable, is itself a regulation as to price. Without it the owner could make his rates at will, and compel the public to yield to his terms, or forego the use.

But a mere common-law regulation of trade or business may be changed by statute. A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law cannot be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will, or even at the whim, of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances. To limit the rate of charge for services rendered in a public employment, or for the use of property in which the public has an interest, is only changing a regulation which existed before. It establishes no new principle in the law, but only gives a new effect to an old one.

We know that this is a power which may be abused; but that is no argument against its existence. For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts. * * *

Judgment affirmed.²

[FIELD, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which STRONG, J., concurred.]

² Accord: Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 12 Sup. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247 (1892) (collecting cases of rate regulation of carriers, warehousemen, and gas, water, telephone, and telegraph companies); Brass v. North Dakota ex rel. Stolser, 153 U. S. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. 857, 38 L. Ed. 757 (1894) (grain elevators in state where no monopoly); Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 85, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92 (1901) (stock yards); German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 189 Fed. 769 (1911) (fire insurance); and cases concerning various other occupations collected in 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834.

Contra: American Surety Co. of New York v. Shallenberger, 183 Fed. 636 (1910) (surety bonds); Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 77 Pac. 924, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 1 Ann. Cas. 428 (1904) (employment agencies).

Compare the common practice of legally restricting rates of interest, Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, 569, 31 Sup. Ct. 134, 54 L. Ed. 1155 (1910); and see the observations of Barclay, J. (dissenting), in State v. Loomis, ante, p. 427, note.

Regulations forbidding discrimination in service or rates by businesses affected by a public interest are also widely upheld. So, places of amusement, People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 18 N. E. 245, 1 L. R. A. 293, 6 Am. St. Rep. 389 (1888); Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520 (1907); and life insurance companies, Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Commonwealth, 113 Ky. 126, 67 S. W. 388 (1902). See Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Florida ex rel. Ellis, 203 U. S. 261, 27 Sup. Ct. 109, 51 L. Ed. 175 (1906) (discrimination not permissible even if necessary for a profit). Compare Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Motley, 219 U. S. 467, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671 (1911) (retroactive invalidation of annual pass for life issued in settlement of damage claim).

As to the validity of various kinds of mandatory regulation of such businesses, see Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 17 Sup. Ct. 627, 41 L. Ed. 1064 (1897); Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Ohio ex rel. Lawrence, 173 U. S. 285, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702 (1899); Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194 (1900); W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission, 180 U. S. 452, 21 Sup. Ct. 423, 45 L. Ed. 619 (1901); Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission, 193 U. S. 53, 24 Sup. Ct. 396, 48 L. Ed. 614 (1904); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Central Stock Yards Co., 212 U. S. 132, 29 Sup. Ct. 246, 53 L. Ed. 411 (1908); Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 217 U. S. 196, 30 Sup. Ct. 461, 54 L. Ed. 727, 18 Ann. Cas. 989 (1910); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. Ed. 167, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7 (1911); Washington v. Fairchild, 224 U. S. 510, 32 Sup. Ct. 535, 56 L. Ed. 863 (1912); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Crain, 228 U. S. 70, 33 Sup. Ct. 437, 57 L. Ed. — (1913). See, also, State v. Seougal, 3 S. D. 55, 75, 51 N. W. 858, 15 L. R. A. 477, 41 Am. St. Rep. 756 (1892) (banking affected by a public interest); Weed v. Bergh, ante, p. 457.

Can a business which does not offer to perform services for any one other than its owner, but which occupies a position of great economic and physical advantage, like a private pipe line for oil, be compelled by statute to serve the public for just compensation, unless it is taken outright by eminent domain? See Prairie Oil & Gas Co. v. United States, 204 Fed. 798 (1913).

REAGAN v. FARMERS' LOAN & TRUST CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1894. 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014.)

[Appeal from the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Texas. A Texas statute established a railroad commission and authorized it to fix reasonable rates for freight and passenger service in the state, after notice and hearing to the railroads affected. The rates thus established were to be deemed reasonable until the contrary was found in a proceeding instituted for this purpose by a railroad in a court of competent jurisdiction in Travis county, Texas, and the burden of proving them unreasonable by clear evidence was placed on the railroad. The plaintiff trust company, on behalf of bondholders of the International & Great Northern Railroad, filed a bill against the commission and the state Attorney General in the federal Circuit Court having jurisdiction in Travis county, alleging in detail the unreasonableness of a schedule of freight rates established for said railroad by the commission, and asking an injunction against its enforcement. From a decree in favor of the plaintiff, defendants took this appeal. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice BREWER. * * * It appears from the bill that, in pursuance of the powers given to it by this act, the state commission has made a body of rates for fares and freights. This body of rates, as a whole, is challenged by the plaintiff as unreasonable, unjust, and working a destruction of its rights of property. The defendant denies the power of the court to entertain an inquiry into that matter, insisting that the fixing of rates for carriage by a public carrier is a matter wholly within the power of the legislative department of the government and beyond examination by the courts.

It is doubtless true, as a general proposition, that the formation of a tariff of charges for the transportation by a common carrier of persons or property is a legislative or administrative rather than a judicial function. Yet it has always been recognized that, if a carrier attempted to charge a shipper an unreasonable sum, the courts had jurisdiction to inquire into that matter and to award to the shipper any amount exacted from him in excess of a reasonable rate; and also in a reverse case to render judgment in favor of the carrier for the amount found to be a reasonable charge. The province of the courts is not changed, nor the limit of judicial inquiry altered, because the legislature instead of the carrier prescribes the rates. The courts are not authorized to revise or change the body of rates imposed by a legislature or a commission; they do not determine whether one rate is preferable to another, or what under all circumstances would be fair and reasonable as between the carriers and the shippers; they do not engage in any mere administrative work; but still there can be no doubt of their power and duty to inquire whether a body of rates prescribed by a legislature or a commission is unjust and unreasonable, and such as to work a practical destruction to rights of property, and if found so to be, to restrain its operation. * * * [Here follow quotations from various cases, particularly Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 331, 6 Sup. Ct. 334, 388, 1191, 29 L. Ed. 636, and Chicago, etc., Ry. v. Minnesota, ante, p. 300.]

These cases all support the proposition that while it is not the province of the courts to enter upon the merely administrative duty of framing a tariff of rates for carriage, it is within the scope of judicial power and a part of judicial duty to restrain anything which, in the form of a regulation of rates, operates to deny to the owners of property invested in the business of transportation that equal protection which is the constitutional right of all owners of other property. There is nothing new or strange in this. It has always been a part of the judicial function to determine whether the act of one party (whether that party be a single individual, an organized body, or the public as a whole) operates to divest the other party of any rights of person or property. In every Constitution is the guarantee against the taking of private property for public purposes without just compensation. The equal protection of the laws which, by the fourteenth amendment, no state can deny to the individual, forbids legislation, in whatever form it may be enacted, by which the property of one individual is, without compensation, wrested from him for the benefit of another, or of the public. This, as has been often observed, is a government of law, and not a government of men, and it must never be forgotten that under such a government, with its constitutional limitations and guarantees, the forms of law and the machinery of government, with all their reach and power, must in their actual workings stop on the hither side of the unnecessary and uncompensated taking or destruction of any private property, legally acquired and legally held. It was, therefore, within the competency of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas, at the instance of the plaintiff, a citizen of another state, to enter upon an inquiry as to the reasonableness and justice of the rates prescribed by the railroad commission. Indeed, it was in so doing only exercising a power expressly named in the act creating the commission. * * *

And now, what deductions are fairly to be drawn from all the facts before us? Is there anything which detracts from the force of the general allegation that these rates are unjust and unreasonable? This clearly appears. The cost of this railroad property was $40,000,000; it cannot be replaced to-day for less than $25,000,000. There are $15,000,000 of mortgage bonds outstanding against it, and nearly $10,000,000 of stock. These bonds and stock represent money invested in the construction of this road. The owners of the stock have never received a dollar's worth of dividends in return for their investment. The road was thrown into the hands of a receiver for default in payment of the interest on the bonds. The earnings for the last three years prior to the establishment of these rates was insufficient to pay the operating expenses and the interest on the bonds. In order to make good the deficiency in interest the stock-holders have put their hands in their pockets and advanced over a million of dollars. The supplies for the road have been purchased at as cheap a rate as possible. The officers and employes have been paid no more than is necessary to secure men of the skill and knowledge requisite to suitable operation of the road. By the voluntary action of the company the rate in cents per ton per mile has decreased in ten years from 2.03 to 1.30. The actual reduction by virtue of this tariff in the receipts during the six or eight months that it has been enforced amounts to over $150,000. Can it be that a tariff which under these circumstances has worked such results to the parties whose money built this road is other than unjust and unreasonable? Would any investment ever be made of private capital in railroad enterprises with such as the proffered results?

It is unnecessary to decide, and we do not wish to be understood as laying down as an absolute rule, that in every case a failure to produce some profit to those who have invested their money in the building of a road is conclusive that the tariff is unjust and unreasonable. And yet justice demands that every one should receive some compensation for the use of his money or property, if it be possible without prejudice to the rights of others. There may be circumstances which would justify such a tariff; there may have been extravagance and a needless expenditure of money; there may be waste in the management of the road; enormous salaries, unjust discrimination as between individual shippers, resulting in general loss. The construction may have been at a time when material and labor were at the highest price, so that the actual cost far exceeds the present value; the road may have been unwisely built, in localities where there is no sufficient business to sustain a road. Doubtless, too, there are many other matters affecting the rights of the community in which the road is built as well as the rights of those who have built the road.

But we do hold that a general averment in a bill that a tariff as established is unjust and unreasonable, is supported by the admitted facts that the road cost far more than the amount of the stock and bonds outstanding; that such stock and bonds represent money invested in its construction; that there has been no waste or mismanagement in the construction or operation; that supplies and labor have been purchased at the lowest possible price consistent with the successful operation of the road; that the rates voluntarily fixed by the company have been for ten years steadily decreasing until the aggregate decrease has been more than fifty per cent.; that under the rates thus voluntarily established, the stock, which represents two-fifths of the value, has never received anything in the way of dividends, and that for the last three years the earnings above operating expenses have been insufficient to pay the interest on the bonded debt, and that the proposed tariff, as enforced, will so diminish the earnings that they will not be able to pay one-half the interest on the bonded debt above the operating expenses; and that such an averment so supported will, in the absence of any satisfactory showing to the contrary, sustain a finding that the proposed tariff is unjust and unreasonable, and a decree reversing it being put in force. * * *

Decree affirmed (as to this point).¹

SAN DIEGO LAND & TOWN CO. v. NATIONAL CITY (1899)
174 U. S. 739, 754-758, 19 Sup. Ct. 804, 43 L. Ed. 1154, Mr. Justice HARLAN (upholding a municipal schedule of water rates):

"What elements are involved in the general inquiry as to the reasonableness of rates established by law for the use of property by the public? This question received much consideration in Smyth v. Ames [169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819]. That case, it is true, related to rates established by a statute of Nebraska for railroad companies doing business in that state. But the principles involved in such a case are applicable to the present case. It was there contended that a railroad company was entitled to exact such charges for transportation as would enable it at all times, not only to pay operating expenses, but to meet the interest regularly accruing upon all its outstanding obligations, and justify a dividend upon all its stock; and that to prohibit it from maintaining rates or charges for transportation adequate to all those ends would be a deprivation of property without due process of law, and a denial of the equal protection of the laws. After observing that this broad proposition involved a misconception of the relations between the public and a railroad corporation, that such a corporation was created for public purposes, and performed a function of the state, and that its right to exercise the power of eminent domain, and to charge tolls, was given primarily for the benefit of the public, this court said: 'It cannot, therefore, be admitted that a railroad corporation maintaining a highway under the authority of the state may fix its rates with a view solely to its own interests, and ignore the rights of the public. But the rights of the public would be ignored if rates for the transportation of persons or property on a railroad are exacted without reference to the fair value of the property used for the public, or the fair value of the services rendered, but in order simply that the corporation may meet operating expenses, pay the interest on its obligations, and declare a dividend to stockholders. If a railroad corporation has bonded its property for an amount that exceeds its fair value, or if its capitalization is largely fictitious, it may not impose upon the public the burden of such increased rates as may be required for the purpose of realizing profits upon such excessive valuation or fictitious capitalization; and the apparent value of the property and franchises used by the corporation, as represented by its stocks, bonds, and obligations, is not alone to be considered when determining the rates that may be reasonably charged,' 169 U. S. 544, 18 Sup. Ct. 433, 42 L. Ed. 819. In the same case it was also said that 'the basis of all calculation as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property used by it for the convenience of the public. And, in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses, are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience. On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth.' 169 U. S. 546, 18 Sup. Ct. 434, 42 L. Ed. 819.

¹ Accord: Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819 (1898), in an elaborate opinion.

"This court had previously held in Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 596, 598, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560, which case involved the reasonableness of rates established by legislative enactment for a turnpike company, that a corporation performing public services was not entitled, as of right, and without reference to the interests of the public, to realize a given per cent. upon its capital stock; that stockholders were not the only persons whose rights or interests were to be considered; and that the rights of the public were not to be ignored.¹ The court in that case further said: 'Each case must depend upon its special facts; and when a court, without assuming itself to prescribe rates, is required to determine whether the rates prescribed by the legislature for a corporation controlling a public highway are, as an entirety, so unjust as to destroy the value of its property for all the purposes for which it was acquired, its duty is to take into consideration the interests both of the public and of the owner of the property, together with all other circumstances that are fairly to be considered in determining whether the legislature has, under the guise of regulating rates, exceeded its constitutional authority, and practically deprived the owner of property without due process of law. * * * The utmost that any corporation operating a public highway can rightfully demand at the hands of the legislature, when exerting its general powers, is that it receives what, under all the circumstances, is such compensation for the use of its property as will be just, both to it and to the public.'

¹ In Norfolk & S. Turnpike Co. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 225 U. S. 264, 32 Sup. Ct. 828, 56 L. Ed. 1082 (1912), it was held the state might suspend the collecting of tolls by a turnpike company while its roads were out of repair, even though the travel on them did not yield enough revenue to keep them repaired; White, C. J., saying (225 U. S. 271, 32 Sup. Ct. 831, 56 L. Ed. 1082): "To suspend the taking of tolls while the roads were out of repair manifestly was not a taking of property, but was simply a method provided by statute to enforce the discharge of the public duty respecting the safe and convenient maintenance of a public highway. In other words, * * * the burden of keeping the turnpikes in repair was made a condition precedent to the right to collect tolls."

"These principles are recognized in recent decisions of the supreme court of California. San Diego Water Co. v. City of San Diego (1897) 118 Cal. 556, 50 Pac. 633, 38 L. R. A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261; Redlands L. & C. Domestic Water Co. v. City of Redlands (1898) 121 Cal. 365, 53 Pac. 843, 844.

"The contention of the appellant in the present case is that in ascertaining what are just rates the court should take into consideration the cost of its plant; the cost per annum of operating the plant, including interest paid on money borrowed, and reasonably necessary to be used in constructing the same; the annual depreciation of the plant from natural causes resulting from its use; and a fair profit to the company over and above such charges for its services in supplying the water to consumers, either by way of interest on the money it has expended for the public use, or upon some other fair and equitable basis. Undoubtedly all these matters ought to be taken into consideration, and such weight be given them, when rates are being fixed, as, under all the circumstances, will be just to the company and to the public. The basis of calculation suggested by the appellant is, however, defective in not requiring the real value of the property and the fair value in themselves of the services rendered to be taken into consideration. What the company is entitled to demand, in order that it may have just compensation, is a fair return upon the reasonable value of the property at the time it is being used for the public. The property may have cost more than it ought to have cost, and its outstanding bonds for money borrowed and which went into the plant may be in excess of the real value of the property. So that it cannot be said that the amount of such bonds should in every case control the question of rates, although it may be an element in the inquiry as to what is, all the circumstances considered, just, both to the company and to the public."²

² Compare the individual opinion of Brewer, J., in Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 91 ff., 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92 (1901), suggesting a different basis for rates where the service rendered is not governmental in its nature.

CITY OF KNOXVILLE v. KNOXVILLE WATER CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1909. 212 U. S. 1, 29 Sup. Ct. 148, 53 L. Ed. 371.)

[Appeal from the federal Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee to review a decree enjoining the enforcement of a municipal ordinance fixing water rates of plaintiff company. A special master, to whom the cause was referred, found various facts, indicated in the opinion below, from which he inferred that the new rates would earn an income of less than 6 per cent. upon the value of the company's property. He thought the company entitled to earn 8 per cent., 2 per cent. of which was for depreciation. The Circuit Court confirmed the master's report and issued the injunction.]

Mr. Justice Moody. * * * At the threshold of the consideration of the case the attitude of this court to the facts found below should be defined. Here are findings of fact by a master, confirmed by the court. The company contends that under these circumstances, the findings are conclusive in this court, unless they are without support in the evidence, or were made under the influence of erroneous views of law. We need not stop to consider what the effect of such findings would be in an ordinary suit in equity. The purpose of this suit is to arrest the operation of a law on the ground that it is void and of no effect. It happens that in this particular case it is not an act of the legislature that is attacked, but an ordinance of a municipality. Nevertheless the function of rate-making is purely legislative in its character, and this is true, whether it is exercised directly by the legislature itself or by some subordinate or administrative body, to whom the power of fixing rates in detail has been delegated. The completed act derives its authority from the legislature and must be regarded as an exercise of the legislative power. Prentiss v. Southern R. Co., 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150; Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co. v. Hawaii, 211 U. S. 282, 29 Sup. Ct. 55, 53 L. Ed. 186.

There can be at this day no doubt, on the one hand, that the courts, on constitutional grounds, may exercise the power of refusing to enforce legislation, nor, on the other hand, that that power ought to be exercised only in the clearest cases. The constitutional invalidity should be manifest, and where that invalidity rests upon disputed questions of fact, the invalidating facts must be proved to the satisfaction of the court. In view of the character of the judicial power invoked in such cases it is not tolerable that its exercise should rest securely upon the findings of a master, even though they be confirmed by the trial court. The power is best safeguarded against abuse by preserving to this court complete freedom in dealing with the facts of each case. Nothing less than this is demanded by the respect due from the judicial to the legislative authority. It must not be understood that the findings of a master, confirmed by the trial court, are without weight, or that they will not, as a practical question, sometimes be regarded as conclusive. All that is intended to be said is, that in cases of this character this court will not fetter its discretion or judgment by any artificial rules as to the weight of the master's findings, however useful and well settled these rules may be in ordinary litigation. We approach the discussion of the facts in this spirit.

The first fact essential to the conclusion of the court below is the valuation of the property devoted to the public uses, upon which the company is entitled to earn a return. That valuation ($608,000) must now be considered. It was made up by adding to the appraisement, in minute detail of all the tangible property, the sum of $10,000 for "organization, promotion, etc.," and $60,000 for "going concern." The latter sum we understand to be an expression of the added value of the plant as a whole over the sum of the values of its component parts, which is attached to it because it is in active and successful operation and earning a return.¹ We express no opinion as to the propriety of including these two items in the valuation of the plant, for the purpose for which it is valued in this case, but leave that question to be considered when it necessarily arises. We assume, without deciding, that these items were properly added in this case. The value of the tangible property found by the master is, of course, $608,000, lessened by $70,000, the value attributed to the intangible property, making $538,000. This valuation was determined by the master by ascertaining what it would cost, at the date of the ordinance, to reproduce the existing plant as a new plant. * * *

The cost of reproduction is not always a fair measure of the present value of a plant which has been in use for many years. The items composing the plant depreciate in value from year to year in a varying degree. Some pieces of property, like real estate for instance, depreciate not at all, and sometimes, on the other hand, appreciate in value. But the reservoirs, the mains, the service pipes, structures upon real estate, standpipes, pumps, boilers, meters, tools and appliances of every kind begin to depreciate with more or less rapidity from the moment of their first use. It is not easy to fix at any given time the amount of depreciation of a plant whose component parts are of different ages, with different expectations of life. But it is clear that some substantial allowance for depreciation ought to have been made in this case. The officers of the company, alio intuitu, estimated what they called "incomplete depreciation" of this plant (which we understand to be the depreciation of the surviving parts of it still in use) at $77,000, which is 14 per cent of the master's appraisal of the tangible property. A witness called by the city placed the reproduction value of the tangible property at $363,000, and estimated the allowance that should be made for depreciation at $118,000, or 32 per cent. In the view we take of the case it is not necessary that we should undertake the difficult task of determining exactly how much the master's valuation of the tangible property ought to have been diminished by the depreciation which that property had undergone. It is enough to say that there should have been a considerable diminution, sufficient, at least, to raise the net income found by the court above 6 per cent upon the whole valuation thus diminished. If, for instance, the master's valuation should be diminished by $50,000, allowed for depreciation, the net earnings found by him would show a return of substantially 6.5 per cent.

¹ In Cedar Rapids Gas Light Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 223 U. S. 655, 669, 670, 32 Sup. Ct. 389, 390 (56 L. Ed. 591) (1912), a gas rate case, Holmes, J., said: "Although it is argued that the court excluded going value, the court expressly took into account the fact that the plant was in successful operation. What it excluded was the good will or advantage incident to the possession of a monopoly, so far as that might be supposed to give the plaintiff the power to charge more than a reasonable price. Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co., of New York, 212 U. S. 19, 52, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 399, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034. An adjustment of this sort under a power to regulate rates has to steer between Scylla and Charybdis. On the one side, if the franchise is taken to mean that the most profitable return that could be got, free from competition, is protected by the fourteenth amendment, then the power to regulate is null. On the other hand, if the power to regulate withdraws the protection of the amendment altogether, then the property is naught. This is not a matter of economic theory, but of fair interpretation of a bargain. Neither extreme can have been meant. A midway between them must be hit."

Counsel for the company urge rather faintly that the capitalization of the company ought to have some influence in the case in determining the valuation of the property. It is a sufficient answer to this contention that the capitalization is shown to be considerably in excess of any valuation testified to by any witness, or which can be arrived at by any process of reasoning. The cause for the large variation between the real value of the property and the capitalization in bonds and preferred and common stock is apparent from the testimony. All, or substantially all, the preferred and common stock was issued to contractors for the construction of the plant, and the nominal amount of the stock issued was greatly in excess of the true value of the property furnished by the contracts. A single instance taken from the testimony will illustrate this. At the very start of the enterprise a contract was entered into for the construction of a part of the plant, which was of a value slightly, if at all, exceeding $125,000. The price paid the contractor was $125,000 in bonds and $200,000 in common stock. Other contracts for construction showed a like disproportion between value furnished and nominal capitalization received for that value. It perhaps is unnecessary to say that such contracts were made by the company with persons who, at the time, by stock ownership, controlled its action. Bonds and preferred and common stock issued under such conditions afford neither measure of, nor guide to, the value of the property

* * *

The company's original case was based upon an elaborate analysis of the cost of construction. To arrive at the present value of the plant large deductions were made on account of the depreciation. This depreciation was divided into complete depreciation and incomplete depreciation. The complete depreciation represented that part of the original plant which, through destruction or obsolescence, had actually perished as useful property. The incomplete depreciation represented the impairment in value of the parts of the plant which remained in existence and were continued in use. It was urgently contended that, in fixing upon the value of the plant upon which the company was entitled to earn a reasonable return, the amounts of complete and incomplete depreciation should be added to the present value of the surviving parts. The court refused to approve this method, and we think properly refused. A water plant, with all its additions, begins to depreciate in value from the moment of its use. Before coming to the question of profit at all the company is entitled to earn a sufficient sum annually to provide not only for current repairs, but for making good the depreciation and replacing the parts of the property when they come to the end of their life. The company is not bound to see its property gradually waste, without making provision out of earnings for its replacement. It is entitled to see that from earnings the value of the property invested is kept unimpaired, so that, at the end of any given term of years, the original investment remains as it was at the beginning. It is not only the right of the company to make such a provision, but it is its duty to its bond and stock holders, and, in the case of a public service corporation, at least, its plain duty to the public. If a different course were pursued the only method of providing for replacement of property which has ceased to be useful would be the investment of new capital and the issue of new bonds or stocks. This course would lead to a constantly increasing variance between present value and bond and stock capitalization,—a tendency which would inevitably lead to disaster either to the stockholders or to the public, or both. If, however, a company fails to perform this plain duty and to exact sufficient returns to keep the investment unimpaired, whether this is the result of unwarranted dividends upon over issues of securities, or of omission to exact proper prices for the output, the fault is its own. When, therefore, a public regulation of its prices comes under question, the true value of the property then employed for the purpose of earning a return cannot be enhanced by a consideration of the errors in management which have been committed in the past. * * *

In the course of presenting its case the city offered evidence of the net income of some years subsequent to the passage of the ordinance. The case is peculiar. The company has never observed the ordinance. The suit was begun nine months after its enactment and tried considerably later. In the meantime the company's gross income had largely increased. But the decision in the court below was based solely on the operations of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1901, and the amount of net income ascertained, namely, $30,000, was obtained by applying the reductions made by the ordinance to the operations of that fiscal year. We think it was error to confine the investigation to, and base the judgment upon, that year alone. The precise subject of inquiry was, what would be the effect of the ordinance in the future. The operations of the preceding fiscal year, or of any other past fiscal year, were valueless if the year was abnormal, and were only of significance so far as they foretold the future. If, as in this case, sufficient time has passed, so that certainty instead of prophecy can be obtained, the certainty would be preferable to the prophecy. In this case there could be no absolute certainty, because the ordinance had never been put in operation. But evidence of the operations of the years succeeding to the ordinance is relevant and of great importance, and by a consideration of such evidence a much greater degree of certainty could be obtained. Suppose, by way of illustration, that before bringing suit the company had put the ordinance into effect and had observed it for a number of years, and the result showed that a sufficient net income had been realized,—is it possible that a suit then could be brought and the evidence confined to a period prior to the ordinance, and, by a process of speculation, the conclusion reached that the ordinance would be confiscatory? Some evidence regarding the income of the company after the passage of the ordinance is in the record, but it subsequently was excluded from consideration. It showed an increase of gross and net earnings, but also an increase in the property devoted to the public use. We are unable to say what the effect of the evidence excluded would be; all we can say is, that the inquiry was unduly limited by the exclusion of the evidence of the operation of subsequent years. * * *

In ordinary cases full justice would be done by reversing the decree and remanding the cause for further proceedings in the court below, there to undergo a new and doubtless prolonged investigation. It is more than seven years since the enactment of the ordinance, and it has never been observed in any respect. This litigation ought now to be ended, if it is possible to end it with due regard to the rights of the contending parties. Disregarding for the moment all the errors which were committed in the court below, the decision of this cause may be rested upon a broader ground, which is clearly indicated by the previous judgments of this court. The jurisdiction which is invoked here ought, as has been said, to be exercised only in the clearest cases. If a company of this kind chooses to decline to observe an ordinance of this nature, and prefers rather to go into court with the claim that the ordinance is unconstitutional, it must be prepared to show to the satisfaction of the court that the ordinance would necessarily be so confiscatory in its effect as to violate the Constitution of the United States. * * *

In San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. 571, 47 L. Ed. 892, after repeating with approval this language, it was said (p. 441): "In a case like this we do not feel bound to re-examine and weigh all the evidence, although we have done so, or to proceed according to our independent opinion as to what were proper rates. It is enough if we cannot say that it was impossible for a fair-minded board to come to the result which was reached."²

It cannot be doubted that, in a clear case of confiscation, it is the right and duty of the court to annul the law. * * * But the case before us is not a case of this kind. Upon any aspect of the evidence the company is certain to obtain a substantial net revenue under the operation of the ordinance. The net income, in any event, would be substantially 6 per cent., or 4 per cent. after an allowance of 2 per cent. for depreciation. See Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co., 192 U. S. 201, 24 Sup. Ct. 241, 48 L. Ed. 406. We cannot know clearly that the revenue would not much exceed that return. We do not feel called upon to determine whether a demonstrated reduction of income to that point would or would not amount to confiscation. Where the case rests, as it does here, not upon observation of the actual operation under the ordinance, but upon speculations as to its effect based upon the operations of a prior fiscal year, we will not guess whether the substantial return certain to be earned would lack something of the return which would save the effect of the ordinance from confiscation. It is enough that the whole case leaves us in grave doubt. The valuation of the property was an estimate and is greatly disputed. The expense account was not agreed upon. The ordinance had not actually been put into operation; the inferences were based upon the operations of the preceding year; and the conclusion of the court below rested upon that most unsatisfactory evidence, the testimony of expert witnesses employed by the parties. The city authorities acted in good faith, and they tried, without success, to obtain from the company a statement of its property, capitalization, and earnings.

The courts, in clear cases, ought not to hesitate to arrest the operation of a confiscatory law, but they ought to refrain from interfering in cases of any other kind. Regulations of public service corporations, which perform their duties under conditions of necessary monopoly, will occur with greater and greater frequency as time goes on. It is a delicate and dangerous function, and ought to be exercised with a keen sense of justice on the part of the regulating body, met by a frank disclosure on the part of the company to be regulated. The courts ought not to bear the whole burden of saving property from confiscation, though they will not be found wanting where the proof is clear. The legislatures and subordinate bodies, to whom the legislative power has been delegated, ought to do their part. Our social system rests largely upon the sanctity of private property; and that state or community which seeks to invade it will soon discover the error in the disaster which follows. The slight gain to the consumer, which he would obtain from a reduction in the rates charged by public service corporations, is as nothing compared with his share in the ruin which would be brought about by denying to private property its just reward, thus unsettling values and destroying confidence. On the other hand, the companies to be regulated will find it to their lasting interest to furnish freely the information upon which a just regulation can be based.

² "The courts cannot, after the board has fully and fairly investigated and acted, by fixing what it believes to be reasonable rates, step in and say its action shall be set aside and nullified, because the courts, upon a similar investigation, have come to a different conclusion as to the reasonableness of the rates fixed. There must be actual fraud in fixing the rates, or they must be so palpably and grossly unreasonable and unjust as to amount to the same thing."—Hartan, J., in San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 171 U. S. 739, 750, 19 Sup. Ct. 804, 808 (43 L. Ed. 1154) (1899).

If hereafter it shall appear, under the actual operation of the ordinance, that the returns allowed by it operate as a confiscation of property, nothing in this judgment will prevent another application to the courts of the United States or to the courts of the state of Tennessee. But, as the case now stands, there is no such certainty that the rates prescribed will necessarily have the effect of denying to the company such a return as would avoid confiscation.

Decree reversed.³

³ VALUATION AND RATE OF RETURN.—For valuable discussions of the rate of return and elements of capitalization proper under various circumstances, see, also, San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. 571, 47 L. Ed. 892 (1903); Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co., 192 U. S. 201, 24 Sup. Ct. 241, 48 L. Ed. 406 (1904); Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. of New York, 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034 (1909); Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 574 (1903); Id., 165 Fed. 657, 667 (1904); Id., 192 Fed. 137 (1911); Brunswick & T. Water District v. Maine Water Co., 99 Me. 371, 59 Atl. 537 (1904); Contra Costa Water Co. v. City of Oakland, 159 Cal. 323, 113 Pac. 668 (1911); Steenerson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713 (1897); Shepard v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 184 Fed. 765 (1911); Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290 (1911); Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Louisville, 187 Fed. 637 (1911); State Journal Printing Co. v. Madison Gas, etc., Co., 4 Wis. R. Com. 501 (1910). Whitten, Valuation of Public Service Corporations (1912), treats the entire topic admirably.

RELATION OF WHOLE SCHEDULE TO ITS PARTS.—For the relation of particular rates or services to the schedule as a whole, see Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 19 Sup. Ct. 565, 43 L. Ed. 858 (1899); Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission, 186 U. S. 257, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1151 (1902); Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. of New York, 212 U. S. 19, 54, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034 (1909); Northern Pac. R. Co. v. North Dakota ex rel. McCue, 216 U. S. 579, 30 Sup. Ct. 423, 54 L. Ed. 624 (1910); Interstate Consol. St. R. Co. v. Massachusetts, 207 U. S. 79, 86, 28 Sup. Ct. 26, 52 L. Ed. 111, 12 Ann. Cas. 555 (1907); Commonwealth v. Interstate Consol. St. R. Co., 187 Mass. 436, 73 N. E. 530, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 2 Ann. Cas. 419 (1905); Commonwealth v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 212 Mass. 82, 98 N. E. 1075 (1912); In re Gardner, 84 Kan. 261, 113 Pac. 1054, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956 (1911); State v. Sutton (N. J. Sup.) 84 Atl. 1057 (1912); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corporation Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 585, 51 L. Ed. 933, 11 Ann. Cas. 398 (1907); Missouri Pac. Ry. v. Kansas ex rel. Taylor, 216 U. S. 262, 30 Sup. Ct. 330, 54 L. Ed. 472 (1910).

TESTING DOUBTFUL SCHEDULES.—As to upholding rates in cases of doubt, until actual trial of them, see, also, Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. of New York, 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034 (1909); Northern Pac. R. Co. v. North Dakota ex rel. McCue, 216 U. S. 579, 30 Sup. Ct. 423, 54 L. Ed. 624 (1910); City of Louisville v. Cumberland Telephone &

MINNESOTA RATE CASES.

(Supreme Court of the United States, 1913. 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. —.)

[Appeals from the federal Circuit Court for Minnesota. By two acts of the Minnesota legislature in 1907, and by two orders of the state Railroad and Warehouse Commission in 1906 and 1907, the passenger and freight rates for intrastate carriage of the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern, and the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad Companies were substantially reduced. After elaborate hearings before a master, in injunction suits brought by the railroads, decrees were made enjoining the enforcement of these rates upon the grounds: (1) That their incidental effect upon interstate rates to certain competing points in other states amounted to an illegal regulation of interstate commerce by the state; and (2) that the rates produced so low a rate of return as to constitute a taking of property without due process of law. The first ground is discussed in the part of the case printed post, p. 1174. The second is considered in the opinion below.]

Mr. Justice HUGHES. * * * Second. Are the state's acts and orders confiscatory? * * * The general principles which are applicable in a case of this character have been set forth in the decisions.

(1) The basis of calculation is the "fair value of the property" used for the convenience of the public. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 546, 42 L. Ed. 849, 18 Sup. Ct. 418. * * *

(2) The ascertainment of that value is not controlled by artificial rules. It is not a matter of formulas, but there must be a reasonable judgment, having its basis in a proper consideration of all relevant facts. * * * [Quoting the passage from Smyth v. Ames that appears ante, p. 490, in San Diego Land Co. v. National City.]

(3) Where the business of the carrier is both interstate and intrastate, the question whether a scheme of maximum rates fixed by the state for intrastate transportation affords a fair return must be determined by considering separately the value of the property employed in the intrastate business and the compensation allowed in that business under the rates prescribed. This was also ruled in the Smyth Case (Id. p. 541). The reason, as there stated, is that the state cannot justify unreasonably low rates for domestic transportation, considered alone, upon the ground that the carrier is earning large profits on its interstate business, and, on the other hand, the carrier cannot justify unreasonably high rates on domestic business because only in that way is it able to meet losses on its interstate business. * * *

[After analyzing the estimates of the cost of reproducing the rail road rights of way and terminals, upon which their valuation for rate-making purposes was based—which estimates were reached by taking the price a railroad would probably have to pay to-day for land so located (a price estimated considerably in excess of the normal market value of such land), and by adding to this from 30 per cent. to 200 per cent. more for cost of acquisition (including value of improvements likely to be found on the land and consequential damages), and finally about 20 per cent. more for items of engineering, superintendence, legal expenses, contingencies, and interest during construction:] It is impossible to assume, in making a judicial finding of what it would cost to acquire the property, that the company would be compelled to pay more than its fair market value. It is equipped with the governmental power of eminent domain. In view of its public purpose, it has been granted this privilege in order to prevent advantage being taken of its necessities. It would be free to stand upon its legal rights, and it cannot be supposed that they would be disregarded. * * *

Telegraph Co., 225 U. S. 430, 32 Sup. Ct. 711, 56 L. Ed. 1151 (1912). Compare the course of procedure in the Arkansas Rate Cases, 163 Fed. 141 (1908); Id., 168 Fed. 720 (1909); Id., 187 Fed. 290 (1911); Id., 230 U. S. 553, 33 Sup. Ct. 1030, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

Moreover, it is manifest that an attempt to estimate what would be the actual cost of acquiring the right of way if the railroad were not there is to indulge in mere speculation. The railroad has long been established; to it have been linked the activities of agriculture, industry, and trade. Communities have long been dependent upon its service, and their growth and development have been conditioned upon the facilities it has provided. The uses of property in the communities which it serves are to a large degree determined by it. The values of property along its line largely depend upon its existence. It is an integral part of the communal life. The assumption of its nonexistence, and at the same time that the values that rest upon it remain unchanged, is impossible and cannot be entertained. The conditions of ownership of the property and the amounts which would have to be paid in acquiring the right of way, supposing the railroad to be removed, are wholly beyond reach of any process of rational determination. The cost-of-reproduction method is of service in ascertaining the present value of the plant, when it is reasonably applied and when the cost of reproducing the property may be ascertained with a proper degree of certainty. But it does not justify the acceptance of results which depend upon mere conjecture. It is fundamental that the judicial power to declare legislative action invalid upon constitutional grounds is to be exercised only in clear cases. The constitutional invalidity must be manifest, and if it rests upon disputed questions of fact, the invalidating facts must be proved. And this is true of asserted value as of other facts. * * *

[The] question is whether, in determining the fair present value of the property of the railroad company as a basis of its charges to the public, it is entitled to a valuation of its right of way not only in excess of the amount invested in it, but also in excess of the market value of contiguous and similarly situated property. For the purpose of making rates, is its land devoted to the public use to be treated (irrespective of improvements) not only as increasing in value by reason of the activities and general prosperity of the community, but as constantly outstripping in this increase, all neighboring lands of like character, devoted to other uses? If rates laid by competent authority, state or national, are otherwise just and reasonable, are they to be held to be unconstitutional and void because they do not permit a return upon an increment so calculated?

It is clear that in ascertaining the present value we are not limited to the consideration of the amount of the actual investment. If that has been reckless or improvident, losses may be sustained which the community does not underwrite. As the company may not be protected in its actual investment, if the value of its property be plainly less, so the making of a just return for the use of the property involves the recognition of its fair value if it be more than its cost. The property is held in private ownership, and it is that property, and not the original cost of it, of which the owner may not be deprived without due process of law. But still it is property employed in a public calling, subject to governmental regulation, and while, under the guise of such regulation, it may not be confiscated, it is equally true that there is attached to its use the condition that charges to the public shall not be unreasonable. And where the inquiry is as to the fair value of the property, in order to determine the reasonableness of the return allowed by the rate-making power, it is not admissible to attribute to the property owned by the carriers a speculative increment of value, over the amount invested in it and beyond the value of similar property owned by others, solely by reason of the fact that it is used in the public service. That would be to disregard the essential conditions of the public use, and to make the public use destructive of the public right. * * *

Assuming that the company is entitled to a reasonable share in the general prosperity of the communities which it serves, and thus to attribute to its property an increase in value, still the increase so allowed, apart from any improvements it may make, cannot properly extend beyond the fair average of the normal market value of land in the vicinity having a similar character.¹ Otherwise we enter the realm of mere conjecture. We therefore hold that it was error to base the estimates of value of the right of way, yards and terminals upon the so-called "railway value" of the property. The company would certainly have no ground of complaint if it were allowed a value for these lands equal to the fair average market value of similar land in the vicinity, without additions by the use of multipliers, or otherwise, to cover hypothetical outlays. The allowances made below for conjectural cost of acquisition and consequential damages must be disapproved; and, in this view, we also think it was error to add to the amount taken as the present value of the lands the further sums, calculated on that value, which were embraced in the items of "engineering, superintendence, legal expenses," "contingencies," and "interest during construction."

¹ This "normal market value" of railroad property cannot be satisfactorily established by the mere unexplained records of valuations for the purposes of taxation. Missouri Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 175, 33 Sup. Ct. 975, 57 L. Ed. 141 (1913).

By reason of the nature of the estimates, and the points to which the testimony was addressed, the amount of the fair value of the company's land cannot be satisfactorily determined from the evidence, but it sufficiently appears, for the reasons we have stated, that the amounts found were largely excessive. Finding this defect in the proof, it is not necessary to consider the objections which relate to the sources from which the property was derived or its mode of acquisition, or those which are urged to the inclusion of certain lands which it is said were not actually used as a part of the plant; and we express no opinion upon the merits of these contentions. * * *

The apportionment of the value of the property, as found, between the interstate and intrastate business, was made upon the basis of the gross revenue derived from each. This is a simple method, easily applied, and for that reason has been repeatedly used. It has not, however, been approved by this court, and its correctness is now challenged. * * * In support of this method, it is said that a division of the value of the property according to gross earnings is a division according to the "value of the use," and therefore proper. But it would seem to be clear that the value of the use is not shown by gross earnings. The gross earnings may be consumed by expenses, leaving little or no profit. * * * [Here follows a quotation from Chicago, etc., Ry. v. Tompkins, 176 U. S. 167, 20 Sup. Ct. 336, 44 L. Ed. 417, criticising this method.] * * * The value of the use, as measured by return, cannot be made the criterion when the return itself is in question.² * * *

When rates are in controversy, it would seem to be necessary to find a basis for a division of the total value of the property independently of revenue, and this must be found in the use that is made of the property. That is, there should be assigned to each business that proportion of the total value of the property which will correspond to the extent of its employment in that business. It is said that this is extremely difficult; in particular, because of the necessity for making a division between the passenger and freight business, and the obvious lack of correspondence between ton-miles and passenger-miles. It does not appear, however, that these are the only units available for such a division; and it would seem that, after assigning to the passenger and freight departments respectively, the property exclusively used in each, comparable use-units might be found which would afford the basis for a reasonable division with respect to property used in common. * * *

² Accord (apportionment of value of railroad property on basis of gross revenue from internal and interstate traffic): Missouri Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 474, 33 Sup. Ct. 975, 57 L. Ed. — (1913); Arkansas Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 553, 33 Sup. Ct. 1030, 57 L. Ed. — (1913). See the mode of apportionment used in Trust Co. of America v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (D. C.) 199 Fed. 593 (1912).

Our conclusions may be briefly stated. The statements of the complainants' witnesses as to the extra cost of interstate business, while entitled to respect as expressions of opinion, manifestly involve wide and difficult generalizations. They embrace, without the aid of statistical information derived from appropriate tests and submitted to careful analysis, a general estimate of all the conditions of transportation, and an effort to express in the terms of a definite relation, or ratio, what clearly could be accurately arrived at only by prolonged and minute investigation of particular facts with respect to the actual traffic as it was being carried over the line. The extra cost, as estimated by these witnesses, is predicated not simply of haulage charges, but of all the outlays of the freight service, including the share of the expenses for maintenance of way and equipment assigned to the freight department. And the ratio, to be accurately stated, must also express the results of a suitable discrimination between the interstate and intrastate traffic on through and local trains respectively, and of an attribution of the proper share of the extra cost of local train service to the interstate traffic that uses it. The wide range of the estimates of extra cost, from three to six or seven times that of the interstate business per ton mile, shows both the difficulty and the lack of certainty in passing judgment.

We are of opinion that, on an issue of this character, involving the constitutional validity of state action, general estimates of the sort here submitted, with respect to a subject so intricate and important, should not be accepted as adequate proof to sustain a finding of confiscation.³ While accounts have not been kept so as to show the relative cost of interstate and intrastate business, giving particulars of the traffic handled on through and local trains, and presenting data from which such extra cost as there may be, of intrastate business, may be suitably determined, it would appear to have been not impracticable to have had such accounts kept or statistics prepared, at least during test periods, properly selected. It may be said that this would have been a very difficult matter, but the company, having assailed the constitutionality of the state acts and orders, was bound to establish its case, and it was not entitled to rest on expressions of judgment when it had it in its power to present accurate data which would permit the court to draw the right conclusion. * * *

Decrees reversed as to Northern Pacific and Great Northern Companies, but modified and affirmed as to the Minneapolis & St. Louis

³ Accord: See cases cited in note 2, above.

Company [whose revenues had been much more seriously affected than had those of the other companies].

[McKENNA, J., concurred in the result.]

SHEVLIN-CARPENTER CO. v. MINNESOTA (1910) 218 U. S. 57, 67-70, 30 Sup. Ct. 663, 54 L. Ed. 930, Mr. Justice McKENNA (upholding a Minnesota statute penalizing timber cutting upon state lands regardless of defendant's knowledge or intent):

"The next contention of plaintiffs in error is that 'both the provisions of section 7 make a casual and involuntary trespasser liable to the state in double damages, and that declaring his act a felony violates the fourteenth amendment,' because those provisions 'eliminate altogether the question of intent,' and that the 'elimination of intent as an element of an offense is contrary to the requirements of due process of law.' To support the contention, plaintiffs in error attack the power of a legislature to make an innocent act a crime, and say that the 'principle that the legislature cannot, by its mere fiat, make an act otherwise innocent a crime, and punishable as such, is one to which this court will give effect, even though it be not expressly enunciated by the Constitution.' The principle as thus expressed is very general, and takes no account of whether a law have prospective or retrospective operation. It would seem, therefore, to destroy the well-recognized distinction between mala in se and mala prohibita. The principle contended for is probably not intended to be taken so broadly, and its generality is further limited by concession that it may have exceptions 'where so-called criminal negligence supplies a place of criminal intent, or where, in a few instances, the public welfare has made it necessary to declare a crime, irrespective of the actor's intent.' A concession of exceptions would seem to destroy the principle. If the principle gets its life or its protection from the fourteenth amendment, it cannot be destroyed by the legislature upon any conception of the public welfare. The Constitution declares the principle upon which the public welfare is to be promoted, and opposing ones cannot be substituted. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 558, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679, 689.

"It will be seen that the foundation of the arguments of plaintiffs in error is that their trespass was an innocent act. There is some ambiguity as to what is meant by 'innocence.' They quote Mr. Justice Chase in Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648. It was there said that 'a law that punished a citizen for an innocent action, or, in other words, for an act which, when done, was in violation of no existing law,' could not 'be considered a rightful exercise of legislative power.' But it was said: 'The legislature may enjoin, permit, forbid, and punish; they may declare new crimes and establish rules of conduct for all its citizens in future cases.' In other words, innocence cannot be asserted of an action which violates existing law, and ignorance of the law will not excuse. The law in controversy has no ex post facto element or effect in it. It was existing law when the trespass of plaintiffs in error was committed, and a trespass is a legal wrong, not an innocent act. There is no element of deception or surprise in the law. When the permit was issued, plaintiffs in error knew the limitations of it, and they took it at the risk and consequences of transgression. The state sought to guard against its wilful or accidental abuse. Permits had been abused and the lands of the state despoiled of their timber. The offenders were difficult to detect, or, if detected, the character of their acts, whether wilful, accidental, or involuntary, equally difficult to establish; and the state, the supreme court said, had been 'defrauded and robbed of large sums of money.' Double and treble damages and a criminal prosecution were provided to meet the situation.¹ It would be strange, indeed, if it were not within the competency of the legislature. To hold otherwise would take from the legislature the power to adjust legislation to evils as they arise and to the ways by which they may be effected. We held in St. John v. New York, 201 U. S. 633, 26 Sup. Ct. 554, 50 L. Ed. 896, 5 Ann. Cas. 909, that a state did not offend the equality clause of the fourteenth amendment by taking as a basis of classification the ways by which a law may be defeated. That case was applied in District of Columbia v. Brooke, 214 U. S. 138, 29 Sup. Ct. 560, 53 L. Ed. 941, to sustain a statute which provided a criminal proceeding against resident owners of property for neglecting to connect their property with sewers, and civil proceedings against non-resident owners for a like neglect.

"We do not understand the position of plaintiffs in error to be that a legislature may not prescribe a larger measure of damages than simple compensation, but that anything in excess of such compensation is punishment,² and cannot be constitutionally prescribed where there is no 'conscious intent' to do wrong. And yet plaintiffs in error except from the principle 'certain instances within the police power,' overlooking that the principle, if it exist at all, must be universal. It is true that the police power of a state is the least limitable of its powers, but even it may not transcend the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States. If, as contended, intent is an essential element of crime, or, more restrictively, if intent is essential to the legality of penalties, it must be so, no matter under what power of the state they are prescribed. Plaintiffs in error, while considering there may be exceptions to the principle contended for in the exercise of the police power, urge that the legislation in controversy is not of that character. The supreme court of the state, however, expressed a different view. [102 Minn. 470, 113 N. W. 634, 114 N. W. 738.] It decided that the legislation was in effect an exercise of the police power, and cited a number of cases to sustain the proposition that public policy may require that in the prohibition or punishment of particular acts it may be provided that he who shall do them shall do them at his peril, and will not be heard to plead in defense good faith or ignorance. Those cases are set forth in the opinion of the court, and some of them reviewed.

¹ "The power of the state to impose fines and penalties for a violation of its statutory requirements is coeval with government; and the mode in which they shall be enforced, whether at the suit of a private party or at the suit of the public, and what disposition shall be made of the amounts collected, are merely matters of legislative discretion. The statutes of nearly every state of the Union provide for the increase of damages where the injury complained of results from the neglect of duties imposed for the better security of life and property, and make that increase in many cases double. In some cases treble, and even quadruple the actual damages." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 523, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 114 (29 L. Ed. 463) (1885), by Field, J.

² Even upon the theory of simple compensation, a statute may provide a reasonably definite measure of damages for injuries whose pecuniary value is difficult to estimate or prove. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cram, 228 U. S. 70, 33 Sup. Ct. 437, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (cases).

"We will not repeat them. It was recognized that such legislation may, in particular instances, be harsh, but we can only say again what we have so often said, that this court cannot set aside legislation because it is harsh."³

[HARLAN, J., concurred in the result.]

³ Accord (as to criminal or quasi-criminal liability): Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. v. United States, 220 U. S. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 55 L. Ed. 582 (1911); Welch v. State, 145 Wis. 86, 129 N. W. 656, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746 (1911); New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 212 U. S. 481, 29 Sup. Ct. 304, 53 L. Ed. 613 (1909) (liability of corporation for agents); United States v. Adams Exp. Co., 229 U. S. 381, 33 Sup. Ct. 878, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) (same of partnership or joint-stock association). See 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 419, 423, 424, note (principal criminally liable for agent's unauthorized violation of liquor laws).

"The power of the legislature to declare an offence, and to exclude the elements of knowledge and due diligence from any inquiry as to its commission, cannot, we think, be questioned."—Harlan, J. in Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. United States, above, 220 U. S. 578, 31 Sup. Ct. 617, 55 L. Ed. 582.

Compare Kilbourne v. State, 84 Ohio St. 247, 95 N. E. 824, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 766 (1911); People v. Rosenthal, 197 N. Y. 394, 90 N. E. 991 (1910), affirmed 226 U. S. 260, 33 Sup. Ct. 27, 57 L. Ed. — (1912).

So, as to civil liability. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611 (1897) (fire from railroads); Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. Ct. 282, 41 L. Ed. 677 (1897) (injury to road from driven animals); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zerneck, 183 U. S. 582, 22 Sup. Ct. 229, 46 L. Ed. 339 (1902) (injuries to railway passengers—semble); St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 52 L. Ed. 1061 (1908) (injuries to employees from unsafe car coupling), in which Moody, J., said (210 U. S. 295, 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 621, 52 L. Ed. 1061): "When applied to the case at bar the argument of hardship is plausible only when the attention is directed to the material interest of the employer to the exclusion of the interests of the employee and of the public. Where an injury happens through the absence of a safe drawbar there must be hardship. Such an injury must be an irreparable misfortune to someone. If it must be borne entirely by him who suffers it, that is a hardship to him. If its burden is transferred, as far as it is capable of transfer, to the employer, it is a hardship to him. It is quite conceivable that Congress, contemplating the inevitable hardship of such injuries, and hoping to diminish the economic loss to the community resulting from them, should deem it wise to impose

CITY OF CHICAGO v. STURGES (1911) 222 U. S. 313, 322-324, 32 Sup. Ct. 92, 56 L. Ed. 215, Mr. Justice LUTON (upholding an Illinois statute making cities absolutely liable for three-fourths of the damage done to property therein by mob of over 12 persons, and giving it a remedy over against the rioters):

"The objection [is narrowed] to the single question of legislative power to impose liability regardless of fault. It is a general principle of our law that there is no individual liability for an act which ordinary human care and foresight could not guard against. It is also a general principle of the same law that a loss from any cause purely accidental must rest where it chances to fall. But behind and above these general principles which the law recognizes as ordinarily prevailing, there lies the legislative power, which, in the absence of organic restraint, may, for the general welfare of society, impose obligations and responsibilities otherwise nonexistent.

"Primarily, governments exist for the maintenance of social order. Hence it is that the obligation of the government to protect life, liberty, and property against the conduct of the indifferent, the careless, and the evil-minded may be regarded as lying at the very foundation of the social compact. A recognition of this supreme obligation is found in those exertions of the legislative power which have as an end the preservation of social order and the protection of the welfare of the public and of the individual. If such legislation be reasonably their burdens upon those who could measureably control their causes, instead of upon those who are, in the main, helpless in that regard."

In St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, above, 165 U. S. 26, 17 Sup. Ct. 252, 41 L. Ed. 611, Gray, J., said: "Railroad corporations, in order the better to carry out the public object of their creation, the sure and prompt transportation of passengers and goods, have been authorized by statute to use locomotive engines propelled by steam generated by fires lighted upon those engines. It is within the authority of the legislature to make adequate provision for protecting the property of others against loss or injury by sparks from such engines. The right of the citizen not to have his property burned without compensation is no less to be regarded than the right of the corporation to set it on fire. To require the utmost care and diligence of the railroad corporations in taking precautions against the escape of fire from their engines might not afford sufficient protection to the owners of property in the neighborhood of the railroads. When both parties are equally faultless, the legislature may properly consider it to be just that the duty of insuring private property against loss or injury caused by the use of dangerous instruments should rest upon the railroad company, which employs the instruments and creates the peril for its own profit, rather than upon the owner of the property, who has no control over or interest in those instruments."

But the state courts have generally held it unconstitutional to impose on railways an absolute liability for stock killed by trains, 25 L. R. A. 142, note; 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018, note; except as a penalty for failure to discharge some duty, such as maintaining fences or cattle guards, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, 863, note. Compare Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill. 55, 20 Am. Rep. 239 (1875); Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 56 Tenn. (9 Helsk.) 860 (1872); Holder v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 79 Tenn. (41 Lea) 176, 178-179 (1883).

The door of acts that are or may be made illegal may be made liable by statute for consequences more remote than those recognized by the common adapted to the end in view, affords a hearing before judgment, and is not forbidden by some other affirmative provision of constitutional law, it is not to be regarded as denying due process of law under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment.

"The law in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the state of Illinois. It rests upon the duty of the state to protect its citizens in the enjoyment and possession of their acquisitions, and is but a recognition of the obligation of the state to preserve social order and the property of the citizen against the violence of a riot or a mob.

"The state is the creator of subordinate municipal governments. It vests in them the police powers essential to the preservation of law and order. It imposes upon them the duty of protecting property situated within their limits from the violence of such public breaches of the peace as are mobs and riots. This duty and obligation thus intrusted to the local subordinate government is by this enactment emphasized and enforced by imposing upon the local community absolute liability for property losses resulting from the violence of such public tumults.

"The policy of imposing liability upon a civil subdivision of government exercising delegated police power is familiar to every student of the common law. We find it recognized in the beginning of the police system of Anglo-Saxon people. Thus, 'the Hundred,' a very early form of civil subdivision, was held answerable for robberies committed within the division. By a series of statutes, beginning pos-law. Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323 (1878); Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. 31, 50 L. Ed. 157 (1905).

INDEFINITENESS OF CRIME.—As to how far definiteness of description is a constitutional requisite of a statutory crime, see Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 108 ff., 29 Sup. Ct. 220, 53 L. Ed. 417 (1909); Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 69-70, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734 (1911); Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 33 Sup. Ct. 780, 57 L. Ed. — (1913).

CONFISCATION BY EXCESSIVE FINES OR DAMAGES.—"It is contended that the fines imposed are so excessive as to constitute a taking of the defendant's property without due process of law. It is not contended in this connection that the prohibition of the eighth amendment to the federal Constitution against excessive fines operates to control the legislation of the states. The fixing of punishment for crime or penalties for unlawful acts against its laws is within the police power of the state. We can only interfere with such legislation and judicial action of the states enforcing it if the fines imposed are so grossly excessive as to amount to a deprivation of property without due process of law. Coffey v. Harlan County, 204 U. S. 659, 27 Sup. Ct. 305, 51 L. Ed. 606."—Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 111, 29 Sup. Ct. 220, 227 (53 L. Ed. 417) (1909), by Day, J., upholding fines of $1,500 a day for 1,633 days, and of $50 a day for 1,480 days, during which periods business was conducted in Texas in violation of its anti-trust laws, making a total of $1,623,500 against a corporation owning $10,000,000 of property and earning 700 per cent. on a capital stock of $400,000.

Nor can excessive damages be exacted as a civil penalty, though reasonable punitive damages are permissible. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. Missouri, 224 U. S. 270, 286, 32 Sup. Ct. 406, 56 L. Ed. 760 (1912) ($50,000 fine in ouster proceedings upheld); Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 33 Sup. Ct. 961, 57 L. Ed. — (1913) ($500 damages for slight overcharge of carrier).

sibly in 1285, in the statutes of Westminster, coming on down to the 27th Elizabeth, the riot act of George I, and act of George II, chap. 10, we may find a continuous recognition of the principle that a civil subdivision intrusted with the duty of protecting property in its midst, and with police power to discharge the function, may be made answerable not only for negligence affirmatively shown, but absolutely as not having afforded a protection adequate to the obligation. Statutes of a similar character have been enacted by several of the states and held valid exertions of the police power. Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248; Fauvia v. New Orleans, 20 La. Ann. 410; Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670. The imposition of absolute liability upon the community when property is destroyed through the violence of a mob is not, therefore, an unusual police regulation. Neither is it arbitrary, as not resting upon reasonable grounds of policy. Such a regulation has a tendency to deter the lawless, since the sufferer must be compensated by a tax burden which will fall upon all property, including that of the evil doers as members of the community. It is likewise calculated to stimulate the exertions of the indifferent and the lawabiding to avoid the falling of a burden which they must share with the lawless. In that it directly operates on and affects public opinion, it tends strongly to the upholding of the empire of the law."

NOBLE STATE BANK v. HASKELL.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1911. 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 55 L. Ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Oklahoma. A state statute created a banking board directed to levy an assessment upon every state bank's average daily deposits in order to create a depositors' guaranty fund. When the cash of any insolvent bank in liquidation should be insufficient to pay all depositors, the deficit was to be made up from this guaranty fund and from further assessments, if necessary, reserving a lien upon the assets of the failing bank to secure money thus taken from the fund. Plaintiff bank sought to enjoin the banking board from collecting such assessments from it, and its petition was dismissed in the state courts.]

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES. * * * We must be cautious about pressing the broad words of the fourteenth amendment to a drily logical extreme. Many laws which it would be vain to ask the court to overthrow could be shown, easily enough, to transgress a scholastic interpretation of one or another of the great guaranties in the Bill of Rights. They more or less limit the liberty of the individual, or they diminish property to a certain extent. We have few scientifically certain criteria of legislation, and as it often is difficult to mark the line where what is called the police power of the states is limited by the Constitution of the United States, judges should be slow to read into the latter a nolumus mutare as against the lawmaking power.

The substance of the plaintiff's argument is that the assessment takes private property for private use without compensation. And while we should assume that the plaintiff would retain a reversionary interest in its contribution to the fund, so as to be entitled to a return of what remained of it if the purpose were given up (see Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt. 92, 98), still there is no denying that by this law a portion of its property might be taken without return to pay debts of a failing rival in business. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the logical form of the objection, there are more powerful considerations on the other side. In the first place, it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use. Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 25 Sup. Ct. 676, 49 L. Ed. 1085, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171; Strickley v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co., 200 U. S. 527, 531, 26 Sup. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 581, 583, 4 Ann. Cas. 1174; Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 203 U. S. 372, 27 Sup. Ct. 72, 51 L. Ed. 231; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 315, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499, 501. And in the next, it would seem that there may be other cases beside the everyday one of taxation, in which the share of each party in the benefit of a scheme of mutual protection is sufficient compensation for the correlative burden that it is compelled to assume. See Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190, 20 Sup. Ct. 576, 44 L. Ed. 729; Deserant v. Cerillos Coal R. Co., 178 U. S. 409, 20 Sup. Ct. 967, 44 L. Ed. 1127, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 576. At least, if we have a case within the reasonable exercise of the police power as above explained, no more need be said.

It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. 864, 42 L. Ed. 260. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare. Among matters of that sort probably few would doubt that both usage and preponderant opinion give their sanction to enforcing the primary conditions of successful commerce. One of those conditions at the present time is the possibility of payment by checks drawn against bank deposits, to such an extent do checks replace currency in daily business. If, then, the legislature of the state thinks that the public welfare requires the measure under consideration, analogy and principle are in favor of the power to enact it. Even the primary object of the required assessment is not a private benefit, as it was in the cases above cited of a ditch for irrigation or a railway to a mine, but it is to make the currency of checks secure, and by the same stroke to make safe the almost compulsory resort of depositors to banks as the only available means for keeping money on hand. The priority of claim given to depositors is incidental to the same object, and is justified in the same way. The power to restrict liberty by fixing a minimum of capital required of those who would engage in banking is not denied. The power to restrict investments to securities regarded as relatively safe seems equally plain. It has been held, we do not doubt rightly, that inspections may be required and the cost thrown on the bank. See Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 12 Sup. Ct. 255, 35 L. Ed. 1051. The power to compel, beforehand, co-operation, and thus, it is believed, to make a failure unlikely and a general panic almost impossible, must be recognized, if government is to do its proper work, unless we can say that the means have no reasonable relation to the end. Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 188, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725. So far is that from being the case that the device is a familiar one. It was adopted by some states the better part of a century ago, and seems never to have been questioned until now. Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt. 92; People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502. Recent cases going not less far are Lemieux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 496, 29 Sup. Ct. 174, 53 L. Ed. 295, 300; Kidd, D. & P. Co. v. Musselman Grocer Co., 217 U. S. 461, 30 Sup. Ct. 606, 54 L. Ed. 839.

It is asked whether the state could require all corporations or all grocers to help to guarantee each other's solvency, and where we are going to draw the line. But the last is a futile question, and we will answer the others when they arise. With regard to the police power, as elsewhere in the law, lines are pricked out by the gradual approach and contact of decisions on the opposing sides. Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 355, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828, 831, 14 Ann. Cas. 560. It will serve as a datum on this side, that, in our opinion, the statute before us is well within the state's constitutional power, while the use of the public credit on a large scale to help individuals in business has been held to be beyond the line. Citizens' L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. Ed. 455; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39.

The question that we have decided is not much helped by propounding the further one, whether the right to engage in banking is or can be made a franchise. But as the latter question has some bearing on the former, and as it will have to be considered in the following cases, if not here, we will dispose of it now. It is not answered by citing authorities for the existence of the right at common law. There are many things that a man might do at common law that the states may forbid. He might embezzle until a statute cut down his liberty. We cannot say that the public interests to which we have adverted, and others, are not sufficient to warrant the state in taking the whole business of banking under its control. On the contrary, we are of opinion that it may go on from regulation to prohibition except upon such conditions as it may prescribe. In short, when the Oklahoma legislature declares by implication that free banking is a public danger, and that incorporation, inspection, and the above-described co-operation are necessary safeguards, this court certainly cannot say that it is wrong [citing cases].

Decree affirmed.¹

STATE ex rel. YAPLE v. CREAMER.

(Supreme Court of Ohio, 1912. 85 Ohio St. 349, 97 N. E. 602, 39 L. R. A. [N. S.] 694.)

[Demurrer to a petition of mandamus directed to Creamer, state treasurer, involving the validity of a workmen's compensation act set out in the opinion below.]

JOHNSON, J. The statute in question provides for the creation of a state liability board of awards, which shall establish a state insurance fund, from premiums paid by employers and employes in the manner provided in the act. It provides a plan of compensation for injuries, not willfully self-inflicted, resulting from accidents to employes of employers, both of whom have voluntarily contributed to the fund in the proportion of 10 and 90 per cent. respectively. It applies only where the employer has five or more operators regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment. An employer who complies with the act is relieved from liability to respond in damages at common law, or by statute, for injury or death of an employe who has complied with its provisions, except when the injury arises from the willful act of himself or officer or agent, or from failure to comply with any law or ordinance providing for protection of life and safety of employes, in which event the employe or his representatives have their election between a suit for damages and a claim under the act. Employers of five or more who do not pay premiums into the fund are deprived in actions against them of the common-law defenses of the fellow-servant rule, the assumption of risk, and of contributory negligence. Where the parties are operating under the act, the injured employe and his dependents in case of death are compelled to accept compensation from the insurance fund in the manner provided, except in the cases above set forth. * * *

¹ See, also, Jones v. Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co., 86 Fed. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108 (1898), affirmed in 193 U. S. 532, 24 Sup. Ct. 576, 48 L. Ed. 778 (1904) (upholding mechanics' lien in favor of sub-contractor); Kelly v. Johnson, 251 Ill. 135, 95 N. E. 1068, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 573 (1911) (contra); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. Ed. 167, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7 (1911) (initial carrier liable for default of connecting carrier); Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 126, 20 Sup. Ct. 325, 44 L. Ed. 400 (1900) (all of logs in boom subject to lien for scaling fees against any owner); Horace Waters & Co. v. Gerard, 189 N. Y. 302, 82 N. E. 143, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 958, 121 Am. St. Rep. 886, 12 Ann. Cas. 397 (1907) (hotel lien on stranger's goods in possession of guest); People v. Hill, 163 Ill. 186, 46 N. E. 796, 36 L. R. A. 634 (1896) (brothers and sisters liable to support pauper).

The law was passed after a report referred to in the briefs, of a commission appointed by the Governor, in obedience to a statute passed for that purpose. The report was prepared after an exhaustive research into industrial conditions in many countries, and an examination of laws, which have been passed in the effort to improve such conditions. Substantially, its conclusions are: That the system which has been followed in this country, of dealing with accidents in industrial pursuits, is wholly unsound; that there is an intelligent and widespread public sentiment which calls for its modification and improvement; that the general welfare requires it; that there has been enormous waste under the present system, and that the action for personal injuries by employé against employer no longer furnishes a real and practical remedy, annoys and harasses both, and does not meet the economic and social problem which has resulted from modern industrialism. Conceding the desirability of improvement, of legislative and governmental action, and the good results in other countries which have no written Constitution to limit the legislative power, we in this country have the problem of devising a plan which shall not infringe the fundamental law. * * *

We think it clear that the objects and purposes as above set forth, which the Legislature contemplated in the passage of the law in question, are sufficient to sustain the exercise of the police power, and the participation of the state in the manner provided. Whether the plan adopted is the most appropriate or best calculated to accomplish those objects are matters with which the court is not concerned, and the law should not be held to be invalid unless clearly in violation of some provision of the Constitution.

It is urgently insisted that while the law is apparently permissive and leaves its operation to the election of employers and employés, it is really coercive, and upon this premise much persuasive argument against the validity of the law is based. This is an important question in the case.

An examination of the sections touching the questions made is here necessary. After providing in section 20—1 that an employer who elects to comply with the act shall be relieved from liability to the employé at common law, or by statute (except as provided in section 21—2), it is then enacted, in section 21—1: "All employers who shall not pay into the insurance fund, * * * shall be liable to their employés for damages, * * * caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of the employer, his agents," etc. And in such cases the defenses of assumption of risk, fellow servant, and contributory negligence are not available. So that an employer who elects not to come into the plan of insurance may still escape liability if he is not guilty of wrongful act, neglect, or default. His liability is not absolute, as in the case of the New York statute hereinafter referred to. And it cannot be said that the withdrawal of the defenses of assumption of risk, fellow servant, and contributory negligence, as against an employer who does not go into the plan, is coercive, for such withdrawal is in harmony with the legislative policy of the state for a number of years past. The law known as the Norris law, passed in 1910, withdrew these defenses in the particulars covered by the law.

As to the employé, if the parties do not elect to operate under the act, he has his remedy for the neglect, wrongful act, or default of his employer and agents as before the law was passed, and is not subject to the defenses named. If the parties are operating under the act, the employé contributes to an insurance fund for the benefit of himself or his heirs, and, in case he is injured or killed, he or they will receive the benefit even though his injury or death was caused by his own negligent or wrongful act, not willful. And that is not all. Under section 21—2, if the parties are operating under the act, and the employé is injured or killed, and the injury arose from the willful act of his employer, his officer or agent, or from failure of the employer or agent to comply with legal requirements, as to safety of employés, then the injured employé or his legal representative has his option to claim under the act or sue in court for damages. Therefore the only right of action which this statute removes from the employé is the right to sue for mere negligence (which is not willful or statutory) of his employer, and it is within common knowledge that this has become in actual practice a most unsubstantial thing.

It is conceded by counsel that the particulars named in section 21—2 are such as form the basis for a large portion of claims for personal injuries. Many employers may elect to remain outside its provisions; it would not be strange if many do so. On the other hand, some workmen may feel disposed to do likewise in spite of what would seem to be to their manifest advantage in securing the benefits of the insurance. However, if there should be such general acceptance of and compliance with the statute as its framers hope for, so as to bring a large part of the labor employed in the industrial enterprises of the state within its influence and operation, that would not demonstrate its coercive character. On the contrary, it would justify the enactment. Naturally time and experience will disclose imperfections and inefficiencies in the plan; but if it should prove to be feasible, and appropriate in a general way, these imperfections can be corrected by the Legislature. On account of the common-law and statutory rights still preserved to the parties by this statute (as we have pointed out) in cases where the election is made to come under its provisions as well as not to do so, taken in connection with the advantage to each which the plan contemplates, we cannot say that the statute is coercive. As was said in the Wisconsin case: "Laws cannot be set aside upon mere conjecture or speculation. The court must be able to say with certainty that an unlawful result will follow." We do not see how any such thing can be said here. Every consideration of prudence and self-interest (things not easily associated with compulsion and coercion) would seem to lead an employé to voluntarily make the contribution and waiver contemplated.

Second. Does this statute take private property without due process of law and deny the guaranties of the Constitution as claimed? * * * The case of Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., 201 N. Y. 276, 94 N. E. 431, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156 (relied on by some of counsel), involved a statute different in many essentials from the Ohio law. Its controlling feature was that every employer engaged in any of the classified industries should be liable to a workman for injury arising in the course of the work by a necessary risk inherent in the business whether the employer was at fault or not and whether the employé was at fault or not, except when his fault was willful. The court held the law invalid, as imposing the ordinary risks of a business (which under the common law the employé was held to assume) on the employer. The court states one of the premises on which it proceeds as follows: "When our Constitutions were adopted, it was the law of the land that no man who was without fault or negligence could be held liable in damages for injuries sustained by another." But that rule was not of universal application. At common law one may sustain such relation to the inception of an undertaking that he will be held liable for negligence in the progress of the enterprise, even though he have no part or connection with the negligent act itself which caused the injury. Such for instance, as where the owner of property contracts with an independent contractor to do work which though entirely lawful, yet has inherent probabilities of harm if negligently performed. The position in the line of causation which employers sustain in modern industrial pursuits is of course the basic fact on which employer's liability laws rest.

As to the right to abolish the defense of assumption of risk, it is enough to say here that the great weight of authority is against the New York position and the position of such of the counsel in this case as insist on that rule. Some of counsel appearing against the validity of this law concede the right to abolish the defenses referred to. The Supreme Courts of Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Washington have recently held, in cases sustaining the validity of statutes similar to the one here attacked, that it is within the legislative power to abolish the defense referred to. In re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 69 N. E. 308; Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 327, 133 N. W. 209, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489; State ex rel. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 117 Pac. 1101, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460.

Since the argument of this case the Supreme Court of the United States has decided the case of Mondou v. N. Y., N. H. & H. Ry. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44 and has sustained the constitutionality of the employer's liability law passed by Congress. The abolition of these rules was urged as an objection to the law. The court say: "Of the objection to these changes it is enough to observe: First. A person has no property, nvested interest, in any rule of the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law cannot be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will * * * of the Legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 134 [24 L. Ed. 77]; Martin v. Pittsburgh & Lake Erie R. R. Co., 203 U. S. 284, 294 [27 Sup. Ct. 100, 51 L. Ed. 184, 8 Ann. Cas. 87]; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558, 577 [22 L. Ed. 654]; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Commercial Milling Co., 218 U. S. 406, 417 [31 Sup. Ct. 59, 54 L. Ed. 1088, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 21 Ann. Cas. 815].” * * *

State ex rel. v. Hubbard, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 253, affirmed without opinion 65 Ohio St. 574, 64 N. E. 109, 58 L. R. A. 654, and State ex rel. v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 47 N. E. 551, 38 L. R. A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756, involving the validity of statutes creating a teachers' pension fund and the Torrens law to establish an insurance fund for the protection of land titles, concerned laws which were wholly compulsory with no element of choice and were not claimed to have been passed under the police power to cure undesirable public conditions, but for mere private benefit. These cases can therefore have no relation to a plan adopted to promote the general welfare, the contributions to which are made after an election by the parties to participate in the undertaking.

It is urged by counsel opposing this law that the case of Byers v. Meridian Printing Co., 84 Ohio St. 408, 95 N. E. 917, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913 is of conclusive weight condemnatory of the legislation we are examining. In that case it is ruled that an amendment to section 5094, Revised Statutes (changing the presumption of malice and burden of proof in actions for libel where retraction is made on demand, in the manner stated) is unconstitutional. The decision was put on the ground that plaintiff was guaranteed his remedy by due course of law for an injury done in his land, goods, person, or reputation, under article 1, § 16, Constitution of Ohio. When the injury was done to the reputation of plaintiff by the libel, he was entitled to his constitutional remedy at law;¹ but at the same time he was entitled to demand of the publisher a retraction of the libel. Therefore the Legislature had no right to put him on his election as to two courses both of which he was entitled to follow. The court is careful to declare that it is not disposed to question that a citizen may waive a constitutional right. But being compelled to elect between two rights, both of which a person is entitled to, has no resemblance to waiver. And under the law under investigation here, as already shown, the right of action (for injury by willful act of the employer and for his failure to comply with requirements as to the safety of employes) is still reserved to the employes. So that the only thing withdrawn by this law, and to which withdrawal he consents by his voluntary election to operate under the law, is his right of action for mere negligence, and in place of it he receives the substantial protections and privileges under the state insurance fund.

¹ As to the extent to which a plaintiff's remedies for defamation may be validly abridged, see Oshorn v. Leach, 135 N. C. 628, 47 S. E. 811, 66 L. R. A. 648 (1904) (ceases). As to remedies for other torts, see Follett Wool Co. v. Albany Terminal Warehouse Co., 61 App. Div. 296, 70 N. Y. Supp. 474 (1901) (action against innocent but wrongful possessor of chattels); Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 303, 304, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185 (1885) (same, as to dispossessor); Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Stableman's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 434, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, 9 Ann. Cas. 1219 (1906) (injunction against tortious picketing). Compare Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct.

It is stated in Butt v. Green, 29 Ohio St. 677, that persons may expressly or impliedly waive either constitutional or statutory provisions intended for their benefit, and, as above shown, the court in the Eyers Case state it is not disposed to question that one may waive a constitutional right.

We think that in a case such as is presented here, in which the state itself has undertaken a great enterprise in the interest of the general good, and in the exercise of its police power, and presents to its citizens the option to join in the undertaking and receive its protection and benefit, on a right of action being withdrawn by the Legislature, which experience has shown to be difficult of practical enforcement, while preserving the valuable and substantial kindred rights of action, it cannot be said that in such withdrawal there is a violation of the Constitution in the respects claimed. * * * It must be remembered that the whole proceeding is with and against the board of awards. His claim is not against the employer. There is no dispute between them. His claim is for the benefits of the insurance fund. * * *

Demurrer overruled.²

211, 27 L. Ed. 936 (1883) (enforcement of tort judgment against city). See, also, Sawyer v. Davis, post, p. 722, and notes.

² Accord: Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308 (1911); Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 327, 133 N. W. 209, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489 (1911); State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 117 Pac. 1101, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466 (1911) (compulsory insurance plan); Cunningham v. North Western Imp. Co., 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 551 (1911) (same). The Montana act failed for permitting a double liability, but was otherwise upheld. In Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co., 201 N. Y. 271, 94 N. E. 431, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156 (1911), a compulsory individual liability law was declared unconstitutional. The New York and Washington laws applied only to extrahazardous employments, and the Montana act to mining only. In these five cases are cited and discussed most of the cases and historical usages alleged to involve principles similar to those approved in the principal case.

In State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 177-178, 195, 197, 198, 207-211, 117 Pac. 1101, 1106, 1107, 1113, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493 (1911), Fullerton, J., said (upholding a compulsory insurance plan):

"In the statute books of the several states are many statutes held constitutional by the courts where liability is created without fault, and where the

CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO. v. MCGUIRE (1911) 219 U. S. 549, 569, 571-573, 31 Sup. Ct. 259, 55 L. Ed. 328, Mr. Justice HUGHES (upholding an Iowa statute abolishing the fellow-servant rule on railroads, and denying effect to any contract restricting liability or the acceptance of any insurance benefits as a defence to personal injury actions brought against railroads by their employees):

[After referring to many of the cases printed ante, in this chapter.] "Where the legislative action is arbitrary and has no reasonable relation to a purpose which it is competent for government to effect, the legislature transcends the limits of its power in interfering with liberty of contract; but where there is reasonable relation to an property of one person is taken to pay the obligations of another, and this where no compensation is made to the person who is thus made liable or whose property is thus taken, other than perhaps the bestowal upon him of some privilege. The test of the validity of such a law is not found in the inquiry: Does it do the objectionable things? But is found rather in the inquiry: Is there no reasonable ground to believe that the public safety, health, or general welfare is promoted thereby? * * * The clause of the Constitution now under consideration was intended to prevent the arbitrary exercise of power, or undue, unjust, and capricious interference with personal rights; not to prevent those reasonable regulations that all must submit to as a condition of remaining a member of society. In other words, the test of a police regulation, when measured by this clause of the Constitution, is reasonableness, as contradistinguished from arbitrary or capricious action.

"That the statute here in question has the attribute of reasonableness, rather than that of capriciousness, seems incontrovertible. The evil it seeks to remedy is one that calls loudly for action. Accidents to workmen engaged in the industries enumerated in it are all but inevitable. * * * Heretofore these losses have been borne by the injured workmen themselves, by their dependents, or by the state at large. It was the belief of the legislature that they should be borne by the industries causing them, or, perhaps more accurately, by the consumers of the products of such industries. That the principle thus sought to be put into effect is economically, sociologically, and morally sound, we think must be conceded. It is so treated by the learned counsel who have filed briefs in support of the auditor's contentions; it is so conceded by all modern statesmen, jurists, and economic writers who have voiced their opinion on the subject; and the principle has been enacted into law by nearly all of the civilized countries of Europe, by Australia, by New Zealand, by the Transvaal, by the principal provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and in a partial form at least by one or more of South American republics. Indeed, so universal is the sentiment that to assert to the contrary is to turn the face against the enlightened opinion of mankind. The common law does not purport to afford a remedy for the condition here found to exist. It affords relief to an injured workman in only a limited number of cases—cases where the injury is the result of fault on the part of the employer and there is want of fault on the part of the workman. For the greater number of injuries traceable to the dangers incident to industry, no remedy at all is afforded. The act, therefore, having in its support these economic and moral considerations, is not unconstitutional for the reasons suggested upon this branch of the argument. * * *

"The right of the state to regulate any form of industry arises from the fact that its pursuit affects injuriously the health, safety, morals, or welfare of the persons engaged in it, or is inimical in some form to some portion of the individuals of the community. It is not necessary that it always affect injuriously the public at large. On the contrary, it may be regulated if it affects injuriously those engaged in it, or those brought in direct contact object within the governmental authority, the exercise of the legislative discretion is not subject to judicial review. The scope of judicial inquiry in deciding the question of power is not to be confused with the scope of legislative considerations in dealing with the matter of policy. Whether the enactment is wise or unwise, whether it is based on sound economic theory, whether it is the best means to achieve the desired result, whether, in short, the legislative discretion within its prescribed limits should be exercised in a particular manner, are matters for the judgment of the legislature, and the earnest conflict of serious opinion does not suffice to bring them within the range of judicial cognizance. * * *

"In the cases within its purview it [the statute] extended the liability with it, even though its pursuit may benefit generally the people of the state at large. Nor is there any particular form which the regulation must take. The conduct of the business may be prohibited entirely in a particular place or in a particular manner; its pursuit may be restricted to certain hours of the day; it may be permitted to be conducted only in case protective devices are used; or it may be permitted in certain forms, and a sum of money exacted from the individuals carrying it on for the purpose of recompensing those who suffer losses because thereof.

"So, in this instance, if the legislature believed that, to permit the pursuit of the industries named after the present manner of conducting them was generally for the public good in spite of the losses the method of pursuit entailed, there is no reason why it should not confine its regulations to compelling the owners and conductors of such industries to create a fund out of which the losses caused thereby should be made good. * * *

"It is said that the legislature cannot fix a procrustean rule for the admeasurement of damages arising from injuries received by one in the employment of another, as the employer and the employé alike have the right to submit to a jury both the question of the right to recover for any such injury, and the question of the amount that may be recovered therefor. But we cannot think the rule absolute. It may be that the legislature cannot fix the amount of recovery, or provide for an absolute recovery, in all cases where one person is injured by another, regardless of the relation of the parties, or the question whether the injury is or is not the result of negligence; but it does not follow that it may not so provide where the injury happens in that class of employment subject to legislative regulation and control. If it be, as we have attempted to show, a proper regulation of hazardous industries to compel those engaged therein as owners or operators to pay a fixed sum into a fund to be used for the purpose of compensating the employés thereof for injuries received by them, it is difficult to understand why it is not also proper regulation to require the employés of such industries to accept a given sum for any injury they may receive while so engaged. * * *

"The grounds upon which the employer may be held to contribute to a fund for the relief of all injuries sustained by his employés, whatever the cause, we have already stated. The obligation of the employé to accept the conditions of the statute can rest on like grounds, namely, the welfare of the state. The relation being one of contract between employer and employé, the state may make it a condition of the contract that the employé shall accept a fixed sum for any injury he may receive while engaged in the employment, whether the injury be the result of the inherent dangers of the employment or the result of some fault of his employer. * * *

"The common-law system of making awards for personal injuries has no such inherent merit as to make a change undesirable. * * * For the greater number of injuries the common law affords no remedy at all. For this unscientific system it is proposed to substitute a system which will make an award in all cases of injury, regardless of the cause or manner of its infliction; limited in amount, it is true, but commensurate in some degree to of the common law by abolishing the fellow-servant rule. Having authority to establish this regulation, it is manifest that the legislature was also entitled to insure its efficacy by prohibiting contracts in derogation of its provisions. In the exercise of this power, the legislature was not limited with respect either to the form of the contract, or the nature of the consideration, or the absolute or conditional character of the engagement. It was as competent to prohibit contracts which, on a specified event, or in a given contingency, should operate to relieve the corporation from the statutory liability which would otherwise exist, as it was to deny validity to agreements of absolute waiver. * * * It does not aid the argument to describe the defense as one of accord and satisfaction. The payment of benefits the disability suffered. The desirability of this substitution is unquestioned, and we believe that the legislature had the power to make it without violating any principle of the fundamental law.

"The objection may be answered also in another way. The Constitution does not undertake to define what shall constitute a cause of action, nor to prohibit the legislature from so doing. The right of trial by jury accorded by the Constitution, as applicable to civil cases, is incident only to causes of action recognized by law. The act here in question takes away the cause of action on the one hand and the ground of defense on the other and merges both in a statutory indemnity fixed and certain. If the power to do away with a cause of action in any case exists at all in the exercise of the police power of the state, then the right of trial by jury is thereafter no longer involved in such cases. The right of jury trial being incidental to the right of action, to destroy the one is to leave the other nothing upon which to operate."

In Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co., 201 N. Y. 271, 317-318, 94 N. E. 431, 449, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156 (1911), Cullen, C. J., said: "I concede that the Legislature may abolish the rule of fellow servant as a defense to an action by employé against the employer. Indeed, we have decided that in upholding the so-called 'Barnes act.' Schradin v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 194 N. Y. 534, 87 N. E. 1126. I concede that the Legislature may also abolish as a defense the rule of assumption of risk and that of contributory negligence unless the accident proceed from the willful act of the employé. I concede that in a work, occupation, or business of such a nature that the Legislature might prohibit its pursuit or exercise altogether, the Legislature may prescribe terms under which it may be carried on. Mainly, this litigation does not present such a case. The Legislature could not revoke the franchise it had previously given to the defendant to operate a railroad. People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 18 N. E. 692, 2 L. R. A. 253, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684. I am not prepared to deny that where the effects of the work, even though prosecuted carefully, go beyond a person's own property and injure third persons in no way connected therewith, the person for whose account the work is done may be held liable for injuries occasioned thereby. I also concede the most plenary power in the Legislature to prescribe all reasonable rules for the conduct of the work which may conduce to the safety and health of persons employed therein. But I do deny that a person employed in a lawful vocation, the effects of which are confined to his own premises, can be made to indemnify another for injury received in the work unless he has been in some respect at fault. I am not impressed with the argument that the common law imposed upon the employé entire responsibility for injuries arising out of the necessary risks or dangers of the employment. The statute before us merely shifts such liability upon the employer.' It is the physical law of nature, not of government, that imposes upon one meeting with an injury, the suffering occasioned thereby. Human law cannot change that. All it can do is to require pecuniary indemnity to the party injured, and I know of no principle on which one can be compelled to indemnify another for loss unless it is based upon contractual obligation or fault."

is the performance of the promise to pay, contained in the contract of membership. If the legislature may prohibit the acceptance of the promise as a substitution for the statutory liability, it should also be able to prevent the like substitution of its performance.

"For the reasons we have stated, the considerations which properly bear upon the wisdom of the legislation need not be discussed. On the one hand it is said that the relief department is in the control of the corporation; that by reason of their exigency the employees may readily be constrained to become members; that the relief fund consists in larger part of contributions made from wages; that the acceptance of benefits takes place at a time when the employee is suffering from the consequences of his injury, and, being seriously in need of aid, he may easily be induced to accept payment from the fund in which, by reason of his contributions, he feels that he is entitled to share; and that such a plan, if it were permitted, through the payment of benefits, to result in a discharge of the liability for negligence, would operate to transfer from the corporation to its employees a burden which, in the interest of their protection and the safety of the public, the corporation should be compelled to bear. On the other hand, it is urged that the relief plan is a beneficent scheme, avoiding the waste of litigation, securing prompt relief in case of need due to sickness or injury, making equitable provision for deserving cases, and hence tends in an important way to promote the good of the service and the security of the employment. Even a partial statement of these various considerations shows clearly that they are of a character to invoke the judgment of the legislature in deciding, within the limits of its power, upon the policy of the state. And whether the policy declared by the statute in question is approved or disapproved, it cannot be said that the legislative power has been exceeded, either in defining the liability or in the means taken to prevent the legislative will, with respect to it, from being thwarted."¹

OHIO OIL CO. v. INDIANA (1900) 177 U. S. 190, 207-211, 20 Sup. Ct. 576, 44 L. Ed. 729, Mr. Justice WHITE (upholding an Indiana statute forbidding any one in control of gas or oil wells to permit the gas or oil to escape into the open air without being confined in pipes on other receptacles):

"In Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 49 N. E. 19, 37 L. R. A. 294, 62 Am. St. Rep. 477, the constitutionality of a statute forbidding the burning of natural gas in flambeau lights was attacked because it was asserted to violate the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and various provisions of the Constitution of the state of Indiana. The court held that the statute was not amenable to the assaults made upon it. In a full opinion reviewing the nature of the ownership in oil and natural gas, the power of the state to regulate and control their use and waste in the interest of all those within the gas field and of the public at large was elaborately considered. Reviewing its own previous adjudications, which we have cited, and those of the supreme court of the state of Pennsylvania, to which we have also referred, it was decided that the owners of the surface of the land within the gas field, whilst they had the exclusive right on their land to sink wells for the purpose of extracting the oil and gas, had no right of property therein until by the actual drawing of the oil and gas to the surface of the earth they had reduced these substances to physical possession. It was further held that in consequence of the nature of the deposits, of their transmissibility, of their interdependence, of the rights of all and of the public at large, the state could lawfully exercise the power to regulate the right of the surface owners among themselves to seek to obtain possession, and to prevent the waste of the products in which all the surface owners within the area wherein the gas and oil were deposited, as well as the public, had an interest, because in the preservation of these substances the well-being and prosperity of the entire community was largely involved. * * *

¹ See, also, Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggis, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552 (1899) (making all fire insurance valued); Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243, 27 Sup. Ct. 126, 51 L. Ed. 168, 7 Ann. Cas. 1104 (1906) (forbidding defence of fraud, not causing death of insured); Whitfield ex rel. Hadley v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 205 U. S. 459, 27 Sup. Ct. 578, 51 L. Ed. 895 (1907) (forbidding defence of suicide of insured).

"If the analogy between animals feræ naturæ and mineral deposits of oil and gas, stated by the Pennsylvania court and adopted by the Indiana court, instead of simply establishing a similarity of relation, proved the identity of the two things, there would be an end of the case. This follows because things which are feræ naturæ belong to the 'negative community'; in other words, are public things subject to the absolute control of the state, which, although it allows them to be reduced to possession, may at its will not only regulate, but wholly forbid, their future taking. Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 525. 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793, 795. But whilst there is an analogy between animals feræ naturæ and the moving deposits of oil and natural gas, there is not identity between them. Thus, the owner of land has the exclusive right on his property to reduce the game there found to possession, just as the owner of the soil has the exclusive right to reduce to possession the deposits of natural gas and oil found beneath the surface of his land. The owner of the soil cannot follow game when it passes from his property; so, also, the owner may not follow the natural gas when it shifts from beneath his own to the property of someone else within the gas field. It being true as to both animals feræ naturæ and gas and oil, therefore, that whilst the right to appropriate and become the owner exists, proprietorship does not take being until the particular subjects of the right become property by being reduced to actual possession. The identity, however, is for many reasons wanting. In things feræ naturæ all are endowed with the power of seeking to reduce a portion of the public property to the domain of private ownership by reducing them to possession. In the case of natural gas and oil no such right exists in the public. It is vested only in the owners in fee of the surface of the earth within the area of the gas field.

"This difference points at once to the distinction between the power which the lawmaker may exercise as to the two. In the one, as the public are the owners, every one may be absolutely prevented from seeking to reduce to possession. No divesting of private property under such a condition can be conceived, because the public are the owners, and the enacting by the state of a law as to the public ownership is but the discharge of the governmental trust resting in the state as to property of that character. Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 525, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793, 795. On the other hand, as to gas and oil the surface proprietors within the gas field all have the right to reduce to possession the gas and oil beneath. They could not be absolutely deprived of this right which belongs to them, without a taking of private property. But there is a coequal right in them all to take from a common source of supply the two substances which in the nature of things are united, though separate. It follows from the essence of their right and from the situation of the things as to which it can be exerted, that the use by one of his power to seek to convert a part of the common fund to actual possession may result in an undue proportion being attributed to one of the possessors of the right to the detriment of the others, or by waste by one or more to the annihilation of the rights of the remainder. Hence it is that the legislative power, from the peculiar nature of the right and the objects upon which it is to be exerted, can be manifested for the purpose of protecting all the collective owners, by securing a just distribution, to arise from the enjoyment, by them, of their privilege to reduce to possession, and to reach the like end by preventing waste. This necessarily implied legislative authority is borne out by the analogy suggested by things feræ naturæ, which it is unquestioned the legislature has the authority to forbid all from taking, in order to protect them from undue destruction, so that the right of the common owners, the public, to reduce to possession, may be ultimately efficaciously enjoyed. Viewed, then, as a statute to protect or to prevent the waste of the common property of the surface owners, the law of the state of Indiana which is here attacked because it is asserted that it divested private property without due compensation, in substance, is a statute protecting private property and preventing it from being taken by one of the common owners without regard to the enjoyment of the others. * * *

"It is said the law by making it unlawful to allow the gas to escape made it practically impossible to profitably extract the oil. That is, as the oil could not be taken at a profit by one who made no use of the gas, therefore he must be allowed to waste the gas into the atmosphere, and thus destroy the interest of the other common owners in the reservoir of gas. These contentions but state in a different form the matters already disposed of. They really go, not to the power to make the regulations, but to their wisdom. But with the lawful discretion of the legislature of the state we may not interfere."¹

¹ Accord: Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S. 61, 31 Sup. Ct. 337, 55 L. Ed. 369, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160 (1911). See Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793 (1896) (game laws); Windsor v. State, 163 Md. 611, 64 Atl. 288, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 869 (1906) (oyster laws).

In Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 355-357, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 531 (52 L. Ed. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 560) (1908), the right of New Jersey to forbid anyone to transport water from the Passaic river out of the state by pipes or ditches was upheld, Holmes, J., saying:

"All rights tend to declare themselves absolute to their logical extreme. Yet all in fact are limited by the neighborhood of principles of policy which are other than those on which the particular right is founded, and which become strong enough to hold their own when a certain point is reached. The limits set to property by other public interests present themselves as a branch of what is called the police power of the state. The boundary at which the conflicting interests balance cannot be determined by any general formula in advance, but points in the line, or helping to establish it, are fixed by decisions that this or that concrete case falls on the nearer or farther side. For instance, the police power may limit the height of buildings in a city, without compensation. To that extent it cuts down what otherwise would be the rights of property. But if it should attempt to limit the height so far as to make an ordinary building lot wholly useless, the rights of property would prevail over the other public interest, and the police power would fail. To set such a limit would need compensation and the power of eminent domain.

"It sometimes is difficult to fix boundary stones between the private right of property and the police power when, as in the case at bar, we know of few decisions that are very much in point. But it is recognized that the state, as quasi-sovereign and representative of the interests of the public, has a standing in court to protect the atmosphere, the water, and the forests within its territory, irrespective of the assent or dissent of the private owners of the land most immediately concerned. Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 141, 142, 22 Sup. Ct. 552, 46 L. Ed. 838, 844, 845, s. c., 206 U. S. 46, 90, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956, 975, Georgia v. Tennessee Copper Co., 206 U. S. 230, 238, 27 Sup. Ct. 618, 51 L. Ed. 1038, 1044, 11 Ann. Cas. 488. What it may protect by suit in this court from interference in the name of property outside of the state's jurisdiction, one would think that it could protect by statute from interference in the same name within. On this principle of public interest and the police power, and not merely as the inheritor of a royal prerogative, the state may make laws for the preservation of game, which seems a stronger case. Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 534, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793, 798.

"The problems of irrigation have no place here. Leaving them on one side, it appears to us that few public interests are more obvious, indisputable, and independent of particular theory than the interest of the public of a state to maintain the rivers that are wholly within it substantially undiminished, except by such drafts upon them as the guardian of the public welfare may permit for the purpose of turning them to a more perfect use. This public interest is omnipresent wherever there is a state, and grows more pressing as population grows. It is fundamental, and we are of opinion that the private property of riparian proprietors cannot be supposed to have deeper roots. Whether it be said that such an interest justifies the cutting down by statute, without compensation, in the exercise of the police power, of what otherwise would be private rights of property, or that, apart from statute, those

HEAD v. AMOSKEAG MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1885. 113 U. S. 9, 5 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 889.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. A general statute authorized the erection of mills and dams upon nonnavigable streams upon payment of damages to the owners of lands flowed by the dams. The Amoskeag Company filed a petition for the ascertainment of the damages suffered by Head from flowage from their dam, rights do not go to the height of what the defendant seeks to do, the result is the same. But we agree with the New Jersey courts, and think it quite beyond any rational view of riparian rights, that an agreement, of no matter what private owners, could sanction the diversion of an important stream outside the boundaries of the state in which it flows. The private right to appropriate is subject not only to the rights of lower owners, but to the initial limitation that it may not substantially diminish one of the great foundations of public welfare and health.

"We are of opinion, further, that the constitutional power of the state to insist that its natural advantages shall remain unimpaired by its citizens is not dependent upon any nice estimate of the extent of present use or speculation as to future needs. The legal conception of the necessary is apt to be confined to somewhat rudimentary wants, and there are benefits from a great river that might escape a lawyer's view. But the state is not required to submit even to an æsthetic analysis. Any analysis may be inadequate. It finds itself in possession of what all admit to be a great public good, and what it has it may keep and give no one a reason for its will."

Compare West v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., post, p. 1193, note.

In Questions and Answers, 103 Me. 506, 511-512, 69 Atl. 627 (1907), the Maine legislature was told that it might without compensation prohibit or restrict the wasteful or unnecessary cutting of small trees on wild land when not done to clear the land for beneficial use. The judges said: "There are two reasons of great weight for applying this strict construction of the constitutional provision to property in land: (1) Such property is not the result of productive labor, but is derived solely from the state itself, the original owner; (2) the amount of land being incapable of increase, if the owners of large tracts can waste them at will without state restriction, the state and its people may be helplessly impoverished and one great purpose of government defeated. Regarding the question submitted, in the light of the doctrine above stated (being that of Maine and Massachusetts at least), we do not think the proposed legislation would operate to 'take' private property within the inhibition of the Constitution. While it might restrict the owner of wild and uncultivated lands in his use of them, might delay his taking some of the product, might defer his anticipated profits, and even thereby might cause him some loss of profit, it would nevertheless leave him his lands, their product, and increase untouched, and without diminution of title, estate, or quantity. He would still have large measure of control and large opportunity to realize values. He might suffer delay, but not deprivation. While the use might be restricted, it would not be appropriated or 'taken.' [Citing various restrictive statutes upheld elsewhere, including] (prohibiting the wasteful burning of natural gas by the owner) Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 47 N. E. 19, 37 L. R. A. 291, 62 Am. St. Rep. 477; (prohibiting the use of artificial means by the owners of gas wells to increase the natural flow of the gas from them) Manufacturers' Gas Co. v. Indiana Natural Gas Co., 155 Ind. 467, 57 N. E. 912, 50 L. R. A. 768; • • • (prohibiting the flow of water from a private artesian well except for certain specified beneficial purposes, as irrigation or domestic use) Ex parte Elam, 6 Cal. App. 233, 91 Pac. 811. In Windsor v. State, 103 Md. 611, 64 Atl. 288, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 869, a statute restricted owners of private oyster beds in taking oysters from them. It was held constitutional, and not a taking of private property."

and Head alleged the invalidity of the statute under the fourteenth amendment. His objections were overruled and judgment was entered entitling the company to flow his land on payment of the amount of damage found.]

Mr. Justice GRAY. * * * [After referring to numerous mill acts in 29 states:] In most of those states, their validity has been assumed, without dispute; and they were never adjudged to be invalid anywhere until since 1870, and then in 3 states only, and for incompatibility with their respective Constitutions. Loughbridge v. Harris (1871) 42 Ga. 500; Tyler v. Beacher (1871) 44 Vt. 648, 8 Am. Rep. 398; Ryerson v. Brown (1877) 35 Mich. 333, 24 Am. Rep. 564. The earlier cases in Tennessee, Alabama and New York, containing dicta to the same effect, were decided upon other grounds. Harding v. Goodlett, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 41, 24 Am. Dec. 546; Memphis Railroad v. Memphis, 4 Cold. (Tenn.) 406; Moore v. Wright, 34 Ala. 311, 333; Bottoms v. Brewer, 54 Ala. 288; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 42, 47, and 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279. * * *

The question whether the erection and maintenance of mills for manufacturing purposes under a general mill act, of which any owner of land upon a stream not navigable may avail himself at will, can be upheld as a taking, by delegation of the right of eminent domain, of private property for public use, in the constitutional sense, is so important and far reaching, that it does not become this court to express an opinion upon it, when not required for the determination of the rights of the parties before it. We prefer to rest the decision of this case upon the ground that such a statute, considered as regulating the manner in which the rights of proprietors of lands adjacent to a stream may be asserted and enjoyed, with a due regard to the interests of all, and to the public good, is within the constitutional power of the legislature.

When property, in which several persons have a common interest, cannot be fully and beneficially enjoyed in its existing condition, the law often provides a way in which they may compel one another to submit to measures necessary to secure its beneficial enjoyment, making equitable compensation to any whose control of or interest in the property is thereby modified.

In the familiar case of land held by several tenants in common, or even by joint tenants with right of survivorship,¹ any one of them may compel a partition, upon which the court, if the land cannot be equally divided, will order owelty to be paid, or in many states, under statutes the constitutionality of which has never been denied, will, if the estate is such that it cannot be divided, either set it off to one and order him to compensate the others in money, or else order the whole estate to be sold. King v. Reed, 11 Gray (Mass.) 490; Bentley v. Long Dock Co., 14 N. J. Eq. 480; s. c. on appeal, nom. Manners v. Bentley, 15 N. J. Eq. 501; Mead v. Mitchell, 17 N. Y. 210, 72 Am. Dec. 455; Richardson v. Monson, 23 Conn. 94. Water rights held in common, incapable of partition at law, may be the subject of partition in equity, either by apportioning the time and extent of use, or by a sale of the right and a division of the proceeds. Smith v. Smith, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 470; De Witt v. Harvey, 4 Gray (Mass.) 486; McGillivray v. Evans, 27 Cal. 92.

¹ Regarding the legislative power to turn existing joint-tenancies into tenancies in common, abrogating the right of survivorship, see Miller v. Miller, 16 Mass. 59 (1819); Bamhaugh v. Bamhaugh, 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 191 (1824); Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 25 Mont. 41, 70-71, 63 Pac. 825 (1901). As to a similar power to turn estates tail into fees, see the cases cited post, p. 886, note, under Dunbar v. Boston & Prov. R. Co.; and as to the power to compel unwilling owners of contingent future interests to sell in order to clear the title, see Sohier v. Mass. General Hospital, Brevort v. Grace, and Linsley v. Hubbard, cited in the same note. The legislature may authorize changes of investment of trust property which otherwise

At the common law, as Lord Coke tells us: "If two tenants in common, or joint tenants, be of an house or mill, and it fall in decay, and the one is willing to repair the same, and the other will not, he that is willing shall have a writ de reparatione facienda; and the writ saith, ad reparationem et sustentationem ejusdem domus teneantur; whereby it appeareth that owners are in that case bound pro bono publico to maintain houses and mills which are for habitation and use of men." Co. Lit. 200b; 4 Kent Com. 370. In the same spirit, the statutes of Massachusetts, for a hundred and seventy-five years, have provided that any tenant in common of a mill in need of repair may notify a general meeting of all the owners for consultation, and that, if any one refuses to attend, or to agree with the majority, or to pay his share, the majority may cause the repairs to be made, and recover his share of the expenses out of the mill or its profits or earnings. Mass. Prov. Stat. 1709, ch. 3, § 1 Prov. Laws (State ed.) 641, and Anc. Chart. 388; Stat. 1795, ch. 74, §§ 5-7; Rev. Stat. 1836, ch. 116, §§ 44-58; Gen. Stat. 1860, ch. 149, §§ 53-64; Pub. Stat. 1882, ch. 190, §§ 59-70. And the statutes of New Hampshire, for more than eighty years, have made provision for compelling the repair of mills in such cases. Roberts v. Peavey, 7 Foster (27 N. H.) 477, 493.

The statutes which have long existed in many states authorizing the majority of the owners in severalty of adjacent meadow or swamp lands to have commissioners appointed to drain and improve the whole tract, by cutting ditches or otherwise, and to assess and levy the amount of the expense upon all the proprietors in proportion to the benefits received, have been often upheld, independently of any effect upon the public health, as reasonable regulations for the general advantage of those who are treated for this purpose as owners could not be validly sold against the objection of beneficiaries. Sohler v. Mass. General Hospital, 3 Cush. 483 (1849); Sohler v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 1 (1871).

of a common property. Coomes v. Burt, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 422; Wright v. Boston, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 233, 241; Sherman v. Tobey, 3 Allen (Mass.) 7; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 469, 15 Am. Rep. 39; French v. Kirkland, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 117; People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 438, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Coster v. Tide Water Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 54, 68, 518, 531; O'Reiley v. Kankakee Valley Drainage Co., 32 Ind. 169.

By the maritime law, based, as Lord Tenterden observed, on the consideration that the actual employment of ships is "a matter, not merely of private advantage to the owners, but of public benefit to the state," and recognized in the decisions and the rules of this court, courts of admiralty, when the part-owners of a ship cannot agree upon her employment, authorize the majority to send her to sea, on giving security to the dissenting minority, to bring back and restore the ship, or, if she be lost, to pay them the value of their shares; and in such case the minority can neither recover part of the profits of the voyage nor compensation for the use of the ship. Abbott on Shipping, pt. 1, ch. 3, §§ 2, 3; The Steamboat Orleans, 11 Pet. 175, 183, 9 L. Ed. 677; Rule 20 in Admiralty, 3 How. vii.; The Marengo, 1 Low. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 9,065. If the part-owners are equally divided in opinion upon the manner of employing the ship, then, according to the general maritime law, recognized and applied by Mr. Justice Washington, the ship may be ordered to be sold and the proceeds distributed among them. The Seneca, 18 Am. Jur. 485; s. c. 3 Wall. Jr. 395, Fed. Cas. No. 12,670. See, also, Story on Partnership, § 439; The Nelly Schneider, 3 P. D. 152.

But none of the cases, thus put by way of illustration, so strongly call for the interposition of the law as the case before us. The right to the use of running water is publici juris, and common to all the proprietors of the bed and banks of the stream from its source to its outlet. Each has a right to the reasonable use of the water as it flows past his land, not interfering with a like reasonable use by those above or below him. One reasonable use of the water is the use of the power, inherent in the fall of the stream and the force of the current, to drive mills. That power cannot be used without damming up the water, and thereby causing it to flow back. If the water thus dammed up by one riparian proprietor spread over the lands of others, they could at common law bring successive actions against him for the injury so done them, or even have the dam abated. Before the mill acts, therefore, it was often impossible for a riparian proprietor to use the water power at all, without the consent of those above him. The purpose of these statutes is to enable any riparian proprietor to erect a mill and use the water power of the stream, provided he does not interfere with an earlier exercise by another of a like right or with any right of the public; and to substitute, for the common-law remedies of repeated actions for damages and prostration of the dam, a new form of remedy, by which any one whose land.

is flowed can have assessed, once for all, either in a gross sum or by way of annual damages, adequate compensation for the injury.²

This view of the principle upon which general mill acts rest has been fully and clearly expounded in the judgments delivered by Chief Justice Shaw in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. In delivering the opinion of the court in a case decided in 1832, he said: "The statute of 1796 is but a revision of a former law, and the origin of these regulations is to be found in the provincial statute of 1714. They are somewhat at variance with that absolute right of dominion and enjoyment which every proprietor is supposed by law to have in his own soil; and in ascertaining their extent it will be useful to inquire into the principle upon which they are founded. We think they will be found to rest for their justification, partly upon the interest which the community at large has in the use and employment of mills, and partly upon the nature of the property, which is often so situated that it could not be beneficially used without the aid of this power. A stream of water often runs through the lands of several proprietors. One may have a sufficient mill-site on his own land, with ample space on his own land for a mill-pond or reservoir, but yet, from the operation of the well-known physical law that fluids will seek and find a level, he cannot use his own property without flowing the water back more or less on the lands of some other proprietor. We think the power given by statute was intended to apply to such cases, and that the legislature meant to provide that, as the public interest in such case coincides with that of the mill-owner, and as the mill-owner and the owner of lands to be flowed cannot both enjoy their full rights, without some interference, the latter shall yield to the former, so far that the former may keep up his mill and head of water, notwithstanding the damage done to the latter, upon payment of an equitable compensation for the real damage sustained, to be ascertained in the mode provided by the statute." "From this view of the object and purpose of the statute, we think it quite manifest that it was designed to provide for the most useful and beneficial occupation and enjoyment of natural streams and watercourses, where the absolute right of each proprietor to use his own land and water privileges, at his own pleasure, cannot be fully enjoyed, and one must of necessity, in some degree, yield to the other." Fiske v. Framingham Manufacturing Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 68, 70-72. * * *

Upon principle and authority, therefore, independently of any weight due to the opinions of the courts of New Hampshire and other states, maintaining the validity of general mill acts as taking private property for public use, in the strict constitutional meaning of that phrase, the statute under which the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company has flowed the land in question is clearly valid as a just and reasonable exercise of the power of the legislature, having regard to the public good, in a more general sense, as well as to the rights of the riparian proprietors, to regulate the use of the water power of running streams, which without some such regulation could not be beneficially used. The statute does not authorize new mills to be erected to the detriment of existing mills and mill privileges. And by providing for an assessment of full compensation to the owners of lands flowed, it avoids the difficulty which arose in the case of Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. Ed. 557. * * *

² As to the mode and certainty of compensation requisite, see Otis Co. v. Ludlow Co., post, p. 787, note.

Judgment affirmed.³

³ Compare Talbot v. Hudson, post, p. 678, and Lowell v. Boston, post, p. 573. In Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 610-614, 5 Sup. Ct. 1086, 1088, 1089, 29 L. Ed. 229 (1885), Gray, J., said:

"General laws authorizing the drainage of tracts of swamp and low lands, by commissioners appointed upon proceedings instituted by some of the owners of the lands, and the assessment of the whole expense of the work upon all the lands within the tract in question, have long existed in the state of New Jersey, and have been sustained and acted on by her courts, under the Constitution of 1776, as well as under that of 1844. * * * In State v. Newark, 27 N. J. Law, 185, 194, the Supreme Court said: 'Laws for the drainage or embanking of low grounds, and to provide for the expense, for the mere benefit of the proprietors, without reference to the public good, are to be classed, not under the taxing, but the police power of the government.' In Coster v. Tide Water Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 54, and Tide Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634, the same view was strongly asserted in the Court of Chancery and in the Court of Errors. The point there decided was that a statute providing for the drainage of a large tract of land overflowed by tide-water, by a corporation chartered for the purpose, none of the members of which owned any lands within the tract, if it could be maintained as an exercise of the right of eminent domain for a public use, yet could not authorize an assessment on the owners of such lands for anything beyond the benefits conferred upon them. But the case was clearly and sharply distinguished from the case of the drainage of lands for the exclusive benefit of the owners upon proceedings instituted by some of them. Chancellor Zabriskie said: 'But there is another branch of legislative power that may be appealed to, as authorizing the taking of the lands required for the works to drain these meadows. It is the power of the government to prescribe public regulations for the better and more economical management of property of persons whose property adjoins, or which, from some other reason, can be better managed and improved by some joint operation, such as the power of regulating the building of party walls; making and maintaining partition fences and ditches; constructing ditches and sewers for the draining of up-lands or marshes, which can more advantageously be drained by a common sewer or ditch. This is a well-known legislative power, recognized and treated of by all juriconsults and writers upon law through the civilized world; a branch of legislative power exercised by this state before and since the Revolution, and before and since the adoption of the present Constitution, and repeatedly recognized by our courts. The legislature has power to regulate these subjects, either by general law, or by particular laws for certain localities or particular and defined tracts of land. When the Constitution vested the legislative power in the Senate and General Assembly, it conferred the power to make these public regulations as a well understood part of that legislative power.' 'The principle of them all is, to make an improvement common to all concerned, at the common expense of all. And to effect this object, the acts provide that the works to effect the drainage may be located on any part of the lands drained, paying the owner of the land thus occupied compensation for the damage by such use. So far private property is taken by them; farther it is not. In none of them is the owner divested of his fee, and in most there is no corporation in which it could be vested,

SECTION 5.—REGULATION INCIDENTAL TO POWER OF PROHIBITION

NEW YORK CENT. & H. R. R. CO. v. WILLIAMS (1910) 199 N. Y. 108, 116-119, 92 N. E. 404, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, 139 Am. St. Rep. 850, BARTLETT, J. (upholding a New York statute requiring all persons and corporations operating steam surface railways to pay wages semi-monthly in cash):

"In the briefs of counsel the constitutionality of the 'semi-monthly cash payment law' (which term I use for convenience in referring to the provisions of the statute prescribing the time of payment and requiring it to be in cash) is discussed in two aspects: (1) As an exercise of the police power of the Legislature, and (2) as an exercise of the reserved power to amend the charters of corporations. In the view which I have taken of the case I shall proceed to consider only the question of its validity as warranted by the reserved power to amend. * * * Even if the enactment should be deemed unconstitutional so far as persons are concerned, the provision relating to them is readily separable from the rest of the statute relating to corporations, and its invalidity in this respect, if so adjudged, need not affect the application of the provision to steam surface railroad corporations. Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 29 Sup. Ct. 33.

and for all other purposes the title of the land remained in the owner. To effect such common drainage, power was in some cases given to continue these drains through adjacent lands not drained, upon compensation. All this was an ancient and well-known exercise of legislative power, and may well be considered as included in the grant of legislative power in the Constitution.' 18 N. J. Eq. 68-71. Chief Justice Beasley, in delivering the judgment of the court of errors, enforced the same distinction, saying: "This case, with regard to the grounds on which it rests, is to be distinguished from that class of proceedings by which meadows and other lands are drained on the application of the landowners themselves. In the present instance, the state is the sole actor, and public necessity or convenience is the only justification of her intervention. But the regulations established by the legislative power, whereby the owners of meadow lands are compelled to submit to an equal burden of the expense incurred in their improvement, are rules of police of the same character as provisions concerning party walls and partition fences. To these cases, therefore, the principle upon which the decision of the present case rests is not to be extended.' 18 N. J. Eq. 331, 90 Am. Dec. 634. * * *

"This review of the cases clearly shows that general laws for the drainage of large tracts of swamps and low lands, upon proceedings instituted by some of the proprietors of the lands to compel all to contribute to the expense of their drainage, have been maintained by the courts of New Jersey (without reference to the power of taking private property for the public use under the right of eminent domain, or to the power of suppressing a nuisance dangerous to the public health) as a just and constitutional exercise of the power of the legislature to establish regulations by which adjacent 53 L. Ed. 81. It matters not that both provisions are contained in the same section. Loeb v. Columbia Township Trustees, 179 U. S. 472, 490, 21 Sup. Ct. 174, 45 L. Ed. 280.

"In exercising the reserved power to amend corporate charters, the Legislature may not deprive a corporation of property already acquired, or the proceeds of lawful contracts previously made, or destroy or substantially impair the purposes of the grant or rights which are vested in the corporation thereunder; but it may make any alteration or amendment of a charter 'which will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant, or any rights vested under it, and which the Legislature may deem necessary to secure either that object or any public right.' Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 466, 476, 2 Sup. Ct. 267, 27 L. Ed. 408. In the case of corporations such as railroad companies, which are clothed to some extent with a public trust, and are under an obligation to discharge duties which affect the community at large, the Legislature may make amendments in furtherance of the public interest for the benefit of their employes, even though such amendments operate as limitations upon the exercise of the right to contract. Such is substantially the doctrine enunciated in the case of St. Louis, Iron Mountain & St. Paul Ry. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 19 Sup. Ct. 419, 43 L. Ed. 746, where the Supreme Court of the United States was called upon to pass on the constitutional validity of an act of the Arkansas Legislature which required railroad companies, whenever they discharged an employé, to pay him his unpaid wages then earned at the contract rate without abatement or deduction on the day of his discharge. The state court upheld this legislation as a valid exercise of the power to amend cor-lands, held by various owners in severalty, and in the improvement of which all have a common interest, but which, by reason of the peculiar natural condition of the whole tract, cannot be improved or enjoyed by any of them without the concurrence of all, may be reclaimed and made useful to all at their joint expense. The case comes within the principle upon which this court upheld the validity of general mill acts in Head v. Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., 113 U. S. 9, 5 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 889."

Contra: Matter of Tutthill, 163 N. Y. 123, 57 N. E. 303, 49 L. R. A. 781, 79 Am. St. Rep. 574 (1900).

As to compulsory party walls, see Swift v. Calnan, 102 Iowa, 206, 71 N. W. 233, 37 L. R. A. 462, 63 Am. St. Rep. 443 (1897); and as to partition fences, see Tomlinson v. Bainaka, 163 Ind. 112, 70 N. E. 155 (1904) (cases).

MISCELLANEOUS SERVITUDES OF PROPERTY AND OBLIGATIONS OF PERSONAL PUBLIC SERVICE.—Here may be mentioned together a variety of instances where persons are compelled, in the public interest, without compensation, to render services, to undergo expense or to suffer the use of their property by others. Of the first sort are militia training and jury duty; attendance and testimony as a witness, Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 108 (1897) (expert testimony compellable free), annotated 39 L. R. A. 116 ff.; and labor on the highways, Norwood v. Baker, infra, p. 657, note. Of the second, is the power of the state to compel property owners to lay and clean street sidewalks in front of their premises, Norwood v. Baker, post, p. 657, note. And of the third, see Eldridge v. Trezevant, post, p. 670, and note. No mention is made here of actions proper in great emergencies, such as war, public disorder, or great catastrophes. See American Print Works v. Lawrence, post, p. 669.

porate charters reserved to the Legislature in the state Constitution. It was contended in the Supreme Court of the United States that as to railroad corporations organized prior to its passage the statute was void, because in violation of the fourteenth amendment; or, in other words, because it amounted to a deprivation of property forbidden by the federal Constitution. The court, however, declined to sustain this view, but affirmed the judgment of the Supreme Court of Arkansas holding that inasmuch as the right to contract was not absolute, but might be subjected to the restraints demanded by the safety and welfare of the state, the legislative power to amend corporate charters in this manner could not be disputed on the ground that its exercise was an infraction of the fourteenth amendment.

"In the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 720, 25 L. Ed. 496, the same court in discussing the power reserved to Congress to amend the charters of the great Pacific railroads, reviewed the earlier decisions on the general subject, and held that the reservation of the power of amendment 'affects the entire relation between the state and the corporation, and places under legislative control all rights, privileges, and immunities derived by its charter directly from the state'; citing Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 459, 21 L. Ed. 204.

"In this state the same rule has been laid down with equal emphasis. As illustrations of the extent to which the Legislature might subject corporations to new restrictions or increased burdens in the exercise of its reserved power to amend corporate charters, Judge Denio, in Albany Northern R. R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345, called attention to one case in which the Court of Appeals had held that the line of a plank road might be extended and its capital increased, and to another in which a banking corporation chartered under the general act of 1838, without personal liability on the part of the shareholders, was so changed as to render the shareholders liable for all the debts of the company to an amount equal to the stock held by them respectively. See Schenectady & S. Plankroad Co. v. Thatcher, 11 N. Y. 102; Matter of Oliver Lee & Co.'s Bank, 21 N. Y. 9. 'It is difficult to put precise limits upon the power of the Legislature thus reserved over corporations created by it or under its authority,' said Judge Earl in Mayor, etc., of N. Y. v. Twenty-Third St. Ry. Co., 113 N. Y. 311, 317, 21 N. E. 60, 62. '* * * As it has the power utterly to deprive the corporation of its franchise to be a corporation, it may prescribe the conditions and terms upon which it may live and exercise such franchise. It may enlarge or limit its powers, and it may increase or limit its burdens.' The appellant complains because the Legislature has increased its burdens by the sum of $60,000 additional expenses which it must incur annually in order to pay its employes with the frequency prescribed by the statute; but the corporators must be deemed to have contemplated the possibility of any change of burden within the legislative power to make when they organized the railroad company.

"In New York a special charter may be amended by a general act which does not refer specifically to such charter. Pratt Institute v. City of New York, 183 N. Y. 151, 75 N. E. 1119, 5 Ann. Cas. 198; People ex rel. Cooper Union v. Gass, 190 N. Y. 323, 83 N. E. 64, 123 Am. St. Rep. 549, 13 Ann. Cas. 678. The case of State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 146, 59 Pac. 340, 47 L. R. A. 369, is cited as authority against this method of amendment, but it is in opposition to the view repeatedly asserted and assumed in this court, and is also opposed to decisions on the subject in other jurisdictions, where it is held that the fact that an act of the Legislature is general in its terms, and makes no direct or express reference to the charter of any particular corporation does not prevent it from operating as an amendment to the charter of any corporation comprehended in the classes to which it refers. Such was the effect given by the Supreme Court of the United States to a general statute of Kentucky, which was construed as operative to amend the charter of Berea College, although it was not in terms designated as an amendment thereof. Berea College v. Kentucky, supra. * * *

"The semimonthly payment clause of the labor law being applicable to all steam surface railroad corporations in the state operated as a repeal of all the charters of such corporations, if there were any, which provided for a different time of payment for employes and as an amendment or addition to all charters in which no time of payment was prescribed."¹

¹ Accord: Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co., 80 Vt. 370, 67 Atl. 1091, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 475 (1907) (cases). Other clauses in particular state Constitutions, prescribing the mode of amending corporate charters, may prevent a broad application of the doctrine of the principal case. Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 74-75, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206 (1893).

In Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co., 201 N. Y. 271, 319-320, 94 N. E. 431, 449, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156 (1911), Cullen, C. J., said (holding invalid a New York statute making employers in certain hazardous occupations absolutely liable for injuries to employes sustained therein): "I concur with Judge Werner that the act, as applicable to the case before us, cannot be considered as an exercise of the power of the state to regulate corporations. The act is general, not confined to corporations, and, even if it were, I think its effect would be a deprivation of property not authorized by the reserved power to regulate. As to corporations hereafter formed, the question is very different. The franchise to be a corporation is not one inherent in the citizen, but proceeds solely from the bounty of the Legislature, and for that reason the Legislature may dictate the terms on which it will be granted and require the acceptance of the provisions of this act as a condition of incorporation. Purdy v. Erie R. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 42, 56 N. E. 508, 48 L. R. A. 669; Minor v. Erie R. R. Co., 171 N. Y. 566, 64 N. E. 454; People ex rel. Schurz v. Cook, 110 N. Y. 443, 18 N. E. 113; s. c., 148 U. S. 397, 13 Sup. Ct. 645, 37 L. Ed. 498; Chicago, R. I. & Pac. R. Co. v. Zernecke, 183 U. S. 582, 22 Sup. Ct. 229, 46 L. Ed. 339. Even in the case of existing corporations, the corporate existence of all those created since the Constitution of 1846 may be revoked by the Legislature, though the property rights of such corporations and their special franchises other than the one to be a corporation cannot be impaired. Const. art. 8, § 1; Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 191 N. Y. 212, 87 N. E. 443, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420. The property and franchise would have to be managed by the owners as partners

CHAPTER XI

DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW:
TAXATION

SECTION 1.—JURISDICTION

UNION REFRIGERATOR TRANSIT CO. v. KENTUCKY.

Supreme Court of United States, 1905. 199 U. S. 194, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.)

[Error to the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. The defendant company, a Kentucky corporation, was sued by that state for the ad valorem property taxes assessed for certain years upon 2,000 freight cars owned by it and rented to shippers, who took possession of them from time to time at Milwaukee, Wis., and used them to carry freight in various parts of the United States, Canada, and Mexico. According to a system of averages based upon gross earnings, only from 30 to 70 of such cars were employed yearly in Kentucky. The state Court of Appeals directed a judgment against the company for taxes upon all of its cars.]

Mr. Justice BROWN. In this case the question is directly presented whether a corporation organized under the laws of Kentucky is subject to taxation upon its tangible personal property permanently located in other states, and employed there in the prosecution of its business. Such taxation is charged to be a violation of the due process of law clause of the fourteenth amendment.

or tenants in common, and the Legislature might require as a condition of the continued right to be a corporation that before the expiration of a reasonable period the provisions of the statute should also be accepted also by them."

CONDITIONS IMPOSED UPON PROHIBITABLE ACTS OR PROPERTY.—As to the validity of onerous regulations imposed upon conduct or property that might be prohibited altogether, see Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co., 166 U. S. 698, 17 Sup. Ct. 633, 41 L. Ed. 1169 (1897) (dogs); McGlone v. Womack, 129 Ky. 274, 111 S. W. 688, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855 (1908) (same); Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323 (1878) (saloons), explained in Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co., 201 N. Y. 308, 94 N. E. 445, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156, by Werner, J.: "In that case, as in the case of Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. 31, 50 L. Ed. 157 the controlling principle was that the state had the right to prohibit, and therefore the absolute right to control."

Compare the analogous doctrine as to procedural due process in Oceanic Co. v. Stranahan, ante, p. 298, and in taxation of corporate franchises, post, pp. 618-622.

Section 4020 of the Kentucky Statutes, under which this assessment was made, provides that "all real and personal estate within this state, and all personal estate of persons residing in this state, and of all corporations organized under the laws of this state, whether the property be in or out of this state, * * * shall be subject to taxation."

The power of taxation, indispensable to the existence of every civilized government, is exercised upon the assumption of an equivalent rendered to the taxpayer in the protection of his person and property, in adding to the value of such property, or in the creation and maintenance of public conveniences in which he shares,—such, for instance, as roads, bridges, sidewalks, pavements, and schools for the education of his children. If the taxing power be in no position to render these services, or otherwise to benefit the person or property taxed, and such property be wholly within the taxing power of another state, to which it may be said to owe an allegiance, and to which it looks for protection, the taxation of such property within the domicil of the owner partakes rather of the nature of an extortion than a tax, and has been repeatedly held by this court to be beyond the power of the legislature, and a taking of property without due process of law. Northern C. R. Co. v. Jackson, 7 Wall. 262, 19 L. Ed. 88; State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. Ed. 179; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490-499, 22 L. Ed. 189-193; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 358, 49 L. Ed. 1077, 1083, 25 Sup. Ct. 669. In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. Ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, it was held, after full consideration, that the taking of private property without compensation was a denial of due process within the fourteenth amendment. See also Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 102, 24 L. Ed. 616, 618; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 417, 41 L. Ed. 489, 495, 17 Sup. Ct. 130; Mt. Hope Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 509, 519, 35 Am. St. Rep. 515, 33 N. E. 695.

Most modern legislation upon this subject has been directed (1) to the requirement that every citizen shall disclose the amount of his property subject to taxation, and shall contribute in proportion to such amount; and (2) to the avoidance of double taxation. As said by Adam Smith in his Wealth of Nations, book V, chap. 2, pt. 2, p. 371: "The subjects of every state ought to contribute towards the support of the government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state. The expense of government to the individuals of a great nation is like the expense of management to the joint tenants of a great estate, who are all obliged to contribute in proportion to their respective interests in the estate. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation."

But notwithstanding the rule of uniformity lying at the basis of every just system of taxation, there are doubtless many individual cases where the weight of a tax falls unequally upon the owners of the property taxed. This is almost unavoidable under every system of direct taxation. But the tax is not rendered illegal by such discrimination. Thus, every citizen is bound to pay his proportion of a school tax, though he have no children; of a police tax, though he have no buildings or personal property to be guarded; or of a road tax, though he never use the road. In other words, a general tax cannot be dissected to show that, as to certain constituent parts, the taxpayer receives no benefit. Even in case of special assessments imposed for the improvement of property within certain limits, the fact that it is extremely doubtful whether a particular lot can receive any benefit from the improvement does not invalidate the tax with respect to such lot. Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. Ed. 658; Amesbury Nail Factory Co. v. Weed, 17 Mass. 53; Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 264, 42 L. Ed. 740, 18 Sup. Ct. 340; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 197 U. S. 430, 49 L. Ed. 819, 25 Sup. Ct. 466. Subject to these individual exceptions, the rule is that in classifying property for taxation, some benefit to the property taxed is a controlling consideration, and a plain abuse of this power will sometimes justify a judicial interference. Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. Ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. 187. It is often said protection and payment of taxes are correlative obligations.

It is also essential to the validity of a tax that the property shall be within the territorial jurisdiction of the taxing power. Not only is the operation of state laws limited to persons and property within the boundaries of the state, but property which is wholly and exclusively within the jurisdiction of another state receives none of the protection for which the tax is supposed to be the compensation. This rule receives its most familiar illustration in the cases of land, which, to be taxable, must be within the limits of the state. Indeed, we know of no case where a legislature has assumed to impose a tax upon land within the jurisdiction of another state; much less where such action has been defended by any court. It is said by this court in the State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds Case, 15 Wall. 300-319, 21 L. Ed. 179-187, that no adjudication should be necessary to establish so obvious a proposition as that property lying beyond the jurisdiction of a state is not a subject upon which her taxing power can be legitimately exercised.

The argument against the taxability of land within the jurisdiction of another state applies with equal cogency to tangible personal property beyond the jurisdiction. It is not only beyond the sovereignty of the taxing state, but does not and cannot receive protection under its laws. True, a resident owner may receive an income from such property, but the same may be said of real estate within a foreign jurisdiction. Whatever be the rights of the state with respect to the taxation of such income,¹ it is clearly beyond its power to tax the land from which the income is derived. As we said in Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385-396, 47 L. Ed. 513-518, 23 Sup. Ct. 463: "While the mode, form, and extent of taxation are, speaking generally, limited only by the wisdom of the legislature, that power is limited by a principle inhering in the very nature of constitutional government,—namely, that the taxation imposed must have relation to a subject within the jurisdiction of the taxing government." See also McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316-429, 4 L. Ed. 579-607; Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 17 How. 596-599, 15 L. Ed. 254, 255; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 11 Wall. 423, 429, 431, 20 L. Ed. 192, 194, 195; Morgan v. Parham, 16 Wall. 471-476, 21 L. Ed. 303, 304.

Respecting this, there is an obvious distinction between tangible and intangible property, in the fact that the latter is held secretly; that there is no method by which its existence or ownership can be ascertained in the state of its situs except, perhaps, in the case of mortgages or shares of stock. So if the owner be discovered, there is no way by which he can be reached by process in a state other than that of his domicile, or the collection of the tax otherwise enforced. In this class of cases the tendency of modern authorities is to apply the maxim "mobilia sequuntur personam," and to hold that the property may be taxed at the domicile of the owner as the real situs of the debt, and also, more particularly in the case of mortgages, in the state where the property is retained. Such have been the repeated rulings of this court. Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. Ed. 189; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. Ed. 558; Bonaparte v. Appeal Tax Court, 104 U. S. 592, 26 L. Ed. 845; Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 29 L. Ed. 240, 5 Sup. Ct. 1014; Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 47 L. Ed. 669, 23 Sup. Ct. 401; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. Ed. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. 277.

If this occasionally results in double taxation, it much oftener happens that this class of property escapes altogether. In the case of intangible property, the law does not look for absolute equality, but to the much more practical consideration of collecting the tax upon such property, either in the state of the domicile or the situs. Of course, we do not enter into a consideration of the question, so much discussed by political economists, of the double taxation involved in taxing the property from which these securities arise, and also the burdens upon such property, such as mortgages, shares of stock, and the like,—the securities themselves.

¹ As to jurisdiction to levy income taxes, see Railway Co. v. Jackson, 7 Wall. 262, 19 L. Ed. 88 (1869); United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 17 Wall. 322, 21 L. Ed. 597 (1873); Railway Co. v. Collector, 100 U. S. 595, 25 L. Ed. 647 (1880); United States v. Erie R. Co., 106 U. S. 327 and 703, 1 Sup. Ct. 223, 27 L. Ed. 151 (1882). Compare the remark of Taney, C. J., in License Cases, 5 How. 504, 576 (12 L. Ed. 256) (1847): "Undoubtedly a state may impose a tax upon its citizens in proportion to the amount they are respectively worth"—even though part of their property consist of non-taxable imports.

The arguments in favor of the taxation of intangible property at the domicile of the owner have no application to tangible property. The fact that such property is visible, easily found, and difficult to conceal, and the tax readily collectible, is so cogent an argument for its taxation at its situs, that of late there is a general consensus of opinion that it is taxable in the state where it is permanently located and employed, and where it receives its entire protection, irrespective of the domicile of the owner. We have, ourselves, held in a number of cases that such property, permanently located in a state other than that of its owner, is taxable there. Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. Ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. Ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. 475; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. Ed. 613, 3 Interst. Com. R. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. 876. * * *

[Here follows the citation of other federal cases and a discussion of various state decisions.]

But there are two recent cases in this court which we think completely cover the question under consideration, and require the reversal of the judgment of the state court. The first of these is that of the Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385, 47 L. Ed. 513, 23 Sup. Ct. 463. That was an action to recover certain taxes imposed upon the corporate franchise of the defendant company, which was organized to establish and maintain a ferry between Kentucky and Indiana. The defendant was also licensed by the state of Indiana. We held that the fact that such franchise had been granted by the commonwealth of Kentucky did not bring within the jurisdiction of Kentucky, for the purpose of taxation, the franchise granted to the same company by Indiana, and which we held to be an incorporeal hereditament, derived from and having its legal situs in that state. It was adjudged that such taxation amounted to a deprivation of property without due process of law, in violation of the fourteenth amendment; as much so as if the state taxed the land owned by that company; and that the officers of the state had exceeded their power in taxing the whole franchise without making a deduction for that obtained from Indiana, the two being distinct, "although the enjoyment of both are essential to a complete ferry right for the transportation of persons and property across the river both ways."

The other and more recent case is that of the Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 49 L. Ed. 1077, 25 Sup. Ct. 669. That was an assessment upon the capital stock of the railroad company, wherein it was contended that the assessor should have deducted from the value of such stock certain coal mined in Pennsylvania and owned by it, but stored in New York, there awaiting sale, and beyond the jurisdiction of the commonwealth at the time appraisement was made. This coal was taxable, and in fact was taxed, in the state where it rested for the purposes of sale at the time when the appraisement in question was made. Both this court and the supreme court of Pennsylvania had held that a tax on the corporate stock is a tax on the assets of the corporation issuing such stock. The two courts agreed in the general proposition that tangible property permanently outside of the state, and having no situs within the state, could not be taxed. But they differed upon the question whether the coal involved was permanently outside of the state. In delivering the opinion it was said: "However temporary the stay of the coal might be in the particular foreign states where it was resting at the time of the appraisal, it was definitely and forever beyond the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania. And it was within the jurisdiction of the foreign states for purposes of taxation, and, in truth, it was there taxed. We regard this tax as, in substance and in fact, though not in form, a tax specifically levied upon the property of the corporation, and part of that property is outside and beyond the jurisdiction of the state which thus assumes to tax it." The decision in that case was really broader than the exigencies of the case under consideration require, as the tax was not upon the personal property itself, but upon the capital stock of a Pennsylvania corporation, a part of which stock was represented by the coal, the value of which was held should have been deducted.

The adoption of a general rule that tangible personal property in other states may be taxed at the domicile of the owner involves possibilities of an extremely serious character. Not only would it authorize the taxation of furniture and other property kept at country houses in other states or even in foreign countries, of stocks of goods and merchandise kept at branch establishments, when already taxed at the state of their situs, but of that enormous mass of personal property belonging to railways and other corporations, which might be taxed in the state where they are incorporated, though their charter contemplated the construction and operation of roads wholly outside the state, and sometimes across the continent; and when, in no other particular, they are subject to its laws and entitled to its protection. The propriety of such incorporations, where no business is done within the state, is open to grave doubt; but it is possible that legislation alone can furnish a remedy. * * *

It is unnecessary to say that this case does not involve the question of the taxation of intangible personal property, or of inheritance or succession taxes, or of questions arising between different municipalities or taxing districts within the same state, which are controlled by different considerations. * * *

Judgment reversed.

[WHITE, J., concurred in the result.]

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES. It seems to me that the result reached by the court probably is a desirable one, but I hardly understand how it can be deduced from the fourteenth amendment; and as the CHIEF JUSTICE feels the same difficulty, I think it proper to say that my doubt has not been removed.

NEW YORK ex rel. NEW YORK CENTRAL & H. R. R. CO.
v. MILLER.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1906. 202 U. S. 584, 26 Sup. Ct. 714, 50 L. Ed. 1155.)

[Error to the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals of New York in various cases. The state levied what the statute called a "franchise tax" upon domestic corporations, based upon the amount of capital stock employed within the state. For the reasons stated in the opinion below, the relator caused writs of certiorari to be addressed to the state comptroller to reduce the taxes thus imposed upon it. All of the state courts refused relief.]

Mr. Justice HOLMES. * * * The relator is a New York corporation, owning or hiring lines without as well as within the state, having arrangements with other carriers for through transportation, routing, and rating, and sending its cars to points without as well as within the state, and over other lines as well as its own. The cars are often out of the relator's possession for some time, and may be transferred to many roads successively, and even may be used by other roads for their own independent business, before they return to the relator or the state. In short, by the familiar course of railroad business a considerable portion of the relator's cars constantly is out of the state, and on this ground the relator contended that that proportion should be deducted from its entire capital, in order to find the capital stock employed within the state. * * *

Evidence was offered * * * of the car mileage outside and inside of the state, in order to show, on one footing or the other, that a certain proportion of cars, although not the same cars, was continuously without the state during the whole tax year. The comptroller refused to make any reduction of the tax. * * * We are to assume that the statute purports and intends to allow no deduction from the capital stock taken as the basis of the tax, unless some specific portion of the corporate property is outside of the state during the whole tax year. We must assume, further, that no part of the corporate property in question was outside of the state during the whole tax year.
* * *

We are not curious to inquire exactly what kind of a tax this is to be called. If it can be sustained by the name given to it by the local courts, it must be sustained by us. It is called a franchise tax in the act, but it is a franchise tax measured by property. A tax very like the present was treated as a tax on the property of the corporation in Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 353, 49 L. Ed. 1077, 1081, 25 Sup. Ct. 669. This seems to be regarded as such a tax by the Court of Appeals in this case. See People ex rel. Commer- cial Cable Co. v. Morgan, 178 N. Y. 433, 439, 67 L. R. A. 960, 70 N. E. 967. If it is a tax on any franchise which the state of New York gave, and the same state could take away, it stands at least no worse. The relator's argument assumes that it must be regarded as a tax of a particular kind, in order to invalidate it, although it might be valid if regarded as the state court regards it.

Suppose, then, that the state of New York had taxed the property directly, there was nothing to hinder its taxing the whole of it. It is true that it has been decided that property, even of a domestic corporation, cannot be taxed if it is permanently out of the state. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 201, 211, 50 L. Ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 49 L. Ed. 1077, 25 Sup. Ct. 669; Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385, 47 L. Ed. 519, 23 Sup. Ct. 468. But it has not been decided, and it could not be decided, that a state may not tax its own corporations for all their property within the state during the tax year, even if every item of that property should be taken successively into another state for a day, a week, or six months, and then brought back. Using the language of domicile, which now so frequently is applied to inanimate things, the state of origin remains the permanent situs of the property, notwithstanding its occasional excursions to foreign parts. Ayer & L. Tie Co. v. Kentucky, 202 U. S. 409, 50 L. Ed. 1082, 26 Sup. Ct. 679, 6 Ann. Cas. 205. See also Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 208, 209, 50 L. Ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.

It was suggested that this case is but the complement of Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. Ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, and that, as there a tax upon a foreign corporation was sustained, levied on such proportion of its capital stock as the miles of track over which its cars were run within the state bore to the whole number of miles over which its cars were run, so here, in the domicile of such a corporation there should be an exemption corresponding to the tax held to be lawfully levied elsewhere. But, in that case, it was found that the "cars used in this state have, during all the time for which tax is charged, been running into, through, and out of the state." The same cars were continuously receiving the protection of the state, and, therefore, it was just that the state should tax a proportion of them. Whether, if the same amount of protection had been received in respect of constantly changing cars, the same principle would have applied, was not decided, and it is not necessary to decide now. In the present case, however, it does not appear that any specific cars or any average of cars was so continuously in any other state as to be taxable there. The absences relied on were not in the course of travel upon fixed routes, but random excursions of casually chosen cars, determined by the varying orders of particular shippers and the arbitrary convenience of other roads. Therefore we need not consider either whether there is any necessary parallelism between liability elsewhere and immunity at home.

Judgments affirmed.¹

¹ In Amerleau Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Hall, 174 U. S. 70, 81-82, 19 Sup. Ct. 599, 604, 43 L. Ed. 899 (1899), Colorado assessed a foreign car company upon the value of an average of 40 cars employed by it within the state at a time during a certain assessment period. This was upheld, Shiras, J., saying: "The state statutes impose no burdens on the business of the plaintiff in error, but contemplate only the assessment and levy of taxes upon the property situated within the state; and the only question is whether it was competent to ascertain the number of the cars to be subjected to taxation by inquiring into the average number used within the state limits during the period for which the assessment was made. It having been settled, as we have seen, that where a corporation of one state brings into another, to use and employ, a portion of its movable personal property, it is legitimate for the latter to impose upon such property thus used and employed its fair share of the burdens of taxation imposed upon similar property used in like way by its own citizens, we think that such a tax may be properly assessed and collected, in cases like the present, where the specific and individual items of property so used and employed were not continuously the same, but were constantly changing, according to the exigencies of the business, and that the tax may be fixed by an appraisal and valuation of the average amount of the property thus habitually used and employed. Nor would the fact that such cars were employed as vehicles of transportation in the interchange of interstate commerce render their taxation invalid. Marye v. Railroad Co., 127 U. S. 123, 8 Sup. Ct. 1037, 32 L. Ed. 94 (1888); Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613 (1891)." [Harlan and White, JJ., dissented.]

SITUS OF VESSELS FOR TAXATION.—See Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Virginia, 198 U. S. 299, 25 Sup. Ct. 686, 49 L. Ed. 1059, 3 Ann. Cas. 1100 (1905) (taxable in state where wholly employed, though registered, enrolled and owned elsewhere); Ayer & Lord Co. v. Kentucky, 202 U. S. 409, 26 Sup. Ct. 679, 50 L. Ed. 1082, 6 Ann. Cas. 205 (1906) (not taxable at port of call where enrolled, owner's domicile being in another state); Southern Pac. Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U. S. 63, 32 Sup. Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 96 (1911) (taxable at owner's domicile though in fact never there, if no permanent situs elsewhere) (discussing all cases), in which Lurton, J., said (222 U. S. 73-76, 32 Sup. Ct. 17, 56 L. Ed. 96): "The general rule has long been settled as to vessels plying between the ports of different states, engaged in the coastwise trade, that the domicile of the owner is the situs of a vessel for the purpose of taxation, wholly irrespective of the place of enrolment, subject, however, to the exception that where a vessel engaged in interstate commerce has acquired an actual situs in a state other than the place of the domicile of the owner, it may there be taxed because within the jurisdiction of the taxing authority. * * * To lay down a principle that vessel property has no situs for purposes of taxation other than that of actual permanent location would introduce elements of uncertainty concerning the situs of such property not presented by other kinds of movable property. It is one thing to find that a movable, such as a railway car, a stock of merchandise, or a herd of cattle, has become a part of the permanent mass of property in a particular state, and quite another to attribute to a sea-going ship an actual situs at any particular port into which it goes for supplies or repairs, or for the purpose of taking on or discharging cargo or passengers. A ship is not intended to stay in port, but to navigate the seas. Its stay in port is a mere incident of its voyage, and to determine that it has acquired an actual situs in one port rather than another would involve such grave uncertainty as to result often in an entire escape from taxation. * * * The difficulties attendant upon the taxation of intangible property elsewhere than at the domicile of the owner have largely preserved the domicile of the owner as the proper situs for purposes of taxation. The legality of a tax is not to be measured by the benefit received by the taxpayer, although equality of burdens be the general standard sought to

BUCK v. BEACH.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1907. 206 U. S. 392, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Indiana. One Nash, a resident of New York, owned a large sum in notes owed to him by residents of Ohio. These notes were kept by an agent in a safe in Indiana, except when any business was done with regard to them, when they were sent to an Ohio agent for this purpose. No other use was made of them in Indiana. On the death of Nash, an action was brought against Buck, a trustee under his will, by Beach, a county treasurer of Indiana, to collect back taxes in Indiana upon these notes, and a decision in favor of Beach was affirmed by the state Supreme Court. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * The plaintiff in error asserts that the simple physical presence of the Ohio notes in Indiana, payable to, and not indorsed by, the decedent, did not constitute taxable property there, because such notes were given and were payable and were paid in Ohio, by residents of Ohio, and to a nonresident of Indiana, and for loans made in Ohio, the capital represented by such notes never having been used in business in Indiana, and he insists that a tax upon such capital or upon the notes themselves as representing that capital, is an illegal tax, and that to take property in payment of such an illegal tax is to take it without due process of law, and constitutes a violation of the fourteenth amendment. * * *

The sole question, then, for this court, is whether the mere presence of the notes in Indiana constituted the debts of which the notes were the written evidence property within the jurisdiction of that state, so that such debts could be therein taxed. Generally, property, in order to be the subject of taxation, must be within the jurisdiction of the power assuming to tax. * * *

be attained. Protection and taxation are not necessarily correlative obligations, nor precise equality of burden attainable, however desirable. The taxing power is one which may be interfered with upon grounds of unjustness only when there has been such flagrant abuse as may be remedied by some affirmative principle of constitutional law. Take the case in hand. The Southern Pacific Company is a corporation having much extraordinary power. It only exists and exercises this power by virtue of the law of Kentucky. By the law of its being it resides in Kentucky, and there maintains its general office, and there holds its corporate meetings. To say that the protection which the corporation receives from the state of its origin and domicile affords no basis for imposing taxes upon tangibles which have not acquired an actual situs under some other jurisdiction is not supportable upon grounds of either abstract justice or concrete law. What is the protection accorded these vessels at any of the ports to which they temporarily go for purpose of business? What protection do they receive from the state or city of New York other than that accorded to every other ship which visits that port, foreign or domestic, for repairs, supplies, or other business?" [The vessels were all enrolled at New York, plied only on the ocean, and perhaps could not have reached Kentucky by water.]

In regard to tangible property the old rule was mobilia sequuntur personam, by which personal property was supposed to follow the person of its owner, and to be subject to the law of the owner's domicile. For the purpose of taxation, however, it has long been held that personal property may be separated from its owner, and he may be taxed on its account at the place where the property is, although it is not the place of his own domicile, and even if he is not a citizen or resident of the state which imposes the tax. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. Ed. 613, 616, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. 876; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. Ed. 189; People ex rel. Hoyt v. Tax & A. Com'rs, 23 N. Y. 224, 240. The same rule applies to intangible property. Generally speaking, intangible property in the nature of a debt may be regarded, for the purposes of taxation, as situated at the domicile of the creditor and within the jurisdiction of the state where he has such domicile. It is property within that state. Thus it has been held that a debt owned by a citizen of one state against a citizen of another state and evidenced by the bond of the debtor, secured by a deed of trust or mortgage upon real estate situated in the state where the debtor resides, is properly taxed by the state of the residence of the creditor, if the statute of that state so provides, and such tax violates no provision of the federal Constitution. Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 498, 25 L. Ed. 558, 562.¹

Rejecting the fiction of law in regard to the situs of personal property, including therein choses in action, the courts of Indiana have asserted jurisdiction by reason of the statute of that state over these Ohio notes for the purpose of taxation in Indiana, founded upon the simple fact that such notes were placed in the latter state by the Ohio agent of the decedent under the circumstances above set forth. The supreme court of Indiana refused to accept the testimony of the agents that the Ohio notes were sent to Lafayette merely for safekeeping, and for clerical convenience, and said that "the court below was authorized to make the opposite deduction from the uniform course of the business in respect to the keeping of said notes and mortgages and from the evidence that decedent gave the direction which established the practice that was pursued in that particular. More than that, the evidence clearly warranted the conclusion that Buck was vested with a control of said notes and securities for the purpose of enabling decedent to escape taxation in Ohio. We must, therefore, conclude, in support of the general finding, that the court below found that in conducting the business of the Ohio agency the decedent separated from said business the possession of said notes and mortgages and vested the right to such possession in said Buck. There was no return for taxation of said notes, or of the investments represented by them, either in Ohio or New York during the lifetime of the decedent."

¹ But see Commonwealth v. West India Oil Co., 138 Ky. 828, 129 S. W. 301, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295 (1910) (credits of domestic corporation non-taxable, where all business and property outside of taxing state).

Taking this to be a finding of fact by the supreme court of the state, it is plain that the action of the decedent in sending the Ohio notes into the state of Indiana for the purpose stated (whether successful or not) was improper and unjustifiable. The record does show, however, that the executors subsequently paid the Ohio authorities over $40,000 for taxes on the moneys invested in Ohio.

But an attempt to escape proper taxation in Ohio does not confer jurisdiction to tax property asserted to be in Indiana which really lies outside and beyond the jurisdiction of that state. Jurisdiction of the state of Indiana to tax is not conferred or strengthened by reason of the motive which may have prompted the decedent to send into the state of Indiana these evidences of debts owing him by residents of Ohio. The question still remains: Was there any property within the jurisdiction of the state of Indiana, so as to permit that state to tax it, simply because of the presence of the Ohio notes in that state? It was not the value of the paper as a tangible thing, on which these promises to pay the debts existing in Ohio were written, that was taxed by that state. The property really taxed was the debt itself, as each separate note was taxed at the full amount of the debt named therein or due thereon. And jurisdiction over these debts for the purpose of taxation was asserted and exercised solely by reason of the physical presence in Indiana of the notes themselves, although they were only written evidence of the existence of the debts which were in fact there-by taxed.

A distinction has been sometimes taken between bonds and other specialty debts belonging to the deceased, on the one hand, and simple contract debts on the other, for the purpose of probate jurisdiction, and the probate court where the bonds are found has been held to have jurisdiction to grant probate, while, in the other class of debts (including promissory notes), jurisdiction has attached to the probate court where the debtor resided at the death of the creditor. 1 Wms. Ex'rs (6th Am. from 7th English Ed.) bottom paging 288, 290, note (h); Wyman v. Halstead (Wyman v. United States) 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. Ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. 417. See also Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292, 299; Owen v. Miller, 10 Ohio St. 136, 75 Am. Dec. 502.

Under such rule, the debts here in question were not property within the state of Indiana, nor were the promissory notes themselves, which were only evidence of such debts. The rule giving jurisdiction where the specialty may be found has no application to a promissory note. Assuming such a rule, the case here is not covered by it.

Questions of the validity of state taxation with reference to the federal Constitution have become quite frequent in this court within the last few years. The case of Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 U. S. 395, 51 L. Ed. 853, 27 Sup. Ct. 499, is the latest. The question there was in relation to the validity of certain taxes assessed in the city of New Orleans against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company by reason of the company doing business in lending money to the holders of its policies in New Orleans. The domicile of the company was in the city of New York, and the evidences of the credits, in the form of notes, were kept most of the time in New York, being sent to New Orleans when due. The tax was, under the laws of the state of Louisiana, levied on the "credits, money loaned, bills receivable," etc., of the plaintiff in error, and its amount was ascertained by computing the sum of the face value of all the notes held by the company in New Orleans at the time of the assessment. The assessment was made under an act which provided that "bills receivable, obligations, or credits arising from the business done in this state," shall be assessable at the business domicile of the nonresident, the assessment being made in such a way under the statute as would "represent in their aggregate a fair average on the capital, both cash and credits, employed in the business of the party or parties to be assessed." The tax was sustained because, as is stated in the opinion of the court, which was delivered by Mr. Justice Moody, "the insurance company chose to enter into the business of lending money within the state of Louisiana, and employed a local agent to conduct that business. It was conducted under the laws of the state. The state undertook to tax the capital employed in the business precisely as it taxed the capital of its own citizens in like situation. For the purpose of arriving at the amount of capital actually employed, it caused the credits arising out of the business to be assessed. We think the state had the power to do this, and that the foreigner doing business cannot escape taxation upon his capital by removing temporarily from the state evidences of credits in the form of notes. Under such circumstances, they have a taxable situs in the state of their origin." The temporary absence of the notes given for the loans from the state (being in New York, the domicile of the company) except when they became due was regarded as unimportant. The law, it was said, regarded the place of their origin as their true home, to which they would return to be paid, and their temporary absence, however long continued, was left out of account.²

The prior cases of New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. Ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, and State Assessors v. Comptoir National D'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 48 L. Ed. 232, 24 Sup. Ct. 109, were also cited. In the first there was a tax on credits, evidenced by notes (secured by mortgages on real estate in New Orleans) which the owner, a nonresident, who had inherited them, left in Louisiana in the possession of an agent, who collected the principal and interest as they became due. The capital of the owner was thus invested in the state, and was thereby subject to taxation there, and the notes did not alter the nature of the debt, but were merely evidence of it. In the latter case a foreign banking company did business in New Orleans, and through an agent lent money which was evidenced by checks drawn upon the agent, treated as overdrafts and secured by collateral, the checks and collateral remaining in the hands of the agent until the transactions were closed. The credits thus evidenced were held taxable in Louisiana. The corporation was held to be doing business and had capital employed in the city of New Orleans, to the extent of the assessment made upon it therein.

² Accord: Liverpool, etc., Co. v. Board of Assessors, 221 U. S. 346, 31 Sup. Ct. 550, 55 L. Ed. 762 (1911) (taxation of amounts due on open accounts for premiums from policy-holders in state—no written evidence of debt); Orient Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 221 U. S. 358, 31 Sup. Ct. 554, 55 L. Ed. 769 (1911) (same, where uncollected premiums charged to agents of company). Compare Board of Assessors v. New York Life Ins. Co., 216 U. S. 517, 30 Sup. Ct. 385, 54 L. Ed. 597 (1910) (so-called "policy loans," debited against reserve value of life insurance policies, not taxable, because never really creating a debt, but only a set-off).

In Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. Ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. 585, the assessment was upheld because it appeared that the person assessed was doing business in Minnesota through an agent, in lending money in that state, which was secured by mortgages on real property therein. The amount of money thus invested in that state was held to be properly taxable therein.

In Savings & L. Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 42 L. Ed. 803, 18 Sup. Ct. 392, the assessment was upon the real estate mortgaged, the interest of the mortgagee therein being taxed to him and the rest to the mortgagor, and it was held by this court that the fact that the mortgage was owned by a citizen of another state, and in his possession outside of the state of Oregon, where the real estate was situated, did not violate the fourteenth amendment. It was stated that "the state may tax real estate mortgaged, as it may all other property within its jurisdiction, at its full value. It may do this, either by taxing the whole to the mortgagor, or by taxing to the mortgagee the interest therein represented by the mortgage, and to the mortgagor the remaining interest in the land. And it may, for the purpose of taxation, either treat the mortgage debt as personal property, to be taxed like other choses in action, to the creditor at his domicile, or treat the mortgagee's interest in the land as real estate, to be taxed to him, like other real property, at its situs." Under the statute of Oregon the assessment was made against the mortgagee upon his interest in the land as real estate.

There are no cases in this court where an assessment such as the one before us has been involved. We have not had a case where neither the party assessed nor the debtor was a resident of or present in the state where the tax was imposed, and where no business was done therein by the owner of the note or his agent relating in any way to the capital evidenced by the notes assessed for taxation. We cannot assent to the doctrine that the mere presence of evidences of debt, such as these notes, under the circumstances already stated, amounts to the presence of property within the state for taxation. That promissory notes may be the subject of larceny, as stated in 48 N. Y., cited below, does not make the debts evidenced by them property liable to taxation within the state, where there is no other fact than the presence of the notes upon which to base the claim.

In People ex rel. Westbrook v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390, it was held that money due upon a contract for the sale of land was personal property, and that where such contract belonging to a nonresident was in the hands of a resident agent, it might, for the purposes of municipal taxation, be assessed to the agent and taxed. In the opinion Judge Earl said: "The debts due upon these contracts are personal estate, the same as if they were due upon notes or bonds; and such personal estate may be said to exist where the obligations for payment are held." The contracts spoken of in that case were contracts for the sale of land by a nonresident owner to persons within the county where the lands were situated. The debtors resided within the state, and the agent of the nonresident for the sale of the land resided in the state and had possession of the contracts. A different case as to its facts from the one before us.

In People ex rel. Jefferson v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576, jurisdiction to tax in New York was denied under the statute of that state, because the personal estate was not within the state, although the same principle (page 581) as contained in 48 N. Y., supra, was asserted.

If payment of these notes had to be enforced it would not be to the courts of Indiana that the owner would resort. He would have to go to Ohio to find the debtor as well as the lands mortgaged as security for the payment of the notes. It is true that if the notes were stolen while in Indiana, and they were therein a subject of larceny, the Indiana courts would have to be resorted to for the punishment of the thieves. That would be in vindication of the general criminal justice of the state. This consideration, however, is not near enough to the question involved to cause us to change our views of the law in regard to the taxation of property, and make that property within the state which we think is clearly outside it.

Although public securities, consisting of state bonds and bonds of municipal bodies, and circulating notes of banking institutions, have sometimes been treated as property in the place where they were found, though removed from the domicile of the owner (State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 324, 21 L. Ed. 179, 188) ³ it has not been held in this court that simple contract debts, though evidenced by promissory notes, can, under the facts herein stated, be treated as property, and taxed in the state where the notes may be found.

As is said in the above-cited case (at page 320, L. Ed. at page 187): "All the property there can be in the nature of things in debts of corporations belongs to the creditors, to whom they are payable, and follows their domicile, wherever that may be. Their debts can have no locality separate from the parties to whom they are due. This principle might be stated in many different ways, and supported by citations from numerous adjudications, but no number of authorities and no forms of expressions could add anything to its obvious truth, which is recognized upon its simple statement."

³ In this case it was held that Pennsylvania could not validly impose a tax upon the payment of interest due from a railway corporation to non-resident holders of its bonds, secured by a mortgage upon the entire railroad, part of which was in Pennsylvania. Compare Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 760 (1877).

The cases cited in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. Case, supra, show that this rule is enlarged to the extent of holding that capital evidenced by written instruments, invested in a state, may be taxed by the authorities of the state, although their owner is a nonresident and such evidences of debt are temporarily outside of the state when the assessment is made. Although the language of the opinion in the case of State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, supra, has been somewhat restricted so far as regards the character of the interest of the mortgagee in the land mortgaged (Savings & L. Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 428, 42 L. Ed. 803, 805, 18 Sup. Ct. 392), the principle upon which the case itself was decided has not been otherwise shaken by the later cases (New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 319, 320, 44 L. Ed. 174, 180, 20 Sup. Ct. 110; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 206, 47 L. Ed. 439, 445, 23 Sup. Ct. 277). In the Stempel Case, supra, the notes, as we have said, represented the capital of the owner invested in the state, and the capital was taxed, although the owner was a nonresident.

Cases arising under collateral inheritance tax or succession tax acts have been cited as affording foundation for the right to tax as herein asserted. The foundation upon which such acts rest is different from that which exists where the assessment is levied upon property. The succession or inheritance tax is not a tax on property, as has been frequently held by this court (Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. Ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, and Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. Ed. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. 277), and therefore the decisions arising under such inheritance tax cases are not in point.

Our decision in this case has no tendency to aid the owner of taxable property in any effort to avoid or evade proper and legitimate taxation. The presence of the notes in Indiana formed no bar to the right, if it otherwise existed, of taxing the debts evidenced by the notes in Ohio. It does, however, tend to prevent the taxation in one state of property in the shape of debts not existing there, and which, if so taxed, would make double taxation almost sure, which is certainly not to be desired, and ought, wherever possible, to be prevented.

* * *

Judgment reversed.⁴

[DAY, J., gave a dissenting opinion, in which BREWER, J., concurred.]

⁴ Warehouse receipts for whiskey stored outside of Kentucky cannot be taxed by Kentucky at the full value of the whiskey, at least unless the

ADAMS EXPRESS CO. v. OHIO STATE AUDITOR.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1897. 166 U. S. 185, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965.)

[Appeal from federal Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky adopted laws taxing express companies, which were interpreted by the courts of those states to authorize the taxation at the true value in money of the entire property, tangible and intangible, of such companies within those states respectively. Such valuation was obtained by a consideration of the receipts, mileage, and capital stock of such companies, and bore the same proportion to the value of the whole capital stock of each company that the gross receipts and mileage within each state bore to the total receipts and mileage of each company. The express companies sought injunctions against the collection of those taxes, and their bills in the federal courts were dismissed on demurrer. Appeals to the Supreme Court were also decided adversely,¹ and petitions for a rehearing were refused in the following opinion:]

Mr. Justice BREWER. We have had before us at the present term several cases involving the taxation of the property of express companies, some coming from Ohio, some from Indiana, and one from Kentucky; also a case from the latter state involving the taxation of the property of the Henderson Bridge Company.² The Ohio and Indiana cases were decided on the 1st of February. 165 U. S. 194, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683. Petitions for rehearing of those cases have been presented, and are now before us for consideration.

The importance of the questions involved, the close division in this court upon them, and the earnestness of counsel for the express companies in their original arguments, as well as in their briefs on this application, lead those of us who concurred in the judgments to add a few observations to what has hitherto been said.

Again and again has this court affirmed the proposition that no state can interfere with interstate commerce through the imposition of a tax, by whatever name called, which is in effect a tax for the transfer of the receipt is necessary to pass title to the whiskey. "The receipt * * * would be property of some small value distinct from that to which it gave access. But it would not be a counterpart, doubling the riches of the owner of the goods."—Selliger v. Kentucky, 213 U. S. 200, 206, 29 Sup. Ct. 449, 450, 53 L. Ed. 761 (1909). As to the possible taxation of stock certificates of foreign corporations, see People ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 181 N. Y. 431, 451, 77 N. E. 970, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 311, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Am. Cas. 515 (1906).

¹ Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 194, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683 (1897); American Exp. Co. v. Indiana, 165 U. S. 255, 17 Sup. Ct. 391, 41 L. Ed. 707 (1897); Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 171, 17 Sup. Ct. 527, 41 L. Ed. 960 (1897). White, Field, Harlan, and Brown, JJ., dissented in each case.

² Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 532, 41 L. Ed. 953 (1897).

privilege of transacting such commerce; and it has as often affirmed that such restriction upon the power of a state to interfere with interstate commerce does not in the least degree abridge the right of a state to tax at their full value all the instrumentalities used for such commerce.

Now, the taxes imposed upon express companies by the statutes of the three states of Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky are certainly not in terms "privilege taxes." They purport to be upon the property of the companies. They are therefore not, in form at least, subject to any of the denunciations against privilege taxes which have so often come from this court. The statutes grant no privilege of doing an express business, charge nothing for doing such a business, and contemplate only the assessment and levy of taxes upon the property of the express companies situated within the respective states; and the only really substantial question is whether, properly understood and administered, they subject to the taxing power of the state property not within its territorial limits. The burden of the contention of the express companies is that they have within the limits of the state certain tangible property, such as horses, wagons, etc.; that that tangible property is their only property within the state; that it must be valued as other like property, and upon such valuation alone can taxes be assessed and levied against them.

But this contention practically ignores the existence of intangible property, or, at least, denies its liability for taxation. In the complex civilization of to-day, a large portion of the wealth of a community consists in intangible property, and there is nothing in the nature of things or in the limitations of the federal Constitution which restrains a state from taxing at its real value such intangible property. Take the simplest illustration: B., a solvent man, purchases from A. certain property, and gives to A. his promise to pay, say, $100,000 therefor. Such promise may or may not be evidenced by a note or other written instrument. The property conveyed to B. may or may not be of the value of $100,000. If there be nothing in the way of fraud or misrepresentation to invalidate that transaction, there exists a legal promise on the part of B. to pay A. $100,000. That promise is a part of A.'s property. It is something of value, something on which he will receive cash, and which he can sell in the markets of the community for cash. It is as certainly property, and property of value, as if it were a building or a steamboat, and is as justly subject to taxation. It matters not in what this intangible property consists,—whether privileges, corporate franchises, contracts, or obligations. It is enough that it is property which, though intangible, exists, which has value, produces income, and passes current in the markets of the world. To ignore this intangible property, or to hold that it is not subject to taxation at its accepted value, is to eliminate from the reach of the taxing power a large portion of the wealth of the country. Now, whenever separate articles of tangible property are joined together, not simply by a unity of ownership, but in a unity of use, there is not infrequently developed a property, intangible though it may be, which in value exceeds the aggregate of the value of the separate pieces of tangible property. Upon what theory of substantial right can it be adjudged that the value of this intangible property must be excluded from the tax lists, and the only property placed thereon be the separate pieces of tangible property?

The first question to be considered, therefore, is whether there is belonging to these express companies intangible property,—property differing from the tangible property; a property created by either the combined use or the manner of use of the separate articles of tangible property, or the grant or acquisition of franchises or privileges, or all together. To say that there can be no such intangible property, that it is something of no value, is to insult the common intelligence of every man. Take the Henderson Bridge Company's property, the validity of the taxation of which is before us in another case. The facts disclosed in that record show that the bridge company owns a bridge over the Ohio, between the city of Henderson, in Kentucky, and the Indiana shore, and also 10 miles of railroad in Indiana; that that tangible property—that is, the bridge and railroad track—was assessed in the states of Indiana and Kentucky at $1,277,695.54, such, therefore, being the adjudged value of the tangible property. Thus, the physical property could presumably be reproduced by an expenditure of that sum, and if placed elsewhere on the Ohio river, and without its connections or the business passing over it or the franchises connected with it, might not of itself be worth any more. As mere bridge and tracks, that was its value. If the state's power of taxation is limited to the tangible property, the company should only be taxed in the two states for that sum; but it also appears that it, as a corporation, had issued bonds to the amount of $2,000,000, upon which it was paying interest; that it had a capital stock of $1,000,000; and that the shares of that stock were worth not less than $90 per share in the market. The owners, therefore, of that stock, had property which, for purposes of income and purposes of sale, was worth $2,900,000.³ What gives this excess of value? Obviously, the franchises, the privileges the company possesses,—its intangible property.

Now, it is a cardinal rule, which should never be forgotten, that whatever property is worth for the purposes of income and sale it is also worth for purposes of taxation. Suppose such a bridge were entirely within the territorial limits of a state, and it appeared that the bridge itself cost only $1,277,000, could be reproduced for that sum, and yet it was so situated with reference to railroad or other connections, so used by the traveling public, that it was worth to the holders of it, in the matter of income, $2,900,000, could be sold in the markets for that sum, was therefore in the eyes of practical business men of the value of $2,900,000, can there be any doubt of the state's power to assess it at that sum, and to collect taxes from it upon that basis of value? Substance of right demands that, whatever be the real value of any property, that value may be accepted by the state for purposes of taxation, and this ought not to be evaded by any mere confusion of words. Suppose an express company is incorporated to transact business within the limits of a state, and does business only within such limits, and, for the purpose of transacting that business, purchases and holds a few thousands of dollars' worth of horses and wagons, and yet it so meets the wants of the people dwelling in that state, so uses the tangible property which it possesses, so transacts business therein, that its stock becomes in the markets of the state of the actual cash value of hundreds of thousands of dollars. To the owners thereof, for the purposes of income and sale, the corporate property is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Does substance of right require that it shall pay taxes only upon the thousands of dollars of tangible property which it possesses? Accumulated wealth will laugh at the crudity of taxing laws which reach only the one, and ignore the other; while they who own tangible property, not organized into a single producing plant, will feel the injustice of a system which so misplaces the burden of taxation.

³ Adding the market value of its shares of stock to the market value of its bonded debt is a valid method of ascertaining the total value of a corporation's assets or capital stock. State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 663 (1876).

A distinction must be noticed between the construction of a state law and the power of a state. If a statute, properly construed, contemplates only the taxation of horses and wagons, then those belonging to an express company can be taxed at no higher value than those belonging to a farmer. But, if the state comprehends all property in its scheme of taxation, then the good will of an organized and established industry must be recognized as a thing of value. The capital stock of a corporation and the shares in a joint-stock company represent not only the tangible property, but also the intangible, including therein all corporate franchises and all contracts, privileges, and good will of the concern.

Now, the same reality of the value of its intangible property exists when a company does not confine its work to the limits of a single state. Take, for instance, the Adams Express Company. According to the return filed by it with the auditor of the state of Ohio, as shown in the records of these cases, its number of shares was 120,000, the market value of each $140 to $150. Taking the smaller sum gives the value of the company's property taken as an entirety as $16,800,000. In other words, it is worth that for the purposes of income to the holders of the stock, and for purposes of sale in the markets of the land. But in the same return it shows that the value of its real estate in Ohio was only $25,170, of real estate owned outside of Ohio $3,005,157.52, or a total of $3,030,327.52; the value of its personal property in Ohio $42,065, of personal property outside of Ohio $1,117,426.05, or a total of $1,159,491.05,—making a total valuation of its tangible property $4,189,818.57; and upon that basis it insists that taxes shall be levied. But what a mockery of substantial justice it would be for a corporation whose property is worth to its stockholders, for the purposes of income and sale, $16,800,000, to be adjudged liable for taxation upon only one-fourth of that amount. The value which property bears in the market, the amount for which its stock can be bought and sold, is the real value. Business men do not pay cash for property in moonshine or dreamland. They buy and pay for that which is of value in its power to produce income, or for purposes of sale.

It is suggested that the company may have bonds, stocks, or other investments which produce a part of the value of its capital stock, and which have a special situs in other states or are exempt from taxation. If it has, let it show the fact. Courts deal with things as they are, and do not determine rights upon mere possibilities. If half of the property of the Adams Express Company, which by its own showing is worth $16,000,000 and over, is invested in United States bonds, and therefore exempt from taxation, or invested in any way outside the business of the company, and so as to be subject to purely local taxation, let that fact be disclosed: and then, if the state of Ohio attempts to include within its taxing power such exempted property or property of a different situs, it will be time enough to consider and determine the rights of the company.⁴ That, if such facts exist, they must be taken into consideration by a state in its proceedings under such tax laws as are here presented, has been heretofore recognized and distinctly affirmed by this court. Railway Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 443, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031; Telegraph Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1, 23, 16 Sup. Ct. 1054, 41 L. Ed. 49; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 194, 227, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683. Presumably, all that a corporation has is used in the transaction of its business; and, if it has accumulated assets which for any reason affect the question of taxation, it should disclose them. It is called upon to make return of its property, and if its return admits that it is possessed of property of a certain value, and does not disclose anything to show that any portion thereof is not subject to taxation, it cannot complain if the state treats its property as all taxable.

But where is the situs of this intangible property? The Adams Express Company has, according to its showing, in round numbers $4,000,000 of tangible property scattered through different states, and.

⁴ For the deductions to be made, under the "unit rule" of assessment, for various kinds of property held out of the state and not used in the business taxed, see Fargo v. Hart, 193 U. S. 490, 24 Sup. Ct. 498, 48 L. Ed. 761 (1904). As to disproportionately valuable railway terminals outside of state, see Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 431, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031 (1894). Compare Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 165-167, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312 (1911).

with that tangible property thus scattered, transacts its business. By the business which it transacts, by combining into a single use all these separate pieces and articles of tangible property, by the contracts, franchises, and privileges, which it has acquired and possesses, it has created a corporate property of the actual value of $16,000,000. Thus, according to its figures, this intangible property, its franchises, privileges, etc., is of the value of $12,000,000, and its tangible property of only $4,000,000. Where is the situs of this intangible property? Is it simply where its home office is, where is found the central directing thought which controls the workings of the great machine, or in the state which gave it its corporate franchise; or is that intangible property distributed wherever its tangible property is located and its work is done? Clearly, as we think, the latter. Every state within which it is transacting business, and where it has its property, more or less, may rightfully say that the $16,000,000 of value which it possesses springs not merely from the original grant of corporate power by the state which incorporated it, or from the mere ownership of the tangible property, but it springs from the fact that that tangible property it has combined with contracts, franchises, and privileges into a single unit of property; and this state contributes to that aggregate value not merely the separate value of such tangible property as is within its limits, but its proportionate share of the value of the entire property. That this is true is obvious from the result that would follow if all the states other than the one which created the corporation could and should withhold from it the right to transact express business within their limits. It might continue to own all its tangible property within each of those states, but, unable to transact the express business within their limits, that $12,000,000 of value attributable to its intangible property would shrivel to a mere trifle.

It may be true that the principal office of the corporation is in New York, and that for certain purposes the maxim of the common law was, "Mobilia personam sequuntur;" but that maxim was never of universal application, and seldom interfered with the right of taxation. Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 22, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613. It would certainly seem a misapplication of the doctrine expressed in that maxim to hold that, by merely transferring its principal office across the river to Jersey City, the situs of $12,000,000 of intangible property, for purposes of taxation, was changed from the state of New York to that of New Jersey.

It is also true that a corporation is, for purposes of jurisdiction in the federal courts, conclusively presumed to be a citizen of the state which created it; but it does not follow therefrom that its franchise to be is for all purposes to be regarded as confined to that state. For the transaction of its business it goes into various states, and wherever it goes as a corporation it carries with it that franchise to be. But the franchise to be is only one of the franchises of a corporation. The franchise to do is an independent franchise, or rather a combination of franchises, embracing all things which the corporation is given power to do; and this power to do is as much a thing of value and a part of the intangible property of the corporation as the franchise to be. Franchises to do go wherever the work is done. The Southern Pacific Railway Company is a corporation chartered by the state of Kentucky; yet, within the limits of that state, it is said to have no tangible property, and no office for the transaction of business. The vast amount of tangible property which, by lease or otherwise, it holds and operates, and all the franchises to do which it exercises, exist and are exercised in the states and territories on the Pacific slope. Do not these intangible properties,—these franchises to do,—exercised in connection with the tangible property which it holds, create a substantive matter of taxation to be asserted by every state in which that tangible property is found?⁵

It is said that the views thus expressed open the door to possibilities of gross injustice to these corporations, through the conflicting action of the different states in matters of taxation. That may be so, and the courts may be called upon to relieve against such abuses. But such possibilities do not equal the wrong which sustaining the contention of the appellant would at once do. In the city of New York are located the headquarters of a corporation whose corporate property is confessedly of the value of $16,000,000.—a value which can be realized by its stockholders at any moment they see fit. Its tangible property and its business are scattered through many states, all whose powers are invoked to protect its property from trespass, and secure it in the peaceful transaction of its widely dispersed business. Yet, because that tangible property is only $4,000,000, we are told that that is the limit of the taxing power of these states. In other words, it asks these states to protect property which to it is of the value of $16,000,000, but is willing to pay taxes only on the basis of a valuation of $4,000,000. The injustice of this speaks for itself.

In conclusion, let us say that this is eminently a practical age; that courts must recognize things as they are, and as possessing a value which is accorded to them in the markets of the world; and that no finespun theories about situs should interfere to enable these large corporations, whose business is carried on through many states, to escape from bearing in each state such burden of taxation as a fair distribution of the actual value of their property among those states requires.

⁵ In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Missouri ex rel. Gottlieb, 190 U. S. 412, 421, 422, 23 Sup. Ct. 730, 47 L. Ed. 1116 (1903), a Missouri assessment under the "unit rule" was upheld which included part of the value of a New York franchise under which a telegraph company did business in Missouri. McKenna, J., quoted with approval from the state court below as follows: "The franchise derived by the defendant from the state of New York was considered by the board in determining the value of the property of the defendant located in this state. * * * The right to exist—the franchise—of the defendant was property, and was subject to taxation, either directly, in the proportion that the portion of the franchise exercised in this state bore to the proportion of the franchise exercised in all other states, or indirectly, as was done in Massachusetts and was done here, by being impressed upon the tangible property owned by it, thereby increasing its value, and by considering the franchise and its tangible property as a system, and then assessing the part of the property forming a part of the system and located in Missouri as of its proportionate value of the whole property constituting the system."

Petition denied.*

* "A railroad must be regarded for many, indeed for most, purposes as a unit. The track of the road is but one track from one end of it to the other, and, except in its use as one track, is of little value. In this track as a whole each county through which it passes has an interest much more important than it has in the limited part of it lying within its boundary. Destroy by any means a few miles of this track within an interior county, so as to cut off the connection between the two parts thus separated, and, if it could not be repaired or replaced, its effect upon the value of the remainder of the road is out of all proportion to the mere local value of the part of it destroyed. A similar effect on the value of the interior of the road would follow the destruction of that end of the road lying in Chicago, or some other place where its largest traffic centers. It may well be doubted whether any better mode of determining the value of that portion of the track within any one county has been devised than to ascertain the value of the whole road, and apportion the value within the county by its relative length to the whole."—Miller, J., in State Ry. Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 608, 23 L. Ed. 663 (1875).

"As to railroad, telegraph, and sleeping-car companies, engaged in interstate commerce, it has often been held by this court that their property, in the several states through which their lines or business extended, might be valued as a unit for the purposes of taxation, taking into consideration the uses to which it was put, and all the elements making up aggregate value, and that a proportion of the whole, fairly and properly ascertained, might be taxed by the particular state, without violating any federal restriction. W. U. Tel. Co. v. Attorney General of Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530, 8 Sup. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790 (1888); Massachusetts v. W. U. Tel. Co., 141 U. S. 40, 11 Sup. Ct. 889, 35 L. Ed. 628 (1891); Maine v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 217, 12 Sup. Ct. 121, 163, 35 L. Ed. 994 (1891); Railroad Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031 (1894); Railroad Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 429, 14 Sup. Ct. 1122, 38 L. Ed. 1040 (1894); Telegraph Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1, 16 Sup. Ct. 1054, 41 L. Ed. 49 (1896); Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613 (1891). The valuation was, thus, not confined to the wires, poles, and instruments of the telegraph company, or the roadbed, ties, rails and spikes of the railroad company, or the cars of the sleeping-car company, but included the proportionate part of the value resulting from the combination of the means by which the business was carried on,—a value existing to an appreciable extent throughout the entire domain of operation. And it has been decided that a proper mode of ascertaining the assessable value of so much of the whole property as is situated in a particular state is, in the case of railroads, to take that part of the value of the entire road which is measured by the proportion of its length therein to the length of the whole (Railroad Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 429, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031 [1894]), or taking as the basis of assessment such proportion of the capital stock of a sleeping-car company as the number of miles of railroad over which its cars are run in a particular state bears to the whole number of miles traversed by them in that and other states (Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613 [1891]), or such a proportion of the whole value of the capital stock of a telegraph company as the length of its lines within a state bears to the length of all its lines everywhere, deducting a sum equal to the value of its real estate and machinery subject to local taxation within the state (Telegraph Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1, 16 Sup. Ct. 1054, 41 L. Ed. 49)."—Fuller, C. J., in Adams Express Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 194, 220, 221, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683 (1897).

TAPPAN v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1873. 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. Ed. 189.)

[Appeal from a decree of the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois granting an injunction against the collection of taxes upon the shares of stock in appellee bank under the statute of Illinois passed June 13, 1867. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.]

Mr. Chief Justice WAITE. We are called upon in this case to determine whether the General Assembly of the state of Illinois could, in 1867, provide for the taxation of the owners of shares of the capital stock of a national bank in that state at the place within the state where the bank was located, without regard to their places of residence. * * * It is conceded that it was within the power of the state to tax the shares of non-resident shareholders at the place where the bank was located, but it is claimed that under the Constitution of the state resident shareholders could only be taxed at the places of their residence. We have not been referred to any express provision of the Constitution to that effect. * * *

This power of locating personal property for the purpose of taxation without regard to the residence of the owner has been often exercised in Illinois, and sustained by the courts. City of Dunleith v. Reynolds, 53 Ill. 45. Since the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, which did not enlarge the powers of the General Assembly in this particular, very extended legislation has been had with a view to such location. Thus, live stock and other personal property used upon a farm, must be listed and assessed where the farm is situated; property in the hands of agents at the place where the business of the agent is transacted; water-craft where they are enrolled; or, if not enrolled, where they are kept; the property of bankers, brokers, merchants, manufacturers, and many other classes of persons specially enumerated, at the place where their business is carried on. This became necessary in order that the burdens of taxation might be equally distributed among those who should bear them.

We do not understand the counsel for the appellee to dispute this power, where the property is tangible and capable of having, so to speak, an actual situs of its own, but he claims that if it is intangible, it cannot be separated from the person of its owner. It must be borne in mind that all this property, intangible though it may be, is within the state. That which belongs to residents is there by reason of their residence. All the owners have submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the state, and they must obey its will when kept within the limits of constitutional power.

The question is then presented whether the General Assembly, having complete jurisdiction over the person and the property, could separate a bank share from the person of the owner for the purposes of taxation. It has never been doubted that it was a proper exercise of legislative power and discretion to separate the interest of a partner in partnership property from his person for that purpose, and to cause him to be taxed on its account at the place where the business of the partnership was carried on. And this, too, without reference to the character of the business or the property. The partnership may have been formed for the purpose of carrying on mercantile, banking, brokerage, or stock business. The property may be tangible or intangible, goods on the shelf or debts due for goods sold. The interest of the partner in all the property is made taxable at the place where the business is located.

A share of bank stock may be in itself intangible, but it represents that which is tangible. It represents money or property invested in the capital stock of the bank. That capital is employed in business by the bank, and the business is very likely carried on at a place other than the residence of some of the shareholders. The shareholder is protected in his person by the government at the place where he resides; but his property in this stock is protected at the place where the bank transacts his business. If he were a partner in a private bank doing business at the same place, he might be taxed there on account of his interest in the partnership. It is not easy to see why, upon the same principle, he may not be taxed there on account of his stock in an incorporated bank. His business is there as much in the one case as in the other. He requires for it the protection of the government there, and it seems reasonable that he should be compelled to contribute there to the expenses of maintaining that government. It certainly cannot be an abuse of legislative discretion to require him to do so. If it is not, the General Assembly can rightfully locate his shares there for the purpose of taxation. * * *

Decree reversed.¹

BRADLEY v. BAUDER.

(Supreme Court of Ohio, 1880. 36 Ohio St. 28, 38 Am. Rep. 547.)

[Appeal from district court of Cuyahoga county. Plaintiffs owned shares of stock in corporations whose franchises, property, and business were wholly outside of Ohio where plaintiffs lived. A preliminary injunction was granted by the above-mentioned court against the taxation in Ohio of such shares.]

¹ The state of the corporation's domicile may require it to pay the tax on the shares of non-resident stockholders, giving the corporation a personal right of action therefor against them and a lien on their stock. Corry v. Baltimore, 196 U. S. 466, 25 Sup. Ct. 297, 49 L. Ed. 556 (1905) [compare Stapylton v. Thaggard, 91 Fed. 93, 33 C. C. A. 353 (1898) (bank insolvent)]. So also as to the resident possessors of tangible property owned by non-residents. Carstairs v. Cochran, 193 U. S. 10, 24 Sup. Ct. 318, 48 L. Ed. 596 (1904); Thompson v. Kentucky, 209 U. S. 340, 28 Sup. Ct. 533, 52 L. Ed. 822 (1908) (even though property subject to prior lien of United States).

BOYNTON, J. * * * The capital of the corporation is the property of the corporation, and it can only be taxed in the state where the property is located. It is very clearly settled, that the right of taxation is limited to persons, property and business within the jurisdiction of the state where the right is attempted to be exercised. Railroad Company v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. Ed. 179. But investments in stocks in foreign companies, owned by residents here, being property within the state, are not only made subject to taxation by the Constitution, but, as we have seen, their taxation is expressly required by the statute.

But it is said, that because the capital of the company is invested in real and fixed property in the state where the corporation is located, and in which state, taxes upon the same are regularly levied and paid, a tax here upon the shares of stock of those residing here, is a tax upon the same property, and therefore results in double taxation.

The argument is that the capital of the corporation is invested in property which is taxed in the name of the corporation, and that the shares in the capital stock, when owned by individuals, only represent proportions in the ownership of such property, and hence, to tax the shares is another mode of taxing the property of the corporation, and that a tax upon both, although the tax upon one is imposed by another state, violates the rule or principle of equality established by the Constitution. This argument, however plausible it seems, has never met with favor from the courts. Double taxation, in a legal sense, does not exist, unless the double tax is levied upon the same property within the same jurisdiction. Here the property owned by the plaintiffs is not only not the same as that owned by the corporation, but its situs, so far as shares of stock are capable of one, is in a different state.

The capital of a corporation, whatever invested in, and the individual shares of stock, are distinct species of property. Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. Ed. 558. The owner of a share of stock owns no part of the capital of the company. Watson v. Spratley, 10 Exch. 236. The corporation is its sole owner, holding the same, it is true, in trust, for the purposes for which the corporation was created, and upon its winding up, for the benefit of creditors and shareholders. The ownership of a share of stock, so far as the property of the corporation is concerned, is but the ownership of the right to participate, from time to time, in the net profits of the business, and upon the dissolution of the corporation to a proportion of the assets after the payment of the corporate debts. It is personal property, which, upon the death of the owner, goes to his administrator, although the entire capital of the corporation may consist of real estate. The owner may sell or dispose of his stock at pleasure, and, in so doing, works no change or modification in the title to the corporate property. From this it would seem to result necessarily, that its situs, for purposes of taxation, when not otherwise provided by statute, is that of the domicile of the owner. That shares of stock may be separated from the person of the owner, by statute, and given a situs of their own, was held in Tappan v. Merchants' National Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. Ed. 189. But when not so separated, that their situs follows and adheres to the domicile of the owner, is supported by a great weight of authority. State v. Branin, 3 Zab. (23 N. J. Law) 484; City of Newark v. Assessor, 30 N. J. Law, 13; Great Barrington v. County Com'rs, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 572; Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 268; Whitesell v. County of Northampton, 49 Pa. St. 526; Cooley on Taxation, 16; Burroughs on Taxation, 188.

The same principle governs a chose in action; for purposes of taxation, its situs is that of the domicile of the owner, although the debt is secured by a mortgage upon realty in another state, and by agreement of the parties expressly made subject to its laws. Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn. 426, 19 Am. Rep. 546. See same case in 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. Ed. 558.

The constitutional power to tax shares of stock, owned by our citizens in corporations located without the state, does not depend on whether the capital of the corporation is or is not taxed in the state where the corporation is created. The power is the same, whether the capital of the corporation is there taxed or not; otherwise, the power of taxation conferred by the constitution would be made to depend upon the operation of laws of a foreign jurisdiction—a proposition so obviously ill founded that the moment it is stated its falsity becomes apparent.

Injunction vacated.¹

BALDWIN v. WASHINGTON COUNTY.

(Court of Appeals of Maryland, 1897. 85 Md. 145, 36 Atl. 764.)

[Appeal from Circuit Court of Washington County, Maryland. Between 1879 and 1884 an estate was settled in the orphans' court of that county, showing a balance of about $44,000 in the hands of the guardian of Columbus C. Baldwin, an infant, on behalf of said ward. In 1891 Wm. W. Baldwin was appointed such guardian by that court. The property of the ward consisted entirely of stocks and bonds of companies organized and located outside of Maryland, and the stock certificates and bonds were kept outside that state. Both guardian and ward lived in New York. In 1893 and 1894 this property was assessed for taxation in Washington county. The guardian filed a bill to enjoin the collection of the tax, and the circuit court of that county dismissed it.]

¹ See Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 5 Sup. Ct. 1014, 29 L. Ed. 240 (1885), and Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 23 Sup. Ct. 401, 47 L. Ed. 669 (1903). Shares of stock may be taxed at the residence of the owner, even though they are also taxed at the domicile of the corporation in another state. Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 23 Am. Rep. 460 (1876). A fortiori this is true when it is the capital stock of the corporation, not its shares, that is taxed at its domicile. Greenleaf v. Board of Review, 184 Ill. 226, 56 N. E. 295, 75 Am. St. Rep. 168 (1900); Bacon v. State Board, 126 Mich. 22, 85 N. W. 307, 60 L. R. A. 321, 86 Am. St. Rep. 524 (1901).

BOYD, J. * * * It must, of course, be admitted that the situs of property of this kind, for the purposes of taxation, is ordinarily at the domicile of the owner, but the legislature has the power to fix a different situs, provided, of course, there be no conflict with some provision in the constitution. 1 Desty, Tax'n, 97; Cooley, Tax'n, 373. We have in this state some statutes which do determine where property shall be deemed to be situate for the purposes of taxation. For example, section 131 of article 81 of the Code provides where the stock of certain domestic corporations owned by nonresidents shall be deemed to be situate. So, by section 9 of article 81, above quoted, the legislature has fixed the place where personal property in the hands of the guardian shall be taxed. When it requires the register of wills to make the returns to the county commissioners, it means, of course, that the register of wills of each county shall make the returns to the commissioners of his county; and it provides that "all such property, if not before assessed, shall then be assessed," and "every executor, administrator, or guardian shall be liable to pay the taxes thereon." It does not say every guardian who is a resident of this state, or every guardian whose ward is a resident of this state, but the language used is at least broad enough to apply to every guardian who has been appointed as such in this state, and includes all property of such guardian; that is, of course, all property of such character as is taxable in this state. It fixes the situs of the property in the county or city where the guardian was appointed, and it matters not where the person who is guardian may reside. The office of guardian, so to speak, is fixed at the county where the appointment is made. If that be not so, then, if this ward was a resident of Washington county, his personal property would escape taxation there, because his guardian lived in New York. That would seem to be contrary to the manifest object and intention of the section of the Code above quoted.

In the case of Bonaparte v. State, 63 Md. 465, this same section was under consideration, and this court held that, although Mr. Bonaparte, the executor of Mrs. Patterson, lived in Baltimore county, yet he was liable to Baltimore city for taxes on bonds and stocks of his testatrix, because letters testamentary had been granted to him by the orphans' court of Baltimore city. It was there said, in answer to the suggestion of the executor, that, because he was a resident of Baltimore county, he was taxable there, and nowhere else, by reason of the legal title to the intangible property being in him: "that he held such legal title is true; but he held it in the special character of an officer of the law, for the specific and temporary purpose of the administration of the property under the supervision and direction of the court from which he received letters testamentary. The domicile of the testator, when living, determines the situs of his personal property of an intangible nature not permanently located elsewhere, for purposes of taxation, and his place of domicile at the time of his death determines the place of administering his estate. The situs of the personal property, generally speaking, and the residence of the administrator, for the purposes of administration, place them, in legal contemplation, in the city or county of the court exercising jurisdiction. The personal property, therefore, of an intangible nature, not permanently located elsewhere, such as bonds and stocks, must be deemed to remain within the jurisdiction of the court pending the settlement of the estate, and be there liable to taxation. When distribution has been made, and the fact of its transfer has been communicated to the tax authorities, the administrator's or executor's liability to pay the taxes upon it, of course, ceases." The court then quoted the section of the Code above referred to.

Now, if it be true that the situs, for taxation, of property in the hands of a resident executor (and, of course, the same must apply to an administrator or guardian) is where he was appointed, and not where he resided, how can it be consistently said in this case that the property cannot be subject to taxation because the guardian resides beyond the state? * * * In contemplation of our statute, the officer of the law known as the guardian of Columbus C. Baldwin is in Washington county for the purpose of dealing with, accounting for, and holding the property of his ward. The individual holding that office may be domiciled in that county or in New York, but the law does not concern itself about that.

There are a number of provisions in our testamentary laws for the appointment and control of guardians by the orphans' courts of this state. They not only provide for the appointment of guardians of resident infants, but by section 203 of article 93 of the Code express provision is made for the appointment of guardians of nonresident infants who have no guardians where they reside, but have property in this state. Can it be doubted that such guardians are subject to the same control by the orphans' courts of this state as those whose wards reside here? They are required to give bond with security in the same manner as if the infants resided in this state, and the wards' property is entitled to the same protection as that of resident wards. Once in each year, or oftener, if required by the court, the guardian must settle an account of his trust with the orphans' court. The court is authorized to direct how the money of the ward can be invested, and when investments are made under certain provisions of the Code they can only be transferred under the orders of the court. No guardian can sell any of the property of his ward without an order of the court appointing him, and other provisions might be cited which show that the policy of our testamentary laws is to keep the personal property of all wards whose guardians are appointed by the orphans' courts of this state within the control and supervision of those courts.

Whatever may be true in actual practice, the theory of the law is that the personal estate of the ward is where the guardian is appointed, and not where the guardian or ward may be. * * * If the appellant did not want to pay taxes in Washington county as other guardians appointed by the orphans' court of that county are required to do, he could have had a guardian appointed where the ward resides; but so long as he remained guardian here he was required, by the express terms of the statute, as we understand its meaning, to pay taxes on the property in his hands liable to taxation. When, for convenience or other causes, a guardian is appointed in this state for a nonresident infant, who may thereby have the protection and care of one of our orphans' courts from year to year during his minority, it is certainly no hardship to require his estate to pay taxes on such property as the guardian of a resident ward must pay. So, if we view this case merely from an equitable standpoint, we fail to find any good reason why guardians of nonresident infants should occupy the time of our orphans' courts, at the expense of the public, and yet not pay such taxes as the guardians of resident infants must pay. * * *

Decree affirmed.¹

BLACKSTONE v. MILLER.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1903. 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439.)

Mr. Justice HOLMES. This a writ of error to the surrogate's court of the county of New York. It is brought to review a decree of the court, sustained by the appellate division of the supreme court (69 App. Div. 127, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508), and by the court of appeals (171 N. Y. 682, 64 N. E. 1118), levying a tax on the transfer by will of certain property of Timothy B. Blackstone, the testator, who died domiciled in Illinois. The property consisted of a debt of $10,692.24, due to the deceased by a firm, and of the net sum of $4,843,456.72, held on a deposit account by the United States Trust Company of New York. * * *

The deposit in question represented the proceeds of railroad stock sold to a syndicate and handed to the trust company, which, by arrangement with the testator, held the proceeds subject to his order, paying interest in the meantime. Five days' notice of withdrawal was required, and if a draft was made upon the company it gave its check upon one of its banks of deposit. The fund had been held in this way from March 31, 1899, until the testator's death, on May 26, 1900. It is probable of course, that he did not intend to leave the fund there forever, and that he was looking out for investments, but he had not found them when he died. * * * The whole succession has been taxed in Illinois, the New York deposit being included in the appraisal of the estate. * * *

¹ In Guthrie v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry., 158 Pa. 133, 27 Atl. 1052 (1893), it was held that Pennsylvania might tax a resident trustee upon trust securities kept in the District of Columbia, when the testator who created the trust and the beneficiary were both residents of that District.

In view of the state decisions it must be assumed that the New York statute is intended to reach the transfer of this property if it can be reached. New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 316, 44 L. Ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. 110; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 146 U. S. 162, 166, 36 L. Ed. 925, 928, 13 Sup. Ct. 54. We also must take it to have been found that the property was not in transitu in such a sense as to withdraw it from the power of the state, if otherwise the right to tax the transfer belonged to the state.¹ The property was delayed within the jurisdiction of New York an indefinite time, which had lasted for more than a year, so that this finding at least was justified. Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 259, 47 L. Ed. 359. Both parties agree with the plain words of the law that the tax is a tax upon the transfer, not upon the deposit, and we need spend no time upon that. Therefore the naked question is whether the state has a right to tax the transfer of such deposit by will.

The answer is somewhat obscured by the superficial fact that New York, like most other states, recognizes the law of the domicile as the law determining the right of universal succession. The domicile, naturally, must control a succession of that kind. Universal succession is the artificial continuance of the person of a deceased by an executor, heir, or the like, so far as succession to rights and obligations is concerned. It is a fiction, the historical origin of which is familiar to scholars, and it is this fiction that gives whatever meaning it has to the saying mobilia sequuntur personam. But being a fiction it is not allowed to obscure the facts, when the facts become important. To a considerable, although more or less varying, extent the succession determined by the law of the domicile is recognized in other jurisdictions. But it hardly needs illustration to show that the recognition is limited by the policy of the local law. Ancillary administrators pay the local debts before turning over the residue to be distributed, or distributing it themselves, according to the rules of the domicile. The title of the principal administrator, or of a foreign assignee in bankruptcy,—another type of universal succession,—is admitted in but a limited way or not at all. See Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. Ed. 430; Chipman v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 156 Mass. 147-149, 30 N. E. 610.

To come closer to the point, no one doubts that succession to a tangible chattel may be taxed wherever the property is found, and none the less that the law of the situs accepts its rules of succession from the law of the domicile, or that by the law of the domicile the chattel is part of a universitas and is taken into account again in the succession tax there. Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578, 586, 587, 592, 46 L. Ed. 697, 702, 704, 22 Sup. Ct. 515. See Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 493, 12 L. Ed. 1168; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. Ed. 715, 717, 6 Sup. Ct. 475; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. Ed. 613, 616, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. 876; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. Ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. 594; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. Ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. 110; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. Ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. 585; and for state decisions, Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L. R. A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 595, 51 N. E. 176; Greves v. Shaw, 173 Mass. 205, 53 N. E. 372; Allen v. National State Bank, 92 Md. 509, 52 L. R. A. 760, 84 Am. St. Rep. 517, 48 Atl. 78.

¹ As to the possible exemption from a property tax of a merely transitory bank deposit of a non-resident doing business in the state, see Assessors v. N. Y., etc., Ins. Co., 216 U. S. 517, 523, 30 Sup. Ct. 385, 54 L. Ed. 597 (1910). As to when tangible property (not the subject of interstate commerce) may escape taxation because only transitorily in the state, see Robinson v. Longley, 18 Nev. 71, 1 Pac. 377 (1883) (traveling circus); Gromer v. Standard Co., 224 U. S. 362, 32 Sup. Ct. 499, 56 L. Ed. 801 (1912) (dredge temporarily employed in state—see especially dissenting opinion).

No doubt this power on the part of two states to tax on different and more or less inconsistent principles leads to some hardship. It may be regretted, also, that one and the same state should be seen taxing on the one hand according to the fact of power, and on the other, at the same time, according to the fiction that, in successions after death, mobilia sequuntur personam and domicile governs the whole. But these inconsistencies infringe no rule of constitutional law. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. Ed. 715, 717, 6 Sup. Ct. 475; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. Ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. 747.

The question, then, is narrowed to whether a distinction is to be taken between tangible chattels and the deposit in this case. There is no doubt that courts in New York and elsewhere have been loath to recognize a distinction for taxing purposes between what commonly is called money in the bank and actual coin in the pocket. The practical similarity more or less has obliterated the legal difference. Re Houdayer, 150 N. Y. 37, 34 L. R. A. 235, 44 N. E. 718; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 316, 44 L. Ed. 174, 178, 20 Sup. Ct. 110; City Nat. Bank v. Charles Baker Co., 180 Mass. 40, 42, 61 N. E. 223. In view of these cases and the decision in the present case, which followed them, a not very successful attempt was made to show that by reason of the facts which we have mentioned, and others, the deposit here was unlike an ordinary deposit in a bank. We shall not stop to discuss this aspect of the case, because we prefer to decide it upon a broader view.

If the transfer of the deposit necessarily depends upon and involves the law of New York for its exercise, or, in other words, if the transfer is subject to the power of the state of New York, then New York may subject the transfer to a tax. United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 628, 629, 41 L. Ed. 287, 288, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 429, 4 L. Ed. 579, 607. But it is plain that the transfer does depend upon the law of New York, not because of any theoretical speculation concerning the whereabouts of the debt, but because of the practical fact of its power over the person of the debtor. The principle has been recognized by this court with regard to garnishments of a domestic debtor of an absent defendant. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. Ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. 797. See Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, sub nom. Wyman v. United States ex rel. Halstead, 27 L. Ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. 417. What gives the debt validity? Nothing but the fact that the law of the place where the debtor is will make him pay. It does not matter that the law would not need to be invoked in the particular case. Most of us do not commit crimes, yet we nevertheless are subject to the criminal law, and it affords one of the motives for our conduct. So, again, what enables any other than the very creditor in proper person to collect the debt? The law of the same place. To test it, suppose that New York should turn back the current of legislation, and extend to debts the rule still applied to slander, that actio personalis moritur cum persona, and should provide that all debts hereafter contracted in New York and payable there should be extinguished by the death of either party. Leaving constitutional considerations on one side, it is plain that the right of the foreign creditor would be gone.

Power over the person of the debtor confers jurisdiction, we repeat. And this being so, we perceive no better reason for denying the right of New York to impose a succession tax on debts owned by its citizens than upon tangible chattels found within the state at the time of the death. The maxim, mobilia sequuntur personam, has no more truth in the one case than in the other. When logic and the policy of a state conflict with a fiction due to historical tradition, the fiction must give way.

There is no conflict between our views and the point decided in the case reported under the name of State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, sub nom. Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. Ed. 179. The taxation in that case was on the interest on bonds held out of the state. Bonds and negotiable instruments are more than merely evidences of debt. The debt is inseparable from the paper which declares and constitutes it, by a tradition which comes down from more archaic conditions. Bacon v. Hooker, 177 Mass. 335, 337, 58 N. E. 1078, 83 Am. St. Rep. 279. Therefore, considering only the place of the property, it was held that bonds held out of the state could not be reached.² The decision has been cut down to its precise point by later cases. Savings & L. Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 428, 42 L. Ed. 803, 805, 18 Sup. Ct. 392; New Orleans v. Stemmel, 175 U. S. 309, 319, 320, 44 L. Ed. 174, 180, 20 Sup. Ct. 110.

In the case at bar the law imposing the tax was in force before the deposit was made, and did not impair the obligation of the contract, if a tax otherwise lawful ever can be said to have that effect. Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 144, 147, 46 L. Ed. 125, 127, 22 Sup. Ct. 52. The fact that two states, dealing each with its own law of succession, both of which the plaintiff in error has to invoke for her rights, have taxed the right which they respectively confer, gives no cause for complaint on constitutional grounds. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. Ed. 715, 718, 6 Sup. Ct. 475; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 53, 44 L. Ed. 975, 20 Sup. Ct. 747. The universal succession is taxed in one state, the singular succession is taxed in another. The plaintiff has to make out her right under both in order to get the money. See Adams v. Batchelder, 173 Mass. 258, 53 N. E. 824, 73 Am. St. Rep. 282. The same considerations answer the argument that due faith and credit are not given to the judgment in Illinois. The tax does not deprive the plaintiff in error of any of the privileges and immunities of the citizens of New York. It is no such deprivation that if she had lived in New York the tax on the transfer of the deposit would have been part of the tax on the inheritance as a whole. See Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. Ed. 1168; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 635, 29 L. Ed. 257, 261, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L. R. A. 171, 38 Fed. 184. It does not violate the fourteenth amendment. See Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. Ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. 594. * * *

² See another distinction of this case in Buck v. Beach, ante, at pp. 549-550.

Decree affirmed.*

[WHITE, J., dissented.]

PEOPLE ex rel. HATCH v. REARDON (1906) 184 N. Y. 431, 449-450, 77 N. E. 970, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Ann. Cas. 515, VANN, J. (sustaining a New York statute taxing all

* "Fundamentally considered, it is the power to transmit or the transmission or receipt of property by death which is the subject levied upon by all death duties."—Mr. Justice White in Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 57, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969 (1900).

The jurisdiction of a state to levy succession taxes upon various kinds of property of resident and non-resident decedents has been considered in the following cases, among others: Property of resident decedents: Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. Ed. 1168 (1850) (property of every nature within state); Matter of Estate of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 32 N. E. 1096, 18 L. R. A. 709 (1893) (real estate and chattels outside of state); Frothingham v. Shaw, 175 Mass. 59, 55 N. E. 623, 78 Am. St. Rep. 475 (1899) (stock of foreign corporations, bonds and certificates of indebtedness of foreign debtors, foreign bank deposits—all kept out of state). Property of non-resident decedents: Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 595, 51 N. E. 176 (1898) (tangible property and bonds of foreign debtors, kept within state); Matter of Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27, 41 N. E. 715, 34 L. R. A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 680 (1896) (stock certificates of foreign corporations, kept within state); Matter of Brouson, 150 N. Y. 1, 44 N. E. 707, 34 L. R. A. 238, 55 Am. St. Rep. 632 (1896) (bonds and stock certificates of domestic corporations, kept out of state).

See Keeney v. New York, 222 U. S. 525, 32 Sup. Ct. 105, 56 L. Ed. 299, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139 (1912) (jurisdiction to tax transfer by deed effectual at grantor's death, where payment of tax postponed to latter period).

sales of stock made within the state, even as applied to shares in a foreign corporation sold by and to nonresidents):

"The question is whether the state has jurisdiction to impose a tax on a certain class of contracts when made within its territorial limits? Jurisdiction over the persons who make the contract does not depend on their residence, but on their presence within the state when the contract is made. Jurisdiction over property depends on its physical presence here, or if it is personal property, either its presence here or the residence of the owner here. The fiction of the common law, 'mobilia sequuntur personam,' has no foundation in the Constitution and does not control the legislature, which rejects or adopts it at will as applied to the subject of taxation. When two citizens of Connecticut come into this state and make a contract here, to be enforced here, both they and their contract are subject to its laws, and they are not only entitled to the protection thereof, but are under the same obligation to obey as if they were citizens. Such a contract is valid or invalid as our laws declare.¹ When the law commands that if they, or any other persons, whether residents or not, make a certain contract here they must pay a certain tax for the privilege, the command is personal, addressed to them as persons then within the state, and is as binding on them as if they resided in the state. Their rights and their obligations in reference to such a contract are the same as if they were citizens, no greater and no less. The fact that the contract, though made here, may relate to property, real or personal, situated elsewhere, has no bearing upon the question. By coming into the state they subjected themselves to its laws, and to its taxing power, so far as the making of such a contract is concerned. It is immaterial whether the contract is between residents or nonresidents, or between a resident and a nonresident, for if it is made within the state it is subject to taxation by the state. This necessarily follows from the power of the state over the subject of taxation. It has power to tax all property within its territory, all business done and all contracts made within that territory, provided they are not protected as federal agencies, whether the property is owned or the business is done or the contracts are made by residents or nonresidents. 'It has never been questioned that the legislature can impose a tax on all sales of property, upon all incomes, upon all acquisitions of property, upon all business and upon all transfers.' Matter of McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 317, 10 N. E. 685, 686, 58 Am. Rep. 502."²

¹ As to the domestic enforcement of contracts affecting foreign property, see Selover v. Walsh, 226 U. S. 112, 33 Sup. Ct. 69, 57 L. Ed. — (1912).

² Affirmed in People ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 158, 159, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 189, 190, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736 (1907), Holmes, J., saying: "It is urged further that a tax on sales is really a tax on property, and that therefore the act, as applied to the shares of a foreign corporation owned by nonresidents, is a taking of property without due process of law. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 L. Ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493 (1905). This argument presses the expressions in

DEWEY v. DES MOINES.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1899. 173 U. S. 193, 19 Sup. Ct. 379, 43 L. Ed. 665.)

[Error to the Supreme Court of Iowa. Dewey, a resident of Chicago, owned lots in Des Moines, Iowa, upon which a paving assessment was placed to an amount beyond their value. By statute a personal judgment was authorized against the owner in such cases. He brought suit in Iowa to set aside the assessment, the contractor being made a party, and the latter recovered judgment against Dewey, on a counterclaim for the paving, for any deficiency remaining after the sale of the lots. The state Supreme Court affirmed this judgment.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * In this case no question arises with regard to the validity of a personal judgment like the one herein against a resident of the state of Iowa, and we therefore express no opinion upon that subject. This plaintiff was at all times a nonresident of that state, and we think that a statute authorizing an assessment to be levied upon property for a local improvement, and imposing upon the lot owner, who is a nonresident of the state, a personal liability to pay such assessment, is a statute which the state has no power to enact, and which cannot, therefore, furnish any foundation for a personal claim against such nonresident. There is no course of reasoning as to the character of an assessment upon lots for a local improvement by which it can be shown that any jurisdiction to collect the assessment personally from a nonresident can exist. The state may provide for the sale of the property upon which the assessment is laid, but it cannot, under any guise or pretense, proceed further, and impose a personal liability upon a nonresident to pay the assessment or any part of it. To enforce an assessment of such a nature against

Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 441, 6 L. Ed. 678, 687 (1827), Fairbank v. United States, 181 U. S. 283, 45 L. Ed. 862, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618 (1901), and intervening cases, to new applications, and farther than they properly can be made to go. Whether we are to distinguish or to identify taxes on sales and taxes on goods depends on the scope of the constitutional provision concerned. Compare Fopplano v. Speed, 199 U. S. 501, 520, 50 L. Ed. 288, 292, 26 Sup. Ct. 138 (1905). A tax on foreign bills of lading may be held equivalent to a tax on exports as against article 1, § 9; a license tax on importers of foreign goods may be held an unauthorized interference with commerce; and yet it would be consistent to sustain a tax on sales within the state as against the fourteenth amendment, so far as that alone is concerned. Whatever the right of parties engaged in commerce among the states, a sale depends in part on the law of the state where it takes place for its validity and, in the courts of that state, at least, for the mode of proof. No one would contest the power to enact a statute of frauds for such transactions. Therefore the state may make parties pay for the help of its laws, as against this objection. A statute requiring a memorandum in writing is quite as clearly a regulation of the business as a tax. It is unnecessary to consider other answers to this point."

See Fopplano v. Speed, 199 U. S. 501, 519-520, 26 Sup. Ct. 138, 50 L. Ed. 288 (1905) (regulation of contracts made between parties en route through state). Compare the probable doctrine as to the nontaxability of property transitorily present, Blackstone v. Miller, ante, p. 566, note.

a nonresident, so far as his personal liability is concerned, would amount to the taking of property without due process of law, and would be a violation of the federal Constitution.

In this proceeding of the lot owner to have the assessment set aside, and the statutory liability of plaintiff adjudged invalid, the court was not justified in dismissing the petition, and giving the contractor, not only judgment on his counterclaim foreclosing his lien, but also inserting in that judgment a provision for a personal liability against the plaintiff and for a general execution against him. Such a provision against a nonresident, although a litigant in the courts of the state, was not only erroneous, but it was so far erroneous as to constitute, if enforced, a violation of the federal Constitution, for the reason already mentioned. By resorting to the state court to obtain relief from the assessment and from any personal liability provided for by the statute, the plaintiff did not thereby in any manner consent, or render himself liable, to a judgment against him providing for any personal liability. Nor did the counterclaim made by the defendant contractor give any such authority.

The principle which renders void a statute providing for the personal liability of a nonresident to pay a tax of this nature is the same which prevents a state from taking jurisdiction through its courts, by virtue of any statute, over a nonresident not served with process within the state, to enforce a mere personal liability, and where no property of the nonresident has been seized or brought under the control of the court. This principle has been frequently decided in this court. One of the leading cases is Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565, and many other cases therein cited. Railway Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 209, 13 Sup. Ct. 859, 37 L. Ed. 699.

The lot owner never voluntarily or otherwise appeared in any of the proceedings leading up to the levying of the assessment. He gave no consent which amounted to an acknowledgment of the jurisdiction of the city or common council over his person.

A judgment without personal service against a nonresident is only good so far as it affects the property which is taken or brought under the control of the court or other tribunal in an ordinary action to enforce a personal liability, and no jurisdiction is thereby acquired over the person of a nonresident further than respects the property so taken. This is as true in the case of an assessment against a nonresident of such a nature as this one as in the case of a more formal judgment.

The jurisdiction to tax exists only in regard to persons and property or upon the business done within the state, and such jurisdiction cannot be enlarged by reason of a statute which assumes to make a nonresident personally liable to pay a tax of the nature of the one in question. All subjects over which the sovereign power of the state extends are objects of taxation. Cooley, Tax'n (1st Ed.) pp. 3, 4; Burroughs, Tax'n, § 6. The power of the state to tax extends to all objects within the sovereignty of the state. Per Mr. Justice Clifford, in Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, at page 638, 18 L. Ed. 904. The power to tax is, however, limited to persons, property, and business within the state, and it cannot reach the person of a non-resident. Case of the State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 319, 21 L. Ed. 179. In Cooley, Tax'n (1st Ed.) p. 121, it is said that "a state can no more subject to its power a single person or a single article of property, whose residence or legal situs is in another state, than it can subject all the citizens or all the property of such other state to its power." These are elementary propositions, but they are referred to only for the purpose of pointing out that a statute imposing a personal liability upon a nonresident to pay such an assessment as this oversteps the sovereign power of a state. * * *

Judgment reversed.¹

SECTION 2.—PUBLIC PURPOSE

LOWELL v. BOSTON.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1873. 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39.)

[Bill in equity by Lowell and others, taxable inhabitants of Boston, to restrain the issue of bonds authorized by a statute of 1872 to an amount not exceeding $20,000,000. The proceeds of the bonds were to be loaned by commissioners to the owners of land burned over in the great Boston fire, secured by first mortgage on such land, and conditioned upon rebuilding in one year. Demurrer, and case reserved for the full court.]

WELLS, J. The issue of bonds by the city, whatever provision may be made for their redemption, involves the possible and not improbable consequence of a necessity to provide for their payment by the city. The right to incur the obligation implies the right to raise money by taxation for payment of the bonds; or, what is equivalent, the right to levy a tax for the purposes for which the fund is to be raised by means of the bonds so authorized. * * *

The power to levy taxes is founded on the right, duty, and responsibility to maintain and administer all the governmental functions of the state, and to provide for the public welfare. To justify any exercise of the power requires that the expenditure which it is intended to meet shall be for some public service, or some object which concerns the public welfare. The promotion of the interests of individuals, either in respect of property or business, although it may result incidentally in the advancement of the public welfare, is, in its essential character, a private and not a public object. However certain and great the resulting good to the general public, it does not, by reason of its comparative importance, cease to be incidental. The incidental advantage to the public, or to the state, which results from the promotion of private interests, and the prosperity of private enterprises or business, does not justify their aid by the use of public money raised by taxation, or for which taxation may become necessary. It is the essential character of the direct object of the expenditure which must determine its validity, as justifying a tax, and not the magnitude of the interests to be affected, nor the degree to which the general advantage of the community, and thus the public welfare, may be ultimately benefited by their promotion.

¹ Compare Corry v. Baltimore, 196 U. S. 466, 25 Sup. Ct. 297, 49 L. Ed. 556 (1905) (non-resident stockholder liable for tax on shares of domestic corporation). The resident owner of taxable property may be made personally liable for the tax. Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 106, 24 L. Ed. 616 (1877) (realty); Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 600, 10 Sup. Ct. 321, 33 L. Ed. 772 (1890) (personalty).

The principle of this distinction is fundamental. It underlies all government that is based upon reason rather than upon force. It is expressed in various forms in the Constitution of Massachusetts. In article XI, c. 2, § 1, by restricting the issuing of moneys from the treasury to purposes of "the necessary defence and support of the commonwealth; and for the protection and preservation of the inhabitants thereof, agreeably to the Acts and Resolves of the General Court." In article IV, c. 1, § 1, by declaring the purposes for which the power of taxation, in its various forms, may be exercised by the General Court to be "for the public service, in the necessary defence and support of the government of the said commonwealth, and the protection and preservation of the subjects thereof." * * * Article X declares: " * * * And whenever the public exigencies require that the property of any individual should be appropriated to public uses, he shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor."

The power of the government, thus constituted, to affect the individual in his private rights of property, whether by exacting contributions to the general means, or by sequestration of specific property, is confined, by obvious implication as well as by express terms, to purposes and objects alone which the government was established to promote, to wit, public uses and the public service. This power, when exercised in one form, is taxation; in the other, is designated as the right of eminent domain. The two are diverse in respect of the occasion and mode of exercise, but identical in their source, to wit, the necessities of organized society; and in the end by which alone the exercise of either can be justified, to wit, some public service or use. It is due to their identity in these respects that the two powers, otherwise so unlike, are associated together in the same article. So far as it concerns the question what constitutes public use or service that will justify the exercise of these sovereign powers over private rights of property, which is the main question now to be solved, this identity renders it unnecessary to distinguish between the two forms of exercise, as the same tests must apply to and control in each. An appropriation of money raised by taxation, or of property taken by right of eminent domain, by way of gift to an individual for his own private uses exclusively, would clearly be an excess of legislative power. The distinction between this and its appropriation for the construction of a highway is marked and obvious. It is independent of all considerations of resulting advantage. The individual, by reason of his capacity, enterprise, or situation, might be enabled to employ the money or property thus conferred upon him in such a manner as to furnish employment to great numbers of the community, to give a needed impulse to business of various kinds, and thus promote the general prosperity and welfare. In this view, it might be shown to be for the public good to take from the unenterprising and thriftless their unemployed capital and intrust it to others who will use it to better advantage for the interests of the community. But it needs no argument to show that such an arbitrary exercise of power would be a violation of the constitutional rights of those from whom the money or property was taken, and an unjustifiable usurpation.

In the case of a highway, on the other hand, its direct purpose of public use determines conclusively the question in support of the exercise, both of the right of eminent domain and of taxation, however trifling the advantage to the public compared with that to individuals. The extent or value of the public use, and the wisdom and propriety of the appropriation, are matters to be determined exclusively by the legislature, either directly or by its delegated authority. When the power exists, it is not within the province of the court to interfere with its exercise, by any inquiry into its expediency.

The two instances above referred to illustrate the sense in which the furthering of the public good by promotion of the interests of many individuals differs from a public service. A public service may or may not be productive, practically, of public advantage. Resulting advantage to the public does not of itself give to the means by which it is produced the character of a public service.

There are, indeed, many cases in which the sovereign power of government is exercised to affect private rights of property in favor of private parties, either individuals or corporations. Most conspicuous among these are turnpikes and railroads, in whose favor this right of eminent domain is frequently exercised. Private rights are thus taken and transferred, not to the state, but to the private corporation; and the compensation to the persons injured, required by the Constitution, is also rendered from the corporation. Such an appropriation of property is justified, and can only be justified, by the public service thereby secured in the increased facilities for transportation of freight and passengers, of which the whole community may rightfully avail itself.

The franchises of the corporation are held charged with this duty and trust for the performance of the public service, for which they were granted. Commonwealth v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. 175, 26 Am. Dec. 654; Same v. Boston & Maine Railroad, 3 Cush. 25, 45; Old Colony & Fall River Railroad Co. v. County of Plymouth, 14 Gray, 155, 161.

This right of eminent domain is often allowed to be exercised in favor of private aqueduct companies. Here, too, the public service, intended as the object of the grant of the right, is obvious. And although the interests of the aqueduct company are ordinarily relied upon to secure the proper performance of the service, yet, in case of any failure or abuse, the obligation may doubtless be otherwise enforced. Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 60.

The Mill Acts, so called, are often referred to as authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain by private parties for their exclusive private benefit. And the language of the court, used arguendo, has been sometimes such as to imply that the growth and prosperity of manufacturing and other industrial enterprises were of such importance to the public welfare as to justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain in their behalf, as a public use. Boston & Roxbury Mill Co. v. Newman, 12 Pick. 467, 23 Am. Dec. 622; Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. 475, 478; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417, 426.

That mills for the sawing of lumber for purposes of building, grinding grain for food, and the manufacture of material for clothing, may be of such necessity to a community, especially in the early settlement of a country, as to make their establishment a provision for a public service, we do not question. It is doubtless within the power of the legislature to declare the existence of a public exigency for the establishment of a mill, for which the right of eminent domain may properly be exercised; as in the case of the Boston & Roxbury Mill Corporation, and the Salem Milldam Corporation. What may be the limits of legislative power in that direction, and whether there are any limits except in the sound discretion of the legislature, it is needless now to inquire. We are satisfied that the Mill Acts are not founded upon that power, and do not authorize its exercise.

The advantages to be derived from a running stream by the several riparian proprietors are of natural right. Each one may make use of its waters, as they flow through his lands, in a reasonable manner, for such purposes as they are adapted to serve. In order that each may have his opportunity in turn, each is entitled to have the water allowed to flow to and from his land as it has been accustomed to flow, with only such modifications as result from such reasonable use. Hence, all proprietors upon a stream, from its source to its mouth, have, in a certain sense, a common interest in it, and a common right to the enjoyment of all its capacities. Among those capacities no one is more important than that of the force of the current to supply power for the operation of mills. To make that force practically serviceable requires a considerable head and fall at the point where it is to be applied; often more than can be gained within the limits of one proprietor. The use of the stream in this mode has always been regarded as a reasonable use, notwithstanding the effect of the dam, by which the head is created, to retard the water in its flow to the proprietor below, and to set it back and thus diminish or destroy the force of the current above. One who thus appropriates the force of the current is in the enjoyment of a common right, in which he is protected, although he may thereby prevent a like use subsequently by the proprietor above. Hatch v. Dwight, 17 Mass. 289, 296, 9 Am. Dec. 145; Cary v. Daniels, 8 Metc. 466, 41 Am. Dec. 532; Gould v. Boston Duck Co., 13 Gray, 442. But this protection extends no farther than to justify the appropriation of a part of that quality of the stream which, until so appropriated, is common to all. It does not justify any, even the least, injury to land outside the channel. Without some law to control, the mill owner would be exposed, not merely to the liability to make just compensation for injuries thus occasioned, but to harassing suits for damages and to abatement of his dam as causing a nuisance. This liability and the inevitable controversies growing out of conflicting rights in the stream itself, tending to defeat all advantageous use of its power, led to the adoption of laws regulating and protecting the beneficial use of streams for mill purposes. * * * But there is no public service secured through the Mill Acts, except so far as it may result incidentally, and as the inducements of private interest may lead mill-owners to devote their mills to purposes favorable to the public accommodation. * * *

A consideration, still more conclusive to this point, is, that in fact no private property, or right in the nature of property, is taken by force of the Mill Acts, either for public or private use. They authorize the maintenance of a dam to raise a head of water, although its effect will be to overflow the land of another proprietor. This right of flowage is sometimes inaccurately called an easement. Hunt v. Whitney, 4 Metc. 603; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417, 422, 426. But it is not so. It confers no right in the land upon the mill-owner, and takes none from the land-owner. Murdock v. Stickney, 8 Cush. 113; Storm v. Manchaug Co., 13 Allen, 10. In Murdock v. Stickney, Chief Justice Shaw remarks in reference to the Mill Acts, "The principle on which this law is founded is not, as has sometimes been supposed, the right of eminent domain, the sovereign right of taking private property for public use. It is not in any proper sense a taking of the property of an owner of the land flowed, nor is any compensation awarded by the public." In Bates v. Weymouth Iron Co., 8 Cush. 548, 553, he says, "It is a provision by law, for regulating the rights of proprietors, on one and the same stream, from its rise to its outlet, in a manner best calculated, on the whole, to promote and secure their common rights in it." Similar declarations are made in Fiske

v. Framingham Manuf. Co., 12 Pick. 68; Williams v. Nelson, 23 Pick. 141, 34 Am. Dec. 45.

This regulation of the rights of riparian proprietors, both in respect to the stream and to their adjacent lands, liable to be affected by its use, involves no other governmental power than that "to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes, and ordinances," as the General Court "shall judge to be for the good and welfare of this commonwealth, and for the government and ordering thereof, and of the subjects of the same." Const. of Mass. c. 1, § 1, art. IV.

All individual rights of property are held subject to this power, which alone can adjust their manifold relations and conflicting tendencies. The absolute right of the individual must yield to and be modified by corresponding rights in other individuals in the community. The resulting general good of all, or the public welfare, is the foundation upon which the power rests, and in behalf of which it is exercised; whether by restricting the use of private property in a manner prejudicial to the public (Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53); or by imposing burdens upon it for the protection or convenience in part of the public (Goddard, Petitioner, 16 Pick. 504, 28 Am. Dec. 259); Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. 184, 193, 22 Am. Dec. 421 (Salem v. Eastern Railroad Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650); or by modifying rights of individuals, in respect of their mutual relations, in order to secure their more advantageous enjoyment by each.

It is pro bono publico that general provisions of law exist by which joint tenants and tenants in common of houses and mills may require necessary repairs to be made, with indemnity out of the joint rents or income for the cost thereof. Calvert v. Aldrich, 99 Mass. 74, 96 Am. Dec. 693. Upon the same principle one joint tenant is allowed to sever the joint tenancy by conveyance or partition, and thus change the nature of the estate of his co-tenant, as well as his own. Shaw v. Hearsey, 5 Mass. 521; Gen. Sts. c. 136, § 1.

Estates in common may be divided at the suit of any one of the co-tenants; and if not conveniently or advantageously divisible equally, one may be required to accept less than his full share, with an equivalent in money for the deficiency. Hagar v. Wiswall, 10 Pick. 152; Buck v. Wolcott, 13 Gray, 268. And by a recent statute, under certain conditions, the whole may be sold, and the proceeds in money divided instead of the land. St. 1871, c. 111.

Upon the same principle, proprietors of wharves, or of general fields, affected by a common interest or a common necessity, are allowed to adopt measures to secure their common advantage, although burdens or restrictions result therefrom which must be shared by the minority, as well as the majority, by whose determination the measures were adopted. Gen. Sts. c. 67; Wright v. Boston, 9 Cush. 233.

No other power was exercised for the construction of drains and sewers until 1841 when cities and towns were authorized to exercise for that object the power of taxation. St. 1841, c. 115. The property in such drains and sewers was by the same act vested in the city or town; so that there was a public use as well as a public service, for which that power was delegated. The exercise of the right of eminent domain, for the same object, was delegated to the city of Boston by the St. of 1857, c. 225, § 1, and to all other cities and towns by the St. of 1869, c. 111.

In the statutes for the improvement of meadows, the provisions for the assessment and collection of the expenses, in form, resemble taxation, and the power exercised over private property is sometimes ascribed to the right of eminent domain. Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417, 428. But there is no taking for public use. It is a proceeding of a semi-judicial nature, in which all those whose lands are to be affected are joined as parties. The action taken therein relates to that in which all have a common interest, or in reference to which all are affected by a common necessity. That common necessity is met, and that common interest secured, by subjecting the individual rights to such modifications as the commissioners may judge to be most practicable to secure the best advantage of all. The natural conflict of rights which would arise if each were left to insist on his own, regardless of consequences to others, is avoided by the intervention of this common agent, by whom they are adjusted with due regard to the interests of all as well as of each. For this purpose they are treated as owners of a common property. Coomes v. Burt, 22 Pick. 422. * * *

We find in these statutes no exercise of the right of eminent domain, or of the governmental power of taxation. That which, in form, resembles taxation, is, in effect, only an equitable apportionment, among the parties to the proceedings, of the expenses incurred for their common benefit, by their common agents, or rather by the officers of the tribunal charged by the legislature with the conduct of those proceedings which it authorizes for the execution of its wholesome and reasonable orders and laws in that behalf made and provided. It differs from assessments for drains (Hildreth v. Lowell, 11 Gray, 345), sidewalks (Lowell v. Hadley, 8 Metc. 180), and street "betterments" (Jones v. Aldermen of Boston, 104 Mass. 461), not only in the manner in which all persons to be assessed are required to be made parties to the whole proceedings, but also and especially in the absence of any public use or service as the leading and direct object of the expenditure for which it is made.

"The good and welfare of this commonwealth," for which "reasonable orders, laws, statutes, and ordinances" may be made, by force of which private rights of property may be affected, is a much broader and less specific ground of exercise of power than "public use" and "public service." The former expresses the ultimate purpose, or result sought to be attained by all forms of exercise of legislative power over property. The latter imply a direct relation between the primary object of an appropriation and the public enjoyment. The circumstances may be such that the use or service intended to be secured will practically affect only a small portion of the inhabitants or lands of the commonwealth. The essential point, is that it affects them as a community, and not merely as individuals. Cooley, Const. Limit. 531. This distinction is indicated, and recognized as vital, in Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417, 423, 425, and it lies at the foundation of the decision in that case. There was a taking of private property by direct authority of the legislature, which the court held to have been intended as an exercise of the constitutional power to take private property for public use, rendering compensation. The main question was, whether the relief of an extensive territory of valuable lands, in a thickly settled agricultural region, from the nuisance of flooding by the waters of a stream, caused by a single dam below, constituted such an object of public concern as to justify the exercise of the power by removing the dam. The court recognized the difficulty that, so far as the removal of the dam benefited each land-owner, it was a private use which would not justify the exercise of that power. But the obstruction in the stream injuriously affected "so large a territory, situated in different towns, and owned by a great number of persons," as to give it the character of a public nuisance, the removal of which "would seem to come fairly within the scope of legislative action." While we do not assent to the suggestions in that opinion, that the general provisions of law for the regulation of mills and the improvement of meadows are based upon the constitutional power to appropriate private property under the right of eminent domain, we accord fully with the judgment rendered and the general principle upon which it is founded. * * * [Dorgan v. Boston, 12 Allen, 223, Dingley v. Boston, 100 Mass. 544, and Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. 475, are here referred to as involving important public services as well as private advantages that promoted general prosperity.]

There is no public use or public service declared in the statute now under consideration, and we are of opinion that none can be found in the purposes of its provisions. By its terms the proceeds of the bonds, thereby authorized, are to be expended in loans to persons who are or may become owners of land in Boston, "the buildings upon which were burned by the fire in said Boston on the ninth and tenth days of November." 1872. The ultimate end and object of the expenditure, as indicated by the provisions of the statute itself, is "to insure the speedy rebuilding on said land."

The general result may indeed be thus stated collectively, as a single object of attainment; but the fund raised is intended to be appropriated distributively, by separate loans to numerous individuals, each one of which will be independent of any relation to the others, or to any general purpose, except that of aiding individual enterprise in matters of private business. The property thus created will remain exclusively private property, to be devoted to private uses at the discretion of the owners of the land; with no restriction as to the character of the buildings to be erected, or the uses to which they shall be devoted; and with no obligation to render any service or duty to the commonwealth, or to the city,—except to repay the loan,—or to the community at large or any part of it. If it be assumed that the private interests of the owners will lead them to re-establish warehouses, shops, manufactories, and stores, and that the trade and business of the place will be enlarged or revived by means of the facilities thus provided, still these are considerations of private interest, and, if expressly declared to be the aim and purpose of the act, they would not constitute a public object, in a legal sense.

As a judicial question the case is not changed by the magnitude of the calamity which has created the emergency; nor by the greatness of the emergency, or the extent and importance of the interests to be promoted. These are considerations affecting only the propriety and expediency of the expenditure as a legislative question. If the expenditure is, in its nature, such as will justify taxation under any state of circumstances, it belongs to the legislature exclusively to determine whether it shall be authorized in the particular case, and however slight the emergency, or limited or unimportant the interests to be promoted thereby, the court has no authority to revise the legislative action.

On the other hand, if its nature is such as not to justify taxation in any and all cases in which the legislature might see fit to give authority therefor, no stress of circumstances affecting the expediency, importance, or general desirableness of the measure, and no concurrence of legislative and municipal action, or preponderance of popular favor in any particular case, will supply the element necessary to bring it within the scope of legislative power.

The expenditure authorized by this statute being for private and not for public objects, in a legal sense, it exceeds the constitutional power of the legislature; and the city cannot lawfully issue the bonds for the purposes of the act. * * *

Demurrer overruled.¹

¹ Accord: Feldman & Co. v. City Council, 23 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6 (1884) (similar facts).

In the following cases taxation was held unconstitutional because not for a public purpose: Hooper v. Emery, 14 Me. 375 (1837) (division of money among families of town); State v. Osawkee Township, 14 Kan. 418, 19 Am. Rep. 99 (1875) (seed grain for farmers in financial distress); Deering & Co. v. Peterson, 75 Minn. 118, 77 N. W. 568 (1898) (same); Wisconsin Keeley Institute Co. v. Milwaukee Co., 95 Wis. 153, 70 N. W. 68, 36 L. R. A. 55, 60 Am. St. Rep. 105 (1897) (treatment of indigent drunkards at private institution); State, ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 113 Mo. 287, 45 S. W. 215, 40 L. R. A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653 (1898) (cash scholarship to defray general expenses of indigent students at state university); Auditor v. State ex rel., 75 Ohio St. 114, 78 N. E. 955, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1196 (1906) ($25 quarterly to indigent, adult, blind persons).

In the following cases taxation for somewhat similar purposes was upheld: Gillan v. Gillan, 55 Pa. 430 (1867) (compensation for property burned by Confederates); State v. Nelson, 1 N. D. 88, 15 N. W. 33, 8 L. R. A. 233, 26

LOAN ASSOCIATION v. TOPEKA.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1875. 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. Ed. 455.)

[Error to the federal Circuit Court for Kansas. The city of Topeka, Kansas, under statutory authority, issued $100,000 of bonds as a donation to the King Bridge Company to aid it in establishing a manufactory of iron bridges in that city. The plaintiff association of Cleveland, Ohio, sued Topeka in the federal Circuit Court for Kansas for the interest on some of these bonds owned by plaintiff. The city demurred and received judgment, and a writ of error was taken. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice MILLER. * * * [After declining to pass upon one of the grounds urged for invalidating the bonds under the Kansas constitution:] We find ample reason to sustain the demurrer on the second ground on which it is argued by counsel and sustained by the Circuit Court. That proposition is that the act authorizes the towns and other municipalities to which it applies, by issuing bonds or loaning their credit, to take the property of the citizen under the guise of taxation to pay these bonds, and use it in aid of the enterprises of others which are not of a public character, thus perverting the right of taxation, which can only be exercised for a public use, to the aid of individual interests and personal purposes of profit and gain.

The proposition as thus broadly stated is not new, nor is the question which it raises difficult of solution. If these municipal corporations, which are in fact subdivisions of the state, and which for many reasons are vested with quasi legislative powers, have a fund or other property out of which they can pay the debts which they contract, without resort to taxation, it may be within the power of the legislature of the state to authorize them to use it in aid of projects strictly private or personal, but which would in a secondary manner contribute to the public good; or where there is property or money vested in a corporation of the kind for a particular use, as public worship or charity, the legislature may pass laws authorizing them to make contracts in reference to this property, and incur debts payable from that source.

But such instances are few and exceptional, and the proposition is a very broad one, that debts contracted by municipal corporations must be paid, if paid at all, out of taxes which they may lawfully levy, and that all contracts creating debts to be paid in future, not limited to payment from some other source, imply an obligation to pay by taxation. It follows that in this class of cases the right to contract must be limited by the right to tax, and if in the given case no tax can lawfully be levied to pay the debt, the contract itself is void for want of authority to make it. * * *

Am. St. Rep. 609 (1890) (seed grain for farmers—distress widespread); Mayor, etc., v. Keeley Institute, 51 Md. 106, 31 Atl. 437 (1895) (treatment of indigent drunkard at private institution); In re House, 23 Colo. 87, 46 Pac. 117, 33 L. R. A. 832 (1896) (same); State ex rel. v. Davidson, 114 Wis. 563, 88 N. W. 596, 90 N. W. 1067, 58 L. R. A. 739 (1902) (relief to persons injured and impoverished by cyclone).

We proceed to the inquiry whether such a power exists in the legislature of the state of Kansas. * * * The theory of our governments, state and national, is opposed to the deposit of unlimited power anywhere. The executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of these governments are all of limited and defined powers.

There are limitations on such power which grow out of the essential nature of all free governments; implied reservations of individual rights, without which the social compact could not exist, and which are respected by all governments entitled to the name. No court, for instance, would hesitate to declare void a statute which enacted that A and B, who were husband and wife to each other, should be so no longer, but that A should thereafter be the husband of C, and B the wife of D; or which should enact that the homestead now owned by A should no longer be his, but should henceforth be the property of B. Whiting v. Fond du Lac, 25 Wis. 188, 3 Am. Rep. 30; Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 129, 175, 487; Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 587.

Of all the powers conferred upon government that of taxation is most liable to abuse. Given a purpose or object for which taxation may be lawfully used, and the extent of its exercise is in its very nature unlimited. It is true that express limitation on the amount of tax to be levied or the things to be taxed may be imposed by constitution or statute, but in most instances for which taxes are levied, as the support of government, the prosecution of war, the national defence, any limitation is unsafe. The entire resources of the people should in some instances be at the disposal of the government.

The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch v. State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 431, 4 L. Ed. 579, that the power to tax is the power to destroy. A striking instance of the truth of the proposition is seen in the fact that the existing tax of ten per cent, imposed by the United States on the circulation of all other banks than the national banks, drove out of existence every state bank of circulation within a year or two after its passage. This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another, so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised.

To lay with one hand the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

Nor is it taxation. A "tax," says Webster's Dictionary, "is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or state." "Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes." Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 479. Coulter, J., in Northern Liberties v. St. John's Church, 13 Pa. 104 (see also Pray v. Northern Liberties, 31 Pa. 69; Matter of Mayor of New York, 11 Johns. [N. Y.] 77; Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. Law, 398; Sharpless v. Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 47, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Whiting v. Fond du Lac, 25 Wis. 188, 3 Am. Rep. 30), says, very forcibly, "I think the common mind has everywhere taken in the understanding that taxes are a public imposition, levied by authority of the government for the purpose of carrying on the government in all its machinery and operations—that they are imposed for a public purpose."

We have established, we think, beyond cavil that there can be no lawful tax which is not laid for a public purpose. It may not be easy to draw the line in all cases so as to decide what is a public purpose in this sense and what is not.

It is undoubtedly the duty of the legislature which imposes or authorizes municipalities to impose a tax to see that it is not to be used for purposes of private interest instead of a public use, and the courts can only be justified in interposing when a violation of this principle is clear and the reason for interference cogent. And in deciding whether, in the given case, the object for which the taxes are assessed falls upon the one side or the other of this line, they must be governed mainly by the course and usage of the government, the objects for which taxes have been customarily and by long course of legislation levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal. Whatever lawfully pertains to this, and is sanctioned by time and the acquiescence of the people, may well be held to belong to the public use, and proper for the maintenance of good government, though this may not be the only criterion of rightful taxation.

But in the case before us, in which the towns are authorized to contribute aid by way of taxation to any class of manufacturers, there is no difficulty in holding that this is not such a public purpose as we have been considering. If it be said that a benefit results to the local public of a town by establishing manufacturers, the same may be said of any other business or pursuit which employs capital or labor. The merchant, the mechanic, the innkeeper, the banker, the builder, the steamboat owner are equally promoters of the public good, and equally deserving the aid of the citizens by forced contributions. No line can be drawn in favor of the manufacturer which would not open the coffers of the public treasury to the importunities of two-thirds of the business men of the city or town. * * *

Judgment affirmed.¹

[CLIFFORD, J., gave a dissenting opinion.]

PEOPLE v. SALEM (1870) 20 Mich. 452, 480, 481, 483-487. 4 Am. Rep. 400, COOLEY, J. (holding unconstitutional an act authorizing municipal corporations to pledge their credit to aid private corporations in railroad construction):

"If we examine the subject critically, we shall find that the most important consideration in the case of eminent domain is the necessity of accomplishing some public good which is otherwise impracticable, and we shall also find that the law does not so much regard the means as the need. [Here follows a discussion of this proposition, which is printed post, pp. 676-677.]

"When we examine the power of taxation with a view to ascertain the purposes for which burdens may be imposed upon the public, we perceive at once that necessity is not the governing consideration, and

¹ Accord: Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 1 Sup. Ct. 442, 27 L. Ed. 238 (1882); Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 5 Sup. Ct. 416, 28 L. Ed. 896 (1885) (citing cases); Commercial Bank v. Iola, 2 Dill. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 3,061 (1873); Coates v. Campbell, 37 Minn. 498, 35 N. W. 366 (1887); Deal v. Mississippi Co., 107 Mo. 464, 18 S. W. 24, 14 L. R. A. 622 (1891) (tree planting bounty); Mich. Sugar Co. v. Auditor General, 124 Mich. 671, 83 N. W. 625, 56 L. R. A. 329, 83 Am. St. Rep. 351 (1900).

All of the above cited federal cases, including the principal case, were apparently decided under provisions of state Constitutions, not under the fourteenth amendment. See Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 105, 24 L. Ed. 616 (1877); Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 155, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369 (1896); Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Mun. Co., 196 U. S. 239, 260, 25 Sup. Ct. 251, 49 L. Ed. 462 (1905).

In First Municipality v. Orleans Theatre Co., 2 Rob. (La.) 209 (1842), a municipal subscription of $200,000 to the capital of a private theatre company was upheld after ratification by the legislature. The object was stated to be to "afford a place of relaxation and amusement that would tend to correct the morals and enlighten the minds of the citizens."

TAX EXEMPTIONS.—Some courts hold that tax exemptions to enterprises primarily of a private nature stand on the same footing as grants of public money derived from taxation. Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395 (1873) (brickyard); Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242 (1860) (hotel). More commonly such exemptions are assumed to be a valid means of encouraging various species of industry. Opinion of the Court, 58 N. H. 623 (1879); Mississippi Const. (1890) §§ 182, 192; Kentucky Const. (1891) § 170; South Carolina Const. (1895) art. 8, § 8; Oklahoma Const. (1907) art. 10, § 6; Illinois Cent. Ry. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 190, 201, 13 Sup. Ct. 293, 37 L. Ed. 132 (1893) (semble); Florida Cent. Ry. v. Reynolds, 183 U. S. 471, 476, 22 Sup. Ct. 176, 46 L. Ed. 283 (1902) (semble); 45 Cent. 192, Taxation, §§ 383-87 (cases). Compare the analogous case of the common prohibition in American Constitutions against state aid to sectarian institutions, which is usually held not to prohibit the exemption of church property from taxation. Trustees v. Iowa, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138 (1877). Questions of exemption on the ground of public uses naturally tend to become questions of classification for taxation, a matter in which the legislature has very great latitude. Amer. Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, post, p. 611.

that in many cases it has little or nothing to do with the question presented. Certain objects must of necessity be provided for under this power, but in regard to innumerable other objects for which the state imposes taxes upon its citizens, the question is always one of mere policy, and if the taxes are imposed, it is not because it is absolutely necessary that those objects should be accomplished, but because on the whole it is deemed best by the public authorities that they should be. On the other hand certain things of absolute necessity to civilized society the state is precluded, either by express constitutional provisions, or by necessary implication, from providing for at all; and they are left wholly to the fostering care of private enterprise and private liberality. We concede, for instance, that religion is essential, and that without it we should degenerate to barbarism and brutality; yet we prohibit the state from burdening the citizen with its support, and we content ourselves with recognizing and protecting its observance on secular grounds. Certain professions and occupations in life are also essential, but we have no authority to employ the public moneys to induce persons to enter them. The necessity may be pressing, and to supply it may be, in a certain sense, to accomplish a 'public purpose'; but it is not a purpose for which the power of taxation may be employed. The public necessity for an educated and skillful physician in some particular locality may be great and pressing, yet if the people should be taxed to hire one to locate there, the common voice would exclaim that the public moneys were being devoted to a private purpose. The opening of a new street in a city or village may be of trifling public importance as compared with the location within it of some new business or manufacture; but while the right to pay out the public funds for the one would be unquestionable, the other by common consent is classified as a private interest, which the public can aid as individuals if they see fit, while they are not permitted to employ the machinery of the government to that end. Indeed, the opening of a new street in the outskirts of a city is generally very much more a matter of private interest than of public concern; so much so that the owner of the land voluntarily throws it open to the public without compensation; yet even in a case where the public authorities did not regard the street of sufficient importance to induce their taking the necessary action to secure it, it would not be doubted that the moment they should consent to accept it as a gift, the street would at once become a public object and purpose, upon which the public funds might be expended with no more restraints upon the action of the authorities in that particular, than if it were the most prominent and essential thoroughfare of the city.

"By common consent also a large portion of the most urgent needs of society are relegated exclusively to the law of demand and supply. It is this in its natural operation, and without the interference of the government, that gives us the proper proportion of tillers of the soil, artisans, manufacturers, merchants and professional men, and that determines when and where they shall give to society the benefit of their particular services. However great the need in the direction of any particular calling, the interference of the government is not tolerated, because, though it might be supplying a public want, it is considered as invading the domain that belongs exclusively to private inclination and enterprise. We perceive, therefore, that the term 'public purposes,' as employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, has no relation to the urgency of the public need, or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow. It is, on the other hand, merely a term of classification, to distinguish the object for which according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private inclination, interest or liberality.

"It creates a broad and manifest distinction—one in regard to which there need be neither doubt nor difficulty—between public works and private enterprises; between the public conveniences which it is the business of government to provide and those which private interest and competition will supply whenever the demand is sufficient. When we draw this line of distinction, we perceive immediately that the present case falls outside of it. It was at one time in this state deemed true policy that the government should supply railroad facilities to the traveling and commercial public, and while that policy prevailed, the right of taxation for the purpose was unquestionable. Our policy in that respect has changed; railroads are no longer public works, but private property; individuals and not the state own and control them for their own profit; the public may reap many and large benefits from them, and indeed are expected to do so, but only incidentally, and only as they might reap similar benefits from other modes of investing private capital. It is no longer recognized as proper or politic that the state should supply the means of locomotion by rail to the people, and this species of work is therefore remitted to the care of private enterprise, and cannot be aided by the public funds, any more than can any other private undertaking which in like manner falls outside the line of distinction indicated.

"In the course of the argument of this case allusion was made to the power of the state to pay bounties. But it is not in the power of the state, in my opinion, under the name of bounty or under any other cover or subterfuge, to furnish the capital to set private parties up in any kind of business, or to subsidize their business after they have entered upon it. A bounty law of which this is the real nature is void, whatever may be the pretense on which it may be enacted. The right to hold out pecuniary inducements to the faithful performance of public duty in dangerous or responsible positions, stands upon a different footing altogether; nor have I any occasion to question the right to pay rewards for the destruction of wild beasts and other public pests; a provision of this character being a mere police regulation. But the discrimination by the state between different classes of occupations, and the favoring of one at the expense of the rest, whether that one be farming or banking, merchandising or milling, printing or railroading, is not legitimate legislation, and is an invasion of that equality of right and privilege which is a maxim in state government. When the door is once opened to it, there is no line at which we can stop and say with confidence that thus far we may go with safety and propriety, but no further. Every honest employment is honorable, it is beneficial to the public; it deserves encouragement. The more successful we can make it, the more does it generally subserve the public good. But it is not the business of the state to make discriminations in favor of one class against another, or in favor of one employment against another. The state can have no favorites. Its business is to protect the industry of all, and to give all the benefit of equal laws. It cannot compel an unwilling minority to submit to taxation in order that it may keep upon its feet any business that cannot stand alone. Moreover, it is not a weak interest only that can give plausible reasons for public aid: when the state once enters upon the business of subsidies, we shall not fail to discover that the strong and powerful interests are those most likely to control legislation, and that the weaker will be taxed to enhance the profits of the stronger. I shall not question the right of the people, by their Constitution, to open the door to such discriminations, but in this state they have not adopted that policy, and they have not authorized any department of the government to adopt it for them."

PERRY v. KEENE.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire, 1876. 56 N. H. 514.)

[Bill in equity on an agreed statement of facts. A New Hampshire statute authorized towns by a two-thirds vote to raise by tax or loan a sum not exceeding 5 per cent. of their property valuation, and appropriate it to aid in railway construction. Plaintiffs, who are taxpayers of Keene, ask an injunction against an appropriation of $130,000 by that town under this act, being 3 per cent. of its taxable valuation.]

LADD, J. * * * Is the building of a railroad a public purpose? The legislature have undoubtedly passed their judgment on that question, and determined that it is. It is not to be denied that the levying of taxes is specially and entirely a legislative function, and the court are not to encroach upon the province of a co-ordinate branch of the government in the exercise of that power. Where is the line that divides the province of the court from that of the legislature in a matter of this sort? The court is to expound and administer the laws, and there the judicial function and duty end. How much of the question, whether a given object is public, lies within the province of the law, and how much in the domain of political science and statesmanship? When the judge has declared all the law that enters into the problem, how much is still left to the determination of the legislator? Admitting, as has indeed been more than intimated in this state (Concord Railroad v. Greely, 17 N. H. 57), that it is for the court finally to determine whether the use is public,—what is the criterion? What are the rules which the law furnishes to the court wherewith to eliminate a true answer to the inquiry? In what respect does the question as presented to the court differ from the same question as presented to the legislature? If the court stop when they reach the borders of legislative ground, how far can they proceed?

If the legislature should take the property of A, or the property of all the tax-payers in the town of A, and hand it over, without consideration, without pretence of any public obligation or duty, to B, to be used by him in buying a farm, or building a house, or setting himself up in business, the case would be so clear that the commonsense of every one would at once say the limits of legislative power had been overstepped by a taking of private property, and devoting it to a private use. That is the broad ground upon which such cases as Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185, Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39, and Citizens' Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. Ed. 455, were decided. And yet, what rule of law do the courts find to aid them in thus revising the judgment of the legislature? Is it not clear that the question they pass upon is the same question as that decided by the legislature, and that they must determine it in the same way the legislature have done, simply by the exercise of reason and judgment? What is it that settles the character of a given purpose, in respect of its being public or otherwise? It has been said that for the legislature to declare a use public does not make it so—17 N. H. 57; and the same may certainly be said with equal truth of a like declaration by the court. A judicial christening can no more affect the nature of the thing itself, than a legislative christening. Judging a priori, and without some knowledge of the wants of mankind when organized in communities and states, I do not quite understand how it could be predicated of any use, that it is "per se" public, as is said by Dixon, C. J., in Whiting v. Sheboygan Railway Co., 9 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) 161. Of light, air, water, etc., the common bounties of providence, it might, indeed, be said beforehand that they are in a very broad sense public; but it is not of such uses that we are speaking. Without knowledge of human nature, knowledge derived from experience and observation of what may be needful for the comfort, well-being, and prosperity of the people of a state advanced in civilization,—and knowledge, gained in the same way, as to what necessary conditions of their welfare will be supplied by private enterprise, and what will go unsupplied without interference by the state,—I do not see how any use could be said to be per se public, or how either a legislature, or a court, could form a judgment that would not be founded almost wholly upon theory and conjecture.

No one doubts that the building and maintaining of our common highways is a public purpose. Why? Certainly for no other reason than that they furnish facilities for travel, the transmission of intelligence, and the transportation of goods. But why should the state take this matter under its fostering care, imposing upon the people a very great yearly burden in the shape of taxes for their support, any more than many others that might be mentioned, of equal and perhaps greater importance to its citizens? Is it of greater concern to the citizen that he should have a road to travel on, when he desires to visit his neighbor in the next town, or transport the products of his farm or of his factory to market and bring back the commodities for which they may be exchanged, than that he should have a mill to grind his corn,—a tanner, a shoemaker, and a tailor to manufacture his raw material into clothing, wherewith his body may be covered? Doubtless highways are a great public benefit. Without then I suppose the whole state would soon return to its primal condition of a howling wilderness, fit only for the habitation of wild beasts and savages. How would it be if there were no mills for the manufacture of lumber, no joiners or masons to build houses, no manufacturers of cloth, no merchants or tradesmen to assist in the exchange of commodities? These suppositions may appear somewhat fanciful, but they illustrate the inquiry, Why is the building of roads to be regarded as a public service, while many other things equally necessary for the upholding of life, the security of property, the preservation of learning, morality, and religion, are by common consent regarded as private, and so left to the private enterprise of the citizens? The answer to this question, surely, is not to be found in any abstract principle of law. It is essentially a conclusion of fact and public policy, the result of an inquiry into the individual necessities of every member of the community (which in the aggregate show the character and urgency of the public need), and the likelihood that those necessities will be supplied without interference from the state. Obviously it bears a much closer resemblance to the deduction of a politician, than the application of a legal principle by a judge. Should it be found by experience that no person in the state would, voluntarily and unaided, establish and carry on any given trade or calling, necessary, and universally admitted to be necessary, for the upholding of life, the preservation of health, the maintenance of decency, order, and civilization among the people, would not the carrying on of such necessary trade or calling thereupon become a public purpose, for which the legislature might lawfully impose a tax? ¹

Experience shows that highways would not be built, or, if built, would not be located in the right places with reference to convenient transit between distant points, nor kept in suitable repair, but for the control assumed over the whole matter by the state; and so the state interferes, and establishes a system, and imposes an enormous burden upon the people in the shape of taxes, compelling them to supply themselves with what they certainly need, but need no more than they need shoes or bread,—and nobody ever complained that the interference was unauthorized, or the purpose other than a public one.

¹ Compare Burlington v. Beasley, 94 U. S. 310, 24 L. Ed. 161 (1877) (public aid in construction of steam grist-mill in Kansas in 1872, required to serve public).

Enough has been said to show the delicate nature of the task imposed upon the court when they are called upon to revise the judgment of the legislature in a matter of this description. It is especially delicate for two reasons,—first, because the discretion of the legislature, with respect to the whole subject of levying taxes, is so very large, and their power so exclusive, that it is not always easy to say when the limits of that discretion and power have been passed; and, second, because the rule to be applied is furnished, not so much by the law as by those general considerations of public policy and political economy to which allusion has been made. I do not deny the power and duty of the court, when private rights of property are in question, to settle those rights according to a just interpretation of the Constitution; and the discharge of that duty may involve a revision of the judgment of the legislature upon a question which, like this, partakes more or less of a political character. But before the court can reverse the judgment of the legislature and the executive, and declare a statute levying or authorizing a tax to be inoperative and void, a very clear case must be shown. After the legislature and the executive have both decided that the purpose for which a tax is laid is public, nothing short of a moral certainty that a mistake has been made, can, in my judgment, warrant the court in overruling that decision, especially when nothing better can be set up in its place than the naked opinion of the court as to the character of the use proposed. Certainly it is not for the court to shrink from the discharge of a constitutional duty; but, at the same time, it is not for this branch of the government to set an example of encroachment upon the province of the others. It is only the enunciation of a rule that is now elementary in the American states, to say that, before we can declare this law unconstitutional, we must be fully satisfied—satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt—that the purpose for which the tax is authorized is private and not public.

I have spoken incidentally of our common highways; and it has been said that their purpose is, to furnish to the public facilities for travel, for the transmission of intelligence, and the carrying of goods. No one will contend that to build and maintain them is not a public purpose. Indeed, the public nature of this use is so very obvious that it has been classed among those said to be public per se (Whiting v. Sheboygan Railway Co., supra), standing in need of no credentials from the court to entitle it to legislative recognition. Wherein does the use of a railroad differ? What public benefit can be mentioned, that comes from the building of a common road, that does not come, in kind if not in degree, from the building of a railroad? It is not necessary to enlarge upon the benefits of either: they are, doubtless, numerous and varied,—so numerous, indeed, so interwoven with everything that distinguishes an intelligent, virtuous, rich, well-organized, and well-governed state, from a tribe of primitive barbarians, that an attempt to trace them all would be little less than an attempt to search out the sources of our civilization. The point is, they are alike in kind; and when it is admitted that the construction of one class of roads is clearly, beyond all possibility of doubt, a public purpose, I cannot conceive upon what ground it is to be said that the construction of the other class is, beyond all reasonable doubt, a private purpose.

It is said that railroad corporations are private; that the roads are built and run for private gain; that the public can only enjoy the benefits offered by them upon payment of a toll,—and, therefore, their purpose is private. The short and conclusive answer to all this, in my mind, is, that the character of the agency employed does not and cannot determine the nature of the end to be secured. To say of a railroad corporation that it is a private corporation, and therefore the construction of a railroad is a private purpose, seems to me, in truth, no more logical, if less absurd, than to say of any officer or agent of the state,—He is an individual, with all the private interests and private associations of other citizens; therefore the purpose of his office and of all his official acts is private. The argument that because a toll is granted, therefore the purpose must be private, carried to its logical results, would certainly declare the purpose of a very large number of public offices in the state to be private,—among them the secretary of state, justices of the peace and of police courts, registers of probate, registers of deeds, sheriffs, clerks of the courts, town-clerks, etc., etc.

If the purpose is public, it makes no difference that the agent by whose hand it is to be attained is private. Nor, if the purpose were private, would it make any difference that a public agent was employed. The question, therefore, whether a railroad corporation is to be regarded as public, or private, or both,—that is, public in one aspect and private in another,—seems to me quite immaterial, and that the decision of that question one way or the other does not advance the inquiry we have in hand.

It has been admitted by some, who have maintained with singular ability and zeal the position of the plaintiffs in this case, that the state might legally take into its own hands the whole matter of railroads within its limits; might build, equip, operate, and control them, making use of no intermediate agents in the business,—because in that case the people would remain owners of the property into which their money had been converted. With great deference, it seems to me, this is a concession of the very point in dispute. The form of the argument seems to be this: The state cannot levy a tax for a private purpose. So much, all admit. The building of a railroad is a private purpose; but the state may nevertheless levy a tax to build a railroad, provided the tax be large enough to carry through the whole enterprise without calling in the aid of any other agency;—or, to draw from the same premises the conclusion sought to be established here, the state cannot levy a tax for a private purpose. The state may levy a tax to wholly build, equip, and run a railroad; therefore the building of a railroad is a private purpose. This does not bear examination.

Another argument may be noticed here. It has been said by courts, whose decisions we are accustomed to regard with great respect, that, admitting the power of the legislature to authorize towns and cities to subscribe for stock in railroad corporations, and issue bonds or levy taxes in payment thereof, it does not follow that they can lawfully authorize the direct appropriation of the public funds to aid in the construction of a railroad where no stock is taken; because, in that event, no interest or ownership results to the town in the property of the corporation, and no voice in the control and management of its affairs is secured. I do not understand how this can be said by a court of law. Upon what ground can the legislature authorize the raising of a tax to pay for stock in a corporation of any sort, unless the purchase of such stock will be a devotion of the public funds to a public service? It is a matter of common knowledge that the original stock in railroad corporations often becomes worthless, or nearly so; but whether such a result is to be apprehended or not, makes no difference, so far as I can see, with the argument. If the end in view is private and not public, the legislature might as well authorize a town to enter into copartnership with any private person, in the prosecution of any private enterprise or business, and furnish its stipulated proportion of the capital to be invested, by levying a tax, as to authorize it to purchase such stock, even were it likely to advance in value on their hands, and the people thus be gainers by the operation. Deny that the end is public, and at the same time admit that a tax may be levied for the purchase of the stock, and the inevitable conclusion appears to be, that towns may be authorized to engage in the private and perilous business of dealing in stocks, and so apply the public funds to a purpose as remote as any that can well be conceived from that permitted by the Constitution, to say nothing of the fact that such investment must be made with a reasonable assurance that the money will be lost. Clearly, one or the other of these propositions must be changed: either we must admit that the end in view is public, or deny the power to purchase stocks when the end in view is merely a private end.² * * *

² The distinction here denied, between a donation to a railroad and a subscription to its stock, is adopted in Wisconsin v. Whiting v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 25 Wis. 167, 3 Am. Rep. 30 (1870); Ellis v. Northern Pac. Ry., 77 Wis.

It is nowhere contended, and is not contended by the plaintiffs, that a railroad is not a public use in such sense that land, the private property of individuals, may be taken for its construction. But a strenuous effort has been made to distinguish between the nature of a public use that warrants the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and that which warrants the exercise of the taxing power in its behalf. Of course the use which warrants the taking of land for a road-bed must be public, otherwise every charter granting that right, and every general law recognizing its existence and regulating the mode of its exercise, has been nothing less than an arbitrary and despotic interference by the legislature with private rights of property, in flagrant violation of article 12 of the Bill of Rights, as well as the other provisions of the Constitution whereby those rights are secured. The argument, then, admits that the use is public, but holds that it is not sufficiently public, or is not public in the particular way, to bring it within the category of objects for which taxes may be imposed: either in degree or kind, the public quality which it confessedly possesses falls short of that required by the Constitution to justify an exercise of the taxing power.

It is incumbent on those who undertake to maintain this distinction, to point out clearly the differences on which it rests. An assertion that it does exist is not enough, nor is the argument advanced by a repetition of such assertion, even though made in confident and emphatic terms. What is the rule wherewith we are to determine when a given public use is of a character to warrant the exercise of one power and not the other? What is the principle to be applied? No one will contend that the power of eminent domain and the taxing power, though similar, are in all respects identical; but all agree that neither can be exercised except for a public end. Which is the higher power? or, in other words, which requires the greater public exigency to call it forth? What is the nature of those objects which lie on one side of the line, and what of those upon the other side? Where is the line to be drawn, and what are the reasons that determine its location? These are some of the questions not to be evaded, or met with much speech and ingenious ratiocination, but to be answered fairly and clearly, before a court can say that the legislature have beyond all reasonable doubt transcended their constitutional powers in declaring that a use which is of such character—that is, public in such sense that private property may be taken and appropriated in its behalf—is also public in such sense that taxes may be levied in its behalf. In those cases to which we have been referred by the plaintiffs' counsel, where an attempt to do this is made, it does appear to me the failure has been rendered only more conspicuous by the eminent ability of those who have undertaken the task. And, after a most careful examination of those cases, if we were to hold that a railroad, being a public use for which the land of individuals may be taken against their consent, is not a public purpose for which taxes may be imposed, I should be utterly at a loss what sound reason to give for the distinction, or in what terms to frame a rule to govern the future action of the legislature in cases of a like description. * * *

114, 45 N. W. 811 (1890). The rule of the principal case is generally followed elsewhere. Railroad Co. v. Otoe, 16 Wall. 667, 21 L. Ed. 375 (1872).

Bill dismissed.³

[SMITH and RAND, JJ., gave concurring opinions.]

FALLBROOK IRRIGATION DISTRICT v. BRADLEY.

(Supreme Court of United States, 1896. 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369.)

[Appeal from the federal Circuit Court for the Southern District of California. The statutes of California (further stated in the opinion below) provided for the organization of irrigation districts, the irrigation works in which were to be provided for by taxation upon all the real property in the district according to its value. Such a district was formed, including within it the land of Mrs. Bradley, a subject of Great Britain resident in California. She refused to pay the tax assessed against the land under this statute, and filed a bill in the above-mentioned court to enjoin the giving of a deed for said land when sold for non-payment of said tax. The injunction issued and the Irrigation District appealed. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

Mr. Justice PECKHAM. * * * Coming to a review of these various objections, we think the first, that the water is not for a public use, is not well founded. The question what constitutes a public use has been before the courts of many of the states, and their decisions have not been harmonious; the inclination of some of these courts being towards a narrower and more limited definition of such use than those of others.

There is no specific prohibition in the federal Constitution which acts upon the states in regard to their taking private property for any but a public use. The fifth amendment, which provides, among other things, that such property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, applies only to the federal government, as has many times been decided. Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31

³ Apparently the only state in which public aid to a privately owned railroad is held unconstitutional as not a public purpose is Michigan. People v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400 (1876). An earlier case to that effect in Iowa was overruled. Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30 Iowa, 9, 1 Am. Rep. 238 (1870). Most state Constitutions now expressly forbid the practice. Of the cases sustaining it, it was said in one of the most notable of them: "They are a manifest triumph of reason and law over a strong conviction in the minds of the judges that the system they sustain was impolitic, dangerous and immoral."—Black, C. J., in Sharpless v. Mayor, 21 Pa. 147, 175, 176, 59 Am. Dec. 759 (1853).

L. Ed. 80; Thorington v. Montgomery, 147 U. S. 490, 13 Sup. Ct. 394, 37 L. Ed. 252. In the fourteenth amendment the provision regarding the taking of private property is omitted, and the prohibition against the state is confined to its depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. It is claimed, however, that the citizen is deprived of his property without due process of law if it be taken by or under state authority for any other than a public use, either under the guise of taxation or by the assumption of the right of eminent domain. In that way the question whether private property has been taken for any other than a public use becomes material in this court, even where the taking is under the authority of the state, instead of the federal, government.

Is this assessment for the nonpayment of which the land of the plaintiff was to be sold, levied for a public purpose? The question has, in substance, been answered in the affirmative by the people of California, and by the legislative and judicial branches of the state government. * * * [Here follow the quotation of various constitutional and statutory provisions, and the citation of] Irrigation Dist. v. Williams, 76 Cal. 360, 18 Pac. 379; Irrigation Dist. v. De Lappe, 79 Cal. 351, 21 Pac. 825; In re Madera Irrigation Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. * * *

It is obvious, however, that what is a public use frequently and largely depends upon the facts and circumstances surrounding the particular subject-matter in regard to which the character of the use is questioned.

